I will declare] The word ſignifies ſometimes to number, as Gen. 15. 5. And this we alſo call telling, in Engliſh. But here it ſignifies, to tell a thing by declaring of it: as alſo Chap. 12. 8. Some read the latter end of the verſe thus, For this have I ſeen, therefore I will declare it. I may be confident, I hope, in declaring what I have ſeen with mine own eyes. This reading gives a greater emphaſis to Eliphaz his words. And for the confirmation of it we ſhall find, that the Hebrew particle, ו is tranſlated for, and doth not barely knit things together, but gives a reaſon of what went before, Chap. 11. 4. And it is alſo tranſlated therefore, and infers a thing out of a former ground, Lev. 18. 30.

V. 18. Which wiſe men have told from their fathers, and have not hid it.] The whole verſe may be tranſlated thus, And which wiſe men have told, and have not hid, having received it from their fathers. For ſo the words ſtand in the Original, and are more plain. What himſelf had obſerved, he further confirms by the teſtimony of wiſe men, and brings in their parents alſo for witneſſes of the truth of it. And leaſt Job ſhould ſlight his authority, he backs it with a ſecond argument, taken from the conſent and harmony of former ages. So he reaſoned, ver. 10. and Bildad goes the ſame way, Chap. 8. 8.

Which] Or, which things. I ſay nothing, but what was ſaid long ſince.

wiſe men] Men that had gotten much knowledge in Gods proceedings, by ſtudy and obſervation.

have told] Told me, or others, from whom I had it. It comes from a word that ſignifies before, or in preſence. They have ſpoken ſo plainly and fully, as if they had ſhewed us the things acted before our eyes.

from their fathers] For the various uſe of the word in Scripture, ſee on verſ. 10. It is here taken for anceſtors, from whom, by tradition, they had taken it, and communicated it to their children, Pſal. 78. 3, 4, 5, 6. Others underſtand it from the time of their fathers. This hath been the conſtant received truth. Both interpretations plead from antiquity.

and have not hid it] From their poſterity, but faithfully communicated it to them, as their fathers had done to them, that it might not periſh. For it is likely, that no Scripture was written in Jobs time, but God appeared in ſome eminent men, and revealed his Will to them, and they taught it faithfully to their poſterity. But now he hath written his mind fully in his Word, and therefore there is no need of traditions. This doubling the phraſe, in other words, is for the greater certainty of the truth of it, Joh. 3, 20. See on Chap. 14. 10, 11. The word כחד ſignifies to hide a thing, ſo as it may not be ſeen, or heard, or appear, 2 Sam. 18. 13. 2. To be cut off: for things cut off can appear no more, Exod. 9. 15. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for hiding. They revealed it, that it might not be loſt by ſilence.

V. 19. Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no ſtranger paſſed among them] Here he gives Job a ground to give credit to what he ſhould ſay, if not for his ſake, yet for thoſe worthy mens, from whom theſe excellent inſtructions came, being men, not driven up and down, as wicked and ungodly men are, by Gods judgements, but men ſetled quietly in their habitations, and living plentifuly, yea, coming to authority in their Country, and by Gods bleſſing, keeping out all enemies, and ſo being examples of the continued proſperity of godly men, which they held out in words, and therefore worthy to be believed.

Unto whom] Heb. To them. It may be underſtood, either of the wiſe men, mentioned in the former verſe, or of their fathers, or of both: and that laſt makes the argument the ſtronger, as flowing from conſent of judgement, and continued proſperity of thoſe men for divers generations.

alone] Heb. by themſelves. No others did dwell among them. They were a diſtinct people ſingularly bleſſed by God, Num. 23. 9.

the earth] See on Chap. 9. 24. Or, the land, to wit, that land wherein they lived.

was given] Given by God for an inheritance to them, and their poſterity to live in, and ſo they did for many generations. A great bleſſing of God. So the word is uſed, Gen. 17. 8. Or committed to them, for their wiſdom and juſtice, by the people to rule, and ſo the argument is the ſtronger. They were no mean men, but great Princes of great experience. Thus the word is uſed, Pſal. 2. 8, 9, 10. & 1 King. 11. 11. See on Chap. 9. 24. For the various ſignifications of the word נתן. See on Chap. 14. 4. on the word, Bring.

and no ſtranger] No man of another nation to moleſt them, or no man of another family to take away their authority.

paſſed] As an enemy in an hoſtile way to go up and down, in a warlike manner, to ſlay them or ſpoile their country, Nah. 1. 15. The Heb. word עבר ſignifies; 1. To paſſe through, as Gen. 15. 17. 2. To die. For as men by birth come into the world, ſo by death they paſſe out of it, Pſal. 37. 36. 3. To paſſe by, or forgive a fault, Mic. 7. 18. 4. To paſſe through a land to puniſh it, Amos 5. 17. 5. To paſſe beyond, or violate an oath or covenant, Joſh. 7. 11. 6. To paſſe over, or overcome one, Jer. 23. 9. Here it may be taken in the fourth ſenſe, for paſſing through the country to hurt it. No doubt they might paſſe through peaceably, and for traffick.

among them] Heb. in the midſt of them. The meaning is, either that the people, by Gods bleſſing lived ſo quietly, that no man moleſted them; or elſe, that the governours guided them ſo wiſely, that no enemie durſt meddle with them to take away their government, or oppreſſe their people.

V. 20. The wicked man travelleth with pain all his dayes, and the number of years is hidden to the oppreſſor] Now he ſhews what were thoſe wiſe ſentences, ſo much commended by him, which he received from thoſe famous men, and at what he principally aimed. He ſets out to the end of the Chapter, the curſe and deſtruction of wicked men, how that even in proſperity they live alwaies miſerably, expecting a change, and what they fear comes upon them, and then they deſpair having no hope of eſcaping, but it is far otherwiſe with godlie men. The ſame things he had ſpoken before, Chap. 4. & 5. but here he delivers them with great varietie of phraſes and figures which is very delightful. He ſets out the miſerie of ungodly men by their pains, in this verſe, their fears, ver. 21. 22. their wants, ver. 23. their troubles, verſe, 24. the cauſes of all theſe miſeries, ver. 25, 26, 37. and laſt of all, by their certain deſtruction, from ver. 28. to the end of the Chapter. All or moſt of theſe things, he conceives had befallen Job, becauſe he confeſſed ſuch things were come upon him, Chap. 17. 13, 14. & 3. 25, 26. which things are threatned by God, againſt ungodly men, Levit. 26. 36. Deut. 28. 65. and therefore Job muſt needs be a wicked man by his own conceſſions. As if Eliphaz had ſaid in this verſe, O Job, thou feeleſt that in thy ſelf, which I have told thee before, and now tell thee again, that a wicked man is moſt miſerable. There is not one day goeth over his head, in which he doth not marvellouſly torment himſelf in all that term of years, that God permitteth him to live here on earth.

the wicked man] See on Chap. 3. 17.

travelleth with pain] Fills himſelf with care, and ſorrows and pains, like a woman in travel; for ſo much the word imports, Pſal. 48. 6. Others read it, Kills himſelf, or thruſts himſelf through. Suitable to the Apoſtles expreſſion, 1 Tim. 6. verſ. 10.

all his dayes] As long as he lives. He will never give himſelf any reſt. For the word Day ſee on Chap. 14. 14.

and the number of years] The time how long he ſhall live upon the face of the earth. As the wicked mans life is full of pain, and trouble, ſo he knows not how ſoon his life may be taken away.

is hidden] Is kept ſo cloſe from him, that he can no more tell the day of his death, then men can ſee things that are hidden.

to the oppreſſor] Or, To the mighty one. It comes from a word that ſignifies to fear, and notes out ſuch men, as by reaſon of their power and cruelty, make others afraid of them. Others read the latter end of the verſe thus, And in the number of years, which is hidden to the oppreſſour. And then it is the ſame in ſenſe with the former, onely it is delivered in other words, for emphaſis ſake. It is certain, he ſhall have trouble all his life long. See on Chap. 14. 10, 11. Others read it thus, And ſoon numbred years, are ſtored up for the Tyrant. That is, God in his ſecret decree, hath appointed him but a ſhort time to live. The number of years then is the ſame the years of number, Chap. 16. 22. and men of number, Gen. 34. 30. That is, few, that may be quickly numbred. So may the dayes of tyrants, who are ſoon cut off for their cruelty.

V. 21. A dreadful ſound is in his ear; in proſperity the deſtroyer ſhall come upon him] In this verſe, he ſets out the unquiet condition of ungodly men; both in regard of inward fears, and alſo of outward dangers. The ſumme is, His eares ring alwayes with horrible, and fearful ſounds; and when he ſhall think himſelf to be in greateſt ſafety, even then ſhall the enemie come upon him, utterly to deſtroy him.

a dreadful ſound: Heb. a ſound of fears, or terrours] That is, a moſt terrible noiſe. He thinks he hears terrible voices, telling him (and that not untruly in the end) that the enemy, or danger is neer, which threatens ſudden deſtruction to him every moment. And he ſaith of terrours in the plurall number; that is of many terrours at once; or one coming after another, preſently without intermiſſion, and giving him no reſt at all. It is likely he alludes to thoſe ſad meſſages, that came ſo thick on Job in the end of the firſt Chapter. The name of a noiſe carries terrour with it, telling as it were, that danger is at hand, Jer. 4. 19. Nah. 3. 2. The word קול, ſignifies; 1. A noiſe, or ſound in general, though not articulate, as Exod. 9. 28. Ezek. 1. 24. 2. A voice of words, diſtinctly ſpoken, as Gen. 21. 12. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for ſome great noiſe, cauſing fear. The word פחד, ſignifies; 1. The act of fear, Pſal. 31. 11. 2. The perſon feared, Gen. 31. 53. 3. The thing, or evil feared, Prov. 3. 25. Here it is taken in the third ſenſe, for dangers, that make men afraid: ſo it is alſo taken, Prov. 1. 26, 27.

is in his eares] Or, ſounds in his eares; which is more elegant. The verb is underſtood in the Original. He means, that his fear makes him perpetually to think of dangers, as if the ſound of them were within his ears, ſo as it could never be gotten out. The word אזן ear, in the Original ſignifies; 1. The inſtrument of hearing, Levit. 8. 23.

2. The act of hearing, Deut. 31. 11. So here. He thinks he alwayes hears ſuch a noiſe.

in proſperity] Heb. in peace. So the word properly ſignifies; and becauſe peace brings proſperity, it is put for that alſo. He ſhall be deſtroyed, when he is at higheſt, Dan. 4. 30, 31.

the deſtroyer] If he have any time of quietneſſe granted him, yet then ſhall the deſtroyer come unexpectedly to overthrow him utterly, 1 Theſſ. 5. 3.

ſhall come upon him] The Hebrew word בוא ſignifies; 1. To come to a place, Gen. 43. 21. 2. When it is ſpoken of the Sun, it ſignifieth the ſetting of it, Gen. 28. 11. 3. When of a mans carriage to a woman, it is a modeſt expreſſion of lying with her, Pſal. 51. in the title. 4. When of dayes, it notes out old age, Gen. 24. 1. 5. When of words, it ſignifies the fulfilling of them, 1 Sam. 9. 6. 6. When of corn, it intimates the gathering of it, Hag. 1. 6. 7. When of a congregation or ſociety of men, it notes admiſſion into it, as a member to enjoy all the priviledges of it, Deut. 23. 3. 8. When of a covenant, it ſignifies making of a covenant, or accepting of it, Jer. 34. 10. 9. When with application to fathers, it ſignifies dying, Gen. 15. 15. 10. When of a thing without life, it notes the coming to paſſe of a thing, Chap. 1. 19. 11. When it is joyned with going out, it ſignifies adminiſtring an office in the Common-wealth, Church, or Family, Numb. 27. 17. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for coming into his habitation, with a purpoſe to deſtroy him.

V. 22. He believeth not that he ſhall return out of darkneſſe, and he is waited for of the ſword] If the wicked man fall into adverſity, he hath no hope at all to be delivered, but deſpaireth, looking for nothing but death, as if he ſaw a ſword alwaies hanging over his head. He is perſwaded his troubles will bring him to death. This alſo reflects upon Jobs ſpeeches, Chap. 10. 20, 21, 22.

He believeth not] The word האמין ſignifies; 1. to give credit to a thing, or believe it to be true, Pſal. 116. 10. 2. to put truſt in one, or confidence, as Chap. 4. 18. Here it is uſed in the firſt ſenſe.

that he ſhall return] Heb. to return. To wit, out of his miſery to his former proſperity. For the various ſignifications of the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 13.

out of darkneſſe] The word ſignifies darkneſſe literally, but here, as in other places, it is put for calamity, which takes away the light and delight of comforts.

and he is waited for] He is in danger of the ſword, as if it had underſtanding, and did watch for him continually, to have an opportunity to kill him. Thus he lives in continual fear. Or, looked upon. For thoſe things we wait for, we think often of, and look on them ſtedfaſtly, if they come in our ſight. They take our eyes off from other objects, Pſal. 37. 32. Or, but that he is waited for: He is alwaies in fear of death.

of the ſword] Or, by the ſword. As this particle is tranſlated, Jer. 33. 4. Or, to be delivered to the ſword. One verb included in another: waited for to the ſword: that is, waited for to be delivered to the ſword. See the like v. 8. The word חרב, 1. ſignifies the inſtrument of killing, the ſword, which deſtroyes many, Pſal. 89. 43. 2. for murder, which is often done by the ſword, Iſai. 65. 12. If it be tranſlated, Of the ſword, then it is taken in the firſt ſenſe: If, To the ſword, then in the ſecond. Some read the latter part thus, But that he is waited for of the ſword; that is, he is ſo far from believing that he ſhall eſcape, that he certainly perſwades himſelf that he ſhall be ſlain. For ו, But, ſee on Chap. 14. 10.

V. 23. He wandereth abroad for bread, ſaying, Where is it? he knoweth that the day of darkneſſe is ready at his hand] When God begins to afflict him, and take away his eſtate, he doth go abroad, to ſeek for things needful to preſerve his life, but he ſtands alwaies in fear of death.

He wandereth abroad] It may ſignifie fear. He goes ſwiftly from place to place, like a baniſhed man, and dares tarry no where, leaſt he ſhould be ſlain, Gen. 4. 14. Iſai. 16. 2. Prov. 27. 8. Or, it may ſignifie extream poverty. He that was rich before, now goes up and down like a begger to ſeek for food, Pſal. 37. 25. & 59. 15. & 109. 10.

for bread] The Hebrew word לחם ſignifies; 1. Food, in general, or meat, 1 King. 5. 9. 2. Bread, which is mans common and chief food, Gen. 25. 34. 3. Corn, of which bread is made, Gen. 41. 54. 4. For fruit of trees, which is food for living creatures, Jer. 11. 19. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for food: Yet it may be underſtood of the meaneſt food, ſought for by him, with great labour and travel. He would be glad of a piece of bread, that might but ſuſtain life, if he can get it, 1 Sam. 2. 5, 36.

ſaying, Where is it?) Or, to ſeek where it is. One verb included in another, as Iſai. 38. 14, 17, 21. He leaves no way untried, that ſo he may get ſome. This ſhews his great neceſſity.

he knoweth] He hath a certain perſwaſion of it in his heart. It is a great part of the puniſhment of wicked men, that their mind forebodes them evil. He perceives inevitable miſery coming upon him.

that the day of darkneſſe] For the word day, ſee on Chap. 14. 14. here it is put for the time. For darkneſſe, ſee on ver. 22. of this Chapter. Yet here it is not put for trouble, as there, but rather for death, which brings a man to the grave, the houſe of darkneſſe, Chap. 10. 21, 22. Eccl. 6. 4. & 11. 8. Pſal. 143. 3. He was already in trouble, as appears in the beginning of the verſe, that was upon him, and therefore could not be ready for him. But he perſwaded himſelf, that he ſhould never be rid of his trouble till he died, and thought that would quickly come to paſſe.

is ready at his hand] Very neer. As ſure, as if he were already deſtroyed. So he thinks that God, who hath already made him poor, will ſoon kill him. Death is imminent, he expects it every moment, Chap. 18. 12. The Hebrew word, יד: 1. Signifies that member of the body, ſo called, Jer. 2. 37. 2. Strength, or power, Deut. 32. 36. 3. Counſel, or advice, 2 Sam. 14. 19. 4. A ſtroak, or plague, Chap. 13. 21. 5. A place, Deut. 23. 12. 6. Power, or poſſeſſion, Chap. 2. 6. 7. Actions, which are uſually done with the hands, Pſal. 24. 4. 8. An inſtrument, as the hand is of many actions, Pſal. 17. 14. 9. Bounty, 1 King. 10. 13. for we give with the hand. 10. Labour, Levit. 25. 47. Here it may be taken in the fifth ſenſe, for a place, and ready at hand, is beſide him, or neer to him; as 1 Sam. 19. 3. 2 Sam. 14. 30. He is in great danger of death, Chap. 13. 14. He lives alwaies in fear of it, Deut. 28. 66.

V. 24. Trouble and anguiſh ſhall make him afraid; they ſhall prevail againſt him, as a King ready to the battel] He goeth on to deſcribe the miſery, that God will bring upon wicked men, when he takes them to task for their ſins.

Trouble] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to keep in, or ſtraiten a man, or to beſiege a city, ſo that men have not room enough to breath, or to get things neceſſary. It imports any great trouble or grief, whereby mans heart is ſtraitned, kept in and oppreſſed, ſo that he knows not how to get out of it.

and anguiſh] It is derived from a word, that ſignifies cleaving faſt to one, like a diſeaſe that cannot be parted from the body, that pains a man ſore. Both words argue the greatneſſe, and unavoidableneſſe of their miſery, Prov. 1. 27.

ſhall make him afraid] The troubles he feels, ſhall make him fear more and greater, coming on him.

they ſhall prevail againſt him] They ſhall not onely ſcare him, but alſo utterly overcome him. See on Chap. 14. 20.

as a king ready to the battel] As a King, having a great Army about him, ready to ſtorm a City, puts it into a great affright, and ſuddenly deſtroyes it, ſo ſhall their troubles do to them, Iſai. 29. 3. The word is taken from another word, that ſignifies a Ball, Iſai. 22. 18. For ſouldiers in a ſiege lie round about a City, that none may go in or out, to compel the place to yield to them.

V. 25. For he ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God, and ſtrengtheneth himſelf againſt the Almighty] Now he comes to ſet out the judgements, and puniſhments, wherewith God will afflict and deſtroy ungodly men, and ſets the cauſes of theſe judgements before, that all men might know that Gods vengeance on them was moſt juſt. And both the cauſes and judgements are ſet out with excellent metaphors and ſimilitudes. In this verſe and the next, there is as it were a pitcht battel betwixt the wicked man and God.

For] Some would have the cauſes of the troubles mentioned before, to be here ſet down, why the wicked man is in ſo much danger of troubles, ere they come; and deſpairs of help when they come on him, namely, oppoſing himſelf againſt God, who can deſtroy him in deſpight of all helpers, Chap. 9. 13. and from whoſe power no man can deliver him, Pſal. 50. 22. Hoſ. 5. 14. Others read it, Becauſe. And refer it to the words following, as the cauſe of Gods oppoſing him, verſ. 26. So כי, is tranſlated, Chap. 11. 16.

he ſtretcheth out] Or, he hath ſtretched out. For he ſpeaks of his former proud carriage in time of his proſperity, as ver. 27. not of his preſent carriage now in his adverſity, as verſ. 23. 24.

his hand] For this word, ſee on ver. 23. For the phraſe of ſtretching out the hand, ſee on Chap. 11. 13. yet the word is not uſed here for a geſture of prayer, as there; but for reſiſting or ſmiting, as an enemy ſtretches out his hand in battel to deſtroy his enemy; as Zeph. 1. 4. So would the wicked man deſtroy God, if he could. Or it may be taken for ſinning againſt God with a ſtretched out, or high hand, or with all his power, Lev. 26. 21. Num. 15. 30.

againſt God] See on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

and ſtrengtheneth himſelf] Like a ſtrong Warriour he bends all his ſtrength againſt God, whom no man can reſiſt, and who will overthrow all his enemies. It may be read, And hath ſtrengthened himſelf; to wit, before, in his proſperity.

againſt the Almighty] Who can do all things, is ſufficient for himſelf, needs no helps, nor weapons, nor forts, but is of himſelf invincible. See on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

V. 26. He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick boſſes of his bucklers.] Seeing they uſe all their ſtrength againſt God, God alſo will ſet upon them, like a furious enemy, that regards neither their ſtrength, nor armour, but runs fearleſly upon them, and throws them down to the ground.

He] Some interpret it of the wicked man, who in the former verſe was ſaid to ſtrengthen himſelf againſt God; and in this verſe they conceive, that his fearleſneſſe and impudence is ſet down, ſo that nothing can ſcare him from ſinning againſt God. But it is rather to be underſtood of Gods proceeding againſt the wicked man in judgement, as he did againſt him in ſin, verſ. 25. He, may have reference to either; for both are mentioned in the former verſe.

runneth upon him] A ſimilitude from a valiant Souldier, who ſtayes not till his enemy ſets on him, but runs apace, and ſets fiercely on him, as ſoon as he ſets eye upon him, 1 Sam. 17. 48. Dan. 8. 6.

even on his neck] He ſtands not afar off, but comes cloſe to him, and takes him about the neck to caſt him down; or ſtrangle him, Others read it, with his neck, That is, with a ſtretched out neck, to ſhew his forwardneſſe to fall upon him. So wooll is put for white wooll, Iſa. 1. 18. A yoke on the neck, ſignifies ſlavery, in Scripture phraſe, Gen. 27. 40. Falling on the neck, intimates love, Gen. 45. 14. Speaking with a ſtiffe neck, ſhews arrogancy, Pſal. 75. 5. Hardening the neck, ſets out impenitency, Jer. 19. 15. But running on the neck, here intimates a violent, and ſudden deſtruction of the wicked man.

upon the thick] His ſtrong armour, that by reaſon of the thickneſſe thereof, he thinks can keep out bullets and darts. The word is uſed ſometimes to ſet out a cloud, which is the thickeſt part of the sky, 1 King. 18. 44. Sometimes to ſet out the thick woods, Jer. 4. 29. Sometimes the clay, or thick earth; as 2 Chr. 4. 17.

boſſes] The word גב ſignifies a thing that is higher then the reſt. As 1. An houſe, or building higher then others, Ezek. 16. 24. 2. The back of beaſts, which uſeth to be higheſt, Pſal. 129. 3. 3. The eyebrows, that are above the eye, Lev. 14. 9. 4. The upper part of the wheel, 1 King. 7. 33. 5. For the body of man, which goes upright, and is higher then the beaſts, Job 13. 12. 6. For the boſſes and higheſt parts of a buckler, as here. Others read it, the backs, in the ſecond ſenſe, becauſe bucklers were wont to be made of the backs of beaſts doubled.

of his buckler] מגן comes from a word that ſignifies to protect, or defend. And ſignifies, Firſt, A buckler, or ſhield, wherewith the body is defended from wounds in battel, 2 Sam. 1. 21. Secondly, By a metaphor it ſignifies protection it ſelf from any dangers, Gen. 15. 1. 3. Kings and Rulers, who are the protectors of the people, Hoſ. 4. 18. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe. And the meaning is, that though the wicked man have much wealth and ſtrength more then others, which he truſts to, as a Souldier to a thick buckler with high boſſes on it, yet God will ſet upon him, and rout him for all that. Others read it, with the thick boſſes of his buckler. God will ſend exquiſit and high judgements upon him.

V. 27. Becauſe he covereth his face with his fatneſſe, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks] Though he live plentifully and deliciouſly for a time, yet he ſhall come to poverty; as in the following verſes is expreſt. He ſeems tacitely to accuſe Job and his children, as pampering themſelves in their proſperity, and ſo bringing haſty ruine upon themſelves. Peradventure he alludes to Jobs children feaſting one another by turns, Chap. 1. 4.

Becauſe] Their glutting themſelves, is the cauſe of their enſuing ruine. Or, Though. Although he did live in a Palace, and faired daintily, yet he ſhall come to extreme poverty. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 44. 19.

he covereth] Not that his face is hidden, but it is all over fat, as a thing covered is hid all over. Nothing but fat can be ſeen in it. No part of it is leane.

his face] See on Chap. 14. 20. The face onely is named, becauſe that lies open to all mens view, when the fat of the body is covered with the apparel.

with his fatneſſe] The word literally ſignifies the fat part of the body of man or beaſt, as Deut, 32. 14. metaphorically it is put for the excellenteſt of any thing, as the fat of the land, that is the beſt fruits of the earth, Gen. 44. 18. Some underſtand this phraſe of covering his face with fatneſſe, literaly, of fatting himſelf up with the plentiful, and ſuperfluous uſe of Gods creatures given to him in abundance, Chap, 21. 23. Pſal. 17. 10. & 73. 7. Others underſtand it metaphorically of being proud of his proſperity; as Deut. 32. 15. Pſal. 78. 31. Jer. 46. 21.

and maketh] See on Chap. 14. 9.

collops of fat] So much that one may as it were take it up by handfuls.

on his flancks] As Lev. 3. 4. Or, Loines, as Pſal. 38. 7. To intimate a full delighting of himſelf in the creatures, and fatning himſelf in every part, like a fat oxe, or abundance of pride, by reaſon of abundance of wealth.

V. 28. And he dwelleth in deſolate cities, and in houſes which no man inhabiteth, which are ready to become heaps.] Some underſtand it of the continuance of his proſperity. He grew ſo rich, that he was able to build famous Palaces in places uninhabited before, or decayed. See on Chap. 3. 14. Others conceive it to be the beginning of the ſetting out of his poverty. He is glad now to dwell in deſert places, being driven out of his ſtately Palaces.

And] Or, Yet. So it is tranſlated, Pſal. 119. 109, 110. He hath been very rich, but now is come to extreme poverty.

he dwelleth] Maketh his conſtant abiding in ſuch places.

in deſolate] The word כחד 1. Signifies Hidden, as Pſal. 69. 5. 2. Cut off, or deſtroyed, or deſolate, Exod. 9. 15. For Cities deſtroyed by the enemy lie hid as it were, from mens ſight. Some underſtand it of places ruinated by his oppreſſion.

cities] עיר comes from a word, that in the Original ſignifies to awake or ſtir up, becauſe it is as it were awaked or ſtirred up out of the duſt, as a man out of ſleep. It is put, 1. For the city it ſelf, Gen. 19. 4. 2. For the inhabitants of it, Mic. 6. 9. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

and in houſes] בית comes from בנה, to build. Houſes grow not like trees, but muſt be made by mens labour. It is put, 1. For the habitations of men, Prov. 1. 13. 2. For the neſts of birds, which are their houſes or dwelling places, Pſal. 84. 3. 3. For the Houſhold, Family, Nation, or Poſterity, as the Houſe of Jacob, the Houſe of Judah, the Houſe of Iſrael. Here it is uſed in the firſt ſenſe, for their dwelling places.

which no man inhabiteth] Unfit for dwelling, and ready to fall down on mens heads.

which are ready to become heaps] Which are very ruinous, and within a little time will fall to the ground, and the ſtones thereof lie on heaps. Such as are not fit for a man to dwell in. The word גל, ſignifies. 1. An heap of ſtones, Gen. 31. 46. 2. An heap of water, or a wave, Pſal. 65. 7. 3. A Fountain, which hath abundance of water in it, as an heap hath plenty of ſtones, Cant. 4. 12. In this place it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for an heap of ſtones. See on Chap. 8. 17.

V. 29. He ſhall not be rich, neither ſhall his ſubſtance continue, neither ſhall he prolong the perfection thereof upon the earth.] As his habitation is now become poor, and vile, ſo his condition ſhall abide. He may toyl and labour till his heart ake, but he ſhall never attain to his former proſperity again.

He ſhall not be rich] Some underſtand it thus; Though he build him famous houſes, yet he ſhall ſoon be put out of them, and loſe all his wealth. He ſhall not continue alwaies rich, though now he be ſo. But it is rather to be underſtood of not getting riches any more, and Gods blaſting all his labours to that end; for he is ſet out as a poor man already, ver. 23.

neither ſhall his ſubſtance] The word חיל, ſignifies. 1. Strength of body, as 2 Sam. 11. 16. 2. Virtue, which is the ſtrength of the mind, Prov. 31. 10. 3. An army or multitude of men, wherein the ſtrength of a Nation conſiſts; an hoſt, 1 Sam. 14. 48. 4. Riches, which are the rich mans fort and ſtrength, Iſa. 10. 14. 5. For the fruit of trees, which comes from the ſtrength, and is the riches of the trees, Joel 2. 22. 6. For a Palace, wherein conſiſts the ſtrength, and lies the wealth of Princes, Pſal. 122. 7. 7. For a wall, which is the ſtrength, and defence of a City above unwalled Villages, Nah. 3. 8. Here it is taken in the fourth ſenſe, for riches.

continue] For this word, ſee on Chap. 14. 12. Or, Keep. If he do get any riches again after his poverty by his painful labour, he ſhall not keep them long, God will ſoon make him poor again.

neither ſhall he prolong] Heb. ſtretch out. A metaphor from the hand or arm ſtretched out at length.

the perfection thereof] He ſhall not come to any great degree of riches. God will blaſt him before he get a large eſtate.

upon the earth] See on Chap. 9. 14.

V. 30. He ſhall not depart out of darkneſſe, the flame ſhall dry up his branches, and by the breath of his mouth ſhall he go away.] The trouble that now is upon him, he ſhall never get out of; but ſhall endure a perpetual night of affliction, till God take him away by a violent death.

He ſhall not depart] He would willingly remove out of this ſad condition, but can find no way of eſcaping.

out of darkneſſe] Darkneſſe of trouble. See on ver. 22. Or darkneſſe of death, ſee on ver. 23.

the flame] The flame of troubles, or diſeaſes, or pains, or enemies, all which burn like fire, Iſa. 43. 2. Jer. 48. 45. Lam. 2. 3.

ſhall dry up] Shall quite extinguiſh or deſtroy, as the fire doth the wood.

his branches] His children, yea his little ſucking ones, as the word may import. Or all his wealth, if he recover any again. A metaphor from a tree thunder-ſtruck, whoſe green branches are dried up and blaſted. Or from enemies, who burn all where they come, trees and all, Joel 1. 19. Zech. 11. 1. Eſay 29. 6.

of his mouth] See on verſ. 5. of this Chapter. And, Chap. 4. 9.

ſhall he go away] Remove out of this world. He ſhall be ſlain by ſome judgement pronounced againſt him by God in his anger, and ſent upon him to make an end of him, as eaſily and as ſuddenly, as breath comes out of a mans mouth. Some underſtand it of Gods mouth, who was mentioned, verſ. 25. Others of the wicked mans own mouth. He ſhould by his words bring himſelf into capital danger, and ſo loſe his life. Or, He ſhould be ſo cholerick, and impatient in his trouble, that he ſhould ſend out his laſt breath ſuddenly in a paſſionate fit. He ſhall die ſuddenly without ſickneſſe or warning, Pſal. 146. 4. Iſa. 2. 22.

V. 31. Let not him, that is deceived, truſt in vanity; for vanity ſhall be his recompence] Eliphaz here begins the concluſion, of his eloquent ſpeech with a Proverbe, or famous ſentence, obliquely accuſing Job, of truſting too much to his former proſperity, and perſwading him to do ſo no more, if ever God ſhould reſtore him to proſperity again, ſeeing he had been deceived by it already. The miſery of ſuch deluded perſons, he ſets down plainly, verſ. 32. and by divers elegant metaphors in the verſes following, to the end of the Chapter.

Let not him that is deceived] The word תעה, literally ſignifies to erre, or go out of the right way; Metaphorically to ſin, or, go out of Gods way, as Pſal. 119. 176. And becauſe, men are often miſled by others, therefore it ſignifies alſo, to be deceived. It may be taken in general, here, for any wicked man; for they all erre, and are deceived: Or, it may be taken particularly for a man miſled by riches, and his own corruption; And then it is likely, he thought Job to be ſuch a one, that had abuſed his proſperity, and been miſled by it.

truſt] See on Chap. 4. 18.

in vanity] In riches, which are but vain, and cannot uphold him. They are but empty things, and fail in the time of need, Prov. 11. 4. Pſal. 119. 37.

for vanity] For he ſhall by experience find the vanity of them, being made poor.

ſhall be his recompence] Heb. his exchange. He ſhall change one vanity for another: The vanity of riches for poverty, which he ſhall ſee to be vain, and empty, when his hopes are all diſappointed, and he left helpleſſe.

V. 32. It ſhall be accompliſhed before his time, and his branch ſhall not be green] He goes on by ſimilitudes, to ſet out the ſad, and ſudden deſtruction of ungodly men. 1. From the ſimilitude of a tree, in general in this verſe. 2. Of a vine, and olive tree in particular, ver. 33. 3. Of a fire conſuming things ſuddenly, and irrecoverably, ver 34. 4. Of a woman with childe, or rather conceiving her ſelf to be ſo, and being deceived, verſ. 35.

It] The drying up of his branch; mentioned ver. 30. and repeated in this verſe; or vanity, or his recompence, or change, mentioned ver. 31.

ſhall be accompliſhed] The time ſhall quickly come, when he ſhall be deſtroyed. See on Chap. 15. 2. Or, It ſhall be cut off.

before his time] Heb. in not his day. He ſhall be taken away before he need to die by the courſe of nature. His wickedneſſe ſhall ſhorten his life, Eccl. 7. 17. Chap. 22. 16. Pſal. 55. 23. or his proſperity ſhall be gone before his life. His wealth ſhall not laſt till his death, as it often doth with other men. His day, is taken ſometimes for the day of his birth, as Chap. 3. 1. Sometimes for the day of mans death, 1 Sam. 26. 10. Pſal. 37. 13. Chap. 18. 20. So here.

and his branch] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to be bowed or crooked, for boughes either grow ſo naturally, or are bowed down by the weight of the fruit that growes on them. The word before, ver. 30. ſignified the leſſer boughes, like ſucking children: this may ſignifie the greater boughes laden and bowed down with fruit. As ſometimes wicked mens proſperity is interrupted, when they begin to thrive, ſo at other times when they are very rich.

ſhall not be green] That is, ſhall be dryed up. His life, or children, or riches, ſhall be ſuddenly taken away by ſome exemplary judgement; as the boughes of a tree blaſted before it be old.

V. 33. He ſhall ſhake off his unripe grape, as the vine, and ſhall caſt off his flower, as the Olive.] It ſeems that Vines and Olive trees were frequent in thoſe Countries, and had their buds and bloſſoms ſooner blown off then other trees in regard of their tenderneſſe. For ſuch it was fitteſt for Job to inſtance in. The ſcope is, That a wicked mans wealth and poſſeſſions ſhall be taken away before they come to their height, as fruit before it be ripe. And it is not improbable, that Eliphaz ſtrikes at the ſudden and violent taking away of Jobs children, and cattel, Chap. 1.

He] God, as ver. 30. See there. Or, The wicked man himſelf, as the trees drop their bloſſomes ſometimes, when there is no ſtorm, nor no man to pull them off. And then it hath reference to him that is deceived, ver. 31. Or, Imperſonally, It ſhall be ſhaken off. So the third perſon is often uſed. See on Chap. 3. 3.

ſhake off] Pull it off, or beat it off by violence. Broughton reads it, ſnap off. The meaning is, that as a violent ſtorm ſnaps off unripe figs, and bloſſomes of Olives, ſo ſhall God by ſome extraordinary judgement bring ungodly men to poverty. The word ſignifies to take away by violence, as theeves and robbers do, and as Jobs cattel were taken away before.

his unripe grape] The wicked mans wealth, which like an unripe grape is not yet come to perfection.

as a vine] Rather, as of a vine. For the Vine doth not ſhake off her grapes, but the wind or tempeſt doth it. So God deſtroyes wicked mens wealth. So Broughton reads it, as the vines, That is, God will as eaſily ſtrip ſuch of their riches, as he doth vines of their unripe grapes.

and ſhall caſt off] Or, caſt away, as Iſa. 2. 20. For it is rather ſpoken of God, then of the Olive tree it ſelf.

his flower] His wealth; as before. So Iſa. 18. 5.

as the olive] Or, as the olives. See on, as the vine, before in this verſe.

V. 34. For the Congregation of hypocrites ſhall be deſolate, and fire ſhall conſume the tabernacles of bribery.] Here is the ſecond ſimilitude, which ſets out the ſudden, violent and utter deſtruction of wicked men. As a fire ſeizing on an houſe or city, ſpares nothing, but devoures men, women, children, goods, houſes, and leaves places deſolate, that were inhabited before; ſo will God deal with ungodly men. He will bring them to extreme poverty, and leave them nothing at all. Thus had God dealt with Job, and therefore Eliphaz conceives him to be but an hypocrite.

For] They deſerve to be ruined, becauſe they are but hypocrites at the beſt, and very corrupt perſons taking bribes.

the congregation] Not one hypocrite alone, but the whole knot of them, that uſe to meet together, as Merchants on the Exchange, to plot, how they may oppreſſe the poor, and ruine others. Or, Not himſelf onely, but all his train alſo and family, children, and ſervants. Or, his riches and great eſtate which he hath gathered together.

of the hypocrites] Heb. of the hypocrite. That is, of every hypocrite. So verſ. 20. the wicked man. And ſo he ſpeaks of him, all along, in the ſingular number, intending, that no wicked man can eſcape Gods judgement, or looking upon Job in particular, with an evil eye, as on an hypocrite. For the word, ſee on Chap. 8. 13.

ſhall be deſolate] His companions, family, riches, though never ſo many, ſhall become like a deſolate wilderneſſe. He ſhall be left alone. So ſome read it; The congregation of the hypocrite ſhall be as one deſolate. For the adjective is maſculine, and agrees not with congregation in gender, in the Original. See on Chap. 3. 7. See alſo Chap. 30. 3. Iſai. 49. 21.

and fire] אש is taken from a word, that ſignifies to be ſtrong, for fire hath a great force, and will devour the ſtrongeſt places. It is uſed metaphorically oftentimes in Scripture, to expreſſe divers things, as firſt, trouble, affliction, ſickneſſe, pains, which devour mens ſtrength, or wealth, Pſal. 66. 12. Secondly, War, or enemies, making ſpoile in a country, as fire doth, where it prevailes, Jer. 48. 45. Thirdly, for a hot burning blaſting wind, which dries up paſtures, Joel 1. 20. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe. So flame is uſed, ver. 30.

ſhall conſume] Heb. ſhall eat. It ſhall feed on their tabernacles as greedily, as a hungry man doth on his meat to nouriſh him, and devour them quite. So Amos 1. 4. Nah. 3. 15. Joel 1. 19. Zech. 11. 1. Deut. 5. 25. 2 King 1. 12. Chap. 20. 26. So the ſword eats up and devoures, 2 Sam. 2. 26. The land devoures the inhabitants, Num. 13. 32.

the tabernacles] See Chap. 5. 24. & 11. 14.

of bribery] Of men that take bribes. The houſes where ſuch men dwell. The habitations of corrupt Judges, or Magiſtrates. So, tents or houſes of wickedneſſe, Pſal. 84. 10. that is, where wicked men dwell, as appears by the oppoſition to Gods houſe there. Or, houſes built by bribes received, to pervert juſtice. Heb. tabernacles of a bribe. He caſts it in Jobs teeth, that his ſtate was gotten by indirect means, and his houſe built by bribes: and conceives, that therefore thoſe judgements came on him, Chap. 1.

V. 35. They conceive miſchief, and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepareth deceit] The third ſimilitude, to ſet out the deſtruction of ungodly men, is in this verſe, taken from a woman with childe. The mind of the wicked man is compared to the belly of the woman: his hurtful thoughts are compared to conception, and the trouble he puts himſelf to, that he may bring his cruel plots to effect, is compared to child-bearing. Or, it may be, from a woman that thinks ſhe hath conceived, and is deceived, having either a timpany, or ſome falſe conception in her womb. She pleaſes her ſelf with the thoughts of a childe, but brings forth nothing but water, or ſome dead maſſe. So doth the hypocrite think he ſhall undo others, and enrich himſelf by his crafty plots, but they come to nothing.

They conceive] They imagine, or deviſe in their hearts.

miſchief] They ſtudy how to breed labour and ſorrow to others. For this monſtrous conception, ſee Pſal. 7. 14. Iſai. 59. 4.

and bring forth] His outward actions are like his conceptions, hurtful to others, or at leaſt, not profitable to himſelf.

vanity] Their plots come to nothing in the end. Or, iniquity. They undo others, and therefore muſt be undone themſelves, ver. 34.

and] Or, though. As it is tranſlated, Pſal. 78. 23. For the preparing doubtleſſe went before the bringing forth, and anſwers to the carrying of the children in the womb till the time of delivery. Or, For their belly hath prepared deceit. For what is in the belly, muſt come forth by birth. So ו is tranſlated For, Chap. 11. 4.

their belly prepareth] For the ſeveral ſignifications of the word, ſee on ver. 2. of this Chapter. But here it is taken figuratively for the inward part of man, or mind, which is in the middle of him, as the belly is in the midſt of the body. For the mind nouriſheth the thoughts, as the belly the child, till it be born, Prov. 22. 18. within thee. Heb. in thy belly, that is, in thy mind. And it imports the perpetual thinking of their plot, till it comes to action, as conceiving ſets out the firſt invention of it. This is called preparing in the belly, that is, fiting it for execution.

deceit] He plots how to deceive others, whom he cannot overcome by might.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſ. 1. THen Job anſwered, and ſaid] Eliphaz had been bitter to Job in this ſecond conflict, more then in the former, and given no comfort at all, as in the former; for there he perſwaded him to return to God, promiſing much happineſſe to him, if he did ſo; but here he ſpeaks of nothing, but of the deſtruction of wicked men; as if he thought Job irrecoverable. Job in his anſwer, in this Chapter and the next, ſets out his great griefe copiouſly; defends his innocency, accuſes his friends of inhumanity. He charges them with unkindneſſe, in repeating the ſame things again, and again, which he had anſwered before, and they ſtill reiterated to no purpoſe, but to grive him, as he conceives. Firſt, he ſhewes the vanity, and uncomfortableneſſe of their conſolations, to ver. 6. of this Chapter; and then falls upon the matter, to refute their falſe imputations fathered on him, by reaſon of his ſad afflictions; Job therefore contends more eagerly for his integrity, then formerly, and aſſerts it more plainly, and fully.

He firſt rejects their ſayings, and conſolations, as unprofitable, troubleſome, and reproachfull, in the three firſt verſes of this Chapter. Then by the contrary he ſhews, verſ. 4. and 5. that he would take a far other courſe with them, if they were in his caſe, and would be a far better comforter.

anſwered] The word ענה ſignifies. 1. To ſpeak, or, begin a ſpeech, Job 3. 2. 2. To cry out, or ſpeak aloud, Iſai. 13. 22. 3. To ſing; Pſal. 147. 7. 4. To ſpeak in witneſſe-bearing, Exod. 20. 16. 5. To hear what is ſaid, or regard it, Job 19. 7. 6. To give an anſwer to what is ſaid, Job 8. 1. 7. To grant what is deſired, which is a reall anſwer, Pſal. 18. 41. 8. To be afflicted, Pſal. 116. 10. Here it is taken in the ſixth ſenſe: for Job anſwers Eliphaz his former ſpeech.

and ſaid] See on Chap. 3. 2. The word אמר is uſed. 1. For uttering the thoughts of a mans mind by ſpeech, Chap. 3. 2. 2. For commanding or ſpeaking imperiouſly, Eſt. 1. 10. 3. For ſpeaking proverbially, Gen. 22. 14. 4. For thinking or ſpeaking in heart, Pſal. 39. 1. & 53. 1. Chap. 1. 5. See there. Here it is uſed in the firſt ſenſe, for Jobs expreſſing in words what he thought of Eliphaz his painted ſpeech.

V. 2. I have heard many ſuch things: miſerable comforters are ye all] As if Job ſhould have ſaid, Is it any new thing, which thou ſpeakeſt, or have I not heard theſe things very often? Is this which ye do even all the ſort of you, is this I ſay, to comfort your friend, or is it not rather to vex and grieve him to the very heart?

I have heard] For this word, ſee on Chap. 13. 17.

many ſuch things] Heb. many things like theſe. See Chap. 12. 3. & 13. 1, 2. I have heard many ſuch things as ye tell me, of the deſtruction of ungodly men, from others, and from you, who often inculcate the ſame things to trouble me. Theſe things are common, and known to all, which ye think to be ſuch hidden myſteries. Or I have had many ſuch reproaches caſt upon me by others, and often repeated by you in your vain diſcourſes. And therefore he calls them miſerable comforters, and wiſhes for an end of their ſpeeches. Here he ſets out the needleſneſſe of their many words. Others read it, I have heard ſuch things often, or, many times. And the words will bear it.

miſerable comforters] Heb. comforters of miſery, or trouble, Chap. 13. 4. It may be an anſwer to what Eliphaz accuſed Job of, Chap. 15. 11. namely of ſetting light Divine conſolations, which God gave by the mouthes of his friends. Nay, ſaith Job, ye are well conceited of your counſels, that they are comfortable, but I find no ſuch ſweetneſſe in them, but rather more trouble from them. Ye come to comfort me, but inſtead of lightning my burden, ye lay more load on me. Ye preſſe me down with urging me, that my miſeries ariſe from grievous ſins committed by me. Thus he ſhews their ſpeeches to be troubleſome, and retorts the ſame thing on Eliphaz and his other friends, which Eliphaz had cloſely laid on Jobs ſhoulders, Chap. 15. 35. where the ſame word עמל is uſed, and ſhews, that they were the deviſers of miſchief, and not he: and that thoſe things which they ſpake of the violent deſtruction of ungodly men, as they were not alwaies true, ſo they were not fit ſalves for his ſore, who being a godly man, had more need to be comforted by Gods promiſes in his trialls.

are ye all] No one of you better then another. Ye all conſpire together to grieve and vex me.

V. 3. Shall vain words have an end? or what emboldneth thee, that thou anſwereſt?] Bildad had objected this perſiſting in vain and empty words to Job, Chap. 8. 2. And Eliphaz in the beginning of his ſecond conflict with him, Chap. 15. 2, 3. Now he retorts it upon Eliphaz again, who laſt objected it to him.

Shall, &c.] Heb. Shall there be an end to words of wind? Thou ſhouldſt not ſpeak thus to me, or at leaſt quickly give over ſpeaking ſo, when I have ſhewed thy folly, and not reply upon me again. As if he had ſaid, When wilt thou Eliphaz make an end of ſuch childiſh ſpeeches? Or, I would to God thou wouldeſt at length make an end of ſuch ſenſeleſſe talk, for I am weary of hearing it.

vain words] Empty of ſolid reaſon, like the wind, that hath no ſolidity in it. Or proud arrogant words, that rage like the wind at Sea in a tempeſt, or make thee ſwell like a bladder blown up. He may allude to Eliphaz his high and contumelious ſpeeches, as well as empty. See for theſe words, and this phraſe, Chap. 6. 26. & 8. 2. & 15. 2, 3.

have an end] It comes from a word which ſignifies to cut off. He would have him make an end of babling to no purpoſe.

or what emboldneth thee] What ſubſtantial, and ſure grounds haſt thou, or ſolid reaſon to confirm what thou ſayſt? Sure none at all.

that thou anſwereſt?] That thou doſt perſiſt in anſwering, or anſwer again, having been confuted before; Or, that thou anſwereſt thus boldly, and confidently without any ground of reaſon. For the word Anſwering, ſee on ver. 1.

V. 4. I alſo could ſpeak as ye do, if your ſoul were in my ſoules ſtead, I could heap up words againſt you, and ſhake my head at you] In this verſe and the next, Job ſhews how different his carriage ſhould be from theirs, if they were in miſery, and he were to comfort them. He would deal more lovingly with them, but not out of want of wit, for he could ſpeak as curiouſly and furiouſly as they, as he ſhews in this verſe; but for want of will to diſcourage them, and willingneſſe to encourage them, as appears in the next verſe.

alſo] This particle גם, ſometimes imports a diſtribution, as 1 Sam. 28. 15. 2. A conjunction of things, Jer. 14. 18. 3. A compariſon of things in a way of likeneſſe or equality, Jer. 51. 49. 4. An augmentation or encreaſe of a thing, Exod. 4. 10. Here it is uſed in the third ſenſe, as if he had ſaid, I could ſcoffe as eloquently as ye do.

I] The pronoun is added in the Original for emphaſis ſake, which needed not elſe, becauſe the perſon is included in the verb I, whom ye now trample under foot, could do as much to you in your miſery.

could ſpeak] This ſhews, that his forbearing to reproach them in their miſeries, proceeded not out of want of wiſdome to ſpeak elegantly, but out of a good conſcience, and commiſeration of other mens miſeries, ver. 5. which yet they ſhewed not to him in his troubles.

if] The word לו, ſometimes ſignifies, Would to God, or Oh that, and imports wiſhing, as Iſa. 64. 1. So ſome would read it here. I would you were miſerable as I am, and I in proſperity as you are, ye ſhould then ſee, how I could play upon you, as ye do on me. But this agrees not with Jobs ſcope; who was not ſo malicious as to wiſh them in that condition, and profeſſeth in the next verſe, that he would comfort them if they were. 2. It ſignifies, Peradventure, or, it may be, as Gen. 50. 15. 3. It ſignifies, I pray thee, as Gen. 23. 13. 4. It ſignifies, If, as Ezek. 14. 15. Judg. 13. 23. And ſo here.

your ſoul were in my ſouls ſtead] For the various ſignifications of the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 22. Here it ſignifies the perſon, If ye were afflicted as I am, or in as much danger, as my life is, 1 King. 20. 39, 42. 2 King. 10. 24. Deut. 19. 21.

I could heap up words againſt you] Heb. I could joyn againſt you in words. I could ſpeak as much againſt you, as ye have done againſt me. It is an eaſie thing to finde plenty of words to grieve them that are miſerable.

and ſhake my head at you] Heb. and ſhake againſt you with my head. In deſpight and mockery, whereof that geſture is a ſigne. I could deride you in words, and deſpiſe you in geſtures, as ye do me, 2 King. 19. 21. Pſal. 22. 7. & 44. 14. Lam. 2. 15. Jer. 18. 16. Others read it interrogatively, Would I ſpeak as you do, &c? No, I would comfort you, ver. 5. It is evident that Job would not have done ſo as they did: but onely told them what he could do, to ſhew them their errour. He might upon as good grounds contemn and deride them, if they were in his caſe, as they do him now. Yet they would think it hard dealing, and ſo might he now. A good way to bring them to ſee their ſin in another, which, blinded with ſelf-love, they could not ſee in themſelves.

V. 5. But I would ſtrengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips ſhould aſſwage your grief.] Though I could mock at your ſorrowes, yet I would not do it. But if time and occaſion were offered, I would perform the office of a comforter to you, much better then you do to me. I would labour to ſtrengthen you with comfortable words, and with gentle ſpeeches, to eaſe and aſſwage your grief.

But I would ſtrengthen you] In the former verſe he told them what he could do: here he tells them what he would do. I would be ſo far from diſcouraging you with my words, that I would labour to comfort you, and raiſe up your drooping ſpirits. A thing which men in miſerie have much need of, Iſa. 35. 4, 5. Pſal. 27. 14. Chap. 4. 4.

with my mouth] See on Chap. 15. 5.

and the moving of my lips] A periphraſis of ſpeaking, for men cannot ſpeak without the motion of the lips. For the word Lips, ſee on Chap. 15. 6.

ſhould aſſwage your grief] Heb. ſhould forbid, or, reſtrain. A metaphor, as ſome think, from thoſe that aſſwage mens pains by incantation. So would he allay their griefs by kind words. Others underſtand it of holding in unkind and uncomfortable words: for the words, your grief, are not in the Original. I would not give you ſo many ſnaps and girds, as ye have given me.

V. 6. Though I ſpeak, my grief is not aſſwaged; and though I forbear, what am I eaſed?] Job now acknowledges, that all thoſe things had befallen him, which Eliphaz had ſaid, did uſe to befall ungodly men, and inſtances in divers particular afflictions, from this verſe, to verſe 17. yet denies himſelf to be an ungodlie man, and proves his aſſertion by divers teſtimonies, from verſe 17. to the end of the Chapter. He begins this deſcription of his troubles, with the continual vexation his pain brought upon him, which moleſted him both when he ſpake, and when he held his peace. As if he had ſaid, If I ſpeak, my complaint doth no good, and if I ſit ſtill, and hear your diſcourſes, I receive no comfort, but more vexation. I know not which way to turn me for eaſe. For if I ſpeak, my torment will not thereby at all be leſſened; and if I hold my peace, how much ſhall my miſerie thereby be diminiſhed? Pſal. 32. 3, 4. Or, If I ſpeak to maintain mine innocencie, ye ſay my afflictions prove the contrarie. If I hold my tongue, ye think by my ſilence, I acknowledge my guiltineſſe, as having nothing to ſay for my ſelf.

Though] Heb. If. But it may fitly be tranſlated, though, as it is Chap. 9. 15.

I ſpeak] If I plead my cauſe, and defend my innocencie. So the word is uſed, Chap. 13. 3. Pſal. 51. 4. Or, If I complain of my pain.

my grief] By reaſon of my ſores, or of your ſore words. Or, my pain. For the word ſignifies both grief of mind, and pain of body.

is not aſwaged] See on verſ. 5. It doth not ceaſe, nay, it is not at all leſſened.

and though I forbear] To ſpeak, argue, or complain. Whether I give my ſorrow a vent, or keep it in, all is one, I finde no eaſe.

what am I eaſed] Heb. what goeth from me? What part of my grief goes away by ſpeaking, or ſilence? Not a dram, nay, not a ſcruple. My ſorrow will not be a whit the leſſe. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 20.

V. 7. But now he hath made me weary: thou haſt made deſolate all my company] In ſetting out his miſery here, he alludes to Eliphaz his words, Chap. 15. 34. as if he thought he ſtruck at him there in particular, in thoſe words, which he ſpeaks of hypocrites in generall. And it is as if he had ſaid, Whatſoever my eſtate be, and whatſoever I am able to alleadge for my ſelf, God hath wearied me with miſeries, and overwhelmed me with calamities: thou, I ſay, O God, haſt waſted and deſtroyed, both my ſelf, and all that I had. So that he now begins to ſet out his troubles, and amplifies them by figures and hyperboles, to move God, and his friends to pity him, and to ſhew, that he, ſuffering ſuch great miſeries, complains not without cauſe. And labouring between two extreams, whether he ſhould expreſſe, or ſuppreſſe his ſorrows, he enclines to the former, and now ſeeks ſome eaſe by complaining.

But] I am ſo far from being eaſed by ſpeech, or ſilence, that my pain encreaſeth.

now] God hath dealt more kindly with me formerly, but now he laies load on me.

he] God: Spoken to in the next words, and named, as the chief cauſe of his troubles, in the continuance of Jobs complaint, ver. 11. So the antecedent is named after the relative, Pſal. 87. 1, 2. And it argues a great indignation, as if all men knew the author of his troubles, though he did not name him. So paſſionate may Gods Saints be ſometimes in their grief. So God is underſtood, Or, the enemy, ver. 9. Or, it; that is, my grief, verſ. 6. Or, your harſh carriage, ver. 2. &c. But it is moſt likely he means it of God, and ſo ſets out the author of his ſorrows here, and the effects of it after.

hath made me weary] With thoſe manifold afflictions, preſſing me ſo ſore, ver. 6.

thou] Now he turns his ſpeech directly to God, and charges him with his miſeries: before he ſpake but obliquely of him to his friends: He hath made me weary. Now he ſaith directly, Thou haſt made deſolate all my company. This ſhews, that he meant God in the former part of the verſe, though he named him not. And it may be, he might look up, or point to heaven, when he ſaid, He hath wearied me, as Chap. 19. 26. where it is likely he pointed to his body, when he ſaid. Worms deſtroy this. So Chap. 13. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 53, 54. Thus men in grief, ſometimes complain to others of them, whom they conceive to wrong them, and ſometimes tell them of it to their faces.

haſt made deſolate] Laid waſte. Deprived me of all my people. See on Chap. 15. 34.

all my company] My family, children, attendants, as Chap. 15. 34. Thou haſt left me none of mine to comfort me in my miſery. A great addition to trouble. His wife was left, but for a vexation. Satan, by his commiſſion, might have taken her away, as well as his children, Chap. 1. 12. and doubtleſſe he would have done ſo, had he not kept her alive to vex Job.

V. 8. And thou haſt filled me with wrinkles, which is a witneſſe againſt me: and my leanneſs riſing up in me, beareth witneſſe to my face] He now ſets out the effects of his pain and grief, the wrinkles and leanneſſe, which appeared in his face, ſhewing that it is not with him, as Eliphaz ſaid it was with ungodly men, Chap. 15. 27. He had no fat, nor collops of fat on him. Job confeſſes that he neither could, nor would deny, that Gods hand was heavy upon him; for if he ſhould, the wrinkles in his face, would ſufficiently witneſſe it, and the leanneſſe which diſfigured all his body, would manifeſtly ſhew it.

And thou haſt filled me with wrinkles] Thou haſt ſo conſumed my fleſh with ſores and pains, that nothing is left but my ſkin, and that is contracted into wrinkles: the uſual fruit of great and long ſickneſſe. It is tranſlated, cutting off, Chap. 22. 16. But that ſuits not well with this place, for Job was yet alive.

which is a witneſſe againſt me] That my griefs are not feigned or counterfeit, nor my troubles ſmall, but very great, verſ. 6. Chap. 10. 17. for they have worne me away. Or, that thou art very angry with me, and doſt puniſh me as an ungodly man. By laying theſe ſad ſtrokes upon me, thou doſt confirm the evil opinion my friends have of me, who have urged theſe my heavy preſſures, as a teſtimony of thine indignation againſt me.

and my leanneſſe] The falling away of my fleſh, by continuance of my ſores and ſorrows.

riſing up] Taking riſe from my pains within. Or, like a witneſſe coming from his ſeat, and ſtanding up to give in evidence againſt me, Pſal. 35. 11. For he continues ſtill in his alluſion to a judiciary way. Or, being in me. So ariſing, is taken for being, Matth. 11. 11. Or, ſtanding in me, that is, abiding with me ſo long. For the uſe of the Hebrew word, ſee on Chap. 14. 12.

in me] In my body. Or, againſt me. To wit, to bear witneſſe againſt me, as follows in this verſe. So ב is uſed, Num. 23. 23.

beareth witneſſe] Depoſeth, as a witneſſe before a Judge. For the Original word, ſee on verſe 1. and Chap. 15. 6.

to my face] Openly againſt me. It goes not behinde my back to tell me ſo, Chap. 1. 11. My lean body, being like an anatomy, doth as a witneſſe produced againſt a man, and brought face to face to convince him, teſtifie that which my friends accuſe me of, that thou counteſt me a wicked man, becauſe thou ſetteſt me below the condition of ordinary men. Or, In my face. which being moſt conſpicuous to all men, ſhews forth my leanneſſe moſt of all. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word countenance.

V. 9. He teareth me in his wrath, who hateth me: he gnaſheth upon me with his teeth; mine enemy ſharpneth his eyes upon me.] He ſets out God, as one angry with him, by divers effects of wrath, after the manner of men. An angry man tears his enemy with his hands, gnaſheth at him with his teeth, looks angerly upon him, makes all his parts ſhew all his diſpleaſure. So much hurt had God done to him, as ſuch a wrathful man would do to his enemy. He doth all this out of the ſenſe of the fleſh, prevailing againſt the ſpirit, and out of the greatneſſe of his grief. But when the ſpirit prevailes, Job is in another temper. Then God ſhall be his ſalvation, Chap. 13. 16. and his witneſſe againſt his ſcorning friends, verſ. 19, 20. of this Chapter. But now Job cannot ſatisfie himſelf, in expreſſing the greatneſſe of his grief, and of the plagues which God had laid upon him. So ſenſible are Gods children of his heavy diſpleaſure, when he afflicts them in an extraordinary manner. It lies ſo ſad upon their ſpirits, that no words will ſerve to vent their ſorrow.

He] Some underſtand it of Satan, who had a commiſſion to afflict Job. But it may be, that was more then Job knew. Others, of Eliphaz, who tare him with bitter words, as having ſpoken oftener againſt him, then the reſt, and moſt bitterly laſt of all, Chap. 15. Pſal. 35. 15, 16. Others, of ſome principal adverſary among thoſe, mentioned, ver. 20. and ſtiled the enemy here, as they conceive. Others, think Job ſpeaks like a man diſtracted, or one wounded in the dark, who cries out againſt his enemy out of ſenſe of pain, but knows not who it is. But ſure it is meant of God, whom Job often complains of, for laying theſe afflictions on him. As ver. 7. 8. and elſewhere.

teareth me] Me, is not in the Original, and it may well be omitted. God is compared to a Lion, that teares his prey to pieces, as ſoon as he laies hold on it, Hoſ. 5. 14. Pſal. 50. 22. Lam. 3. 10, 11. Pſal. 7. 3. Chap. 10. 16.

in his wrath] See on Chap. 4. 9. & 9. 5, 13. & 14. 13. Others read it, His wrath teareth me: becauſe there is no in, in the Original.

who hateth me] Heb. and he hateth me. His blows upon me are ſo heavy, that they may ſeem to come from inward hatred, Gen. 49. 23. & 50. 15. Chap. 33. 10. of this Book.

he gnaſheth upon me with his teeth] Or, againſt me. In deriſion, or contempt, or as a ſigne that he will deſtroy me, Pſal. 35. 16. Like a wilde beaſt, ready to devour a poor Lamb, and preparing the instruments of his deſtruction, ſharpning his teeth, &c. And by gnaſhing his teeth, threatning deſtruction, Pſal. 37. 12. The Hebrew word שן, 1. Signifies any tooth, Exod. 21. 24. 2. Ivory, or an Elephants tooth, 1 King 10. 18. 3. The crag of a rock, which is ſharp like a tooth, Chap. 39. 28. Here it is uſed in the firſt ſenſe.

mine enemy] God, who carries himſelf as an enemy to me, and puts me to ſtraits.

ſharpneth his eyes upon me] Maketh them to ſparkle for anger, like a glittering word, Pſal. 7. 12. Before he do pierce me through with his ſword, he doth it with his eye, and terrifies me, as a ſword new whetted, and drawn forth by an enemy.

V. 10. They have gaped upon me with their mouth, they have ſmitten me upon the cheek reproachfully, they have gathered themſelves together againſt me.] Job in the ſeven following verſes, reckons up divers fruits of Gods wrath kindled againſt him. As firſt of all, that his friends are permittedd to blaſt his reputation, by occaſion of his troubles, in this verſe. Hereupon he takes occaſion to repeat his troubles paſt, verſ. 11. 12. and preſent, verſ. 13, 14, 15, 16. Jobs complaint againſt his friends here is very bitter. As if he had ſaid, They have leaped upon me violently with open mouths, as if they would ſwallow me down at one morſel; and ſetting upon me, all at once, with mocks and revilings, have buffetted me, as it were, and thumped me about the face.

They] Wicked men, who were Gods inſtruments to diſgrace him. He ſpeaks in the third perſon, They, but he might have ſaid, Ye. For it is likely he meant his three friends, who had condemned him for a wicked man. He payes them in their own coin. They, under general terms, condemned him for an hypocrite, and he, under general terms, ſets them out for ſcoffers. And he ſpeaks in the plurall number, They, not He: becauſe he aimed not at Eliphaz alone, who ſpake laſt, but at the other two alſo, who ſpake before, and were bitter againſt him, as well as Eliphaz.

have gaped upon me with their mouth] As a wild beaſt opens his mouth wide to ſwallow down his prey, ſo have they ſought to deſtroy my good name by reproaches and ſlanders. The phraſe ſometimes imports a great deſire of taking the life away, as Pſal. 22. 12, 13. Sometimes, a ſtrong endeavour to blaſt a mans reputation, as Pſal. 35. 20, 21. Lam. 2. 15, 16. So it is taken here. See ver. 20. This fault he often chargeth his friends withal, to wit, a deſire to ruine his reputation: as Chap. 6. 27. & 12. 4. & 17. 2. & 19. 22. For the word, mouth, ſee on Chap. 15. 5.

they have ſmitten me on the cheek reproachfully] Smiting on the cheek, was a token of the greateſt diſgrace, not ſo much in regard of the greatneſſe of the blow, or wound, as of the dignity of that part of the body, which is ſmitten, to wit, the face, 2 Cor. 11. 20. Pſal. 3. 7. Mic. 5. 1. Lam. 3. 30. 1 King. 22. 24. His meaning is, My friends have diſgraced me as much with ſlanders, as if they had openly ſtruck me upon the face, Jer. 18. 18.

they have gathered themſelves together againſt me] Not onely ſeverally mocked me, but come together with a purpoſe to do it, Pſal. 35. 15. It is likely he aims at his three friends, who upheld one another in cenſuring him for a wicked man. Or, They have filled themſelves upon me; That is, They have glutted themſelves with my ſorrows, Exod. 15. 7. Or, They have filled themſelves with matter to plead againſt me. Or, They come by full troops upon me.

V. 11. God hath delivered me to the ungodly, and turned me over into the hands of the wicked.] Here it is manifeſt, that he chargeth God, as the author of his troubles, and it appears hence, that he meant him, ver. 7, 8.

God] See on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

hath delivered me] Heb. hath ſhut me up. See on Chap. 11. 10. & 12. 14. Here is one word included in another. He hath delivered me into the hands of wicked men, as Jaylors to ſhut me up in priſon. See on Chap. 15. 8. So Pſal. 68. 18. Thou haſt received gifts for men, that is, to give to men, as it is expounded, Eph. 4. 8. So alſo Prov. 25. 22. Thou ſhalt heap coales of fire on his head. Heb. Thou ſhalt take coales of fire on his head; that is, Thou ſhalt take them off from the hearth, and put them upon his head.

to the ungodly] The ſingular for the plurall. To ungodly men, as appears by the end of this verſe, and in the verſes following. He hath given me into the hands of Chaldeans and Sabeans to ſpoil me, Chap. 1.

and turned me over] Made me to fall into their hands.

into the hands] Given me into their power to ſtrip me of all I had. See on Chap. 1. 12. & 15. 23.

V. 12. I was at eaſe, but he hath broken me aſunder: he hath alſo taken me by the neck, and ſhaken me to pieces, and ſet me up for his mark.] As if that were not enough, that God had given him into the hands of wicked men to ſpoil him, or they had not malice or power enough to hurt him, he chargeth God in this verſe for his greateſt enemy. As if he thought, that men could not have done him ſo much hurt, if God had not joyned with them. And it appears, Chap. 1. 16, 19. That the deſtruction of his ſheep, ſervants, and children, was by fire and wind from heaven, which no man could ſend, and therefore Job here attributes them to God.

I was at eaſe] He now exaggerates his preſent miſery by his former felicity. I was quiet, or in a plentiful eſtate; for outward plenty brings eaſe of body, and content of mind, Pſal. 30. 6. Jer. 49. 31. Zech. 7. 7. Pſal. 122. 6, 7. Chap. 29. 6. My ſorrow is ſo much the more, becauſe I am caſt out of a proſperous eſtate, into a miſerable one.

but he hath broken me aſunder] Some learned men conceive the word to ſignifie breaking of grapes or olives in the fat, to make wine or oyl. The weight of calamity had preſſed out the juyce of all their proſperity. Mr. Broughton expreſſeth the ſenſe well, reading it thus; I was wealthy, but he hath undone me. And we call undoing men, breaking them, to wit, in their eſtates.

he hath alſo taken me by the neck] Like a Wreſtler, who takes his enemy by the neck, and then flings him down, and wounds him. Heb. he hath laid hold on my neck. The word properly ſignifies the hinder part of the neck, oppoſite to the throat, which men lay hold on to pull their enemies down, Chap. 25. 26. Sometimes it is uſed figuratively, to ſet out an hard heart, as Iſai. 48. 4. Sometimes, turning the neck to the enemy, ſets out flight in War, Pſal. 18. 40. which is tranſlated turning the back, Exod. 23. 27. Here it is taken literally, as was ſaid before.

and ſhaken me to pieces] He ſets out his great pain, by very great and high expreſſions; of breaking aſunder, taking by the neck, ſhaking him to pieces, ſhooting at him, as at a mark. Heb. he hath ſcattered me. It ſignifies to break a thing into the leaſt pieces, and then throw them all abroad: like an earthen pot broken, whereof one piece flies one way, another, another way, ſo that it cannot be pieced together again. This argues an irrecoverable loſſe of health and wealth. For ſo Job thought, his miſeries were ſo great. See Pſal. 2. 9. Jer. 23. 29. And ſet me up. Heb. And made me riſe. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 22.

for his mark] To ſhoot all the arrowes of his judgements into me. Pſal. 38. 2. Job 6. 4. God ſhot at him as at a mark, when he took away his children and goods, Chap. 1. Chap. 7. 20. Lam. 3. 12. Heb. for a mark to him. The Heb. word is taken from a word, that ſignifies to obſerve, becauſe all men obſerve the mark carefully, that they may direct their arrowes aright to it. It ſignifies ſometimes a priſon, where men are carefully obſerved, and kept, that they may not eſcape, as Jer. 38. 28. But that ſignification will not fit here.

V. 13. His archers compaſſe me round about, he cleaveth my reins aſunder, and doth not ſpare; he poureth out my gall upon the ground] He goes on in the ſimilitude of ſhooting at a mark, or rather of war. God ſets wicked men, or rather ſores to afflict me who will not miſſe the mark, but hit home, and ſhoot the arrowes of affliction and pain into me up to the head. He ſhews the effects of theſe ſharp weapons, and by choice allegories makes it appear that he endures moſt grievous pains in his inward and moſt noble parts.

His] Gods inſtruments appointed by him to afflict me.

archers] The word comes from רבב which ſignifies both many and great. For in war there are many archers, and in the quiver many arrowes to ſhoot. And Jobs ſores as they were many and great, ſo they had made many and great wounds in him. So this word is uſed for archers, Jer. 50. 29. It appears that hereby are not meant his friends that mocked him, but his ſores (that like ſharp arrowes had made deep wounds in him) by that which follows in this verſe, and thoſe that enſue.

compaſſe me round about] As ſouldiers go round about an enemy to ſhoot their arrows into him on every ſide, that no part of him might eſcape unwounded. And indeed Job had many arrows ſhoot at him. He had many afflictions upon him. Heaven ſhot fire againſt him to deſtroy his cattel, the aire, wind to deſtroy his children, his wife and friends reproaches to trouble him, and God ſhot ſores into him, to put him to pain.

he cleaveth my reins aſunder] Every one of theſe archers doth it, or God who ſet them to work. The pain ſtrikes me to the heart. The arrowes do not pierce my ſkin onely or fleſh, but my inward parts alſo. He followeth me with moſt ſharp and bitter paines. The word כליות for reins in the Original comes from a word that ſignifies deſiring, becauſe the reins are the ſeat of the appetite or deſiring faculty. Sometimes it is taken literally for that fleſhly part of the body ſo called. As Lev. 3. 4. The two kidnyes, or reins. Sometimes figuratively for the inward thoughts or deſires. As Pſal. 7. 9. Sometimes metaphorically for graines of corne, which reſemble the faſhion of the reins, or kidnyes. As Deut. 32. 14. Here it is taken literally. As alſo, Lam. 3. 13.

and doth not ſpare] He ſhews no manner of compaſſion towards me, but goes on with all manner of extremity againſt me, and inflicts grevious wounds on me. Or, He addes wounds to wounds, and doth not ceaſe, Chap. 27. 22. Lam. 2. 2, 21.

He poureth out my gall upon the ground] He hath wounded me mortally as it were, like one ſhot into the gall, the bag whereof being broken kills the party, Chap. 20. 25. So Job made account his ſores would certainly kill him. It hath his name in the Original from bitterneſſe, for nothing in the body is more bitter then it. For the word ground, or earth, ſee on Chap. 9. 24.

V. 14. He breaketh me with breach upon breach, he runneth upon me like a gyant] He expounds here, what he meant by not ſparing: Inflicting many wounds without pity.

He breaketh me with breach upon breach] Heb. upon the face of breach: with continuall breaches one in the neck of another without any intermiſſion, Pſal. 19. 2. & 42. 7. Either he means his body brake out with freſh ſores daily, or alludes to the meſſengers of his loſſes coming faſt one after another, Chap. 1. 14. &c. From the time he began to afflict me till now he never left tormenting me, nor gave me any reſt.

he runneth upon me] Aſſoon as any occaſion is offered, he runs upon me preſently, as one greedy to deſtroy me, Chap. 15. 26. Or, he runneth againſt me. To wit, with a weapon in his hand to run me through.

like a gyant] Or, like a ſtrong man. He hath ruſhed upon me with all his ſtrength, and hath ſhewed the uttermoſt of his power againſt me, coming on me ſuddenly as a ſtrong warriour on a weak enemy to deſtroy him. It comes from a word that ſignifies to prevail, for ſtrong men or gyants uſe to prevail in war.

V. 15. I have ſowed ſackcloth upon my ſkin, and defiled my horne in the duſt] Job now hath relation to Eliphaz his words, Chap. 15. 25. ſhewing that in all theſe troubles he had not ſwelled againſt God, as he had hinted there, but that forgetting his former dignity and proſperity he had abaſed himſelf, and put on apparel ſuitable to his ſorrowful condition.

I have ſowed] Some interpret it thus, My affliction is ſo great, that I have not onely put on ſackcloth, but kept it on ſtill, as if it were ſowed or faſtned to my ſkin, as expecting continued troubles. I had once ſoft apparel, but now harſh, anſwerable to my condition. Others thus; The ſackcloth which I put on, when my great loſſes befel me, Chap. 1. now cleaves to my ſkin by reaſon of my ſores, as if it were ſowed to it.

ſackcloth] Some take it as an act of humiliation, for it was an uſual thing even for thoſe that were wealthy to put on ſackcloth in token of ſorrow, when Gods judgements were upon them, as 1 King. 21. 27. 2 King. 6. 30. Jon. 3. 5. Others think he did it out of extream poverty, as if he had no better clothes left to wear, and therefore was forced to wear courſe ſackcloth, ſuch as men carry corn in, Gen. 42. 25. Joſh. 9. 4. It was therefore very troubleſome to a man full of ſores, as Job now was, Iſa. 3. 24. Am. 8. 10.

upon my ſkin] He wore it next of all to his ſkin, and therefore it was the more troubleſome.

and defiled] Or, wallowed. The word ſignifies an action with contempt.

my horne] My ſtrength, power, and honour, and whatſoever is excellent for me. For the horne is moſt eminent in many ſtrong beaſts, and with it they defend themſelves, and aſſault their enemies. The word קרן ſignifies, 1. The horne of a beaſt. Dan. 8. 3. 2. A horne to ſound withall, Joſh. 6. 5. 3. A veſſell of horne to carry oile in to anoint Kings, 1 Sam. 16. 1. 4. An hill, which ſtands higher then the reſt of the ground, as a horne is higheſt in a beaſt, Iſa. 5. 1.

5. Strength, for the ſtrength of many beaſts is in their hornes, Pſal. 75. 10. 6. Kingly-power and authority, whereby the King is higher then others, 1 Sam. 2. 10. 7. The honour or outward ornament of a man repreſenting it, Pſal. 75. 4. 8. The corners of the altars made like hornes, Exod. 29. 12. 9. Brightneſſe or ſhining like horne, Hab. 3. 4. Here it is taken in the ſeventh ſenſe for the loſſe of his dignity, or polluting his fine apparel as Chap. 2. 8.

in the duſt] Pſal. 7. 5. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 8. on the word Ground.

V. 16. My face is foule with weeping, and on mine eye-lids is the ſhadow of death] Neither did I thus abaſe my ſelf for a vain ſhew, as hypocrites do (howſoever thou O Eliphaz doſt moſt unworthily account me ſuch an one) ſeeing this my face is with tears continually trickling down my cheeks beſlubbered as it were with dirt: and my eye-lids falling down, and waxing dim do repreſent the very image of death being near at hand.

My face] See on Chap. 14. 20, upon the word Countenance.

is foule] Like a troubled water full of dirt, Iſa. 57. 20. Lam. 2. 11.

with weeping] Incredible and implacable griefs cauſe me to pour out abundance of tears, whereof not mine eyes onely, but my whole face is a witneſſe, which is all over fouled with them.

and on mine eye-lids] See on Job 3. 9.

is the ſhadow of death] See on Chap. 3. 5.

V. 17. Not for any juſtice in mine hands: alſo my prayer is pure] He had before ſought to move them to pity him for the abundance of his ſorrows; but now he addes another argument of pity, taken from his innocency. Or, He had before acknowledged, that he felt thoſe miſeries, which they ſaid, did uſe to fall on ungodly men: and now he labours to prove that he was no hypocrite, although God dealt thus ſharply with him. As if in other words he had ſaid, I have not deſerved to be thus made more miſerable then all other men, who have carryed my ſelf uprightly towards God and man. Neither is there any cauſe, why you ſhould inveigh againſt my former life. For theſe things are not befallen me for any injury I have done to any man; and as touching religion, I call upon God with a good conſcience.

not for] Heb. for not. A tranſpoſition of the words. So Iſa. 53. 9. in the Original, where it ſhould be tranſlated, not for any violence he had done. Mr. Broughton reads it here, For no miſdoing of my hands. Hereby Job intimates, that he was not able to comprehend the cauſe of this his grevious puniſhment, for he was not guilty of injuſtice towards men, nor of hypocriſie before God, Chap. 31. 13, 21, 38.

any injuſtice] Violent dealing, or other injuries done to men.

in mine hands] In mine actions. My hands have not handled any man violently, nor given him cauſe to complain of me. Injuſtice is attributed to the hands, becauſe men ſmite others with the hand, and with their hands take away their goods.

alſo my prayer is pure] I have worſhipped God aright. Thus he takes away what Eliphaz had charged him with, that he reſtraines prayers before God Chap. 15. 4. Mr. Broughton reads it, But my wiſh is clean, ſaying, Meaning his deſire expreſſed in the next verſe.

V. 18. Oh earth cover not thou my blood, and let my cry have no place.] Becauſe this was the great controverſie between him and his friends, about his integrity, he calls the creatures in this verſe, and God himſelf in the next to bear witneſſe of it with him. He wiſhes heavy things may light upon him, if he be guilty of thoſe things, whereof his friends accuſe him.

O earth] Seeing my friends will not hear, but condemn me unjuſtly, I wiſh the earth could hear. A vehement ſpeech of one, that in his diſtreſſe findes no help from men, yet wiſhes it, where it cannot be had. and ſpeaks to the earth, as if it were alive, and could teſtifie for him. Such exclamations to ſenſeleſſe things ſhew, that men fail in their duty, and therefore natures frame being as it were out of order in men, all creatures are after a ſort wronged in it, and had need to look about them. See the like, Deut. 32. 1. in the beginning of Moſes ſong; and Iſa. 1. 2. in the beginning of his prophecy. For the word Earth, ſee on Chap. 9. 24.

cover not thou my blood] Turning his ſpeech unto the earth, he deſires that if he be guilty of ſhedding any mans blood, or any injury to men, it would reveal it, and cry out againſt him, ſo that his prayers may never be heard. The word דם, blood is uſed, 1. For the blood of living creatures, Levit. 19. 26. 2. For things like blood in colour, Joel 2. 31. 3. For murder, or blood-ſhedding, becauſe the life is in the blood, and departs when the blood is ſhed. Iſa. 26. 21. Deut. 17. 8. Pſal. 5. 6. And ſo it is taken, not for Jobs own blood, but the blood of other men ſuppoſed by his friends to be ſhed by him. Which if it were true, he wiſhes it might be made known all the world over, that he might be puniſhed according to his deſerts. A manner of ſpeaking taken from murderers who uſe to cover all the tracts of blood ſhed by them, leſt they ſhould be diſcovered, Gen. 4. 10, 11. Iſa. 26. 21. Ezek. 24. 7.

and let my cry have no place] Let God deny to hear me when I call earneſtly upon him for help in my great neceſſities, Chap. 27. 9. Pſal. 66. 18. If I cry for mercy, let not God hear me, but puniſh me as a juſt Judge, Iſa. 1. 15.

V. 19. Alſo now behold my witneſſe is in heaven, and my record is on high.] He now calls God himſelf to witneſſe, and ſhews, that having ſo great teſtimony in his own conſcience of Gods knowledge of his integrity, he need not much regard the teſtimony of men. As if he had ſaid, I do not affirm my ſelf to be innocent of theſe great crimes ye lay to my charge upon my own word, for that were your I, and my No: neither do I look that the earth ſhould ſpeak for me, which I know it cannot, but God himſelf will bear witneſſe of the truth hereof. See the like, Joh. 5. 31, 32.

Alſo] See on verſ. 4. of this Chapter. Beſides men among whom I live, God alſo knows my integrity.

now] Even at this preſent time, when ye condemn me, God can clear me.

behold] See on Chap. 1. 12.

my witneſſe] God, who knows all my thoughts and ſecret actions, and can clear me of all thoſe evils, ye falſely impute unto me.

in heaven] See on Chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8. God is every where preſent, but moſt glorioully manifeſts his preſence in the higheſt heavens. There is his Court and Throne, Iſai. 66. 1. and thither are we taught to direct our prayers to him, Matth. 5. 9.

and my record] The ſame in ſenſe with the former word, witneſſe; onely the one is an Hebrew word, and the other a Syrian. The one uſed by Jacob, the other by Laban, Gen. 31. 47. It is doubled for more aſſurance. See on Chap. 14. 10, 11.

is on high] Heb. is in the heights, or high places. The ſame in ſenſe with heaven mentioned before, which is higher then any other place. See Chap. 25. 2. & 31. 2. Pſal. 148. 1. Matth. 21. 9. Luk. 2. 14. yet it is worth noting, that the Hebrews have another word, when they ſpeak of high places uſed to ſacrifice in, contrary to Gods word, במות. 1 King. 12. 31. And this word מרומים is uſed, when God or heaven is mentioned, as if God in very words would diſtinguiſh between true worſhip and falſe.

V. 20. My friends ſcorn me, but mine eye poureth out teares unto God.]

It appears by Jobs confident appeal unto God, that he was well aſſured of his integrity; elſe he durſt not have done it.

My friends] Seeing ye, who as friends ſhould comfort me, condemn me, I appeal to God who can clear me. The Original word comes from a word, that ſignifies to feed, becauſe friends often invite one another, and feed together, Pſal. 41. 9. He meant doubtleſſe theſe three friends that came to comfort him, and now uſe all their wit and eloquence to diſcourage him.

ſcorn me] Heb. are my ſcorners. My ſorrow is the more becauſe they are not ſtrangers, which deride me, but friends; having therefore no hope on earth, I put up my prayers to God to clear me. See the like complaint of David, Pſalm. 109. 4. & 55. 12. The word ליץ ſometimes ſignifies Embaſſadours, as 2 Chr. 32. 31. Sometimes Interpreters, as Job 33. 23. But here it ſignifies ſcorners. As alſo Pſal. 119. 51. Prov. 3. 34. & 19. 28.

but] Or, therefore. So it is tranſlated, Job 35. 16.

mine eye] I weep in my prayers. And the eye is mentioned, becauſe that is the inſtrument of weeping. See on Chap. 15. 15. on the word Sight.

poureth out tears] Diſtils them, or puts them forth abundantly. A metaphor from dropping rain, Pſal. 119. 28. Prov. 19. 13. I weep plentifully, as men uſe to do in praier to God in their extremity. Mine eye doth by tears cry out as it were to God, becauſe of the great injuries offered unto me by my friends. Or, Mine eye poures out tears, and I with much ſorrow pray to God. For one word included in another, ſee on Chap. 15. 8. & 16. 11.

unto God] That he may right me againſt your falſe accuſations. I pray to him with a heavie heart to that purpoſe. Rain-drops fall downward to the earth, but prayer-drops go upward to heaven to the throne of God. By God here he means Jeſus Chriſt, whom he deſires in the next verſe to put up his prayers unto God the Father. For the word, ſee on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

V. 21. Oh that one might plead for a man with God as a man pleadeth for his neighbour.] The words thus read carry the face of a diſcontented wiſh of Job deſiring to plead with God. But word for word they run thus. And he will plead for a man with God, and the ſon of man for his friend. That is, Chriſt, who is God and man will plead my cauſe with his father: he can prevail, becauſe he is God equall to the Father, he will undertake it, becauſe he will be man like to me. This interpretation agrees beſt with the coherence, and the words following. And accordingly we ſhall interpret the place.

and he] Chriſt Jeſus the Mediatour between God an man. See in the end of the former verſe.

will plead] I know he will plead for me, although you plead earneſtly againſt me. For the word Pleading, ſee on Chap. 15. 3.

for a man] See on Chap. 3. 3. & 4. 17. & 10. 5. & 15. 10.

with God] With God his Father. One perſon which is God the Son, with another perſon which is God the Father, the ſame God, though a different perſon in the Trinity. For as אלהים (though plurall) is uſed perſonally, Pſal. 45. verſ. 6. for God the Sonne, and verſ. 7. for God the Father, ſo אלוה the ſingular may be uſed here for God the Son, v. 20. and for God the Father, verſ. 21. For the word ſee on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5. and the Son of man] Chriſt who will be in due time incarnate, and become man to ſave men. This is Chriſts title very frequent in the New Teſtament, Mat. 8. 20. & 10. 23. & 11. 19. & 12. 8. And it ſeems that Job knew this myſtery of the incarnation of Chriſt, Chap. 19. 25, 26, 27. where he ſpeaks of him both as God, and as a viſible Redeemer. For the word Son, ſee on Chap. 14. 21. For Man, ſee on Chap. 14. 1.

for his friend] For every one that believes in him. Theſe he calls his friends. Joh.15. 13,14,15. For the word Friend, ſee on verſ. 20.

V. 22. VVhen a few yeares are come, then I ſhall go the way, whence I ſhall not return] He being not guilty of a wicked life, ſhews, that he appeals to God not feignedly, but confidently, and with a ſincere heart, ſpeaking as one that were ready to dye, even from his heart, or really as he thinks. Or, Seeing he had but a while to live, he deſires he might be cleared before he die, that he might not remain in perpetual infamy, and his memory be odious to poſterity. This would be a great comfort to him, If God would pleaſe to reſtore him to eaſe and credit before his death, which could not be long expected, if God relieved him not.

when] Or, For. So it is uſed chap. 7. 13. I wiſh that God to whom I appeal would clear me quickly. Elſe it will be too late, when I ſhall be dead.

a few yeares] Heb. years of number. Numbred out and determined for me to live here on earth. Or rather a ſmall number of years, as it is tranſlated, which may quickly be numbred. For it is very likely that Job thought his troubles would ſoon make an end of him. So this phraſe is uſed, Gen.34. 30. Numb. 9. 20. Deut.4. 27. And on the contrary, very much corn laid up by thoſe, Gen.41. 49. is ſaid to be without number. See alſo on Job 15.20.

are come] Come to an end well-nigh, I muſt needs dye ſhortly.

then I ſhall] Or, when I ſhall. So it is tranſlated, 1 Sam. 13. 1.

goe] See on Chap. 14. 20. on the word Paſſeth.

the way] The courſe. A metaphor from travellers.

whence I ſhall not return] I ſhall dye, and not come back into this world any more. A periphraſis of death, the way of all the earth, Joſh.23.14. & 1 King.2.2. See chap.5. 9, 10. For the word שוב ſee on chap. 14.13. on the word Paſt.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſ. 1. MY breath is corrupt, my dayes are extinct, the graves are ready for me.] He goes on where he left at the end of the former chapter, and proceeds to ſhew, that he draws every day nearer to his end. As if he had ſaid, ſeeing my breath is paſſing out of my body, and I have now as it were finiſhed the courſe of my life, nothing remaineth, but that I be laid in the grave.

My breath] See on Chapter 15. 2. upon the word Eaſtwind.

is corrupt] It ſmells ſtrong and noiſomely arguing much corruption within me, chap. 19. 17. Or, Is drawn painfully. I breath, but with much difficulty.

My dayes] The time of my life: ſee on Chap. 15. 32. and on chap. 14. 14.

are extinct] They will ſoon be extinguiſhed. They are like a candle burning in the ſocket, and ready to go out. I am ready to dye. See the like ſimilitude, Prov. 13. 9. This natural moiſture as he thought, was well-nigh conſumed, and then death follows.

The graves are ready] I have nothing left but to think of my grave and buriall. The nearneſſe of his death is hereby intimated, as it was in other words, chap. 16. 12, See the like, Pſalm. 88. 3, 4. I can endure theſe pains no longer: I muſt needs dye ſhortly. And he ſaith graves in the plural number, becauſe every place did as it were proffer a grave to him, and threaten him with death in regard of his many pains. Or by the graves he means, ſome one grave or other would ſwallow him up ere long. As Jephtah was buried in the Cities of Gilead. That is, in ſome one of them, Judg. 12. 7. The Meſſias muſt ride on a colt of the Aſſes, that is, of ſome one aſſe, Zech. 9. 9. There is another word uſed in Scripture for the grave. See the difference, chap. 7. 9.

V. 2. Are there not mockers with me? and doth not mine eye continue in their provocation?] He now layes down another cauſe of the ſhortning of his dayes beſides his ſores and pains, which he had mentioned before, to wit, the ſcoffes and taunts of his friends, who came to comfort him, and yet derided him continually.

Are there not] Sure there are mockers with me. A negative queſtion ordinarily includes an affirmative anſwer. And it is more emphatical then a bare affirmation. As if he had ſaid, I challenge any man to deny, that there are mockers with me, ſo 2 Sam. 11. 3. Is not this Bathſheba? Sure it is. This mocking of Job by his friends was a great addition to his ſorrows, as appears by his complaint, chap. 16. 20. Heb. If there be not mockers with me. Underſtand, then let God puniſh me for ſpeaking falſely, ſee on chap. 1. 11. Yet it may be tranſlated interrogatively, as it here, Are there not mockers with me? ſo it is uſed, chap. 4. 17. & 36. 29.

mockers] Who mock at my innocency and ſcoffe at me, as at a wicked man, chap. 16. 20. & 21. 3. He means his three friends who diſputed with him, as appears by the places cited. And that they did not ſo much mock at his ſores, as at his words, which they thought to be abſurd and unreaſonable, and therefore he firſt tells them of their ſcoffing, and then anſwers their arguments.

with me] He doth not mean that they were in his company, and did mock at others, which yet is a grief to a good man to hear others derided: but that they mocked at him: ſo Pſal. 55. 18. There were many with me, that is, many did fight againſt me, as appears by coherence. And Pſal. 85. 4. Cauſe thine anger towards us to ceaſe. Heb. with us, that is, againſt us.

and doth not mine eye] See on chap. 15. 15. upon the word Sight. I am compelled to be a looker on, when I am mocked. It is not done behind my back, but before my face, which is the greater grief.

continue] Heb. Lodge, or Tarry all night. Men go abroad in the day, but lodge at home in the night. Either it may be underſtood, that they mocked both day and night and gave him no reſt at all, or elſe that their words were ſo bitter againſt him in the day, that he could not ſleep all night, but wept continually upon the thoughts thereof, chap. 16, 20. Pſal. 6. 6. And ſo they were as it were in his ſight, when he was in bed.

in their provocation] Not actively in provoking them, but paſſively in being provoked by their continued taunts. Provocation here ſignifies bitter ſpeeches, and provoking words. Pſal. 106. 7. They did ſo irritate him with their words, that he lay awake all night, and could not ſleep for thinking what to anſwer to them.

V. 3. Lay down now, put me in a ſurety with thee. VVho is he that will ſtrike hands with me?] An Apoſtrophe to God, as chap. 16. 7. not a ſpeech to Eliphaz. The words are ordinarily interpreted by way of a challenge to God, as if Job had required a ſurety to undertake for God, that he ſhould have ſatisfaction from him, if he were caſt in judgement. But they may be read thus, Appoint I pray thee my ſurety with thee; who is he then, that will ſtrike upon my hand? That is, appoint Chriſt, who is with thee in heaven, and hath undertaken to be my ſurety, appoint him I ſay, to plead my cauſe and to ſtand up for me, and then no man will dare to contend with me. And ſo it is ſutable to the notes on chap. 16. 21. and to Rom. 8. 33.

Lay down] Or, Appoint, as Exod. 1. 11. They did ſet over them task-maſters. That is, they appointed task-maſters to be over them, ſo it is uſed alſo, Exod. 21. 13. Appoint Chriſt to plead for me.

Now] Or, I pray thee, See on chap. 13. 18.

Put me in a ſurety] Or, My ſurety. So the ſame word is tranſlated a ſurety, Prov. 17. 18. And not putting in a ſurety. And then it depends upon the former words thus, Appoint I pray thee my ſurety with thee. Chriſt is called a ſurety, Heb. 7. 22. where the ſame word that is here, is uſed in the Syrian Teſtament.

with thee] Who is with thee in heaven ready to plead for me: ſee on chap. 16. 21.

who is he] I ſhall need fear no enemy, if Chriſt take my cauſe in hand.

that will ſtrike hands with me] Or, that will ſtrike upon my hand. It is ordinarily underſtood of ſtriking hands as a ſurety for God, that would paſſe his word, that Job ſhould have a fair triall with him, and ſatisfaction if it ſhould appear he was wronged. So is it uſed to expreſſe ſuretyſhip, Prov. 6. 1. & 17. 18. & 22. 26. But as men did ſtrike hands then in ſuretiſhip for mony, ſo it may be they did ſo in ſuretiſhip for trials, and appearance in judgement. And then the meaning is, Who dare contend with me in judgement, if Chriſt ſtand up for me?

V. 4. For thou haſt hid their heart from underſtanding; therefore ſhal thou not exalt them.] The cauſe why I do ſo confidently appeal to thee in Jeſus Chriſt is, that I know I thereby ſhall prevail againſt the accuſation of theſe my friends, whereby they have accuſed me as an hypocrite before thee, and that thou wilt puniſh theſe my friends for accuſing me falſely, out of groſſe ignorance. Theſe things are ſpoken by way of preocupation to prevent a ſuſpicion of too much boldneſſe in Job.

For thou haſt hid their heart from underſtanding] Thou haſt caſt ſuch a cloud before the heart of theſe my friends, who mock me thus, and pronounce me a wicked man, becauſe of my troubles, that they cannot rightly underſtand things. For if they were not blockiſh, and wanted common underſtanding, they would clear me themſelves. They would ſee, that good men are ſubject to heavie afflictions, as well as bad. Eccleſ. 9. 1. Here is an inverſion of the words, and the meaning is, Thou haſt hidden underſtanding from their heart. So Judg. 1. 8. They ſet the City on fire. Heb. They caſt the City into the fire; that is, they caſt fire into the City. So Pſal. 74. 7. They have caſt fire into thy Sanctuary. In the original it is, They have caſt thy Sanctuary into the fire, and ſo it might have been tranſlated here, Thou haſt hid underſtanding from their heart. And then the words had been more clear. For the word Heart, ſee on chap. 15. 12. Therefore ſhalt thou not exalt them. That is, thou ſhalt caſt them down. Meiotis. See on chap. 12. 3. Either thou ſhalt caſt them down from that high or full eſtate they are in now, or thou being a righteous Judge ſhalt paſſe ſentence for me againſt them, and ſo caſt them down in this cauſe. Pſal. 1. 5. This ſuits well with what follow verſ. 5. and with the event, chap. 42. 7.

V. 5. He that ſpeaketh flattery to his friends, even the eyes of his childeren ſhall fail.] Ye have all this while flattered God to condemn me, as if you could with fine words make the world believe, that ye ſtood up for God, as though his Juſtice could not be upheld in afflicting me ſo grievouſly unleſſe I were an hypocrite. But God will puniſh you and your poſterity for this your groſſe dealing. See the like charge upon them, chap. 13. 7. And this interpretation agrees well with the former verſe. God will ſurely pull you down becauſe you deal ſo corruptly in this buſineſſe. It ſuites alſo well with the words following. It is true, ſuch troubles are upon me, as ye ſpeak of; but not to prove me an hypocrite, as ye ſay, but for other good ends and purpoſes. Others take it thus, ye tell me of reſtauration to proſperity again upon repentance, chap. 5. 17. & 8. 5. & 11. 13. But ye do but flatter me. My miſeries ſhew, that I am paſt recovery. Others thus, If I ſhould flatter you I ſhould bring a curſe upon my poſterity. I muſt therefore tell you plainly of your bad dealing with me, chap. 32. 21, 22. the firſt is the beſt, as being moſt ſuitable to the context.

he that ſpeaketh] Heb. Of him that ſpeaketh. Or, as for him that ſpeaketh.

flattery] The word חלק in the original ſignifies 1. a part of any thing divided for portions to divers perſons. Pſal. 142. 5. 2. It ſignifies ſmoothneſſe of any thing, becauſe many things to be divided are firſt made ſmooth; Gen. 27. 16. 3. it ſignifies flattering, when mens words are ſmooth; Prov. 7. 21. Pſal. 55. 21. 4. becauſe ſmooth things are ſlippery, and men may quickly ſlide if they tread on them, it ſignifies ſlippery places; Pſal. 73. 18. Here it is taken in the third ſenſe for ſmooth words and flattering ſpeeches. For flattery ſee Prov. 2. 16. & 5. 3. & 7. 5. & 29. 5. Pſal. 5. 9. Iſa. 30. 10.

to his friends] See on chap. 16. 20.

Even the eyes] See on chap. 15. 15. on the word Sight.

of his children] See on Chapter 14. 21. upon the word Sonnes.

ſhall fail] God doth ſo hate flattery, that he will not only puniſh him for it, but his children alſo. Or, if the puniſhment of his flattery light not upon him, while he lives, it will be ſure to light on his children, when he is dead and gone. Se the like, 1 King. 11. 12. & 21. 29.

V. 6. He hath made me alſo a by-word of the people, and aforetime I was as a tabret] his friends might object and ſay, We neither flatter God, nor wrong you, If you be not wicked, why doth God then puniſh you ſo grievouſly? Job anſwers, firſt by confeſſing that which all men ſaw, and he could not deny, namely, that God had indeed laid heavie afflictions upon him, verſ. 6, 7. And then ſhews that it was for other ends then they dreamed of, and that godly men would make better uſe of his afflictions then they did. In this verſe he amplifies his miſeries, ſhewing that they were ſo great, that not onely theſe friends, but alſo all the people mocked him, even the baſeſt of them, as he ſpeaks, chap. 30. 1.

He hath made me alſo] Heb. He hath ſet me, or placed me. As the word is uſed, Gen. 30. 38. He doth look higher then the people, that ſcoffed at him, acknowledging that this contempt befell him by the will and counſell of God. As David did in a like caſe, 2 Sam. 16. 10. And ſo Job did before in this chapter, verſ. 4.

a by-word] Or, a proverb. To ſpeak proverbs againſt a man, or to make him a by-word argues him to be in the depth of miſery, Numb. 21. 27, 28. Deut. 28. 37. Pſal. 44. 13, 14. Job was a man ſcoffed at by all men, and generally accounted moſt miſerable. So we ſpeaking of a man very poor ſay, He is as poor as Job, or Lazarus. For the word, ſee on chap. 27. 1. upon the word Parable.

of the people] Not of ſome few men alone, but of the multitude. It comes from a word in the originall, that ſignifies, To cover. For a multitude of men met together do cover the face of the earth.

and aforetime] Or, to mens faces. That is, I was openly mocked and derided.

I was] Or, I am. If the former word be tranſlated, openly, then it will run beſt thus, I am openly a Taber. So Mr. Broughton reads it, and the words will bear it, for it is the future tenſe in the originall, which for want of a preſent tenſe in Hebrew is put more often for the preſent time, then for the time paſt. And it better ſuits with Jobs condition who ſets out his preſent miſeries, and amplifies them by the ſcoffes of the multitude.

as a Tabret] They not only ſpake Proverbs in deriſion of me, but alſo made ſongs of my miſeries to ſing abroad, and play withall upon the tabret, as men uſe to do in the calamities of famous men. And other men, that hear it, are pleaſed and laugh at my miſery, as at a muſical inſtrument, and ſongs to make them merry. It is a great grief to men in affliction, to ſee others laugh, leap, ſing, dance, make muſick of their ſorrows, Lam. 2. 15. Pſal. 69. 11, 12. The Hebrew word Tophet commonly is the name of the place, where they made their children paſſe through the fire to Molech, and becauſe they played on tabrets, and ſuch loud inſtruments then, that they might not hear the noiſe of their children, it was ſo called: ſee 2 King. 23. 10. Jer. 7. 31. But it cannot be ſo taken here. The whole verſe may be read thus, He hath made me alſo a by-word of the people, whereas aforetime, I was as a tabret. That is, I am now a ſcorn to them, who delighted in me in my proſperity. So he amplifies his miſery by calling to mind his former comfortable condition. This he doth largely, chap. 29. ſhewing his former proſperity: and chap. 30. his preſent calamity.

V. 7. Mine eye alſo is dim by reaſon of ſorrow: and all my members are as a ſhadow] He now ſets out his troubles, and ſorrows hyperbolically, as if they had made him a blind anatomie, and rather the ſhadow of a man, then a true man. Man in his proſperitie is but as a ſhadow, Pſal. 39. 5, 6. 1 Chron. 29. 15. much more in his miſerie.

is dim] The word כהה primarily ſignifies contracted or ſhrunk up. And it is applied ſometimes to the eye, the nerves whereof being ſhrunk up by ſickneſſe or old age, the ſight decayes, as chap. 16. 16. Pſal. 6. 7. Sometimes to wounds, which when they begin to heale, over-ſpread not as before, in the skin, but are contracted, and grow leſſe and leſſe, as Lev. 13. 6. Sometime to the mind, the ſpirits being contracted or leſſened by grief of heart, As Ezek. 21. 7.

and all my members] The word primarily ſignifies formations or things formed. It doth not ſend us back to our creation, but to our formation in the wombe to know our nature, as Pſal. 139. 16.

are as a ſhadow] All my bodily members are ſo extenuated, and conſumed, that they ſeem to make up rather a picture or ſhadow of a man, then a true body: for my fleſh and ſtrength is gone, and no member is able to do his office.

V. 8. Upright men ſhall be aſtonied at this, and the innocent ſhall ſtirre up himſelf againſt the hypocrite] In this verſe, and that which followes, Job comforts himſelf in hope that godly men will make a better uſe of his adverſity, then his friends had done. And that although at firſt they might be aſtoniſhed to ſee a man ſo upright to ſuffer ſuch heavie preſſures, yet they would not condemne him nor neglect their own duties to God, but hate hypocriſie and grow in piety.

ſhall be aſtonied] Others read it, that the upright may wonder. Others, let the upright wonder. The firſt way ſets out the events of Jobs troubles. The ſecond Gods intention in afflicting him. The third, the duty of good men beholding his afflictions. The firſt interpretation is the beſt. The word שמם ſignifies 1. when it is ſpoken of a thing, to be deſolate, as chap. 16. 7. Lam. 5. 18. 2. becauſe ſuch deſolations of houſes or countries make men wonder, it ſignifies to be aſtonied, whereby the mind is as it were laid waſte and deſolate alſo, as not being able to give an account of the cauſes of ſuch deſolations, as Iſa. 52. 14. So here, they ſhall wonder at Gods ſharp dealing with me, but yet not condemn me as ye do, for an hypocrite. And no wonder if they did admire at it, that could not look into Gods ſecret intentions in it. Neither is it any wonder that I, who feel all this, complain, when every juſt man wonders at Gods proceedings with me.

at this] That I being a godly man ſhould be ſo much afflicted by God, and derided by men. Pſal. 73. 13. Hab. 1. 2. and the innocent] He that is like clear water free not from all ſin, but from hypocriſie and wickedneſſe of life. So the word is uſed chap. 4. 7. & 9. 23.

ſhall ſtirre up himſelf] Or, raiſe up himſelf, as chap. 14. 12. He was aſleep at firſt, but having better conſidered of the matter he will clear me, and joyn with me againſt mine enemies.

againſt the hypocrite] See on chap. 8. 13. & 15. 34. Though the juſt man may wonder, when ſuch ſorrows befall him, yet having me for an example he will not joyn with the hypocrite, who proſpers, but will keep the further off from his way, verſ. 9. Or, he will be very zealous to maitain his innocencie againſt the hypocrite, who falſely accuſeth him. Or, Becauſe of the hypocrite. Godly men not only are offended at their own miſeries, but alſo at the proſperitie of the wicked. But the former ſenſe is beſt. Others take it, as if Job had ſaid, I know that not only bad men, but alſo good men will wonder at me, and be offended at me for my miſeries, as if I were an hypocrite. But this agrees neither with the words foregoing, nor following.

V. 9. The righteous alſo ſhall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands ſhall be ſtronger and ſtronger] Although a good man may be offended at my miſery, and the hypocrites proſperitie, yet not ſo as to caſt off all pietie, as if he meaſured Gods love by proſperitie, and his hatred by adverſitie, contrary to Eccl. 9. 1, 2. but rather he will ſo much the more conſtantlie go forward in vertue and godlineſſe.

the righteous alſo] He that truly fears God. The ſame with the innocent oppoſed to the hypocrite, verſ. 8.

ſhall hold on his way] That is, go on in it to the end. Or, Hold it faſt, and not go a ſtep out of it. Or, Lay faſt hold on it. So as he will not let it go. He will not give over the way of righteouſneſſe for all his miſeries, and deriſion, nor follow ill waies for all the hypocrites proſperitie. He ſhall be confirmed in pietie notwithſtanding this ſcandall: the word דרך or way ſignifies a diſtinct courſe from others, as the way from one town differs from the way to another. So in the literall ſenſe, Deut. 3. 1. and in the figurative it is put for a diſtinct courſe of life, be it good or bad. Pſal. 1. 6. Here it is taken for a courſe of pietie.

and he that hath clean hands] For the word Clean, ſee on chapter 11. 4. & 14. 4. For the word Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23. The meaning is, he whoſe life is free from wicked waies, and ſinfull courſes. Pſal. 24. 4. Gen. 20. 5. for hands are put for actions in Scripture language.

ſhall be ſtronger and ſtronger] Heb. ſhall adde ſtrength. Iſa. 40. 29, 31. Pal. 84. 7. He will be the more godlie for his miſeries, and other mens deriding of him. Job ſhewes hereby, that he had not caſt off religion, and the feare of God, as Eliphaz had falſely accuſed him, Chap. 15. 4.

V. 10. But as for you all, do you return, and come now: for I cannot find one wiſe man among you] Some knit theſe words to the words foregoing, and make the coherence thus, ſeeing I have proved that good men are ſubject to great troubles as well as bad, yeeld ye to truth, and change your mind, and have a better opinion of me. Others join it to the words following, and make it to be a confutation of that hope of recovering his former eſtate, to which his friends perſwaded him, and becauſe he would not yeeld, confuted him obliquely for a wicked man, chap. 15. 22. to which he anſwers, ye are all mad men, that cannot ſee that nothing remains for a miſerable man in my condition to hope for, but a grave. And this argument he proſecutes even to the end of the Chapter. 1. he paints out with moſt elegant figures, his great and deplorable miſerie, verſ. 11, 12. and 2. ſhews that all hope of life was cut off from him, ſo that nothing was left him to think on but death.

but as for you all] Heb. But ſurely all they. One perſon for another, which is frequent in Scripture, eſpecially where men ſpeak with troubled ſpirits, and ſo are apt to miſtake perſons, or doubt whether they ſhould ſpeak of or to them, that are before them. The like phraſe is 1 King. 22. 28. Every one of you. Heb. Of them, ſo Mich. 1. 2.

do you return] Chap. 6. 29. For the various ſignifications of the Hebrew word, ſee on chap. 14. 13. Upon the word, Be paſt. Return from your falſe opinions, whereby ye condemn me for an hypocrite, becauſe of my ſufferings: and give me vain hopes of reſtitution in this world. Others take it for a challenge, as if Job ſeeing them buſtling as if they would confute him, ſhould bid them do it, if they can. But this agrees not with what follows. For Job goes not on to ſatisfie them, much leſſe tarries to ſee what they would ſay, but complains of his own miſerie.

come now] Come hearken to me, and learn of me. This interpretation ſuits well with the words following.

for] Heb. and. But it is often uſed to infer a reaſon of what went before, and is tranſlated, For, as chap. 11. 4. So here ye had need come to me to learn, for ye all want wiſdome.

I cannot finde] Or, I ſhall not finde. The future is tranſlated, can, chap. 8. 11. the word מצא ſignifies, 1. finding without ſeeking, or finding by accident, as we call it, as Iſa. 65. 1. So did Saul find Chriſt, Act. 9. 1. 2. finding by ſeeking or enquirie. Iſa. 55. 6. Here it is uſed in the ſecond ſenſe. Job had obſerved all their ſpeeches, but could not finde any true wiſdome in them.

one wiſe man among you] Ye think your ſelves wiſe and me fooliſh, but the wiſeſt of you all may learn of me, 1 Cor. 5. 6.

V. 11. My dayes are paſt, my purpoſes are broken off, even the thoughts of my heart] No marvel, if Job return unto his complaints, for his miſerie was ſo great, it would not permit him to diſpute the matter any longer, yet he ſets out his miſerie here but briefly in two verſes, having ſet it out more largely before in the ſixteenth Chapter.

My dayes] The time of my proſperitie, or the daies of my life. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 14.

are paſt] See on chap. 14. 19. It is in vain for me to hope for proſperitie, thoſe daies are done with me, and the daies of my life alſo well-nigh at an end, chap. 7. 6. & 9. 25.

my purpoſes] My intentions of continuing in, or encreaſing my proſperitie: or of uſing means of living longer. The word for the moſt part is uſed for the purpoſes of evill, but it is not likely, that Job would ſo charge himſelf, where he goes about to clear himſelf againſt his friends.

are broken off] Or plucked up, as trees by the roots, they are clean deſtroyed, have no hope to effect them.

even the thoughts] Heb. the poſſeſſions. Thoſe thoughts wherewith my heart was poſſeſſed of the reſtauration of my proſperitie in regard of my integritie, are now clean cut off. I ſee death approaching, which will put a period to them all, Pſal. 146. 4. His ſorrows were ſo great, that although he did endeavour to keep ſome hopes of life and proſperitie in him, (as men naturally are willing to do even at the point of death) yet he could not nouriſh any ſuch imagination within him.

of my heart] See on chap. 15. 12.

V. 12. They change the night into day: the light is ſhort becauſe of darkneſſe] He ſhews the reaſon why he had no hope left of future proſperitie, becauſe he was worne with ſorrow and pain, which gave him little or no reſt day or night.

They] My thoughts which perpetually trouble me, or my pains, which lie upon me without intermiſſion, chap. 7. 3, 4, 13. or my friends which do ſo provoke me with bitter words, that I cannot ſleep, verſ. 2. And then he ſpeaks not to them, but rather complains to God of them ſpeaking in the third perſon, they change &c.

change] Heb. put. They keep me awake in the night, ſo that I cannot ſleep, and ſo make it as day unto me.

the night] It is given for man to reſt, but to me it is as a day of labour.

into day] See on chap. 14. 14.

The light] The Hebrew word אור ſignifies, 1. the viſible light, we behold with our eyes, and whereby we ſee all things elſe, Gen. 1. 3. 2. the ſun, the moſt lightſom body in the world, and the eye of it, Job 31. 26. 3. the morning when the light firſt appears, Neh. 8. 3. 4. deliverance out of adverſitie, or proſperitie or joy, Pſal. 97. 11. 5. favour or grace, Prov. 16. 15. Here it may be taken in the ſecond ſenſe for the ſun, which gives light in the day.

is ſhort] Heb. neer. If I have any eaſe or comfort in the day, it is long ere it comes, and the ſun ſoon goes down upon it, ſee chap. 20. 5. there the word is ſo uſed.

becauſe of darkneſſe) See on chap. 15. 22, 23. The night returning brings my pain again, and with the light of the day takes away all that little comfort the evening afforded me.

V. 13. If I wait, the grave is mine houſe: I have made my bed in the darkneſſe] In this verſe and the next he ſhews, that if he would force himſelf to hope for life and reſtitution, he could not do it. And doth as it were ſolemnly take his leave of his houſe and coſtlie furniture, which he had enjoyed, as one ready now to dwell in the duſt.

if] If there be any hope left in me, it is at the moſt but of quietneſſe after death in the grave. Or, though, ſo the word is uſed, chap. 9. 15. & 16. 6. If I ſhould have any hope of longer life, or renewed proſperitie, I ſhould be deceived. Both I and my hopes muſt be ſuddenly lodged in the grave.

I wait] Expect comfort promiſed by my friends upon my repentance, chap. 8. 6. & 11. 15, 16, 17.

the grave] See on chap. 7. 9. What can a dying man wait for but a grave? ſee on verſe 1.

is mine houſe] Where I may reſt, as men coming from their labours abroad may reſt at home. Or, where I muſt abide longer then I have done in this world. The grave is mans laſt houſe. He alludes to their words before, chap. 5. 24. This is the ſtately houſe ye promiſed me, it is nothing but a dark hole in the earth. For the Hebrew word, and various uſes of it, ſee on chap. 15. 28.

I have made my bed] I prepare for my death, as a man makes his bed againſt night, I look for no reſt here, in the grave I ſhall ſleep quietly after my wearie journie in this world, Iſa. 57. 2.

In the darkneſſe] See on chap. 15. 22, 23. My windowes will be ſhut up in the grave. There I may ſleep quietly in the dark. Chap. 10. 21, 22.

V. 14. I have ſaid to corruption, Thou art my father, to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my ſiſter] As in the former verſe he had taken his leave of his houſe, ſo here to ſhew how far he was from any hope of reſtitution, and what little account he made of all he had left in the world, he takes his leave of all his kindred, and as it were courts corruption, and the worms with terms of kindred, that they might be willing to receive him.

I have ſaid] Heb cried, or called. For the word ſee on chap. 13. 22. I am certain, that I ſhall ſhortly putrifie in the grave.

to corruption] Or, to the pit. Pſal. 88. 4, 5. & 16. 10. They that go into the grave uſe to putrifie there.

Thou art my father] I am a ſon of corruption, I muſt die, and moulder away. Or corruption will give me eaſe of my pain like a tender father. For the word Father, ſee on chap. 15. 10.

to the worm] Worms breed out of dead carcaſſes, and devour them, and therefore are fitly joined to corruption.

Thou art my mother] Of kin to me. I ſhall be vile like you. Corruption and worms, that do as it were keep houſe in the grave, will receive me as a ſon of death, and then I ſhall be as it were at home with my friends and kindred eaſed of all my pain, which now lies ſo ſore upon me. The Hebrew word אם is taken 1. for a natural mother, as Prov. 1. 8. 2. for the dam of a bruit beaſt or bird, as Deut. 22. 6. 3. for a chief citie, out of which ſpring villages, and are ſubject to it as to a mother, 2 Sam. 20. 19. 4. For the parting of a way, which like a mother brings forth ſeveral ways, as ſo many daughters, Ezek. 21. 21. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for a naturall mother. yet with a metaphor. The worm would abide with him, as a mother with her children.

and my ſiſter] He mentions not brethren, becauſe ſiſters are more at home, more tender, and more attendant on their ſick brethren, then brethren are. Tamar is deſired by Amnon to tend on him in his ſickneſſe, and not Abſalon, 2 Sam. 13. 5, 6.

V. 15. And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who ſhall ſee it?] Why doſt thou then O Eliphaz delude me a wretched man, as it were already in the ſhadow of death, with hope of great proſperity, and account me a wicked man, becauſe I will not believe it? I may rather admire at your folly, who would lift me up, and feed me with a vain hope againſt the courſe of nature, and Gods diſpoſition of things: Ye ſhall ſoon ſee all thoſe hopes go with me into the grave.

And where is now my hope] Or, And where then will my hope be? It will be no where, when I ſhall be laid in the grave. The Hebrew is very emphatical, And where, where is my hope? I am ſure no body can tell where. Much like that trembling ſpeech of Iſaac, Gen. 27. 33. Who, where is he, &c. By hope here is meant the thing hoped for. How can I enjoy proſperity here after death? ſee on chap. 5. 16. & 7. 6. & 11. 18. & 14. 7.

as for my hope who ſhall ſee it?] Who ſhall ever ſee me in that flouriſhing eſtate, which you promiſe me? who ſhall ſee that hope fulfilled? Not I, nor any man elſe. Thus low was Job brought paſt the Cape of good hope in his own apprehenſion, yet God raiſed him again, Chap. 42.

V. 16. They ſhall go down to the bars of the pit, when our reſt together ther is in the duſt.] Here Job concludes what ſhall become of himſelf and his hopes of proſperity. They muſt be lodged together in the duſt.

They] My hopes, verſ. 15. or My purpoſes and thoughts of proſperity. Verſ. 11. Thoſe things ye promiſe me, and my heart would be willing to hope for.

ſhall go down] Shall vaniſh clean away, as things buried in the ground, for his wealth could not go with him to the grave. Or, it may be ſpoken ironically. Belike you think I ſhall be rich in the grave, who promiſe ſo much to me, for I have no hope to be rich in this world.

to the bars] To the moſt inward parts, which uphold all the reſt. I ſhall be utterly ſtript of all proſperity, as if all my riches lay below me in the grave. The word is tranſlated Strength, chap. 18. 13. And bars are the ſtrength of a city, Deut. 3. 5. for they keep the gates faſt, that the enemies cannot enter. And then the ſenſe may be, Riches are as far from me, as if they were buried under ground deep, where I could not come at them. See the like expreſſion, though the Hebrew word differ, Jonas 2. 6.

when] Heb. If. But it is alſo tranſlated when, and ſets out a time rather then a condition: ſee on chap. 14. 14. ſo it is tranſlated, Pſal. 63. 6.

our] This word is added to explain the place. When you and I ſhall be lodged together in the grave. Neither you nor I ſhall ever ſee me proſper in this world. We ſhall both be dead before that time. Or, when I and my hopes ſhall both be gone out of the world.

reſt] Or deſcent] When we ſhall go into the grave, or lye quietly in it.

together] One with another, Chapter 3. 17, 18, 19. & 30. 23, 24.

is in the duſt] Or, ſhall be in the duſt. Which is likely to be quickly. The latter end of the verſe may be thus read, when I ſhall reſt alone in the duſt. That is, when I being ſtript of all my poſſeſſion. ſhall lye ſolitary in the grave, chap. 1. 21. And that the word יחד is uſed for Alone, ſee on Ezr. 4. 3. It is ſo tranſlated. Againſt a man only, Job 34. 29.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 1. THen anſwered Bildad the Shuhite and ſaid,] In this ſecond conflict Bildad rather inveighs againſt Job in a ſharp and angry oration, then diſputes. He contends, that however Job go about to defend himſelf, yet it might appear by thoſe Judgments, which now lay on him, and which God did uſe to lay ſo heavily on none but ungodly men, that he and his fellowes did not accuſe Job without a cauſe. The parts of this Chapter are two. Firſt, a preface in the four firſt verſes. 2. A witty deſcription of the miſeries of wicked men both in life, in death, and after death. He doth no other thing then he did chap. 8. ſave only that he doth more lively ſet out, and paint to the quick the miſeries of ungodly men. But he doth not ſpeak any thing as before of the reward of good men, or perſwade Job to repentance, as if he threatned all theſe miſeries to Job as unavoydable. Yet he falls ſomewhat from his firſt principles, as beaten from them by Job, who had clearly evinced, that in this world good men ſometimes were puniſhed, and bad men preferred; and therefore he minces the matter and pleads, that if good men be afflicted for a time, yet they ſhall flouriſh afterwards in this world, and if bad men proſper a while, yet they ſhall certainly come to miſery here before they die. In the preface is ſet out, 1. the ſpeaker in this verſe. 2. the matter in the three verſes following.

anſwered] See on chap. 3. 2. & 4. 1. & 16. 1.

and ſaid] See on chap. 3. 2. & 4. 1. & 16. 1.

V. 2. How long will it be, ere you make an end of words? mark, and afterwards we will ſpeak.] In the matter of this preface, Bildad chargeth Job with three great faults. 1. Loquacity, and too much talking, more then befitted him, in this verſe. 2. Pride and arrogant contempt of others in the third verſe. 3. Fretfulneſſe and murmuring againſt God, in the fourth verſe.

How long will it be] It is true that Jobs ſpeeches were longer then theirs, in regard of his great preſſures, and their unjuſt cenſures. Yet he is not to be accounted tedious who in his juſt defence ſpeaks much to the purpoſe: They rather were guilty of this ſin, who ſpeak the ſame things ſo often, and repeat things anſwered by Job before, to vex him. See the like phraſe, chap. 8. 2.

ere you] He ſpeaks to Job in the plurall number. Some conceive the reaſon to be, becauſe he would include his fellows, Eliphaz and Zophar, as well as Job, accuſing them of making too long ſpeeches, and not underſtanding one another, whereby they kept him from ſpeaking, that thought he could better clear the matter. But he had no quarrell with his fellows, and he accounts them wronged by Job as well as himſelf, verſ. 3. Either therefore he includes Jobs friends who ſtood by, and by geſtures and cheerfull countenance might encourage him, as chap. 34. 2. or elſe the plurall number is put for the ſingular, which is not unuſuall in the Hebrew. As Mich. 1. 11. So he ſpeaks of himſelf in the plurall, in this verſe. And afterwards we will ſpeak.

an end] Heb. ends. It ſeems that out of impatience Bildad cut off Jobs ſpeech before he was willing to make an end. See on chap. 8. 1.

of words] Such as theſe that are nothing but words. He thought Jobs words had no weight in them.

mark] He conceives that Job did not rightly underſtand him, and his fellows, and therefore had need to attend better to them, and not take upon him to teach them, as chap. 17. 10. he ſeemed to undertake.

and afterwards we will ſpeak] When thou art in a capacity to hear and learn, then I will beſtow ſome pains to teach thee.

V. 3. Wherefore are we counted as beaſts, and reputed vile in your ſight?] Thou O Job not only anſwereſt raſhly, and nothing to the purpoſe, but art grown ſo inſolent, that thou forgetteſt we are men, and makeſt no more account of us, then of the beaſts of the field. O my companions, had not we need to take notice of this injury, and to beat down Jobs arrogancy?

Wherefore] Shew us a reaſon of this thy bold aſſertion, and aſperſion of us.

are we] I and my fellows. If I would ſwallow mine own diſgrace, yet I muſt not theirs.

as beaſts] He alludes to Jobs ſpeeches, who had ſent them to the beaſts to learn, chap. 12. 7. And pronounced them void of underſtanding, chap. 17. 4. and of wiſdom, chap. 17. 10. What was this but to make them blockiſh and ſenſeleſſe like the beaſts? But Bildad ſhould rather have conſidered, what great pains lay on Job, and what provocations they had given him, and whether they had not carried themſelves ſo, that they deſerved ſuch language. Theſe thoughts would have taught him patience.

and reputed vile] Heb. polluted, or unclean, and therefore fit to be rejected. Why doſt thou O Job deſpiſe us as vile things, unfit to be looked upon by thy delicate eys? chap. 19. 15. Some think it to be an alluſion to unclean beaſts, which were not looked upon as fit for ſacrifices, nor allowed for food under the law. It rather may have reſpect to beaſts wallowing in the dirt; and growing filthy for want of wit to keep themſelves clean, and for their filthineſſe loathed by men. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 4.

in your ſight] Heb. in your eyes. For the phraſe ſee on chap. 15. 15. He means in Jobs judgement or account, as chap. 19. 15. & 32. 1. Prov. 3. 7. Iſa. 5. 21. Why he ſpeaks to Job in the plural number, ſee on verſ. 2.

V. 4. He teareth himſelf in his anger: ſhall the earth be forſaken for thee? and ſhall the rock be removed out of his place?] He accuſeth Job here as one not only inſolent over them, but injurious to God, and raging againſt him, as if he would have God to alter the whole courſe of nature to pleaſe him.

He teareth] Some would have it to be one perſon for another, and read it, O thou that teareſt thy ſelf. See the like alteration of the perſon, chap. 12. 4. & 16. 7. & 30. 19, 20. Obad. verſ. 3. But there is more elegancy in this change of the perſon. Bildad firſt looks upon his friends, and bids them take notice, how furiouſly Job carried himſelf. Do ye not ſee how he rages? Then he turns himſelf to Job, and looks him in the face, and directing his ſpeech to him goes on in the ſecond perſon, ſhall the earth be forſaken for thee? He compares Job to a furious beaſt, tearing himſelf as the beaſt doth his prey, whereby he intimates Jobs extream vexing himſelf in his anger, as if he would tear himſelf to pieces. He takes occaſion to charge him thus from Jobs words, chap. 13. 14. See on chap. 16. 9. The word is uſed Gen. 37. 33.

himſelf] Heb. his ſoul. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 22.

ſhall the earth] See on chap. 9. 24.

be forſaken] of God. Should he give over governing it juſtly to pleaſe thee? Or ſhould it be forſaken of men? wouldſt thou have God to deſtroy all men on the earth to humour thee?

for thee] For thy ſake, that thou mayſt have content, and no man may be left upon earth to ſpeak againſt thee for thy wickedneſſe.

and ſhall the rock] Shall God change the order of his governing the world juſtly in puniſhing the wicked and proſpering the godly, which is as firm and conſtant, and unmoveable, as a rock? It may be alludes to Jobs ſpeech, chap. 14. 18. though Job uſe the ſimilitude of a rock there to another end.

be removed out of his place] And carried into another place. This is impoſſible. So it is for thee to clear thy ſelf, unleſſe thou accuſe God of injuſtice in his proceedings. Or it may be he accuſes Job of unreaſonableneſs, that could be content, that all the world might be put out of order, ſo he might enjoy his will.

V. 5. Yea the light of the wicked ſhall be put out, and the ſpark of his fire ſhall not ſhine.] Now Bildad having finiſhed his preface endeavours to make his cauſe good. and largely ſets out the deſtruction of ungodly men, 1. by ſimilitudes to verſ. 17. 2. in plain terms, from thence to the end of the chapter. The ſimilitudes are four. 1. from the light in verſ. 5, 6. 2. from hawking and hunting, verſ. 7, 8, 9, 10. 3. from forenſical proceeding, or military, verſ. 11, 12. 13, 14, 15. 4. from husbandry, verſ. 16. For the ſimilitude from light. Notwithſtanding thy proteſtations of thy innocency O Job, thou art wicked, for God puts out thy light, as he uſeth to do with ungodly men.

Yea] See on chap. 16. 9. on the word, Alſo. For the Hebrew word is the ſame. Here it may be uſed by way of augmentation, as if he had ſaid to Job, Thou feeleſt Gods hand heavie on thee, and thou freſt and fumeſt verſ. 4. but it will goe worſe with thee yet, for the light of the wicked, ſuch as thou art, ſhall be put out.

the light] For the word ſee on chap. 17. 12. By light here is meant whatſoever outwardly ſhines and ſeems glorious in the eyes of men, as wealth, honour, friends. For as light cheereth our ſpirits, directs us to work or walk, and makes us to be looked upon by others, ſo doth proſperity. So is Light uſed, chap. 22. 28. & 30. 26. & 38. 15. Pſal. 97. 11. Prov. 13. 9. Iſa. 59. 9. Eſth. 8. 16. Job 11. 17.

ſhall be put out[Though God ſuffer them to proſper for a time, yet he will bring them to miſery in the end. Their proſperity ſhall fail them, as a ſnuffe of candle goes out and leaves a ſtink behind it. Men did not ſo much admire them in their proſperity, but they ſhall as much contemn them in their adverſity. He uſeth many ſeverall words in this verſe, and the next to the ſame purpoſe, to ſhew that their proſperity ſhall ſuddenly and unexpectedly be taken away, ſo that no part of it ſhall appear any more, which will be a great wonder to the beholders, as if they ſhould ſee the Sun go down at noon.

and the ſpark] He doth not ſay the flame, but the ſpark, intimating a totall deſtruction of their proſperity, as a fire is quite out, when not ſo much as one ſpark appears. 2 Sam. 14. 7.

of his fire] The word אש is derived from a word that ſignifies to be ſtrong or mighty, for fire hath a great power to burne, heat and conſume. It ſignifies 1. literally the fire, that we uſe to warm us. Job 1. 16. 2. it is put for war, which devoures and ſets fire on all where it comes, Pſal. 78. 62, 63. 3. for a ſtrong burning wind that parcheth graſſe and corn, yea the very ſtubble, Joel 2. 5. 4. for trial of Gods people by afflictions, which tries them, as fire tries gold, Zech. 13. 9. Pſal. 66. 12. 5. for proſperity, which warms and comforts men like fire, and makes them ſhine before others. So in this place. For what he called light before, now he calls fire. Of his fire. That is, of every wicked mans. Before he ſpake of them in generall, in the plurall number, now in the ſingular, as if he pointed to every particular man, and intended to ſhew, that not one wicked mans proſperity ſhall continue.

ſhall not ſhine] Sparks do fly up quickly, but do not ſhine, they are ſoon extinguiſhed: ſo is the proſperity of the wicked. The word may alſo import an utter extinguiſhing of it, ſo that they ſhall never proſper again. No morning of proſperity ſhall come after the night of their adverſity. For the word ſometimes imports the breaking forth of the morning light, ſo the word is uſed. Iſa. 59. 9.

V. 6. The light ſhall be darke, his tabernacle, and his candle ſhall be put out with him.] Both he, himſelf, and all his houſe ſhall fall out of this light of comfort, into extreme darkneſſe of miſery, by reaſon that his light ſhall be ſuddainly turned into darkneſſe, and his beauty and brightneſſe in a moment ſhall be turned into deformity and miſery.

The light] See on verſ. 5.

ſhall be darke] Or, darkened. It ſhall be clean taken away, and darkneſſe come inſtead of it. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 21, 23.

in his tabernacle] There ſhall no proſperity at all be left in his family. He and all his ſhall come to ruine. The glory of his family ſhall be obſcured. For the word ſee on chap. 5. 14. & 11. 14.

and his candle] Or, lamp. His proſperity called light, and fire verſe 5. As the light of the Sun, ſo the light of a candle is uſed to ſet out proſperity, chap. 29. 3. 2 King. 8. 19. Pſal. 18. 28.

ſhall be put out with him] He ſhall loſe his proſperity and his life both together. For the word, Put out ſee on verſ. 5. Or, His candle which is with him ſhall be put out: ſo על is uſed, chap. 38. 32. See the like phraſe, 1 Cor. 15. 10. His proſperity ſhall ceaſe before he die. Or, Above him. For lights in Feaſts were wont to be ſet on high, that they might give the more light. Or, His candle in it. That is, in his Tabernacle. All his riches and goods in his houſe ſhall be taken away: ſo this particle is uſed for In, Pſal. 62. 8.

V. 7. The ſteps of his ſtrength ſhall be ſtraightned, and his own counſell ſhall caſt him down.] Now he proceeds to the ſecond diſſimilitude, wherein he compares ungodly men to wild beaſts and birds, for whom nets and ſnares are ſet every where, and moſt of all where they leaſt ſuſpect them, which makes them often run into ſnares unawares, neither can their ſtrength or ſwiftneſſe do them any good, when they are taken; He alſo ſets out the many ſeverall wayes that God hath to ruine ungodly men by the ſeverall devices, hunters and fowlers have to catch beaſts and birds, as by nets, ſnares, gins, traps. And as they ſcare birds and beaſts, and make them uſe their own legs and wings to bring them into ſnares, ſo doth God bring down wicked men by their own own counſels and actions. The ſumme of this verſe is to ſhew, that whereas before in his proſperity nothing was ſo difficult, but a wicked man durſt take it in hand, and make ſure account to bring it to paſſe by his ſtrength, now when want and penury is come upon him, his heart failes him, and he is brought into ſtraights, and whiles he ſeeks by policy to free himſelfe, he haſtens his own deſtruction.

The ſteps] The devices of his minde, or actions which he goes about, which are ſo many ſteps made to goe forward in a way: ſo it is interpreted in the end of the verſe.

of his ſtrength] Thoſe ſtrong ſteps of ſubtile counſels, and ſtate actions, which he made in his proſperity to accompliſh his ends. The Hebrew word און ſignifies, 1. ſtrength, as Gen. 39. 3. 2. riches which are often gotten by labour and ſtrength. We call it ſubſtance, Hoſ. 12. 8. 3. iniquity, for men often wrong, and ſpoyle others by the abuſe of their ſtrength, Job 21. 19. 4. vanity, for vaine is the ſtrength of man, Jer. 4. 14. 5. lamentation and ſorrow, Deut. 26. 14. for ſuch is mans ſtrength. Pſal. 90. 10. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for ſuch ſteps, as ſtrong men uſe to take.

ſhall be ſtraightned] Strong ſteps make quick diſpatch, except they want room, and be hindred by the narrowneſſe of the way. The wicked man cannot carry all before him in his adverſity, as he did in his proſperity, he wants then counſell and courage to oppreſſe others or eſcape himſelf. He is like a bird or beaſt in a ſnare, he cannot go at liberty as before. The Hebrew word יצר ſignifies, 1. to be ſtraightned, as Prov. 4. 12. 2. to frame or faſhion a thing, which is often done by ſtraightning and preſſing down the matter, whereof it is made, Gen. 2. 7. 3. framing in the minde, or imagining, for thoughts are framed by the heart, as works by the hand, Jer. 18. 11. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

and his own counſell] His own devices and thoſe counſells which his own head gives him, ſhall ruine him, Prov. 1. 31. & 14. 14.

ſhall caſt him downe] Into thoſe miſeries into which he is falne. Or, ſhall caſt him away. That is, his former policies ſhall fail him, his wit is loſt within his wealth, and his brains with his ſubſtance.

V. 8. For he is caſt into a net by his own feet, and he walketh upon a ſnare] This verſe is an explication or rather an amplification of the former, and ſhewes by what means his ſteps were ſtraightned, in that not only he hath brought himſelf into a ſtraight place, but alſo is taken in a net there by his own fooliſhneſſe, ſo that he cannot get out.

For] Why is he in ſuch ſtraights? Becauſe he hath brought himſelf into them.

He is caſt] For the word ſee on chap. 14. 20. Here it ſignifies ſending forth or caſting away. He is like a beaſt hunted into a net.

into a net] The word רשת is taken, 1. literally for an engine to catch birds, or beaſts, or fiſhes, Hoſ. 5. 1. Prov. 1. 17. 2. For network, Exod. 27. 4. 3. for politick devices to intrap men, Pſal. 9. 15. 4. for a condition of miſery, out of which there is no getting, Pſal. 66. 11. So it is uſed here.

by his own feet] That is, being taken in it by his own feet. He is not only caſt into that irrecoverable miſery by Gods ſecret providence over-ruling all things, but of his own accord runs into it, though unwillingly. For one verb thus underſtood or included in another, ſee chap. 15. 8. & 16. 11. 1 Sam. 7. 2. Iſa. 38. 14, 17, 21. Heb. in his own feet. But the particle ב is oft uſed for an inſtrument, Pſal. 33. 6. ſo that here is both the chief cauſe or inflicter of his miſery included, and likewiſe the inſtrument, God and the wicked man himſelf. His feet here are taken for his wayes or courſes by a figure of the cauſe for the effect, and a metaphor. The meaning is, he ſhall by Gods juſt judgement bring himſelf into inextricable difficulties.

and he walketh] See on chap. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth. Here it ſignifies a being in continuall danger, as a beaſt, that hath all his way ſpread with nets to catch him, that if he eſcape one, is ſure to be taken in another.

upon a ſnare] Broughton reads it, a platted gin. And fitly, for it comes from a word, that ſignifies platting or wreathing things together, as ropes are twiſted, and boughes of trees grow one within another. So nets are made, and ſnares. Walking upon nets and ſnares, is like walking upon coals. A proverb to ſet out perpetuall danger.

V. 9 The gin ſhall take him by the heel, and the robber ſhall prevail againſt him] He ſhall not only be caſt into the net, but alſo be taken in it by the heel, and that ſo faſt, that there ſhall be no getting out no more then a weak man can get out of the hands of a thief, that is too ſtrong for him.

The gin ſhall take him] Lay faſt hold on him ſo that he cannot eſcape. Eccl. 9. 82. Cant. 3. 4.

by the heel] עקב comes from a word that ſignifies, to be crooked, and ſignifies, 1. the heel which is crooked about, Gen. 25. 26. 2. the end of a thing, for the heel is at the lower end of the body, Pſal. 119. 33. 3. the reward of an action, good or bad, Pſal. 19. 11. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe. Others read it, He ſhall lay hold on the gin with his heel. That is, he ſhall undoe himſelf bis own overſight.

and the robber] See on Chap. 5. 5. Yet here may be meant the hunter, that layes the ſnares to catch the wild beaſt.

ſhall prevaile] He ſhall be too ſtrong for him, and by his might ſhall overcome him. Here he ſhews what ſnares he meant. The wicked man had by fraud oppreſſed others, and God would give him over to robbers to be ſpoyled by them.

againſt him] He ſhall come againſt him violently, and ſet upon him like an enemy, and utterly deſtroy him. Or, upon him. Or, over him. He ſhall get a compleat victory over him, and take away all he hath gotten indirectly from others, Mat. 12. 29.

V. 10. The ſnare is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way] As hunters and fowlers ſometimes make ſnares of cords to catch birds or beaſts by the legs, and ſometimes make pit falls in the ground for them to fall into, ſo the wicked man where ever he walks, ſhall find ſnares and traps laid to catch him in every place.

the ſnare] Heb. His rope. To wit, wherewith he ſhall be taken. The word חבל ſignifies, 1. a rope or cord wherewith things are tyed, Eſth. 1. 6. 2. a ſnare, whereby beaſts or birds are taken, Pſal. 104. 4. 3. a meaſuring cord, or line whereby land is meaſured, Amos 7. 17. 4. a mans portion of land, that falls to him by ſuch meaſuring, or otherwiſe, Pſal. 16. 5, 6. 5. grief or paine, whereby men or women are taken and tyed up as it were with a cord, Iſa. 66. 7. 6. corruption or deſtruction, which binds men up like a cord, ſo that there is no getting out of it, Mich. 2. 10. 7. a company of men knit together as with a cord. 1 Sam. 10 5. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe.

is laid for him] Heb. hidden. If the ſnare were to be ſeen the birds would avoid it. The meaning is, that God hath many ſecret wayes to bring down ungodly men. An alluſion to fowlers, who cover their ſnares, and pits with boughes or boards, leſt the bird ſhould ſee them and eſcape. Pſal. 194. 5.

and a trap for him] Heb. his trap. That is, a trap laid to catch him. So the word imports, for it comes from a word that ſignifies to take towns and cities.

in the way] Or. by the path. For על, In, ſee on verſ. 6. Some think the Hebrew word here uſed ſignifies a path in woods where ſnares uſe to be layed to catch wild beaſts, that walk there. However it is the cuſtome of hunters and fowlers to lay ſnares in or near ways, where the beaſts or birds uſe to paſſe, as adders and ſerpents uſe to lie paths to ſting paſſengers, Gen. 49. 17. The wicked mans ways here are his actions and courſes of life, out of which occaſion is taken by others to undoe him.

V. 11. Terrours ſhall make him afraid on every ſide, and ſhall drive him to his feet] Now follows an elegant ſimilitude taken from guilty perſons in a ſtate, that are in danger of a publick triall for great offences. In ſuch a condition are wicked men, though in proſperity at preſent. And 1. he ſets out the terrours they feel in their life, verſ. 11, 12. 2. their horrible death, verſ. 13, 14. 3. the deſtruction of their houſes after their death, verſ. 1. 5. like traitours, who are clapt up in priſon, racked there, put to a ſhamefull and painfull death, and their houſes burnt or pulled down, and ſo to remain as a perpetuall brand of infamy to their family. In all this Bildad ſtrikes cloſely at Job as at a wicked man, who had before complained of his terrours and affrightments, chap. 7. 14. of his goods taken away, and houſe left deſolate, chap. 16. 7, 11. and of other like miſeries in many places. The ſum of the verſe is, that as the wicked man ſhall have many imminent threatning dangers abroad, ſo he muſt look for many terrours within, ſo that he ſhall not think himſelf any where ſafe, but ready to betake himſelf to flight, if he could tell which way to eſcape.

Terrours] Terrours of conſcience, or fears of mind ariſing from his preſent troubles, which have ſeized, and make him to fear greater miſchiefs.

ſhall make afraid] Chap. 15. 21. ſee there.

On every ſide] Heb. round. Out of every place he ſhall fear trouble, as if an army of fears were round about him. Jer. 6. 20. & 25. 3. & 46. 5. & 49. 29.

and ſhall drive him] Heb. ſcatter him.

to his feet] He ſhall think himſelf ſafe in no place, but betake himſelf to his legs to flye from place to place for ſafety. He ſhall not truſt to others to hide him, but uſe his own legs to get away.

V. 12. His ſtrength ſhall be hunger-bitten, and deſtruction ſhall be ready at his ſide] Before he had ſhewed what outward troubles and inward fears of mind ſhould lay hold on the wicked man, now he ſets down what he muſt feel in his body.

His ſtrength] See on verſ. 7.

ſhall be hunger-bitten] He that had abundance and fared daintily, and was ſtrong before, now God hath blown upon his eſtate ſhall be ſo poor, that his bodily ſtrength ſhall decay for want of food, chap. 15. 23. 1 Sam. 2. 5, 36.

and deſtruction] The word literally ſignifies a cloud, that darkens the sky, and ſuddenly diſſolves, and comes down in an unlooked for tempeſt. So ſhall ſudden deſtruction daunt, & ruin wicked men, Pro. 6. 26.

ſhall be ready] Some take it for ſtrong and ſtable, ſo prepared that he cannot prevent it. But it is better tranſlated Ready. That is, near at hand, as appears by the word following.

at his ſide] The word צלע ſignifies, 1. a rib of a man or woman. Gen. 2. 22. 2. becauſe mans rib is in his ſide, it ſignifies the ſide of any thing, or a place near it, 2 Sam. 16. 13. 3. it ſignifies the beams of an houſe, which joyn it together, as ribs do the body, 1 King. 7. 3. 4. it ſignifies a chamber ſet at the out-ſide of the houſe, as many were about the Temple, 1 King. 6. 8. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe. And it intimates that his deſtruction is as near him, as one that ſtands cloſe by his ſide. See the like phraſe, Pſal. 91. 7. but there it ſignifies near in place, here neare in time. It will come ſuddenly.

V. 13. It ſhall devour the ſtrength of his skin: even the firſt born of death ſhall devour his ſtrength] From the ſufferings of the wicked man in his life he now goes on to ſhew the harſhneſſe of his death.

It] Deſtruction ſpoken of verſ. 12. ſhall conſume him. Or, the firſt born of death, as in the words following. And ſo the Dutch tranſlation reads it. The firſt born of death ſhall devour, &c. So the antecedent is taken out of the words following, as Pſal. 87. 1, 2.

ſhall devour] See on chap. 15. 34. on the word, Conſume.

the ſtrength] Heb. the barres. See on chap. 17. 16.

of the skin] Some by the barres or ſtrength of his skin underſtand the fleſh, which upholds his skin. Others the bones which uphold both fleſh and ſkin, and carry it. Others tranſlate it branches. And ſome of them underſtand it of the members that are under the ſkin, that ſhoot like branches. And ſome, of his children, which are as it were branches of his body. It is moſt like to be meant of the deſtruction of his fleſh or bones.

the firſt-born of death] The word בכור ſignifies, 1. the firſt-born, as Gen. 27. 32. 2. a prince, or ruler, becauſe the firſt-born of the family had the rule at firſt, Pſal. 89. 27. 3, one that is dear and precious to us, as a firſt-born ſon, Exod. 4 22. 3. one that is elder then another, becauſe the firſt-born is the eldeſt, Gen. 43. 33. Some underſtand by the firſt-born of death a violent death, which ſeizeth upon all a mans members, as in the death of a wild beaſt. For the firſt-born was the fathers ſtrength, Gen. 49. 3. ſo the firſt-born of the poor is the pooreſt, Iſai 14 30. So the firſt-born of death is a moſt terrible death, that carrieth away the principality from other kinds of deaths, as the firſt-born did from his brethren.

Shall devour his ſtrength] See before on this verſe for both theſe words.

V. 14. His confidence ſhall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it ſhall bring him to the King of terrours.] In all this miſchief which befalls him, he ſhall not know whither to go for help, whatſoever in his houſe he truſted in; ſhall be taken away, and he ſhall find no way to eſcape a terrible death.

his confidence] See on chap. 8. 14. & 11. 20. Prov. 10. 28. All hope and means of re-eſtabliſhing him in his former eſtate ſhall be taken away, as health, ſtrength, wealth, and whatever elſe he truſted in in his proſperity. Or, he ſhall have nothing left with him, which may give him any aſſurance of continuance in his houſe.

Shall be rooted out] There ſhall nothing remain on which he may truſt: He can ſee no ſafe abiding in his dwelling.

of his tabernacle] See on chap. 5. 24. & 11. 14.

and it ſhall bring him] Heb. ſhall make him go. Or, this ſhall bring him. To wit, the failing of his confidence or deſpair, in that he ſees himſelf ſtript of all comforts, on which he leaned before. Or, thou ſhalt bring him. As if Bildad turned his ſpeech aſide to God; and leſt the wicked man in his height of proſperity ſhould think, that no man could pull him down, tells him that God would do it. Or impersonally, He ſhall be brought. See on chap. 42. 85.

to the King of terrours] To death, which is more terrible to fleſh and blood, then any thing elſe. To the greateſt of all terrours that might rule over all the reſt. As the firſt-born of death for the moſt terrible death, verſ. 13. For Terrours ſee on verſ. 11.

V. 15. It ſhall dwell in his tabernacle, becauſe it is none of his: brimſtone ſhall be ſcattered upon his habitation] He now comes to ſet out the ruine of his houſe, ſignifying, that God his wickedneſſe would not only deſtroy him, but his habitation alſo.

It] Terrour or deſpair ſpoken of verſ. 14. There ſhall be no hope, that any ſhall dwell in his houſe any more, except terrour and deſolation: for it ſhall be deſtroyed by Gods judgment, as follows in the text.

ſhall dwell] Conſtantly abide there.

becauſe it is none of his] Heb. Not his. becauſe he got the money, with which he built it, by fraud and indirect means, therefore God will turn him out of dores, and let nothing but terrour dwell there. This is added emphatically by way of correction. Did I call it his tabernacle? Alas I was miſtaken; it is none of his, it was built with other mens goods. Others underſtand it thus. It is now no longer his, for death the King of terrours hath put him out of poſſeſſion.

brimſtone] An alluſion to the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19. and to the cuſtom of puniſhing men for treaſon, when not only the traitours themſelves are put to a cruell death, but alſo their houſes are deſtroyed for a note of infamy. Hereby is intended ſome exemplary judgement of God, that ſhould light upon the ungodly man, Deut. 29. 23. Iſa. 34. 9. He may allude alſo to the deſtruction of Jobs ſheep and ſhepheards by fire from heaven, chap. 1. 16. or to thunderbolts which ſwell like brimſtone.

ſhall be ſcattered] Spread abroad as ſeed is caſt upon the ground.

upon his habitation] Upon his dwelling houſe, and all that belongs to it.

V. 16. His roots ſhall be dried up beneath, and above ſhall his branch be cut off] This is the laſt ſimilitude where Bildad ſets out the deſtruction of ungodly men by a ſimilitude taken from countrey affaires. He had before compared a wicked man to a flouriſhing tree rooted faſt in the earth and ſpreading his branches abroad, Chapter 8. 16, 17. now by the ſame ſimilitude he ſets out his deſtruction. As a tree, when the root withers, decayes in the branches alſo, ſo ſhall this ungodly man be utterly deſtroyed both root and branch, Mar. 11. 20. Such ſimilitudes from trees are frequent in Scripture, Job 29. 19. Iſa. 5. 24. Amos 2. 9. The intent is to ſhew, that miſchief will befall the ungodly man to on every ſide, as a tree whoſe roots are withered and branches cut off, and it left dead and naked.

His roots] See on chap.5.3. & 14. 8. & 8.17.

ſhall be dryed up] Wither for want of moiſture.

beneath] Within the bowels of the earth.

and above] Above ground, or upon the top of the tree.

ſhall his branch] See on chap.14.9. on the word Boughes. Some underſtand his children by the branch, but then his parents muſt be the roots, which is not here intended. But by his roots may be meant all his ſecret wealth and ſtore, which is unknown to the world, as roots of trees lie unſeen in the ground, and by his branch may be meant his outward pompe, which is ſeen by all men as the branches of trees, and is upheld by his inward ſtore, as a tree by the roots. All muſt be loſt within dores and without.

be cut off] Taken away as branches cut off from trees. The word ſignifies circumciſing or cutting round. He that lops the branches cuts round, till the bough fall down. So will God cut off all the hold of ungodly men, and make them fall with their own weight, See on chap.14.2. on the word, cut down.

V.17. His remembrance ſhall periſh from the earth, and he ſhall have no name in the ſtreet] What he had before ſpoken allegorically of the deſtruction of ungodly men, now he ſets out in plain terms to the end of the Chapter, that Job might not miſunderſtand him. Alſo he doth particularly ſet out thoſe things which follow after the wicked mans death. The firſt whereof is ignominie, and contempt, ſet out in this verſe. After many perils and calamities in this world, and a miſerable death, his name ſhall be buried with him. And he that was ſo much magnified while he lived, ſhall not be ſpoken of unleſſe it be in diſgrace after his death, Pſal,49. 18,19. As a tree when root and branch is gone, is clean forgotten, and no man remembers where it grew, Pſal.109.13. Prov.10.7.

His remembrance] See on Job 13.12.

ſhall periſh] There ſhall be no remembrance of him. No man ſhall ſpeak of him. He ſhall quite fall out of the memories of men. So the day is ſaid to periſh, when it is not, chap.3.3. and expectation periſheth, when men have nothing to expect, Prov,10. 28.

from the earth] The men of the earth ſhall ſpeak of him no more: ſee on chap.9. 24.

and he ſhall have no name] Not ſo much as once be ſpoken of or named. Or, no credit of renown. So men of name in the Hebrew are men of renown, in the tranſlation, Gen.6.4. He ſhall have no honourable name left, whereby poſteritie ſhall remember him. His evill deeds, and Gods judgements on him have blotted it clean out.

in the ſtreet] Heb. upon the face of the ſtreet. For the word Face ſee on chap.14,20. For the word חוץ ſtreet, it ſignifies 1. without; or abroad, Lev. 18.9. 2. the ſtreets of a city, which are without the houſes, Jer.37.21. 3. countrey villages and fields which are out of the walled towns, and lye open to all commers and dangers, Prov. 1. 20. Gen. 19.16. Numb.35. 4. Men uſe to meet together in the ſtreets, and there to talk of all occurrences. But no man ſhall ever make mention of this wicked wretch there, who is faln out of the memory of all men living.

V.18. He ſhall be driven from light into darkneſſe, and chaſed out of the world] Now followes the revenge, that God, and men oppreſſed by this wicked wretch will take of him: they will never leave him, till they have rooted him clean out of the world.

He ſhall be driven] Heb. they ſhall drive him. It may be taken imperſonally, as chap.3.3. ſee there; yet it may be with reſpect to the perſons wronged by him. They ſhall finde a time to be revenged on him, and never leave him, till they have taken away his life. So the Dutch tranſlation reads it, men ſhall drive him.

from light into darkneſſe] Not literally from day to night, nor from proſperity to adverſity, not from joy to ſorrow, as the words ſometimes are taken, but from life to death, as appears by the words following. See on verſ.5. chap. 17. 12, 13. & 15. 22, 23. Iſa.8.22.

and chaſed] Heb. and chaſe him. As dogs follow the wild boar till they kill him, ſo ſuch as have been undone by him ſhall purſue him to death, Pſal,140. 11.

Out of the world] Not onely out of his country, but out of all the habitable world. He ſhall no more converſe with men here upon earth.

V.19. He ſhall neither have ſon nor nephew among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings,] He goes on and ſhews the miſery of this ungodly man, in that not only himſelf ſhall be chaſed out of the world, but his poſterity alſo. He laboured to get riches for them, but none of them ſhall enjoy it. It is likely that he girds at Job, and obliquely, though not in direct terms, objects to him the loſſe of his children by Gods extraordinary judgement, chap. 1. 19. which Eliphaz alſo had objected to him, chap.5. 4. And Bildad himſelf more plainly. chap.8.4.

he ſhall neither have ſon nor nephew] None of his poſterity ſhall inherit his poſſeſſions. See Gen. 21.23. Iſa.14. 22. It may be he might have children or nephews, but they ſhould never enjoy what he had gotten, as Jer.22.36. ſo it follows in this verſe, They ſhall have no place among his people, nor have their fathers dwelling, as children uſe to have.

nor any remaining[Either the meaning is that all his family and kindred ſhould be deſtroyed together with him, or elſe that they ſhould live in a poor faſhion, not in ſuch a ſtately houſe, and enjoying ſuch great means as he did. The word properly ſignifies one that is left in war, and not deſtroyed by the ſword. Such as were oppreſſed by him ſhall ſo hate him, that they ſhall ſeek to deſtroy him, and all his familie: ſee on verſ. 19. Jer.42.17. Lam.2.22.

in his dwellings] Heb. in his abidings. The word rather ſignifies a place wherein ſtrangers abide for a time, then houſes of mens own The wicked man thought he had got a ſure habitation for himſelf and his: but it was but as an Inne to him in his pilgrimage, and his poſterity ſhall never enjoy it.

V.20. They that come after him, ſhall be aſtonied at his day, as they that went before were affrighted.] The calamitie of that laſt day, when the wicked man ſhall die, ſhall be ſo terrible, that it ſhall be full of horrour and admiration, not only to thoſe that ſhall ſee it with their eys, but to thoſe alſo, that in after-times ſhall hear the relation of it.

They that come after him] Such as knew him not, but hear by others the relation of his fearful fall.

ſhall be aſtonied] See on chap. chap. 17. 8. It ſignifies ſuch an aſtoniſhment, as uſeth to poſſeſſe paſſers by, when ſome pleaſant place is laid utterly waſte, or when heaps of dead carkaſſes lie on the ground after a great battail. Jer. 19.3. 8. Lev. 26. 32. So terrible ſhall be the deſtruction of this wicked man, and his whole family, that even the ages that come after, when they hear of it, ſhall ſtand agaſt, as if they beheld the dirtie ruines of ſome once beautifull citie.

at his day] See on chap.14.14. Here is meant the day of the deſtruction of the ungodly man: or rather the deſtruction it ſelf falling out on that day, which ſhould be ſo great that it ſhould be as it were yearly obſerved by recapitulation of Gods hand upon this wicked wretch, and that from generation to generation. For the phraſe, ſee Obad. verſ.12. Pſal. 137. 5, 37. 13. Ezek.21. 25.

as] Heb. and, but it is often tranſlated as, and is a note of ſimilitude: ſo Job 34. 3.

they that went before] Who lived before theſe men, that onely heard of it. That is, ſuch as lived at the ſame time, when this wicked man was deſtroyed, and ſaw his terrible deſtruction.

were affrighted] Heb. laid hold on horrour. The word ſignifies ſuch a fright as makes a mans hair ſtand an end, Ezek. 27. 35. & 32. 10. Job 4.15. The meaning is by inverſion of the words, that horror hath taken hold on them. Iſai. 13.8. & 21. 3.

V.21. Surely ſuch are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him, that knoweth not God.] He concludes all with threatning a certain ruine and deſtruction of the habitation of every wicked man, and ſets down the cauſe of it, becauſe they have no acquaintance with God, and therefore can look for no protection from him.

Surely] This you may make account of: I will ſay no more, but leave you to obſerve whether it be ſo or no.

ſuch] Heb. theſe. Which is more emphaticall. As if he had ſet them out ſo plainly, that men might ſee them falling with their eyes.

are the dwellings] Thus God will deal with the dwellings of ungodly men. They think themſelves ſafe in their ſumptuous houſes, but they ſhall be deſtroyed. This ſhall be the end of that once flouriſhing Palace of the wicked man.

of the wicked] He ſtill ſpeaks in the ſingular number, as if he had a fling at Job, and would have him apply all this to himſelf.

and this is the place] This is the houſe. So a place is taken Exod. 18. 23. Job 8. 18. ye ſee what is become of his houſe. It is utterlie ruined. And ſo it anſwers fitlie to the beginning of the verſe, Or, This is the eſtate and condition of the ungodlie man.

of him that knoweth not God] A deſcription of a wicked man. One that hath no acquaintance with God, nor doth not worſhip him according to his will. Exod. 5. 2. Judg.2.10. Pſal.79 6. 2 Theſſ.1.8. Or, Of him who doth not approve of God. So the word is uſed, Pſal.1.6. But the former reading is the better, becauſe it anſwers beſt to the beginning of the verſe. And expounds what is meant by the wicked man whoſe habitation ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, namely ſuch an one, as had no acquaintance with God at all. For the word God ſee on Chap. 8. 3, 5. Thus ends Bildads ſecond furious charge againſt Job with as little ſucceſſe as his former, as will appear, when we have conſidered Jobs anſwer in the following chapter.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſ. 1. THen Job anſwered and ſaid] In this Chapter Job moves his friends to pitie him with ſuch paſſionate expreſſions as might move ſtonie hearts. He acknowledgeth, that not onely thoſe miſeries Bildad ſpake of, but alſo many others lay ſore upon him. And that they came not by chance, but by Gods appointment. Yet he ſhews, that he ſhould not therefore be accounted a wicked man, nor be ſo reproachfully dealt withall by his friends, but rather be pitied ſo much the more, by how much the greater his affliction was. And hoping to find but little comfort from his friends, he plainly declares, that although he looked for no reſtitution to proſperitie here, yet he expected a glorious reſurrection hereafter. The parts of the chapter are four. 1. A preface to verſe 4. 2. a Pathetical perſwaſion of his friends to commiſeration. From thence to ver.23. 3. a clear teſtimony of the reſurrection. From verſ. 23. to verſ. 28. 4. a perſwaſion of his friends to repentance. From thence to the end of the Chapter. In the preface note firſt the ſpeaker ſet out verſe 1, 2. a complaint of the harſhneſſe of his friends againſt him ſet out, 1. by the continuance of their vexations, verſ.2. 2. by the frequency of their calumniations, verſ.3.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap. 16.1.

V. 2. How long will ye vex my ſoul, and break me in pieces with words?] Will ye never make an end of your cruell ſpeeches, whereby ye fill me with grief who am too full of it already? Is this to comfort the afflicted, to reſtore the broken-hearted, to lift up him that is caſt down? He payes Bildad in his own coyn, chap. 18. 2. Thou demandeſt of me, when I will make an end of anſwering, but I ſay to you again, when will you leave off thus miſerably to vex me, and with theſe your reproachfull ſpeeches to kill my heart?

How long] An interrogation with indignation. See the like, chap. 8. 2. & 18. 1.

will ye vex] Put me to trouble and grief, and labour to defend my ſelf. So much the word imports. He ſpeaks in the plurall number, becauſe the reſt had vexed him, as well as Bildad.

my ſoul] See on chap. 14. 22. The perſon may be meant here, How long will ye vex me? But with relation to the ſoul, as if he had ſaid, Ye ſee what a caſe my body is in, full of ſores. God hath ſpared my ſoul. But ye adde ſoul-afflictions to body-afflictions, and grieve my very ſoul in ſeeking to make me a wicked man, and putting me out of Gods protection; ſee the like Pſal. 3. 2. We ſay in our Engliſh expreſſion, when we would ſet out a great injury, He vexed me to the very ſoul.

and break me in pieces] Or, cruſh me. As the word is tranſlated, Job 4. 19. ye diminiſh the ſtrength and comfort of my ſoul.

with words] With your bitter and invective ſpeeches. Job could bear many loſſes, and among the reſt the loſſe of his deareſt children, chap. 1. 21, 22. but cannot bear bad language of ſo high a ſtrain, as to queſtion his integrity.

V. 3. Theſe ten times have ye reproached me: you are not aſhamed that you make your ſelves ſtrange to me.] The thing objected againſt them in this verſe is, their often ſhameleſſe reproaching of him.

Theſe ten times] That is, oftentimes, A certain number for an uncertain, as Gen.31. 7. Numb.14. 22. Levit.26.26. Nehem.4.12. Eccleſ.7. 19. Zech. 8. 23. Though they had yet made but five ſpeeches againſt him, yet in every one of thoſe they had often reproached him. If but one of you had but accuſed and reproached an innocent man, it had been an inhumane carriage. What is it then for you to reproach me often, and to continue ſtill in your calumnies againſt me?

have ye reproached me] Ye have diſgraced me, and ſpoken contumeliouſly of me, Ruth 2.15. Judg.18.7.

you are not aſhamed] Yet ye do not ſo much as bluſh, nor are not a whit aſhamed of all the wrong ye have done me. Others read it by way of interrogation, and that is more emphaticall, Are ye not aſhamed, &c. You ſhould be ſo, if you had any ſhame in you.

that you make your ſelves ſtrange to me] That ye deal harſhly with me, as with a ſtranger and foreiner, and not lovingly, as with a friend. Or, that you harden your ſelves againſt me. That ye deal impudently with me.

V. 4. And be it indeed, that I have erred, mine errour remaineth with my ſelf] Job doth not acknowledge, that he was puniſhed for any wickedneſſe, but if it were ſo, yet his friends ſhould not deal ſo harſhly with him, nor adde to his afflictions, but let him quietly bear the puniſhment, which God had laid upon him. Thus he comes to the ſecond part of the Chapter to perſwade his friends to commiſeration of his ſad condition. Firſt, he ſhews verſ. 4, 5. that they deal unequally with him, though he were worſe then he is. Secondly, he layes down at large, what heavie preſſures God had laid upon him, from verſ. 6. to verſ. 13. 3. How unkindly all his friends had dealt with him, from thence to verſ. 20. 4. How low he was brought, verſ. 20. 5. He intreats his friends to pity him, whom God ſo ſorely follows with his judgements.

And be it indeed] Heb. and alſo ſurely. Suppoſe I had erred, which yet I do not confeſſe.

that I have erred] That I had committed ſome great wicked act out of errour or infirmity. Or, that I had erred in my diſputations with you, and been too ſtiffe in maintaining mine own innocencie.

mine errour remaineth with my ſelf] Heb. Lodgeth, or tarrieth all night. Let my errour be what it will, I muſt ſuffer for it, and not you, and therefore ye need not be ſo harſh againſt me. Or, it may be I have erred, yet ye have not convinced me of errour. And therefore I muſt ſtill be of the ſame mind, till I ſee my errour.

V. 5. If indeed ye will magnify your ſelves againſt me, and plead againſt me my reproach] Though I had erred, yet it did not become you to inſult over me for my errour.

If indeed] If ye be reſolved to triumph thus over me, remember that God hath laid theſe afflictions on me, verſ.6. and puniſhed me ſorely for my errour. It may be that thought may make you alter your reſolution, and deal more kindly with me. But the word אם oftentimes notes out a queſtion, and then it may be tranſlated thus, Will ye indeed magnifie your ſelves againſt me? And ſo it may be knit to the former verſe, and the ſenſe be this, Suppoſe I have erred, and perſiſt in mine errour, as being not yet convicted of it, will ye be ſo ſevere againſt me, as to triumph perpetually over me? This particle is tranſlated interrogatively, chap. 17. 2. ſee there.

ye will magnifie your ſelves] Ye will ſet up your ſelves in your words, and pull down me, commend your ſelves, and diſcommend me. Set up your own tongues, and ſpeak big words againſt me. Pſal. 55. 12. & 38. 16. Jer.48. 16. 42. Or, ye will magnifie it. To wit, mine errour by making it greater then it is, to diſparage me.

againſt me] Who am low already, and may eaſily be trampled under foot.

and plead againſt me] Bring my wretched caſe againſt me for an argument to reproach me for a wicked man. ſee on chap. 15. 3. upon the word Reaſon.

my reproach] My errour, as ye conceive, verſ. 4. which ye think to be a reproach to me. Or, to my reproach. Caſt it in my teeth to my diſgrace, chap. 20. 3.

V. 6. Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compaſſed me with his net] Here Job begins to reckon up the manifold miſeries, which God had inflicted on him. And doth it partly in Bildads own words. He confeſſeth, that God had taken him in his nets, as Bildad had ſaid, he uſed to do wicked men. Chap. 18. 8, 9. As if he had ſaid, I deny not that which you ſay, and I would have you more and more to obſerve it, that I am overthrown by Gods own hand: but I would not have you to adde affliction to thoſe whom God hath afflicted, but to pity me the more.

know] Take ſpecial notice of it.

now] Or, then. See on chap. 17, 15.

that God] See on chap. 4.9. & 11. 5.

hath overthrowne me] Chap. 32. 13. Hath overthrowne my eſtate, and deprived me of all means. Or, hath overthrown my righteous cauſe in not ſuffering me to plead for my ſelf. The word properly ſignifies to bow down or make one crooked, Pſal. 38. 6. ſee on chap. 8 3.

and hath compaſſed me with his net] Heb. and hath compaſſed his net about me. Or, and his net hath compaſſed me about. He hath brought me into ſuch troubles, that I am like a bird or wild beaſt in a net, taken and tied ſo faſt, that I cannot poſſibly get out. A ſimilitude taken from fowlers and hunters. chap. 10.16. & 18.8. Lam.1.13. Ezek.12.13. Hoſ. 7. 12.

V. 7. Behold I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgement.] How miſerable a condition he was in being thus taken in Gods nets he further ſhews, becauſe as he could not help himſelf, ſo he cried in vain to others for relief, ſeeing neither God nor man would hearken to him to deliver him.

Behold] It is a remarkable thing, that I being thus unjuſtly afflicted ſhould cry for help and finde none. See on chap. 1. 12. Or, If I cry out of wrong, I am not heard. So הן may be tranſlated, chap. 9. 11, ſee notes there.

I cry out] This ſhews the vehemency of his afflictions, who in his miſeries did not call faintly upon God, but cried ſtrongly for help and deliverance.

of wrong] Or, of violence. That I am without cauſe thus heavily afflicted by God, and derided by men. See the like complaints, Jer. 20. 8. Hab. 1. 2.

but I am not heard] For this word, ſee on chap. 16. 1. on the word Anſwered. So Job means here, I am not anſwered. God pities me no more then a deaf man that cannot hear. He will not deliver me, Lam. 3. 8. Pſal. 22. 2.

I cry aloud] As men ready to periſh cry aloud for preſent help.

but there is no judgement] See on chap. 8. 3 & 9. 32. It is a juſt thing that I ſhould be delivered, yet I cannot obtain it. chap. 34. 5.

V. 8. He hath fenced up my way, that I cannot paſſe, and he hath ſet darkneſſe in my paths] Job having now mentioned his ſorrows falls upon a large repetition and enumeration of them being carried away as it were with a torrent of grief. And turns away his ſpeech from his friends to God, without naming him, as he had done, chap. 16. 7. he ſets out his remedileſſe condition, as he conceives it, by a ſimilitude taken from a traveller. Two things are moſt troubleſome in a journey, hedges, and darkneſſe. The latter hinders him from the ſight of his way: the former from walking in it. So had God dealt with him, that what way ſoever he went, he could not get out of his miſeries.

He] God mentioned verſ. 6. and cried unto for help, verſ. 6.

hath fenced up] See on chap. 3. 23. ſee the like, Lam. 3. 7 9. Hoſ. 2. 6. he hath caſt obſtacles in my way.

my way] My life which is ſo full of troubles. A metaphor from travellers.

that I cannot paſſe] I can finde no way, that can lead me out of my afflictions. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 19.

and he hath ſet darkneſſe in my paths] He hath laid ſo great troubles on me, that all comfort is gone, and I can ſee no means of eſcaping. For the word Darkneſſe, ſee on chap. 15. 22, 23. for the word Path, ſee on Job. 18. 10. upon the word, Way.

V. 9. He hath ſtript me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head] The ſecond compariſon to ſet out the greatneſſe of his miſerie is taken from the habit of the body. As it were a heavie thing, if a man gorgeouſly apparelled, and having a ſtately crown on his head ſhould in an inſtant be deprived of all this: ſo is my condition, God hath ſtript me of all thoſe things, which made me excell others, and honourable in their eyes.

He hath ſtript me] He hath taken all my glorie away, as a beaſt hath all his skin flead off by the butcher, Lev. 1. 6. Mic. 3. 3. or as a man robbed, that hath all his clothes taken off, and is left naked, Lev. 6. 11. Gen. 37. 23.

of my glory] Heb. my glory from upon me. That is, my riches, authoritie, dignitie, glorious apparel, children, and all for which men reſpected me above others, Job 29. 7. 14, 20. & 30. 11. Hoſ. 9. 11. Gen. 31. 1. Pſal. 49. 16, 17. Iſa. 61. 6. & 66. 11. Garments are uſed to ſet out glory, Exod. 28. 2. Mat. 6. 29. And the putting off of ſtately apparel is uſed for a note of diſgrace, 2 Sam. 6. 20.

the crown] That which was my greateſt ornament, as a crown is a Kings. He means the ſame things which he intended by glorie before in this verſ. Lam. 5. 16. Prov. 17. 6. & 14. 24. Pſal. 65. 11. the word ſignifies ſuch a crown as compaſſeth a mans head about, and doth as it were ſeparate him from other men, 1 Sam. 23. 26. Pſal. 8. 5. & 103. 4. & 142. 7.

from mine head] Heb. of my head. Which did adorne my head. Kings uſe to wear their crownes on their heads, as the moſt honourable member, and that they may be moſt conſpicuous. The word ראש ſignifies. 1. The head, which is the beginning or higheſt part of the body, Prov. 1. 9. 2. The higheſt part of any thing, which ſtands above the reſt, as the head above the other members, Gen. 28. 12. 3. A commander in war or peace, who is above the reſt, and guides them by reaſon, as the head doth the members, Numb. 14. 4. 4. The beginning of a thing, Judg. 7. 19. 5. The chief part of any thing, or moſt excellent, as the head is in the body, Exod. 30. 23. 6. The ſum of things, which is the head of number, Exod. 30. 12. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for the head of the body.

V. 10. He hath deſtroyed me on every ſide, and I am gone: and mine hope hath he removed like a tree.] The third compariſon is taken from pulling houſes down, and rooting up trees in this verſe, of which there is no hope of building up, or growing any more. No not ſo much as is granted, Chap. 14. 8, 9. This Bildad foretold ſhould be the end of wicked men, Chap. 18. 6. &c. And this Job confeſſeth to have befallen him, though he do not confeſſe himſelf to be a wicked man.

He hath deſtroyed me] He hath pulled me down, as a man pulls down an houſe. So much the word imports, Lev. 14. 45. Judg. 8. 17. And it anſwers fitly to Jobs loſſes, which came one preſently after another like the pieces of an houſe tumbling down. See Chap. 1.

on every ſide] Heb. round about. As Chap. 18. 11. ſee there, as alſo on Chap. 16. 13. & 18. 11. As an enemy compaſſeth a rich city about and enters on all parts, and ſpoils all, ſo God had ſpoiled Job of all his goods, and as it were wounded him in all parts of his body..

and I am gone] He hath ſtript me of all and I am going out of the world, ſee on Chap. 14. 20. ye may count me as a dead man, I am as good as gone already.

and mine hope] To wit, of reſtauration to corporal health and proſperity, Chap. 17. 15. not of eternal life, for that remained firm in him, verſ. 25. & 13. 15 & 14. 14.

hath he removed] Heb. made to go away. Hence the removes of the children of Iſrael had their name, Numb. 33. 1, 2, 3.

like a tree] I have no more hope to recover my health and proſperity, then a tree pluckt up by the roots. This Bildad threatned alſo to the wicked man, Chap. 18. 16. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 7.

V. 11. He hath alſo kindled his wrath againſt me, and he counteth me unto him, as one of his enemies.] The fourth compariſon is taken from the wars in this verſe and the next. Herein Job compares God to a powerful King, who being exceeding angry, prepares himſelf to be revenged of his adverſaries, and in his anger beſiegeth them, and puts them to great ſtraits.

He alſo hath kindled] Anger is compared to Fire, which being blown up, riſeth to a great flame, and doth much hurt.

his wrath] See on Chap. 4. 9. & 9. 5, 13. & 14. 13.

againſt me] He hath ſingled me out to exerciſe his wrath upon me, Chap. 7. 20.

and he counteth me unto him] He deals ſo ſharply with me, as if he accounted me an utter enemy, and had a full purpoſe to deſtroy me. Thus he uſeth to deal with his foes, ſee on Chap. 13. 24.

as one of his enemies] Heb. as his enemies. He makes no more account of me then he doth of his enemies: ſo the plurall is put for the ſingular, Judg. 12. 7. Zech. 9. 9. Pſal. 1. 3. See on Job 13. 24. & 16. 9. This is objected to Job by Elihu, Chap. 33. 10. He afflicts me as men uſe to afflict their enemies.

V. 12. His troops come together, and raiſe up their way againſt me, and encamp round about my tabernacle.] He goes on in ſouldiers terms, who when they purpoſe to beſiege a city, firſt call all their troops together to go againſt it, then caſt up a trench, and laſt of all begirt it round. So did God begirt him with afflictions. Becauſe he had mentioned Gods dealing with him as an enemy, now he makes mention of an army prepared againſt him. All the engines of the enemy are ſet on work at once againſt me, and have ſtript me of all my goods.

His troops] Abundance of afflictions like enemies threatning to ruine me. See on Chap. 16. 13. Troubles are Gods ſouldiers, and ſickneſſes fight under his Banner, and he ſends them ſometimes by troops, Matth. 8. 8, 9.

came] See on Chap. 15. 21.

together] My miſeries came like troops of enemies, and ſet upon me all at once to undoe me, Chap. 1. and my friends to undoe my good name, verſ. 2, 3. of this Chapter.

and raiſe up] As ſouldiers uſe to do, to raiſe the ground either to paſſe through dirty places upon cauſewayes, or to make trenches and fortifications againſt beſieged cities.

their way againſt me] See on Chap. 17. 9.

and encamp round about] Are as it were ſet down on every ſide of me, as ſouldiers about a beſieged city. I cannot look out of doors, but more troubles ſeize upon me.

my tabernacle] My dwelling. See on Chap. 5. 24.

V. 13. He hath put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily eſtranged from me.] What, how great, and how many Jobs troubles were, he had ſhewed by choice metaphors, now he ſhews in plain terms how much diſcommodity, loſſe, ſhame, and contempt, attended his ſharp trials. Men in affliction look for comfort from their friends and kindred, but his friends forſook him, which often befalls Gods children in their afflictions, and is a great addition to their ſorrows. He ſhews, 1. How he was forſaken by his friends and kindred, verſe 13, 14. 2. By thoſe of his houſhold, verſe 15, 16, 17. 3. By his intimate and moſt familiar friends, verſe 19. 4. How low he was brought in his own body, verſ. 20.

He hath put far from me] Heb. from about me. He attributes this ſtrangeneſſe of friends to God. He had put them all out of his ſight, when he had moſt need of their preſence and comfort. Some were indeed with him, but better for him they had been abſent, for they were miſerable comforters, Chap. 16. 2.

my brethren] The word אח ſignifies. 1. A natural brother born of the ſame parents, Chap. 1. 18. 2. A kinſman, Gen. 13. 8. & 14. 14. 3. One of the ſame country, Gen. 19. 7. 4. One of the ſame office, 1 King. 20. 32, 33. Here it may be taken in the firſt ſenſe, for natural brethren, becauſe his kinſfolk are mentioned diſtinctly, ver. 14. And he might have brethren left, as well as kindred, though he had no children. See another ſenſe on Chap. 30. 29.

and mine acquaintance] Who would acknowledge me before, and take ſome care of me, and ſhew ſome reſpect of me. See the like complaint, Pſal. 31. 11. & 38. 11. & 69. 8. & 88. 8, 18.

are verily eſtranged from me] They take no more care of me then if they had never know me. Some read it, Surely eſtranged. It is too true, I find it to my ſorrow. Others, Onely eſtranged. They are onely as ſtrangers to leave me, not as friends to help me in my miſerie. Others, Utterly eſtranged. That is, they have clean forſaken me.

V. 14. My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me.] So great was my miſerie, that not onely my kindred forſook me, but the moſt familiar friends I had in the world, which uſe to ſtick cloſer to us then our brethren, Prov. 18. 24.

My kinsfolk] The word קרוב firſt ſignifies neer, as Exod. 12. 4. 2. A neighbour that dwells by a man, Exod. 32. 27. 3. A kinſman who is neer in blood, Ruth 2. 20. Here it is put for kindred.

have failed] Heb. have ceaſed; to wit, to viſit or do any friendly office to me. We were joyned together in blood, but my calamitie hath divided us.

and my familiar friends] Broughton tranſlates it elegantly, They whom I favoured. I took notice of them in their miſery and did them good; they forſake me in mine: an ill requital. So the word is uſed for favouring, Pſal. 1. 6.

have forgotten me] Take no more care of me, then if they had forgotten that ever there was ſuch a man as Job in the world.

V. 15. They that dwell in mine houſe, and my maids count me for a ſtranger: I am an aliant in their ſight] Job having ſhewed what ill meaſure he had received abroad, now ſets down, what courſe entertainment he had at home.

They that dwell in my houſe] Heb. They that ſojourn. Some underſtand it of widows, and orphans, whom Job kept in his houſe: but it may better be underſtood of hirelings, which were as ſtrangers abiding in the family but for a time, whereas bought ſervants or ſlaves continued there all their dayes unleſſe their maſters ſet them at liberty, Exod. 21. 4, 6. Now that Job had ſuch hirelings in his houſe may well be conjectured by the multitude of imployments in ſo great an eſtate, and by his ſimilitude taken from thence, Chap. 7. 1, 2. For the word Houſe, ſee on Chap. 15. 28.

and my maids] They which daily tended on me in my health and proſperity, now neglect me in my ſickneſſe and adverſitie.

count me] See on Chap. 18. 3. They neglect me and look no more after me, then they would do after a meer ſtranger, to whom they never had any relation.

for a ſtranger] See on verſe 13.

I am an aliant] That is, I am as a ſtranger, no more regarded, then a traveller in a forain countrie. So the note of likeneſſe is omitted, Chap. 7. 7.

in their ſight] See on Chap. 15. 15.

V. 16. I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer: I entreated him with my mouth.] He ſets out the impudencie of his laſting ſervants, which ſhould have been more kinde then hirelings, and ſhews how much they contemned their maſter, in that when their maſter was in ſore and great miſerie, and intreated their help, they denied it to him, which no man would have done to a ſtranger in ſuch a condition, but he that had no humanitie left him in.

I called] I called him to come to me to help me in my miſerie. For the word ſee on Chap. 13. 22.

my ſervant] Him that ſhould have attended on me without calling, and would have done it in my proſperitie.

and he gave me no anſwer] He was far from coming to me, or helping me, that would not vouchſafe his maſter an anſwer. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

I intreated him] I forgot that I was a maſter, or an equall. I came ſo low that I intreated him, as if he had been my ſuperior: yet he would neither hear nor help me. It may be read, Though I intreated him, as verſe 17. 27. He hath forgotten that he is a ſervant, and is far from obeying my commands, that will not hear my intreaties. Hereby it appears, that Job had his houſe ſtill and had ſervants in it to live upon what was left; though they would do no dutie to him.

with my mouth] With fair words. See on Chap. 15. 5. I did not ſend to them by others, but ſpake to them my ſelf, yet they would not hear.

V. 17. My breath is ſtrange to my wife, though I entreated for the childrens ſake of mine own body.] He goes on to ſet out in few words the inhumanitie of his wife, who neglecting the band of marriage, and her husbands prayers, could not endure her husbands breath, but left him helpleſſe in his miſerie. My very wife doth loath my breath, and cannot abide it, as being ſtrange and unpleaſant, yea even when I beſeech her by thoſe common pledges, our children, that God hath given us.

My breath] See on Chap. 15. 2. upon vain knowledge, or knowledge of the wind. It hath many ſignifications, but here it is taken for the breath, as alſo Eccleſ. 3. 19.

is ſtrange] See on verſe 13.

to my wife] My ſores and ulcers do ſo ſtink, that they make my very breath unſavory, which makes my wife neglect me, and keep far off from me, as if I were unknown to her. It is likely that he had inward corruption, as well as outward, which made his breath to ſtink.

though I intreated] Though I did not charge her as an husband, but intreat her as an inferiour. See on verſe 16.

for the childrens ſake] For the love that ſhe bare to our children, and ſhould for their ſake bear to me, who had as great an intereſt in them as herſelf. This ſhould have been a powerfull argument, but could not prevail with Jobs wife. Others reade it, And I intreated the children. Thinking that Job had ſome leſſer children left, or nephews that were not at the feaſt. But what help could theſe little ones bring him? neither are any ſuch mentioned in the end of the book. Some underſtand it of Jobs children by ſome concubines, but neither doth it appear, that Job had any ſuch, neither was it an argument to move Jobs wife to pity, but rather to anger or jealouſie. For the word children, ſee on Chap. 14. 21.

of mine own body] Heb. of my belly. See on Chap. 15. 2. Children lie in the mothers belly, yet are ſaid to come from the fathers belly alſo, Pſal. 132. 11. where it is alſo tranſlated body, as it is here. The Philoſophers give a natural reaſon of it, becauſe the ſeed whereof the childe is made comes firſt out of the fathers reins or kidnies.

V. 18. Yea young children deſpiſed me, I aroſe, and they ſpake againſt me.] Now he ſhews with grief of heart, that he is contemned of thoſe who honoured him before, to wit, of young ones; Chap. 30. 1. and this was a great addition to his miſery.

Yea] See on Chap. 18. 5.

young children] Such as by reaſon of their tender years ſhould reverence my age, yet they ſeeing how much I am contemned by others, deſpiſe me alſo. See the like, 2 King. 2. 23. ſo this word is uſed, Chap. 21. 11. Or, ungodly men, as it is tranſlated, Chap. 16. 11.

deſpiſed me] They abhorred me as a thing to be loathed, and would not come neer me.

I aroſe] To rebuke them for their ill carriage toward me, or to pacifie them, or to ſhew reſpect to them, or to go away from them. Or, aſſoone as I am up in the morning. Or, I ſtood ſtill, yet they went on to reproach me.

and they ſpake againſt me] Others read the end of the verſe thus, when I aroſe then they ſpake againſt me. They uſe reproaching and reviling words againſt me.

V. 19. All my inward friends abhorred me: and they whom I loved, are turned againſt me] Now follows that which was hardeſt of all to be brooked, and went neareſt to Job, to wit, that he was an abomination to his moſt intimate friends, and found them adverſaries, to whom he had ſhewed moſt love and affection. As if he had ſaid, all thoſe with whom before time I communicated my ſecrets, as with my deareſt friends, do now turn their face from me, neither do any deal more deſpightfully with me, then thoſe of whom I have beſt deſerved, and whom I have moſt truſted.

All] Not ſome alone, but every one. I have not one friend left, in whom I may confide.

my inward friends] Heb. mortals of my counſel. Thoſe men that are mortal like my ſelf, and therefore ſhould pity me in my miſery, and to whom I communicated my ſecret and weightieſt affaires in my proſperity, as men do to their beſt friends, leſt they ſhould be revealed. Theſe had great advantage againſt him, and might do him much harme. Of ſuch David complains, Pſal. 41. 9. & 55. 13, 14. For the word, Counſel, ſee on Chap. 15. 8. upon the word, Secret.

abhorred me] See on Chap. 15. 16. They would not come near me, but kept aloofe off from me. The word תעב ſignifies that which is diſpleaſing to all the ſenſes, which a man would neither ſee, hear, ſmell, taſte, nor touch, ſo much he doth deteſt it. Hateful to the ſight, from which a man turns his eyes away, Exod. 8. 26. To the hearing, ſo that men turn their eares away, Am. 5. 10. To the taſte, againſt which a man ſhuts his mouth, Pſal. 107. 18. To the ſmell, ſo that the noſe is ſtopt againſt it, Iſa. 1. 13. To the touching, ſo that the finger will not touch it, Lev. 11. 23, 24. Hereby Job ſhews that his beſt friends did utterly deteſt him, and forſake him in his miſeries, which was a very great addition to his ſorrowes.

and they whom I loved] Heb. and this man whom I loved. The ſingular for the plurall, as if he had pointed to his friends, and ſaid theſe who were moſt of my counſel and beſt beloved by me, are now every one of them become mine enemies. Or, it may be he ſtrikes at Bildad in particular, that ſpake laſt to him. All my friends abhor me, yea even this Bildad, whom I highly prized, that now ſpeakes ſo bitterly againſt me, he joynes with the reſt to condemn me unjuſtly. This is well joyned to the former, for thoſe whom men love, they uſe to make of their privy counſel.

are turned againſt me] Are become mine enemies, and ſet themſelves againſt me to do me hurt. It was a great grief to him for ſuch friends to faile him in his miſery, but greater for them to hurt him, and to change their love into hatred.

V. 20. My bone cleaveth to my ſkin, and to my fleſh, and I am eſcaped with the ſkin of my teeth] Job now concludes his diſcourſe of his harſh entertainment by others, with a deſcription of his own low condition to move his friends the more to compaſſion. He was forſaken by brethren, neighbours, kindred, ſuch as he had done good to, hirelings, maidſervants, menſervants, wife and all (for children he had none left) deſpiſed by children, and friends, and withal brought ſo low in his body, that he was become a meer anatomy having nothing left on him but ſkin and bones. A fit object for commiſeration.

My bone] That is, my bones. The ſingular, for the plurall, as Chap. 2. 5.

cleaveth to my ſkin] My fleſh being all gone, my bones and ſkin now grow together. This argues an extreme leanneſſe and conſumption of his fleſh. Others take the meaning to be, that his bones appeared through his ſkin, but that the words will hardly bear; ſee the like phraſe, Pſal. 102. 3. Lam. 4. 8.

and to my fleſh] Or, as to my fleſh. As it was wont to cleave to my fleſh, when I was well, ſo now that being conſumed, it cleaves to my ſkin. See on Chap. 18. 20. and for the word, Fleſh, on Chap. 14. 22.

and I am eſcaped] I am yet alive, but have ſcarce any whole ſkin left, but what is on my teeth. The reſt is all full of ſores. Some conceive that the devil left his mouth whole, that he might have liberty to curſe God, whereunto Satan aimed to bring him as before, by his loſſes, Chap. 1. 11. ſo now by his ſores, Chap. 2. 5.

with the ſkin of my teeth] Some underſtand it of his lips, which cover the teeth, as the ſkin doth the body. But it is likely his lips had ſores as well as other parts, Chap. 2. 7. and the Scripture uſeth not ſo to ſpeak of the lips. It is rather meant therefore of the ſkin that covers the gummes, the fleſh being worne away there alſo, and nothing but ſkin left on the roots of his teeth, and no ſores there within, as were all over his body without. For the word, Teeth, ſee on Chap. 16. 9.

V. 21. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me] Here Job goes on from a lamentable deſcription of his troubles to a pathetical inſinuation to his friends that he expects, that they having weighed all the particulars, ſhould rather pity him, then ſo furiouſly proſecute him. This he preſſeth with a double argument, one in this verſe from thoſe great plagues, which God had laid upon him, which might ſuffice, and need not be aggravated by their unkindneſſe: the other from his low condition in the next verſe who had no fleſh left, and therefore had little need to be further perſecuted. All that he had ſpoken before was to move them to compaſſion, and now he moves them directly to it. Ye ſhall ſhew your ſelves moſt hard hearted creatures, if ſo lamentable a ſpectacle of one ſo afflicted and forſaken of his neareſt friends will not move you to pity, which might work upon an heart of flint.

Have pity upon me] Forbear to reproach me in this manner, and ſpeak comfortablly to me in my afflictions.

have pity upon me] The doubling of the word ſhews that Job had great need, and earneſt deſire of commiſeration. Others take it for a diminution. If ye will not relieve or help me in my miſery, at leaſt pity me. This is the leaſt courteſie a man can look for from his friends.

O ye my friends] Speaking ſo particularly to them ſhews his great deſire of comfort from them. Ye that once carried your ſelves as friends to me in my proſperity, now ſhew your ſelves not like thoſe falſe ones lately ſpoken of, but pity me in my adverſity. If others neglect me, ye ſhould not do ſo. For the word, Friends, ſee on Chap. 16. 20.

for the hand] An argument from Gods afflicting him to move men to pity him. Elſe they might ſin againſt God, Pſal. 69. 26. For the word, Hand, ſee on Chap. 15. 23. Here is meant Gods ſtriking hand, or his plague.

of God] The powerful God, who can lay on load: ſee on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

hath touched me] See on Chap. 1. 11.

V. 22. Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh?] As the heavineſſe of Gods hand upon him, ſo the weakneſſe and low eſtate it brought upon his body ſhould have moved his friends to pity him.

Why] The queſtion addes Emphaſis to Jobs expoſtulation. What reaſon have ye to be thus ſevere againſt me? What cauſe have I given you to uſe me thus harſhly?

do ye perſecute me] Follow me ſo cloſely with reproaches to do me hurt.

as God] As if ye had as much power over me as God, and might lay what load ye would upon me. Or, why do you joyne with God in perſecuting me, and adde ſcornes to my ſores? Ye ſhould not do ſo, ſee on verſ. 21. For the word God, ſee on Chap. 8. verſ. 3, 5.

and are not ſatisfied] Are not filled. Think I have not hurt enough already, ſee on Chap. 7. 4. & 10. 15. on the word, Full.

with my fleſh] See on Chap. 14. 22. Ye are like wilde beaſts, which are not content to eat the fleſh, but break the bones of their prey. So ye are not content, that my fleſh is conſumed with ſores and pain, but ye adde ſorrows alſo to my mind to break it with your reproaches, Chap. 31. 31.

V. 23. Oh that my words were now written, Oh that they were printed in a book!] Job now goes on to another part of the Chapter, the confirmation of his integrity, wherein. 1. He ſubmits himſelf to mans judgement, verſ. 23, 24. 2. To God, verſ. 25, 26, 27. Bildad ſeems to reckon Job among thoſe that knew not God, Chap. 18. verſ. 21. Job therefore here profeſſeth his faith in God and Chriſt his Redeemer, and his expectation of a joyful reſurrection from him. In the firſt he firſt deſires to approve himſelf to the judgement of the preſent age, verſ. 23. ſecondly, of the age to come, verſ. 24. Do not think that I babble I know not what, but ſeeing ye have no care at all of comforting or relieving me, I wiſh for this one laſt ſolace, that thoſe words which I ſhall now ſpeak in your hearing, were recorded in ſome publick inſtrument to all eternity.

Oh that] Heb. who will give that! The form of a wiſh in Hebrew, ſee on Chap. 6. 8. & 11. 5.

my words] Which I now ſhall ſpeak concerning my integrity, and the reſurrection.

were now written] That ſome cunning ſcribe were preſent, that could take them now preſently, as I ſpeak them, and not loſe one of them. For the word, Now, ſee on chap. 17. 15.

Oh that they were printed] Or, drawn out. That is, written in great and capital letters, that every man might read them, Hab. 2. 2. for there was no printing in thoſe dayes. He wiſhes they were, not written onely in an ordinary way, but in a large and laſting hand, as lawes and publick records uſed to be written, Iſa. 30. 8.

in a book] Not in looſe paper onely, that may be loſt, but in a book where they might be kept together, as publick Records are ingroſſed in a book, Gen. 5. 1. Math. 1. 1. Eſth. 6. 1. And Kimchi in his preface to the ſmall prophets gives this as a reaſon, why they were all twelve bound together in a book, leſt by reaſon of the ſmalneſſe of them any one of them ſhould be loſt. Job would have none of his precious words to be loſt. Alſo he wiſhes them in a book that they might come to many mens knowledge, that could not hear him ſpeak them, nor perhaps might never hear of them by report.

V. 24. That they were graven with an Iron pen, and lead, in the rock for ever] To be written in a book is more then to be written, and to be graven in a rock is more then to be writen in a book. Hereby Job ſhews, that as he feared not the judgement of all then alive, ſo not of poſterity neither, who uſe to judge more freely and impartially of things, when fear and favour of the perſons is gone with them. As if he had ſaid, I could be content my words were written in a book, but I wiſh rather they had a more laſting monument. Moths and age can corrupt books. I would therefore have an iron pen and a leaden book that may ſtand out all the injury of time, and preſerve this teſtimony of the reſurrection, to the reſurrection. And this wiſh of Job God hath granted him, for his words are written in Gods book, which will laſt as long as rocks to the worlds end. Elſe had we never heard of this excellent teſtimony of the reſurrection.

That they were graven] Cut into ſome hard matter, as ſtone, braſſe, or lead, where they might laſt longer then things written. So monuments are graven on tombes for remembrance of great men that are dead.

with an Iron pen] It had need be an hard and ſharp inſtrument, that ſhall grave in ſtone, or lead, or braſſe. And that which is ſo written by ſuch an inſtrument on ſuch hard matter will laſt longer, then what is written by pens on paper, Jer. 17. 1. The word ברזל 1. Signifies the iron it ſelf, Deut. 8. 9. 2. An axe made of iron, 2 King. 6. 5. 3. An iron chaine, Pſal. 105. 18. 4. A thing hard or difficult, Deut. 28. 23, 48. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

and lead] Some read it, or of lead. But leaden pens are too ſoft to cut letters in ſtones, although they may ſerve to write in paper, yet is that writing alſo neither ſo viſible nor durable, as others. But lead here muſt be the matter of the writing, not the inſtrument. Some conceive that they uſed for preſervation of monuments to cut the letters in ſtone, and melt lead and put into each letter to make them the more viſible and durable. Others, That they did engrave the letters in plates of lead, as now they do in braſſe, and faſten them in ſtones, as now they do engrave ſtones. The Heb. word is taken from a word, that ſignifies duſt, becauſe lead is taken out of the duſt, and hath much duſt in it.

in the rock] The word צור ſignifies. 1. A rock or ſtone, as Pſal. 81. 16. 2. A ſharp ſtone, that will cut like a knife, Exod. 4. 25 3. A ſtrong caſtle or fort, for ſuch were often built upon rocks, Pſal. 61. 2. 4. Strength it ſelf, becauſe rocks are ſtrong, and ſtand out all ſtormes. Iſa. 26. 4. everlaſting ſtrength. Heb. a rock of ages. 5. God himſelf, who is ſtrength it ſelf, Deut. 32. 18. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe. Things written in rocks and ſtones are durable.

for ever] That they might laſt longer then one generation, even as long as the world laſts.

V. 25. For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth] I have appealed to men preſent and to come: but if they ſhould all prove corrupt, and take your part againſt me, yet I know there is a general judgement to come in which I ſhall be cleared. He ſets out the doctrine of the Reſurrection largly. 1. By the excellent qualities of his Saviour and Judge, that he is living, and ſhall abide, when others are in the duſt, and ſhall be the Judge in the laſt and ſolmne judgement, in this verſ. 2. From the effects of death, which brings a man very low, and conſumes his skin, and pierces through his fleſh, yet Chriſt will raiſe him up again, verſ. 26. 3. From the effects of the Reſurrection, which will reſtore his own fleſh to him again, and thoſe eyes he now hath, to look on Chriſt at the laſt day; though for a time he lie in the grave, as one ſwallowed up by death, verſ. 27. The ſum of this verſe is, as if he had ſaid, Leſt haply ye imagine, that becauſe I have no hope of this life, that therefore I have none of the life to come neither, I tell you that I know that he by whom I ſhall be redeemed is immortal, who as he was before this duſt, as being the creatour of it, ſo ſhall he not be diſſolved with it, but remain after it is diſſolved, and brought to nothing. The Hebrew Writers and Mercer with them conceive it not to be meant of Chriſt, nor of the Reſurrection, but either of Jobs preſent condition, or of a certain expectation of proſperity in this world after all his troubles. Though Job might at preſent ſee God by the eyes of faith, yet that is not the ſight here ſpoken of, but a bodily ſight with the ſame eyes he now had, verſ. 27. which Job could not then do. And for a certain hope of proſperitie, it is clean contrary to all the tenour of Jobs ſpeech, Chap. 16. 22. & 17. 1, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16. He never dreamed in all his affliction of his following proſperitie. It was a great wonder both to himſelf and others to ſee it. Therefore it muſt needs be meant of the ſight of Chriſt in the Reſurrection, which was his greateſt comfort in his miſeries.

For] Heb. And. Yet that particle is in Scripture tranſlated for, and uſhers in a reaſon of what is ſaid before, ſee on Chap. 11. 4. & 17. 10. Job reaſons from his aſſuranec. I am ſure it is true, and therefore being of great weight it is worthy to be written down. Others read it, How, or That. As ſetting down the matter to be written, Jobs faith of the Reſurrection. So this particle is uſed, Chap. 6. 9.

I know] I am ſure of it upon good grounds. And the pronoun is added in the Original for emphaſis, however you may think me a wicked or an ignorant man, yet I know this great myſtery.

that my redeemer] An alluſion to the ceremonial Law, where the neareſt kinſman was to take the wife, and buy the land, Ruth 3. 9, 12, 13. with Ruth 4. 4, 5. Hereby is meant Chriſt our Redeemer, who is of our kindred by incarnation, and redeemes us by his paſſion. That Job knew this, ſee on Chap. 16. 20, 21. & 17. 3. This may more fitly be applied to Chriſt, then to God the Father (to whom the Jews apply it) for the Father never did redeeme perſons, nor inheritances in the Law, but the brother, or neareſt kinſman: and Chriſt is our brother by incarnation, and we are his brethren by adoption. We were Satans by nature, Chriſt hath redeemed us by the price of his own blood, and will deliver us from hell, and ſettle us in heaven the inheritance of Gods children, and therefore deſerves the name of a Redeemer. He calls him His Redeemer, a particle of love, and challenging a right in him, elſe no good would come to Job, though others were, if he were not redeemed by him. Such intereſt expreſſed by this particle My, ſee 1 King. 20. 32. Iſa. 49. 4.

liveth] That is, liveth for ever. You and I muſt die, but my comfort is, I have one to right me, who lives for ever. This is true of Chriſt as God. It was Gods common oath, Numb. 14. 28. Deut. 32. 40, And alſo as man after his reſurrection, Heb. 7. 25. Rev. 1. 18.

and that he ſhall ſtand] For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 12. on the word, Riſeth, for it ſignifies both to riſe, and to ſtand. He believes that Chriſt as a conquerour ſhall ſtand, and keep the field when all his enemies ſhall be overcome, and ſhall raiſe his again out of the duſt to eternal glory. Or, ſhall remain for ever. Or, ſhall appear in glory to judge the quick and the dead. For appearing is a kind of riſing, as on Chap. 24. 12.

at the latter day] When he comes to judge the quick and the dead. Or, the laſt, when he hath overcome all his enemies, 1 Cor. 15. 25, 26. Rev. 1. 8, 11.

upon the earth] Heb. upon the duſt. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 8. Either it is to be underſtood metaphorically for conquering all his enemies, as before, or elſe the laſt judgement may be on the earth. Or, over the earth. To wit, in the aire. Others read it, and this ſhall ſtand up at the laſt day upon the earth. That is, this body of mine, ſee on verſ. 2. and Chap. 13. 28. As Chriſt will appear in glory at the end of the world, ſo he will raiſe me up to meet him. Or, He will raiſe me up, &c. ſo the word is uſed actively, Chap. 41. 10. Or, He ſhall ſtand over the duſt; that is, over my dead body turned to duſt to raiſe it, Gen. 3. 19.

V. 26. And though after my skin wormes deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God] Job now pointing to his body acknowledgeth, that it muſt come under the power of death, yet believes it ſhould be raiſed up to ſee Chriſt in the fleſh. As if he had ſaid, I, whom ye judge a wicked man, after that the wormes have pierced through this skin, and devoured this image of a body, rather than a body, even I ſhall be raiſed out of the grave again to behold God.

And though after my skin] After they have devoured my skin, and pierced through it to conſume my fleſh.

wormes deſtroy this body] Heb. They deſtroy this. That is, the wormes, who commonly deſtroy mens bodies in the grave. So they embalmed Joſeph. That is, ſuch as uſed to embalme men, Gen. 50. 26. And he ſaith, This, and would not name his body, becauſe it was ſo poor, that it was not worth the name of a body. See on verſe 25. and on Chap. 13. 28. Or, it may be read imperſonally, This be deſtroyed, ſee on Chap. 3. 3.

yet in my fleſh] Heb. out of my fleſh. For the eyes are the windows of the body, out of which men look. I ſhall have the ſame body I now have, and with it behold God. For the word Fleſh, ſee on Chap. 14. 22. Or, with my fleſh. That is, having this fleſh again. So מן is tranſlated, verſ. 22.

I ſhall ſee God] I ſhall ſee Chriſt, who is God, in his humane nature. For the word God, ſee on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5. The whole verſ. may be read thus, And after I ſhall awake, though this body be deſtroyed, yet out of my fleſh ſhall I ſee God. It is no new thing in Scripture to compare death to ſleep, and reſurrection to awaking, Dan. 12. 2. Epheſ. 5. 14. And being thus read it is a plainer and fuller confeſſion of the Reſurrection.

V. 27. Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold and not another; though my reins be conſumed within me] Leſt any man ſhould think, becauſe of the difficulty of raiſing up the body, or the great alteration of qualities, and great glory added to it, that it ſhould be a new created body, and not the ſame, that Job now had, he affirms in very many words, that it ſhall be the ſame body reſtored. He expounds the end of the former verſe in the beginning of this, and the beginning of it in the end of this verſe. As if he had ſaid, I my ſelf ſhall ſee this God my Saviour, and with theſe mine eyes, and not being transformed into any thing elſe, ſhall behold him: albeit as now my ſtate is, whatſoever is remaining of this life within me, is ſpent even to my very bowels.

whom I ſhall ſee] See on the end of verſ. 26.

for my ſelf] For my own good, and to my ſingular comfort. Or, Not by a deputie, as follows in this verſ. but with mine own eyes, as follows immediately.

and mine eyes] A farther declaration of what was ſaid before from the inſtrument of ſeeing, which ſhews it to be a bodily ſight.

ſhall behold] I ſhall view Chriſt throughly in all his glorie, and forget all my forepaſt miſeries. The word ראה hath many ſignifications. 1. To ſee or obſerve a thing, Gen. 45. 12. 2. Metaphorically for the acts of the other ſenſes, as for ſmelling, Gen. 27. 27. for feeling, Iſai. 44. 16. Jer. 17. 8. for hearing, Exod. 20. 18. 3. To know, that is, to ſee with the eyes of the mind, Gen. 42. 1. 4. To have experience of a thing, Eccleſ. 1. 16. 5. To provide, Gen. 22. 8. 6. To ſet out prophetical viſions. Hence Prophets were called Seers, Iſa. 30. 10. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for viewing Chriſt with the bodily eye.

and not another] Heb. and not a ſtranger. My own body ſhall be reſtored to me, and not a ſtrange body beſtowed on me, wherewith to ſee Chriſt, Iſa. 26. 19. 1 Cor. 15. 53. I ſhall not need to take it upon report from others, as it were at the ſecond hand, neither ſhall I be changed, as if I were a ſtranger from my ſelf, but I who now feel theſe ſore pains, ſhall ſee that happie ſight.

within me] Heb. in my boſome. Eccleſ. 7. 9. In ſecret, ſo as I feel it, though none of you can ſee it, and therefore pity me not. Yet I ſhall riſe again, though I be brought thus low. Or rather, though my body ſhall be altogether conſumed in the grave both within, and without, yet I ſhall riſe again. Others read the end of the verſe thus, My reins are conſumed within me. Leaving out Though. And they interpret it thus, I have a very great deſire, and I am almoſt conſumed with looking for that happie day, when I ſhall ſee Chriſt in the fleſh at the laſt day. For the ſeat of deſire is placed in the reins. See the like expreſſion, Job. 2 17. Pſal. 119. 81. 2 Sam. 13. 39. Pſal. 84. 2.

V. 28. But ye ſhould ſay, Why perſecute we him? ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me.] Here is the concluſion of this Chapter wherein Job 1. Shews how his friends ſhould have carried themſelves to him in his ſad condition, in this verſe. 2. He threatens judgement upon them from a juſt, and angry God, if they perſiſt to vex him, in the laſt verſ. Some make theſe words to depend on the laſt verſe to this purpoſe, ſeeing I am thus outwardly and inwardly conſumed, you ſhould pitie me, and not go on to reproach and perſecute me. And they ſhould read it, Therefore ye ſhould ſay. As כי is uſed, Pſal. 116. 10. But it may depend upon all their ſpeeches againſt him, and be a fit concluſion to perſwade them to uſe him better. As if Job had ſaid, Surely equity it ſelf, and true friendſhip ought rather to have withheld you from reviling and reproaching me in this manner. For if ye will diligently, and with judgement weigh, and conſider the whole matter, ye ſhall finde that I have true piety in me, though ye condemn me for an hypocrite. The words would be plainer, if they were inverted thus, But ſeeing the root of the matter is in me, ye ſhould ſay, Why do we perſecute him? So Jobs own words would be clearly diſtinguiſhed from thoſe he preſcribes to his friends, and the confuſion of perſons avoided.

But] So this particle is uſed, Chap. 9. 18.

ye ſhould ſay] So the future is tranſlated, Obad. verſ. 12. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

Why perſecute we him] Why do we revile a godly man ſo deeply afflicted by God already? ſee on verſ. 22.

ſeeing] He layes down a juſt cauſe why they ſhould not perſecute him, to wit, his piety. The word is ordinarily tranſlated And. But it is often tranſlated Seeing, as here. See Chap. 21. 22. & 28. 21.

the root] The foundation, that gives ſap to, and upholds all the reſt. See on Chap. 14. 8.

of the matter] Some underſtand it of true piety. Seeing I am a godly man, although I be thus extraordinarily afflicted, ye ſhould not therefore neglect the root of piety, that is in me, and cenſure me for my heavie afflictions which claſpe me about, as Ivie grows about a tree, and threaten to overgrow and kill me. Others read it thus, of the word. For דבר ſignifies the word, Joel 1. 1. and the thing ſpoken of, Eccleſ. 7. 8. Gods word and promiſe hath taken deep root in me by faith, neither have I renounced it for all my troubles. Therefore God will acquit me, and ye ought not to condemn me. Or, Thoſe words I would have written down verſ. 23. concerning my joyful reſurrection are written in my heart. Why ſhould ye then reject me for a wicked man? Or, I have a good cauſe, and maintain the right with good arguments, and the truth will be found on my ſide in the end (as indeed it was, Chap. 42. 7.) therefore ye ſhould not condemn me for a wicked men. See the like profeſſion of Job, Chap. 6. 29, 30.

is found] It is now in me in truth, and will be found ſo in the end, when the buſineſſe is throughly diſcuſſed. For the word ſee on Chap. 17. 10.

in me] It lies in me, as the root in the ground, though ye cannot ſee it. I am juſt like a tree blaſted in the branches, but ſound at root.

V. 29. Be ye afraid of the ſword: for wrath bringeth the puniſhments of the ſword, that ye may know that there is a judgement.] Job now tells his friends, that they who judge ſo raſhly of him, had need to fear the juſt judgement of God upon ſuch as adde afflictions to ſuch as are preſt down with it already. As if he had ſaid, I fear not that deſtruction, which thou O Bildad didſt threaten againſt thoſe that know not God, (Chap. 17. 20, 21.) Look to it, thou and thy fellows rather, leſt God ſtrike you with his ſword. Seek to prevent this heavie judgement of God before you feel it.

Be ye afraid] Heb. Be ye afraid for your ſelves. Threaten not me, but take heed to your ſelves, prevent your own danger. Thus Job ends his ſpeech, as Bildad did his, Chap. 18. 21. But ſpeaks not in general, and obliquely, as he did, but particularly, and home to his friends.

of the ſword] Of deſtruction by the ſword, or of Gods ſword of revenge, leſt ſome heavy judgement from him light upon you. A particular put for the general. Heb. From the face of the ſword. Or, becauſe of the ſword. It hangs over your head, take heed of it. The ſword is an inſtrument of executing maleſactours, and is uſed here for a violent death, which comes often by the ſword. It is uſed by an enemy or by a judge to inflict a cruel or juſt death, on a foe or maleſactour, Lev. 26. 6. Ezek. 38. 21. And the face of the ſword in the Original ſhews the judgement to be preſent or neer at hand as a man whoſe face is ſeen is nigh us. The Heb. word comes from a word, that ſignifies to lay waſte as the ſword doth whole countries in war.

for wrath bringeth] The wrath of God will certainly bring deſtruction upon you, if ye perſiſt in your evil way, 2 Chron. 28. 13. Or, your wrath againſt me will call for vengeance to be poured down on your own heads. The word comes from heat in the Original, and may well ſet out a fierce wrath.

the puniſhments of the ſword] Capital dangers, the puniſhments of ſin. See on Chap. 7. 21. Others read it, For wrath is among the iniquities of the ſword. That is, ſuch fierce anger, as ye have ſhewed againſt me is one of thoſe great ſins, that God uſeth to puniſh by a violent death, or that deſerve ſuch a death. This is often the end of mockers and perſecutours. Therefore fear it. Hereby Job ſhews much love to his friends, that was ſo carefull to prevent their ruine, that ſo much furthered his.

that ye may know] That ye may take notice of it, and acknowledge it before ye feel it, and ſo ſave your ſelves from it, Matth. 3. 7. Or, That ye may acknowledge it, when ye feel it.

that there is a judgement] That this world is not governed by chance, but by Gods juſt providence, Pſal. 58. 11. Or, That God the juſt Judge will certainly and ſeverely puniſh ſcoffers, mockers, and raſh cenſurers, Matth. 7. 1, 2. No doubt Jobs friends knew this well enough, but wiſe men are oftentimes ſo blinded with paſſion, that they foreſee not the evil event of their fooliſh counſels, till it be too late.

Job therefore like a faithful friend ſhews, that he is much moved with their danger in the midſt of his miſeries, and foretels them of it, that being forewarned, they might prevent it.

CHAP. XX.

THis Chapter contains Zophars ſecond and laſt charge againſt Job. Eliphaz and Bildad give a third charge afterwards. But Zophar forbears, either becauſe Job had ſatisfied him, Chap. 21, before his turn came to ſpeak again, or elſe becauſe he wanted matter, or elſe becauſe he ſaw Job ſo reſolute in his own defence, that he made account before-hand that he ſhould loſe his labour. Compare this Chap. with the 11. and ye ſhall find, that here is nothing new, except it be, that being with his fellows beaten from their firſt opinion, that wicked men could not thrive in the world, and that by the ſtrength of Jobs arguments, he doth, as they had done before, confeſſe they may thrive for a while, but come to a ſhameful ruine, and gives Job no hope of reſtauration, as he had done before, Chap. 11. He was nothing moved with Jobs miſeries, nor his entreaties, nor his ſolemn profeſſion of his faith, but takes occaſion from Jobs laſt words, Chap. 19. 29. full of love to him and his fellows, to fall more foul upon him then before. In this Chapter. 1. There is an inſinuating preface, ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. A large narration from verſe 4. to the laſt verſe. 3. A brief concluſion in the laſt verſe. In the preface ſee firſt the ſpeaker deſcribed, verſe 1. 2. His neceſſity of ſpeaking, as he conceived, verſe 2. 3. The cauſe of his ſpeech, and manner, how he would ſpeak, verſe 3.

anſwered] See on Chap. 16. 1.

Zophar the Naamathite] See on Chap. 2. 11.

and ſaid] See on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Therefore do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this I make haſt.] He could no longer hear Job with patience, but his thoughts burning within him long for a vent. I had thought to have let thee go, and not have medled any more in this matter, but that thy contumelious words do compell me to take another courſe, and to give thee this ready anſwer.

Therefore] He intimates that this neceſſity of ſpeaking aroſe from Jobs laſt words, Thou bidſt us to be afraid of the ſword, and of Gods judgements, this ſpeech of thine urges and haſtens me to give an anſwer. I cannot with patience hear thee any longer, but muſt interrupt thee. Others refer it to the words following, Therefore my thoughts urge me to anſwer, becauſe I have been reproached by thee, verſ. 3.

do my thoughts] I do not ſpeak raſhly though I make haſte to anſwer, I have thought ſeriouſly of the matter, before I ſpeak. I have a multitude of arguments in my minde to oppreſſe thee withal, and I muſt utter them. See on Chap. 4. 13.

cauſe me to anſwer] See on Chap. 15. 13. Or, anſwer me. That is, prompt me, what I ſhould ſay to thee by way of anſwer.

and for this] The former cauſe makes me not onely to anſwer, but to do it quickly. It is ſo great a reproach, that I cannot bear it any longer. Others read it, and becauſe. That is, becauſe I am of a quick apprehenſion, and my nature urgeth me to a ſpeedy anſwer.

I make haſte] Heb. my haſte is in me. I am afraid, I ſhall forget many things ſpoken by thee, if I do not anſwer quickly.

V. 3. I have heard the check of my reproach, and the ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me to anſwer.] Two things moved Zophar to anſwer at this time. The one, becauſe he conceived that Job had put a great diſgrace upon him not to be borne. The other, becauſe he thought himſelf wiſe enough to anſwer for himſelf, and to remove this aſperſion from him. As I have heard thy ſharp rebukes, ſo my knowledge will afford me ſufficient matter to make thee an anſwer.

I have heard] See on Chap. 13. 17.

the check of my reproach] Such a reproof, as tends to my diſgrace. He means in thoſe words of Job, Chap. 19. 29. which were ſpoken to his fellows, as well as to him, but he applies them to himſelf particularly. See on Chap. 19. 5. 1 Sam. 13. 13.

and the ſpirit] See on Chap. 15. 2. upon the word, Wind. He means his reaſonable ſoul here, though ſome underſtand it, as if he ſpake of the ſpirit of God.

of my underſtanding] Heb. out of my underſtanding. It makes me to ſpeak out of that underſtanding God hath given me, and not out of paſſion, as thou deſerveſt, I ſhould ſpeake to thee.

cauſeth me to anſwer] See on verſe 2. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

V 4. Knoweſt thou not this of old, ſince man was placed upon the earth] Now he comes to the narration of thoſe judgements, which ſhall fall on wicked men, and deſtroy their proſperity. This he propounds in this verſe and the next, amplifies from thence unto the laſt verſe and concludes all in the laſt verſe. In the propoſition he appeals to Jobs conſcience by way of interrogation in this verſe, and ſets down the thing to be proved in particular in the next verſe. He ſecretly taxes Job of groſs ignorance, or wilful oppoſition of the truth. Is it poſſible, O Job, that thou ſhouldſt be ignorant of this, which almoſt every man knows, and which is proved by the examples and experience of all ages, ſince men began to inhabit the earth? I cannot think thee ſo ignorant, but rather fear that thou diſputeſt againſt thy conſcience.

Knoweſt thou not] Certainly thou doſt or ſhouldeſt know it. The word not is not in the Original, but muſt be added to make up the ſenſe. As it ſhould be alſo, 1 Sam. 2. 27, 28. Did I not plainly appeare, and did I not chuſe him, &c?

this] Which I ſhall propound (in the next verſe) of the ſudden deſtruction of wicked men.

of old] That this was of old. It ſignifies long ſince, or a long time paſt, to wit, from the beginning of the world, as it is expounded in the words following. Sometimes it ſignifies long hence, or a long time hereafter, as Pſal. 132. 14.

ſince man] From the beginning of the world. Since it was firſt inhabited. This is no new thing, but hath been Gods conſtant proceeding from the beginning. And therefore it is a marvell, that ſo wiſe a man ſhould be ignorant of it. Or, ſince Adam, the firſt man of all.

was placed] Heb. he did place man. To wit God, who uſeth to place and ſeat men, where he pleaſeth in the world. It is tranſlated placed, Jer. 5. 22.

upon the earth] See on Chap. 9. 24.

V. 5. That the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment] In this verſe is the hinge of the whole controverſie. Job had by force of argument driven them from one fort already, that God did not uſe to give proſperity to wicked men, now they flye to a ſecond, that if he do, yet it is but for a while, and he quickly ruins them.

That the triumphing] That the pompe of the wicked cannot be fetched from the times of antiquity, and that the joyes of hypocrites vaniſh away in a moment. The word ſignifies crying out for joy or ſinging, as men in great proſperity uſe to do.

is ſhort] See on Chap. 17. 12. It is not long ſince it began. It is of no antiquity. Heb. from neer. So this phraſe is uſed for gods, that came newly up, Deut. 32. 17.

and the joy] Their proſperity, which makes them rejoyce and ſing.

of the hypocrite] See on Chap. 8. 13. This may be added, leſt Job ſhould ſay, I am no wicked man, I worſhip the true God, and then Bildad might reply, yet you may be an hypocrite, and ſo it ſeems you are, becauſe your proſperity ends in miſery, and Gods hand lies heavy upon you.

but for a moment] The beginning of the verſe ſets out the beginning of their proſperity: the end of it ſets out the end thereof. It is but a while ſince it began, and it will ſoon come to an end.

V. 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach up to the clouds] He now ſets out the ſudden ruine of ungodly men by divers elegant ſimilitudes of things that make a great ſhew, and ſuddenly decay. The firſt is taken from a tree exceeding high like that in Nebuchadnezzers dream, Dan. 4. 11. yet ſuddenly cut down. The flowriſhing whereof is ſet down in this verſe, and the periſhing of it in the next. Their height is ſo great in their proſperity, that they may ſeem to be lifted up into heaven, and with the crown of their head to touch the clouds, but their fall ſhall be great and ſudden, Pſal. 37. 35, 36. And all this is ſpoken to prove Job an hypocrite, becauſe he fell ſo low from ſo great an height.

his excellency] Or. height. For look what men excell others in, therein have they outſtript others. Hence Kings and Princes are called נשיאים becauſe they are higher, and more excellent then others.

mount up] Heb. aſcend. The word עלה 1. ſignifies to go up, as Gen. 35. 1. 2. To excell others, Prov. 31. 29. 3. To ſhoot forth, as boughes and bloſſomes do in a tree, Gen. 40. 10. 4. To ſet out the coming forth of the light in the morning, Gen. 19. 15. 5. To vaniſh away, and appear no longer, Gen. 17. 22. 6. To come into ones mind, Jer. 7. 31. 7. To ſet out the ariſing of anger to ſhew it ſelf in a mans countenance, 2 Sam. 11 20. 8. For the male cattels leaping on the female, Gen. 31. 10. 9. To increaſe, 1 King. 22. 35. Here it may be uſed in the firſt or third ſenſe, for going up, or ſhooting forth.

To the heavens] That grow to the greateſt height. A parabolical ſpeech to ſet out an extraordinary height of a thing, Gen. 11. 4. Iſa. 14. 13, 14. Dan. 4. 11. 20. 22. Matth. 11. 23. For the word, ſee on Chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8. and his head] See on Chap. 19. 9.

reach] Though he were as proſperous as a tree is high, whoſe top reaches up to the very clouds, beyond which no man can ſee.

to the clouds] Heb. to the cloud. Eliphaz had uſed this ſimilitude of a tree, Chap. 5. 3. to ſhew the ſpreading of wicked men like the roots of a tree: here Zophar goes on with it to ſet forth their abundant proſperity by the large, and high branches of the tree, which are more viſible then the roots.

V. 7. Yet he ſhall periſh forever, like his own dung. they which have ſeen him, ſhall ſay, Where is he?] The miſerable and deteſtable end of the hypocrite is ſet out here by the ſimilitude of mans excrements, which are caſt away, as things loathſome.

Yet he ſhall periſh] Notwithſtanding his former height, he ſhall be brought very low.

for ever] So as he ſhall never recover his proſperity more. It comes from a word, that ſignifies to overcome. Miſery ſhall overcome him, he ſhall be undone.

like his own dung] A fit ſimilitude taken from that, which every man underſtands. Nothing is more contemptible, then our excrements. We caſt them away with contempt and diſgrace, nor ever look after them more, but let them periſh. Some tranſlate it, aſſoone as turned about. But the former reading is better, 1 King. 14. 10. Zeph. 1. 17. 2 King. 9. 37. Hence idols are in diſgrace called in the Original, gods of dung, or ſtinking gods.

they which have ſeen him] They who admired at his proſperity before and took ſpeciall notice of it. For the word ſee on Chap. 19. 27. It is very likely that Zophar ſtrikes at Job with his own weapons, for he had foretold ſuch an end to come to himſelfe, Chap. 7. 8.

ſhall ſay] See on Chap. 16. 1. They ſhall not onely think ſo, but ſpeak of this great change to others with admiration, Pſal. 58. 11. Gen. 27. 33.

Where is he?] We wonder, what is become of him, that was lately ſo high above others: now he lies low enough, Iſa. 14. 16, 17.

V. 8. He ſhall flye away as a dream, and ſhall not be found: yea he ſhall be chaſed away, as a viſion of the night] Now he ſets out the vanity, and ſudden departure of wicked mens proſperity by the ſimilitude of a dreame; ſhewing it to be imaginary and fleeting.

He ſhall flye away] Like a bird. So the word ſignifies; and that is very ſwiftly.

as a dream] Some underſtand it of the dream it ſelf, which many times is as ſoone forgotten, as dreamed, and cannot be recalled by the dreamer, nor others. Such was Nebuchadnezzers firſt dream, Dan. 2. 5, 8, 10. But it is better to be underſtood of the thing dreamed of, for dreames many times do remain, after men are awake, as Nebuchadnezzers ſecond dream did with him, Dan. 4. 10. The pleaſure of a wicked mans proſperity ſhall paſſe away quickly, like the joy of a dream, when a man in his ſleep imagines he hath found a great treaſure, and takes much content therein, but aſſoone as he awakes, he is very ſad, becauſe he ſees no ſuch thing, but findes himſelf very poor. Pſal. 73. 19, 20. Iſa. 29. 7, 8.

and ſhall not be found] The wicked mans proſperity ſhall not be found. Or, the wicked man himſelf, that proſpered ſo. He ſhall periſh with his wealth, Act. 8. 20. Others read it, which cannot be found. Meaning the thing dreamed of; as before. Heb. and they ſhall not finde it. To wit, they that dreamed of wealth, ſhall not finde it when they awake. For the word, ſee on Chap. 17. 10.

yea, he ſhall be chaſed away] Driven away out of his ſtately habitation.

as a viſion of the night] That Epithete is added, becauſe ſome viſions were ſeen by day, Chap. 4. 13. A viſion is more then a dream. It is ſome viſible ſhape appearing to a man in his ſleep, which is not in every dream.

V. 9 The eye alſo which ſaw him, ſhall ſee him no more, neither ſhall his place any more behold him] His deſtruction ſhall be not onely ſudden, but alſo ſo great, that they who ſaw him to day, ſhall to morrow ſee him no where, neither ſhall the men of the place, where he lived, ever more ſet eyes on him. For the expoſition of this verſe, ſee on Chap. 7. 8, 10. where Job ſpeakes of as much himſelf, and Zophar here twits him with his own words, as if he would prove him an hypocrite out of his own confeſſion.

The eye alſo] He is ſo clean vaniſhed out of ſight, that the eyes of thoſe men, who looked on him before, ſhall never have any further ſight of him. The word is ſometimes taken for the inſtrument of ſeeing, as here, and Chap. 7. 8. ſometimes for the ſight it ſelf, as Chap. 15. 15. & 18. 3.

which ſaw him] In his flowriſhing eſtate, and proſperity. For the word ſee on Chap. 19. 27.

ſhall ſee him no more] Heb. ſhall not adde. To wit, to ſee him again.

neither ſhall his place any more behold him] He ſhall no more be ſeen nor found in his place by any inhabitant there. By the place may be meant the men of his houſe, city, or country. See on Chap. 18. 21. Others read it thus, Neither ſhall the eye of his place any more behold him. That is, the eye of the men of his place. And they repeat the word Eye out of the former part of the verſe, becauſe the word place, agrees not with the verb behold, in gender. Others thus, Neither ſhall any eye behold him any more in his place. Either at all, or in his former condition. As place ſeems to be taken Chap. 18. 21. All is to this end to ſhew the great alteration, that ſhall light on the hypocrite.

V. 10. His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, and his hands ſhall reſtore their goods.] Now he goes on to ſet out the miſeries that fall upon the wicked man, when once his proſperity begins to decline, and firſt he mentions the unhappy condition of his children, which muſt needs be very low, when they ſhall be glad to humour the loweſt of the people. Yet this falls on them very juſtly, for their parents oppreſſed and ruined many families to inrich their children, and therefore it is juſt with God, that their poſterity ſhould be brought ſo low, that they ſhould for want be forced to fawn upon the poor. And they muſt be very poor, that are forced to flatter poor men.

His children] See on Chap. 14. 21. upon the word Sons.

ſhall ſeek to pleaſe] Either to keep them from moleſting them, and revenging themſelves on them for the cruelty of their fathers towards them, or elſe to ſupply their wants, who are now grown poorer then they whom their parents oppreſſed to make them rich. The latter is right, for if their parents reſtored all in their life time, what need further revenge on their poſterity? See the notes following on this verſe.

the poor] See on Chap. 5. 16. Others read it thus, The poor ſhall oppreſſe his children. He by his riches and might did oppreſſe others, and make them poor: but his children ſhall be brought ſo low that they ſhall be oppreſſed by the poor, who will take all away, and leave them nothing. How great a judgement it is for one poor man to oppreſſe another, ſee Prov. 28. 3.

and] Rather, for. For here is a reaſon given, why his children ſhould be ſo poor, that they ſhould be forced to pleaſe other poor men, namely becauſe the father before his death ſhould be forced to reſtore all his ill gotten goods, and ſo have nothing at all left to provide for them. And they being as moſt rich mens children, brought up idly in expectation of great means from their parents, know not how to live of themſelves.

his hands] Thoſe hands that took it away, muſt reſtore it again. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 23.

ſhall reſtore] Heb. make to return. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 13. He ſhall be compelled to make reſtitution by law, or force.

their goods] Heb. his ſtrength. That is, the goods, which he hath by his power unjuſtly taken away from others. For the word ſee on Chap. 18. 7. Or, his iniquity, that is, riches gotten by iniquity, Luk. 16. 9.

V. 11. His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.] Returning now to the wicked man himſelf he ſets out his ruine from the cauſe of it, the ſins of his youth. And illuſtrates it by a ſimilitude taken from a riotous young man, who by his debaucht courſes gets ſome foul diſeaſe, which firſt conſumes his fleſh, and afterward the marrow of his bones, and growing incureable leaves him not, till it bring him to his grave. So Gods judgements upon the wicked man for his former ſins conſume him, and bring him to duſt.

His bones] It hath his name from ſtrength in the Original, for the bones are the ſtrongeſt part of the body, yet ſin can pierce through the fleſh, and infect them alſo, and ſo the whole man conſumes, when not the tender fleſh onely, but alſo the harder bones waſte away. No light puniſhment ſhall fall on him, which may be felt outwardly onely, but ſo heavy an one, that ſhall pierce through and vex his moſt inward parts. So great afflictions are ſet out in Scripture by waſting the bones, Pſal. 32. 3. & 38. 3. & 102. 3.

are full] As he hath had abundance of ſin, ſo ſhall he have abundance of pains.

of the ſin of his youth.] Formerly and long ſince commited by him, God will call him to account for thoſe ſins he hath forgotten. Here Zophar payes Job again with the words of his own mouth, Chap. 13. 26. It comes from a word that ſignifies to lie hid, becauſe young men lie hid in the family, and put not themſelves forth to publick imployments in Church or Common-wealth. Or, of his ſecret ſins, So this word is tranſlated, Pſal. 90. 8. And it may well befit this place. He thought his luſts and oppreſſions ſo cloſely carried, that they would never come to light: but God brings them to light long after by his judgements upon him in his old age.

which ſhall lie down with him] His ſin ſhall as it were follow him to the grave, and there bring him to corruption, and cleave to his duſt, till his body be raiſed again to judgement. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 12.

in the duſt] Heb. on the duſt. The duſt in the grave ſhall be like a bed, on which he ſhall lie. See on Chap. 14. 8. upon the word Ground.

V. 12. Though wickedneſſe be ſweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue.] An elegant ſimilitude taken from gluttons, who devoure the meat they like, not conſidering whether it be wholeſom or unwholeſome, nor regarding any meaſure. And ſo ſometimes devoure poiſon in ſtead of meat, and ſometimes ſurfeit on wholeſome meats, which although they ſeem pleaſant to him at the firſt, yet afterwards prove his ruine. This ſimilitude he follows to the end of verſe 23. And interlines the allegory with the thing intended, ſpeaking in the ſame ſentence ſometimes of the one, and ſometimes of the other. Which conſideration helpes much to the underſtanding of the text. As in this verſe it is the meat, that is ſweet to the mouth, and hid under the tongue, but wickedneſſe is ſweet to the ſoul and affections, and hid there. It appears verſe 15. that this allegory is here intended to ſet out the oppreſſion of wicked men, whereby they impoveriſh others, and hurt themſelves in the end. Wealth is compared to pleaſing food deſireable for ſweetneſſe. Evil acts in getting, to a ſurfeit, or poiſon. Getting of it to digeſting of ſuch food, which yeelds much pleaſure. Gods puniſhments ſeizing on the oppreſſour in the end to a ſurfeit cauſing vomiting, and leaving emptineſſe, or poiſon burning in the bowels, and bringing death; as if a man were bitten by a viper, or ſome other venemous beaſt. The firſt ſin was by eating the forbidden fruit, which makes this ſimilitude the more pertinent. The pleaſure gotten by eating, and oppreſſing is ſet out ver. 12, 13. The hurt that follows is deſcribed to the end of ver. 23. The ſum of this verſe and the next is, that as a glutton likes the reliſh of his meat, and keeps it in his mouth as long as he can, that he may the more taſte the ſweetneſſe of it, before he let it down into his belly to nouriſh him: ſo the oppreſſour pleaſes himſelf with his manifold inventions how to oppreſſe others, and rowls them up and down in his minde before he execute them.

wickedneſſe] רעה Is taken ſometimes for evil of ſin, Pſal. 51. 4. ſometimes for evil of trouble either falling on themſelves, Jer. 28. 8. or by them brought upon others, 1 Sam. 20. 13. Gen. 50. 17. Here it is taken for the miſchief intended to others by the oppreſſour.

be ſweet] Pleaſing like ſweet meat to the palate. Prov. 5. 3, 4.

in his mouth] There we taſte our meat. When it is gone down into the belly, it is paſt the palate and yeelds no more reliſh. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 5. So ſin is ſweet to the ſoul in thinking of it, as Gods Word is to good men, Pſal. 119. 103.

though he hide it] Though he keep his purpoſe of oppreſſing others, as cloſe in his minde, as gluttons keep their meat under the tongue, that no man may perceive the pleaſure he takes in it. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 18, 28.

under his tongue] See on Chap. 15. 5. Hereby may be meant pleaſant words, under which the oppreſſour hides his cruel purpoſes.

V. 13. Though he ſpare it, and forſake it not, but keep it ſtill within his mouth.] Though it be ſo ſweet to him, that he will by no means leave thinking of it, as a man keeps his meat from going down, while he taſtes any ſweetneſſe in it. The ſame thing mentioned in the former verſe, though ſet out in other words, to ſhew more fully the great delight oppreſſours take in plotting miſchief to others. His intent is to accuſe Job for an hypocrite, who made a fair ſhew of piety, and good will to others, but took pleaſure in plotting their ruine to inrich himſelf.

Though he ſpare it] Though he abſtain from letting it down into his ſtomach, and keep it in his mouth, that he may the longer taſte of the ſweetneſſe of it.

and forſake it not] Let it not for a time go down into his belly.

but] So this particle is tranſlated, Chap. 21. 1.

keeps it ſtill] The Heb. word carries a prohibition with it. He forbids it to go down, and keeps it as it were by force in his mouth.

within his mouth] Heb. in the midſt of his palate.

V. 14. Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of aſpes within him] He goes on in the ſimilitude, and ſhews, that as the glutton ſatisfied with the taſte of his ſweet meat, lets it down at length and then findes the inconveniences of it, ſo the oppreſſour at length executes his delightful plots, and periſheth by them. And firſt he ſets down his inward diſcontent in this verſe. 2. His loſſe of his riches ſo gotten in the 15. verſe. 3. His following ruine in the 16. verſe. As the gluttons food, when once it comes into his belly is as bitter, as it was pleaſing in his mouth: ſo ſhall the oppreſſours pleaſing plots prove very bitter to him in the end.

in his bowels] In his belly. מעים 1. All the inward parts in Scripture phraſe come under the name of bowels, Jer. 4. 19. 2. It ſignifies the heart, the chiefeſt of the inward parts, Pſal. 40. 8. 3. The gravell that lies in the Sea, as the bowels within the body, Iſa. 48. 19. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for the inward parts, whereof the belly is a part.

is turned] The nature of it is changed, and it is become bitter, and unwholeſome like the gall of Aſpes, as follows in this verſe.

it is the gall] It is as the gall; the note of likeneſſe is often left out to make the ſentence the more emphatical. See on Chap. 7. 7. He had ſweet thoughts in plotting, he ſhall have bitter ones, when he hath executed his cruel deviſes.

of aſpes] Whoſe gall it ſeems is very bitter.

within him] As the gluttons meat is very bitter in his belly, ſo the oppreſſours thoughts in his heart. So this phraſe is uſed, 1 King. 3. 28. Pſal. 94. 19. Heb. in the middle of him. The word קרב 1. Signifies the midſt of any thing, Exod. 8. 22. 2. The inwards which are in the midſt of living creatures, Lev. 1. 9. & 3. 3. 3. The thoughts which are within the heart, Pſal. 5. 9. & 49. 11. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe, if ye underſtand it of the glutton, but in the third, if it be underſtood of the oppreſſour.

V. 15. He hath ſwallowed down riches, and he ſhall vomit them up again: God ſhall caſt them out of his belly.] As the gluttons meat either becauſe of the unwholſomeneſſe of it, or his taking too much of it, puts him to a great deal of paine, untill ſuch time, as he have violently caſt it up again: ſo the goods ill gotten by the oppreſſour ſhall lie ſo ſore upon his conſcience, that he ſhall never be quiet in minde, till he have made reſtitution. He ſhall never digeſt his goods, which he hath ill gotten and heaped up: but with extream paine and torment he ſhall caſt them up raw and indigeſted, God himſelf as it were pulling them violently out of his belly.

He hath ſwallowed down] A metaphor from wilde beaſts, who ſwallow down their prey, and ſo deſtroy it. So rich men ſwallow down other mens riches greedily, eaſily, ſuddenly, ſecretly, irrecoverably, ſo that no man can tell what is become of them, no more then of the leſſer fiſhes ſwallowed by the whale.

riches] Other mens wealth and eſtates gotten from them by fraud and oppreſſion, and converted wholly to his own uſe. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 29. In all this he ſtrikes at Job, as if he had gotten his great riches unjuſtly, and loſt them again by the juſt judgement of God.

and he ſhall vomit them up again] His wealth ſhall not long tarry with him, like meat which the ſtomack cannot endure, but ſoon caſts it up again, Prov. 23. 8. He ſhall finde more trouble to be rid of his ill gotten wealth, then he found pleaſure in getting it. As a glutton vomiting up his morſels forgets the former ſweetneſſe of them.

God ſhall] It may be he would keep them, but God ſhall force him to reſtitution. For the word God, ſee on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

caſt them] Take all away from him, and leave him as poor as a man caſt out of his inheritance, that hath nothing left, whereon to live. So much the word imports, Joſh. 3. 10.

out of his belly] Out of his houſe where he thought he had laid them up as ſafe as the glutton thought he had done his meat in his belly. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 2.

V. 16. He ſhall ſuck the poiſon of aſpes: the vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him] Here follows the lamentable end of the oppreſſour. He ſhall not onely loſe his wealth, but his life alſo by Gods moſt juſt and ſevere judgement.

He ſhall ſuck] He ſhall as ſurely be ſlain, as if he had ſucked in poiſon. It is likely that he alludes to the great earneſtneſſe of oppreſſours to get away other mens goods, as children ſuck eagerly, little thinking thoſe riches will poiſon him.

the poiſon] The word ראש ſignifies the head, and becauſe the poiſon of Aſpes is in their head, it alſo ſignifies poiſon.

of aſpes] Which is thought to be moſt mortal, and to bring a moſt quick and painful death to him that takes it.

the vipers tongue] Another kinde of poiſonous beaſt, whoſe poiſon ſeems to be in his tongue. For the word Tongue, ſee on Chap. 15. 5.

ſhall ſlay him] The word הרג ſignifies. 1. To take away the natural life of living creatures, Gen. 27. 41. 2. To deſtroy things that grow, Pſal. 78. 47. 3. To threaten death by the Prophets, which comes certainly to paſſe. As if the Prophets mouth were a ſword to kill men, Hoſ. 6. 5. Here it is taken in firſt ſenſe, to ſet out the fearfull end of oppreſſours.

V. 17. He ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.] Though God give his bleſſing to others in abundance, yet the oppreſſour ſhall have no part thereof. If after his fall he labour to be rich again, yet God will croſſe him ſo as that he ſhall not obtain that plenty, which he may in his folly promiſe himſelf. The ſum is, he ſhall never more enjoy his former plenty.

He ſhall not ſee] For the ſignification of the word ſee on Chap. 19. 27. upon the word Behold. But when it hath the prepoſition after it, it ſignifies beholding a thing with delight, or rather injoying it, as Eccleſ. 2. 1. Pſal. 106. 5.

the rivers] Hereby is intended plenty of all good things flowing in like rivers and ſtreams, Iſai. 41. 18, 19. & 48, 18. Joh. 7. 38. It comes from a word that ſignifies to divide. For rivers are divided from the Sea, and divide themſelves into ſtreams, and divide Shires, Provinces, and Kingdomes.

the floods] The word carries with it plenty, and ſwiftneſſe, as floods bring plenty of water and run a pace.

the brooks] The word ſignifies valleys alſo, becauſe brooks are for the moſt part in valleys. Theſe three words are uſed to ſet out a great increaſe of worldly comforts with variety. Some read it, The floods of the brooks. That is, thoſe ſwelling waters that make the brooks ariſe and overflow.

of honey and butter] Theſe being two principall parts of nouriſhment in thoſe parts, Iſai. 7. 15 are uſed to ſet out plenty. And thereby is ſet out not onely abundance of ſuch things as are wrought without mans help, but alſo ſuch as are produced by mans labour. They are called rivers, floods, and brooks, becauſe the honey ſeemed to flow out of a fountaine when the Bees brought it forth in trees and holes of rockes without the help of man, as the rivers run. And the butter came from the milk, which flowes from the Cows, like ſtreams.

V. 18. That which he laboured for, ſhall he reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down: according to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be, and he ſhall not rejoyce therein] Here in plaine words he ſpeaks what before he ſpake figuratively under the metaphor of vomiting, ver. 15.

That which he laboured for] That is, his goods gotten with much paines. Or, That which the poor man laboured for, and he by fraud and oppreſſion got away from him, Deut. 28. 33. Job 39. 11. Pſal. 78. 46. & 109. 11.

ſhall he reſtore] To the poor, that laboured for it, and from whom he took it. For the word ſee on verſe 10. and on Chap. 15. 13.

and ſhall not ſwallow it down] Here ſeems to be a contradiction to verſe 15. where it is ſaid he hath ſwallowed down riches. But the anſwer is, either he ſpeakes of his pains after his impoveriſhing, and before his violent death to get new riches, which he cannot ſwallow down as he did the former, but ſhall finde God croſſing him in all his labours, ſo that either he gets nothing, or hath no time to eat of it, it is ſo ſoone taken from him again: or elſe he means by ſwallowing down not poſſeſſion of his former riches, which he had already, but what he hath gotten formerly, ſhall not any longer nouriſh him, or do him any good, though he have it: For we ſwallow meat, not onely to make it ſure, but alſo to nouriſh us.

according to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be] Heb. according to the ſubſtance of his exchange. Some underſtand it thus. He ſhall fully reſtore all that he hath gotten from the poor, either by the ſentence of the Judge, or to quiet his owne conſcience, or the poor ſhall take it by violence from him. Others take the word of exchange for recompence, as it is uſed, Chap. 15.31. and interpret it thus, He ſhall be as poor as ever he was rich before.

and he ſhall not rejoyce therein] He ſhall have little pleaſure in his riches, when he ſees them all taken away again.

V. 19. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed, and hath forſaken the poor; becauſe he hath violently taken away an houſe, which he builded not.] He ſets down the cauſes of his ruine, to wit, his oppreſſing and forſaking the poor.

Becauſe he hath oppreſſed] What can be more juſt, then that he who hath undone others, ſhould be undone himſelf? The Heb. word ſignifies to ſmite, or ſhake, or cruſh.

and forſaken the poor] Or, and left men poor. When he had undone them, he left them in a poor condition, and took no pity of them, but turned them out of doors as follows. Others read it, Therefore he ſhall leave them poor. To wit, his own children, Pſal. 109. 10.

becauſe he hath violently taken away] He was ſo covetous and cruel, that he not onely took what he met withal, but invaded mens houſes, and by force took away their goods from them.

which he builded not] He hath taken the houſes of thoſe men whom he hath made poor, which he never paid for building of. Others take building for finiſhing or furniſhing. He took away poor mens houſes, but before he could make them fit for his own dwelling, God took him away. And then it would be read, therefore he ſhall not build it. The word בנה ſignifies. 1. To build a houſe, or a city, 1 King. 9. 10 2. To repair, or fortifie an houſe or city, 2 Chron. 16. 1. 3. To bring forth children, which do preſerve the houſe or family, Ruth 4. 11. 4. It is put for preſerving men, exalting them, or making them to proſper, Mal. 3. 15. They that work wickedneſſe, are ſet up. Heb. built up.

V. 20. Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſſe in his belly, he ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired.] He proceeds to ſhew how miſerable this oppreſſour ſhall be in the end, when he ſhall have no quietneſſe within him, nor content without him. And this he ſpeaks to afflict Job, who as he had loſt all, ſo Zophar conceives, he could have no quietneſſe within himſelf.

Surely] So this particle is tranſlated, Job 8. 6. yet here it may be, Therefore. See on Chap. 19. 28. Becauſe he hath ſpoiled the poor, therefore he ſhall find no quietneſſe in his own ſpirit.

he ſhall not feel] Heb. know. To wit, by experience, or find it in himſelf. So the word is uſed, Eccl. 8. 5.

quietneſſe] See on Chap. 16. 12.

in his belly] He continues ſtill in the former metaphor of a glutton, who takes in ſo much to pleaſe his appetite, that his belly grumbles, and is unquiet, till he caſt it up again. So a covetous man ſo over loads himſelf with other mens goods, that by Gods juſt judgement it breeds in him much grief of mind, and many pangs of conſcience. See on Chap. 15. 2.

he ſhall not ſave] Heb. he ſhall not deliver. Or, ſnatch away, The ſpoilers ſhall take away all from him, as he did from others, and he ſhall be able to ſave none of his goods.

of that which he deſired] Out of all his riches, and goods, which he ſo much delighted in, and deſired to keep, he ſhall not keep any one thing to comfort him in his extremity. So ב is uſed, Exod. 14. 28. Others read the whole verſe thus, Becauſe he felt no quietneſſe in his belly, he ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired. He would gladly have ſaved ſome of his goods, but becauſe he was ſo covetous, that his heart was never ſatisfied with wealth, he ſhall loſe all. So it ſets out both his ſin, and puniſhment. But the former reading is better, which ſets down his ſin, verſe 19. and his puniſhment here.

V. 21. There ſhall none of his meat be left; therefore ſhall no man look for his goods] As the glutton when he hath caſt up all again, hath no food left in his belly, ſo he ſhall be brought ſo low, that he ſhall not have any of his goods left, or a bit of bread to eat. And whereas other rich men have verie many friends and kindred gaping after their goods, he ſhall be ſo poor before his death, that no man ſhall regard him, that hath nothing to leave them.

There ſhall none of his meat be left] Heb. There ſhall be no remainder of his meat. He ſhall be deprived of all his riches, which he ſwallowed like meat, verſe 15. others underſtand it of his children or kindred, and read it thus, There ſhall be no remainder for his meat, that is, he ſhall have neither childe, nor kinſman, that ſhall inherit his riches, for he ſhall have none left for them to expect, as follows in the verſe. And thus the word for the moſt part, if not altogether, in Scripture is uſed for the remainder of men, not of other things, as verſ. 26. Chap. 18. 19. & 27. 15. For the remainder of other things they uſe not this word שריד, but נותר as Exod. 29. 34. Lev. 6. 16. & 7. 16.

therefore] Seeing no man is left, but his poſterity cut off, therefore there ſhall be none to look after his goods.

ſhall no man] None of his poſterity: or, ſhall he not. Seeing he hath nothing left, he ſhall have no hope at all of recovering his riches.

look for] Wait for or expect his goods after his death.

his goods] Heb. his good, or goodneſſe. But it is frequently uſed for riches, or goods, as Gen. 24. 10. Deut. 6. 11.

V. 22. In the fulneſſe of his ſufficiency, he ſhall be in ſtraits: every hand of the wicked ſhall come upon him.] The deſtruction of the oppreſſour is now further ſet out by his enemies. 1. Such as have been oppreſſed by him in this verſe. 2. God the juſt Judge, verſe 23. 3. War, and weapons, verſe 24, 25. 4. Darkneſſe and fire, ver. 26. 5. Heaven and earth, ver. 27. He amplifies the loſſe that ſhall come upon him in this verſe by the circumſtance of time. It ſhall come, when it is leaſt expected, and feared, when his proſperity is at the higheſt. He ſets it out by the former ſimilitude of the glutton, when he hath filled himſelf to his own content.

In the fulneſſe of his ſufficiency] When he hath fully enriched himſelf, ſo as might abundantly content him. Though a covetous man never think that he hath enough. When he hath ſcratched and ſcraped together, ſo much as might ſatisfie the moſt greedy, and covetous wretch, that liveth upon the earth, Luk. 12. 19. or when he thinks he hath enough to live happily. Or, when he hath glutted himſelf with all manner of dainties, Luk. 16. 19, 22, 23.

he ſhall be in ſtraits] He ſhall be brought ſuddenly to extrem neceſſity, and great wants. A wonderful change.

every hand] None ſhall keep away, but every one formerly oppreſſed by him ſhall lay hold on him to be revenged. For the word hand, ſee on Chap. 13. 21. & 15. 23. Or, each hand. They ſhall be ſo offended at him for impoveriſhing them, that they ſhall lay load upon him with both hands.

of the wicked] One wicked man ſhall ruine another. Or, of him that is in miſery. The poor ſhall ſet upon him for want of means, chap. 3. 20. Or, of the labourer, whoſe wages he detained. Or, of him that was troubled by him The fruit of whoſe labours he hath gotten away, ſhall come upon him, ſee on Chap. 15. 21.

V. 23. When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath upon him, and ſhall raine it upon him, while he is eating.] Now he ſets out Gods ſevere proceeding againſt the wicked oppreſſour, amplified alſo by the time which God chuſeth to afflict him.

When he is about to fill his belly] Or, When he hath enough to fill his belly. The meaning is, either that this judgement comes upon him, when he is pampering himſelf in his plenty, as verſe 22. or elſe if he have ſomewhat left to fill his belly afterwards, God poures his wrath upon him, as he is feeding on it. For the word Fill, ſee on Chap. 15. 2. For the word belly, ſee on Chap. 15. 2. This may be underſtood alſo of getting abundance of riches, ſee on verſe 15, 20, 21.

God] Who is mentioned verſ. 15. and who uſeth to rain down judgements in anger upon ungodly men, and who is often ſpoken of, and ſpoken to in this book.

ſhall caſt] Or, ſend forth, He will no longer keep in his judgements in the chains of his mercy, but let them forth to be revenged on this wicked oppreſſour. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 20.

the fury of his wrath] Not ordinary, but extraordinary judgements upon him, the ſad effects of his furious wrath. Heb. the burning of his noſe or face. As a man no longer hides his anger, when he ſhews it in his countenance. Theſe two words are often uſed together in Scripture to ſet out Gods ſevere wrath, Numb. 25. 4. 1 Sam. 28. 18. 2 Chron. 29. 10. For the word, wrath, ſee on Chap. 14. 13.

upon him] Upon the oppreſſour ſpoken of before.

and ſhall rain it upon him] Or, make to rain upon him. To wit, the heavens. For Gods judgements are as it were ſhowred down thence like rain, Pſal. 11. 6. Rom. 1. 18. An alluſion to the deſtruction of the old world, or of Sodom, Gen. 19. 24. upon which place Gods wrath came like a ſhower upon them that expected it not in a ſun-ſhining day, Gods judgements can no more be reſiſted, then rain from heaven falling upon our heads. The rain alſo ſets out plenty of judgements as there are of drops in the rain.

while he is eating] God will ſuddenly deſtroy him, while he is feeding himſelf, Numb. 11. 33. or getting abundance of riches, which is his food, verſe 15. Or, into his fleſh. That is, God will pour his wrath upon his body, or upon the fleſh which he eats, or wealth that he gets, ſo that neither ſhall do him any good at all. All this reflects upon Job, who had ſhowers of judgements like a violent ſtorme of rain falling upon himſelf, and his children in the firſt Chapter, and therefore is by Zophar condemned for an hypocrite.

V. 24. He ſhall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteele ſhall ſtrike him through] God is here compared to a great Warriour, who comes armed with a ſword and a bow to deſtroy the oppreſſour, who while he thinks to avoid the one, is ſlain by the other, as Ahab was, 1 King. 22. 30, 34. The meaning is, that while the wicked man ſeeks to avoid one danger, another unſeen, farther off, and more grievous falls upon him, and deſtroyes him. As it befals a ſouldier in the war, who thinking himſelf ſafe, while he can keep off his enemies ſword, is unexpectedly ſlaine with an arrow from a farre.

He ſhall flee] That is, if he flee from one perill, he ſhall certainly fall into another, Iſa. 24. 18. Jer. 48. 44. Am. 5. 19. And for the phraſe, ſee Mal. 1. 4. They ſhall build, but I will throw down. That is, If they do build, I will throw it down again. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 2.

from the iron weapon] The ſword, ſpear, or battel-axe wherewith men fight nigh at hand. For the word, iron, ſee on Chap. 19. 24.

and the bow] That is, the arrow ſhot out of the bow. For that is it, which pierceth, yet the bow is ſaid to do it, becauſe it ſends out the arrow, as the carpenter is ſaid to cut, though the axe do it immediately.

of ſteele] Of ſuch matter were their bowes made then, as the heads of our croſſe-bowes are now.

ſhall ſtrike him through] From a farre, and unexpected, whereas a ſword wounds nigh at hand, and may more eaſily be prevented. Or, ſhall change him, that is, ſhall kill him. Heb. ſhall paſſe through him. So the word is uſed, Iſa. 8. 8.

V. 25. It is drawne, and cometh out of the body. yea the gliſtering ſword cometh out of his gall; terrours are upon him] God is here compared to a valiant warriour, who having ſpent his arrowes upon his enemy comes nearer to him, and fights with his ſword, till he have thruſt him into the gall, and left him ſubject to the terrours of death. Zophar ſtill purſues Job with his own words, ſee Chapter 16. 13.

It is drawne] To wit, the arrow, that ſtrook him through, verſe 24. and then God finding him not ſlain, uſeth his ſword to deſtroy him. Or the ſword ſpoken of afterwards in this verſe. For the antecedent taken out of the words following, ſee on chap. 18. 13. Heb. He drawes it. And it is to be underſtood either impeiſonally as before. (See the like on chap. 3. 3.) or, God drawes it, verſe 23. to wit, his arrow, or ſword, Deut. 32. 41, 42. or lets the ſtring goe, that the arrow may flye out.

and cometh out] The word יצא 1. ſignifieth coming out of a place, as Gen. 4. 16. 2. being born of one, or coming out of his bowels, Gen. 15. 4. 3. coming out of the ground, as flowers and corn do, Job 14. 2. 4. the coming forth, or ariſing of the ſun, or ſtars, as Gen. 19. 23. 5. the publiſhing of any thing by word of mouth, Eſth. 1. 17. 6. the failing of the heart when it is ſo fearfull, that it is as it were gone out of the body, Gen. 42. 28. 7. laying out of money, 2 King. 12. 12. 8. going forth to war, Gen. 14. 8, 9. going out of danger, or eſcaping by lot, 1 Sam. 14. 41. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

of the body] גוה comes from a word, which ſignifies eminency, and is uſed 1. for pride, Jer. 13. 17. 2. for the back, which in beaſts is higher then other parts of the body, Prov. 10. 13. 3. by a figure of the part for the whole, for the whole body, Ezek. 1. 11. 4. for a dead carkaſe, Judg. 14. 8. 5. for the middle or inward part of a thing, Job 38. 5. From among men. Heb. out of the middle, to wit, of the city or place of their habitation. Here it is taken in the third ſenſe, as it is tranſlated. The arrow or ſword, that did pierce the oppreſſours body is drawn out of it. Others take it for drawing the arrow out of the quiver, or ſword out of the ſheath, which is as it were the body of it, Numb. 22. 23 31. Judg. 8. 10.

yea the gliſtering ſword] The word properly ſignifies lightning, yet here it is put for the bright blade of a ſword, which gliſters like lightening. So it is uſed, Deut. 32. 41, Nah. 3. 3. Hab. 3. 11. Ezek. 21. 10. but with addition of the word, ſword, or ſpear, which here is omitted.

out of his gall] This intimates a deadly wound, for when the gall is let out, it kills men. See on chap. 16. 13. others read it, it cometh gliſtering out of his gall. It being more terrible to the oppreſſour wounded to ſee the point of the arrow or blade of the ſword, not only gliſtering with its own brightneſſe, but alſo with the colour of his gall, which it hath pierced, and ſo prognoſticates preſent death to him.

terrours are upon him] The terrours of death, which now he ſees and feels approaching affright his ſoul, ſee chap. 18. 11. The Dutch tranſlation reads it thus. Men ſhall draw out the ſword, it ſhall come forth with the life, and gliſtering with his gall, it ſhall come forth: there ſhall be ſhreeks or lamentations for him. That is, he ſhall be ſuddenly taken away, and his ſhall be frighted, and weep for him.

V. 26. All darkneſſe ſhall be hid in his ſecret places: a fire not blown ſhall conſume him; it ſhall go ill with him, that is left in his tabernacle.] He ſtill payes Job with thoſe things, that befell him, for he had many calamities, which in Scripture phraſe are called darkneſſe, and ſome of his cattell were devoured by fire from heaven, and ſuch as were left of his family doubtleſſe were in a poor condition like himſelf, chap. 1. As if he had ſaid, where the oppreſſour thinks he may moſt ſafely hide himſelf, there ſhall he find no aſſurance, but all full of obſcurity and trouble. A flame of fire breaking out of its own accord without any mans blowing ſhall utterly deſtroy him, and they of his houſe ſhall not proſper after him.

All darkneſſe] All manner of trouble. The word כל as it ſignifies particulars, ſo ſometimes it imports only ſome of all kinds, as Proverb. 1. 13. For darkneſſe, ſee on chap. 15. 22, 23.

ſhall be hid] Troubles ſhall be like theeves that hide themſelves in places of advantage to robbe paſſengers. See on Chapter 18. 10.

in his ſecret places] Where he thinks to hide himſelf from the ſtorm of Gods anger. Others read it thus, all darkneſſe is laid up for his hid treaſures. That is, God or men have taken order, that he ſhall loſe his riches as well as his life, though he hide them never ſo ſecretly. So this word is taken, Pſal. 17. 14.

a fire] Some heavie judgement, which like fire ſhall deſtroy him. So fire is uſed to ſet out conſuming judgements. Amos 1. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14. See on chap. 15. 34.

Not blown] A judgement not invented by thoſe whom he hath wronged, no nor by any man elſe, but ſent immediately from God, like a fire ariſing of it ſelf, no man knowes how; and burning down an houſe. Calamities, the cauſes whereof are unknown, ſhall ſuddenly come upon him, and conſume him. Others underſtand it for a ſecret fire not blowne up to make any flame. And that agrees well with what went before. As fire not breaking out, burns all within, ſo a ſecret judgement ſhall conſume him and his treaſures in their ſecret places. Others underſtand it of a great fierce fire, that is broke out already, and needs no blowing. And then it ſets out ſome great and eminent judgement lighting ſuddenly on the oppreſſour, like a fire that ſets the houſe all in a flame before men perceive it. Others take it for unquenchable fire, that needs no blowing, nor cannot be blowne out, like that Matth. 3. 12. And then it ſets out ſuch a judgment, that cannot poſſibly be removed, but will certainly ruine him.

ſhall conſume him] Heb. ſhall eat him up or devoure him. See on chap. 15. 34.

it ſhall go ill] Such as are not deſtroyed with him, but abide in his houſe after him of his poſterity ſhall never thrive, but be alwayes croſſed by God for his ſins.

with him that is left] See on verſ. 21.

V. 27. The heavens ſhall reveale his iniquity: and the earth ſhall ariſe up againſt him] Becauſe Job before chap. 16. 17, 18. had called heaven and earth to bear witneſſe of his innocencie, here Zophar puts him in mind, though in general terms, as ſpeaking of another, that heaven and earth had borne witneſſe againſt him already, and been Gods inſtruments in taking away his children,, and cattell by winde, fire, Sabeans, &c. Chap. 1. As if all creatures high and low did conſpire to ruine him, and give men cauſe to believe, that Gods curſe was upon him and his for his ſins.

The heaven] See on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

ſhall reveale] Shall diſcover his ſecret ſins by Gods open judgements upon him for the ſame coming from heaven.

his iniquity] See on chap. 7. 21.

and the earth] See on chap. 15. 19.

ſhall riſe up againſt him] See on chap. 14. 12.

V. 28. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and his goods ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.] Some tie theſe words to the former thus: Heaven and earth ſhall bring judgements upon him, for the one ſhall not bring forth ſuch plenty of proviſion for his houſe as formerly, and the other ſhall rain down floods of waters to carry away that little crop, which he hath. Others underſtand it generally of the loſſe of his proviſions by theeves or any other way.

The increaſe] Such things as grow out of the earth, or on trees yearly. Some underſtand it of his children ſent into captivity. But the word is never ſo uſed.

of his houſe] Rather for his houſe, as Broughton reads it. For they were ſuch as the earth brought forth for the uſe of his houſhold. For the word, Houſe, ſee on chap. 15. 28.

ſhall depart] Either the Earth ſhall not bring them forth to him, or they ſhall be taken away by theeves, or burnt, or ſome way or other taken from him, ſee chap. 14. 20.

and his goods ſhall flow away] They ſhall be quickly ſcattered, as waters flow away. Or, they ſhall be carried away wholly, and violently, as with a flood. Others read it thus, they ſhall flow away. That is, the oppreſſours themſelves; as Pſal. 90. 5. Or, there ſhall be floods. Ye need not enquire how they ſhall depart, God will ſend floods to ſweep them clean away.

in the day of his wrath] At that time, when God ſhall manifeſt his wrath (verſ. 23.) againſt them by plaguing them, chap. 24. 1. Prov. 6. 34. & 11. 4. Iſa. 13. 13. Lam. 2. 21. Ezek. 22. 24. Zech. 1. 15. Rom. 2. 5, For the word, Day, ſee on chap. 14. 14. For Anger, See on chap 14. 13.

V. 29. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.] Here is the concluſion of Zophars ſpeech, ſuitble to Bildads, chap. 18. 21. This and no other portion can a wicked man expect from God. Or, if he do expect any better inheritance, he will be deceived, for this is that which God hath God hath alloted to him. Every word hath an emphaſis. Men may count wicked men happy, but by Gods decree they are miſerable. They may divide the wealth and honours of the world between them for a time, but God hath provided a farre other portion for them, and that by way of inheritance never to be parted from them.

This] All theſe miſeries, and the great deſtruction, which I have ſpoken of.

is the portion] A metaphor taken from banquets, wherein every man had his portion of meat, and drink aſſigned to him, Gen. 43. 34. Or from dividing goods by lot, wherein every man had that part that befell him, Pſal. 16. 5. or by gift without lot. Gen. 25. 6. The meaning is the puniſhment he may as juſtly and ſurely look for, as a child doth for his portion. See chap. 27. 13. & 31. 2. Pſal. 11. 6. Iſa. 17. 14.

from God] The juſt Judge, who will give every man his right. It comes from a word that ſignifies power, for all power and ſtrength is from God. אלהים is uſed 1. for the true God, Gen. 1. 1. And it is the firſt name, that is given to him in the Scripture. 2. for idols and falſe Gods. As the picture of a man is called a man; ſo are they called Gods, becauſe they ſeem ſo to men, though they be utterly unworthy of that name, as having no divine power at all. Pſal. 96. 5. with Pſal. 115. 4. &c. Iſa, 37. 19. 3. for images of the true God, whom Jeroboam worſhipped in the calves, 1 King. 12. 28. and the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe, Exod. 32. 5, 8. 4. for Angels, which are neareſt to God in glory and power, farre exceeding all earthly and bodily creatures in both. Pſal. 8. 5. 5. for great men, that come neareſt to God in ſtate, and power, eſpecially Magiſtrates and Judges. Pſal. 82. 1. 6. to ſet out the greatneſſe or excellency of any thing, though unreaſonable, wherein it exceeds other things of the ſame kind, and comes neareſt to God, Jon. 3. 3. Nineve was an exceeding great City, Heb. a great City of God. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for the true God.

and the heritage] That which ſhall as ſurely befall him, as the inheritance to the heir, chap. 27. 13, & 31. 2.

appointed unto him] Heb. of his decree. Or, ſentence. To wit, that God hath paſſed upon him. Others take it for his own blaſphemous ſpeeches againſt God, which ſhall be puniſhed with heavie judgments. 1 Sam. 2. 3, 10. Jude ver. 15.

by God] God as a juſt Judge hath allotted to him, and as a powerfull God will execute it upon him. For the word ſee on chap. 8. 3. 5.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſe 1. BUt Job anſwered and ſaid] Now Job anſwers to Zophars laſt ſpeech, chap. 20. which was the laſt of his ſecond conflict with his friends. Note 1. the preface from verſe 1. to verſe 7. 2. The body of the anſwer from thence to the laſt verſe. 3. The concluſion in the laſt verſe. In the Preface 1. the ſpeaker is deſcribed verſe 1. 2. He uſeth a Gentle Preface to mollifie his former roughneſſe of ſpeech, that they might the more willingly hearken to him, and the better underſtand him, and not interrupt him, as Zophar had lately done. He perſwades them to hear him patiently. 1. From the end of their coming, which was to comfort him, and that they could not do, if they would not hear him lay open his griefs, verſe 2. 2. From the duty of one man to another, to hear him, before they cenſure him, verſe 3. 3. From Gods example, who heard his complaint quietly, and did not interrupt him, verſe 4. in the beginning of it. 4 From the trouble that would come to his ſpirit, if they ſhould deny him a vent for his ſorrows, in the end of verſe 4. 5. From the abundance of miſery, which they ſaw on him already, verſe 5. 6. From his own ſad apprehenſion of it, verſe 6.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolations.] Ye pretend that ye came to comfort me. How will that appear, when ye will not with patience hear me utter my mind? This is the leaſt comfort I can expect from you.

Hear diligently] Heb. Hearing hear. The doubling of the word encreaſeth the ſignification, As Gen. 2. 17. In dying, thou ſhalt die. That is, thou ſhalt ſurely dye, as it is there tranſlated. For the word ſee on chap. 13. 17.

my ſpeech] Which now I am to ſpeak; and do not interrupt me, before I have done.

and let this be] Your patient and quiet hearing of me.

your conſolations] Inſtead of thoſe comforts you ſhould, and ſeem to be willing to give me in my miſeries. If I can have no more comfort from you, let me have audience. Or, and this ſhall be your conſolations. I ſhall take this as a great comfort from you, that you let me vent my ſorrows quietly in your hearing, which hitherto ye have exaſperated by your ſpeaking.

V. 3. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after that I have ſpoken mock on.] If ye will hear me quietly defend mine own cauſe, I ſhall endeavour to ſpeak ſuch things; as ſhall not be a fit object of mocking, but if ye think otherwiſe when ye have heard my arguments patiently, I will as patiently hear your ſcoffes.

Suffer me] The Hebrew word נשא hath many ſignifications. 1. To bear or bear with one, or ſuffer, or forbear, Gen. 13. 6. 2. to lift up or advance, Iſa. 5. 26. 3. to produce or bring forth by words, Exod. 20. 7. Not taking Gods name is not taking it into the mouth, or not ſpeaking of it. 4. to reckon or number, Numb. 31. 49. 5. to take or to receive, 2 Chron. 11. 21. 6. to regard or honour, 2 King. 3. 14. 7. to remit or pardon, Pſal. 32. 5. 8. to take away, conſume, or burn, 2 Sam. 5. 21. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for bearing with him, and letting him ſpeak quietly, though he ſhould utter ſomething, that might be burthenſome to them.

that I may ſpeak] That I may defend my cauſe, and anſwer your objections: ſee on chap. 13. 22.

and after that I have ſpoken] After I have ſaid all I can, or purpoſe to ſpeak in my juſtification.

mock on] Heb. Do thou mock on. Turning his ſpeech to Zophar (and his eye alſo, very likely) who had laſt ſpoken, and whoſe whole ſpeech he takes to be a great and continued mocking of him. And therefore he ſpeaks now to him in the ſingular number, whereas before he ſpake to them in the plurall number for audience. Neither doth he give him leave to mock at him, but rather intimates, that he had no colour to mock at him before, and conceives that he ſhould now ſo ſolidly defend his cauſe, that Zophar ſhould be aſhamed to mock him any more. As if he had ſaid, Then mock on, if thou canſt pick any hole in my ſpeech. When I have cleared my innocency, I ſhall not be troubled at thy taunts.

V. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?] It is in vain for me to complain to you, I being conſcious of mine own innocency will make complaint to God; for I ſee already, if I ſhould be tryed by my friends, it would go very hard with me, and my ſpirit would be ſore troubled, as well it might.

as for me] An emphatical expreſſion, ye may think I look no farther then men; but ye are deceived, I look up to God, is my complaint] The declaration of my miſeries.

to man] See on chap. 14. 1. Or, of man. If I had no greater things to complain of then man could inflict, I had leſſe reaſon to complain ſo much, and yet I might have juſt cauſe of ſorrow then, but I have greater cauſe to complain, for Gods hand is heavie upon me. See the like chap. 6. 2, 3, 4. Pſal. 38. 1. 2.

and if it were ſo] If I had to do with man onely, I might juſtly be troubled, I ſee ſo much in your unkind dealing with mee.

why ſhould not] He ſpeaks very earneſtly, and makes them Judges. Can ye that condemn me of impatience, ſhew me any reaſons, why I ſhould not be troubled at ſuch great calamities, as are upon me? Yea though they were ſuch only as men could inflict upon me. Much more when much heavier things are inflicted upon me by God. Having ſuch extraordinary preſſures upon me, I may juſtly complain, and it is a very hard thing to keep a meaſure in complaining.

be troubled] Heb. be ſhortned. For the ſpirit of man is contracted with grief, and enlarged with joy, Exod. 6. 9. Judg. 10. 16. & 16. 16.

V. 5. Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hand upon your mouth.] He accuſeth them of inhumanity, that paſſed by his fore afflictions, as light things, and perſwades them to look better upon him; and to ſhew that they have not put off all ſenſe of humanity, by pitying him, and ſpeaking no more againſt him, And that ſeeing him more miſerable then other men, they ſhould with patience and ſilence hearken to what he had to ſay for himſelf.

Mark me] Heb. Look upon me. Conſider my former upright life, and preſent miſerable ſtate. Ye will finde that never any godly man was ſo ſorely afflicted, and therefore pity me. Or, mark my words, which I ſhall now ſpeak for my ſelf, and they will convince you fully. For the word ſee chap. 5. 1. Turn you toward me, and view me well, and ye ſhall ſee, it is worſe with me then ye imagine.

and be aſtoniſhed] At the ſight of my great miſeries. Others read it, and ye will be aſtoniſhed. Ye will ſee cauſe enough to make you ſo, ſee on chap. 17. 8. His friends had ſeen him all this while, but they had not throughly conſidered of his miſeries, elſe they would have been aſtonied before now.

and lay your hand upon your mouth] Ye will ſee ſo much cauſe of pity and ſilence, that ye will be aſhamed to ſpeak any more ſo harſhly againſt me as ye have done, See chap. 40. 4. & 29. 9. Judg. 18. 19. Prov. 30. 32. Mich. 7. 16. ye will then be content to be ſilent, while I ſpeak to vent my ſorrows, and clear my ſelf. For the word, Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23. For the word, Mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

V. 6. Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my fleſh] When I conſider my former proſperity from which I am fallen, and the greatneſſe of my miſery, whereunto I am fallen, and your hard-heartedneſſe toward me, together with the proſperous eſtate of many a wicked man in the mean while, I cannot chuſe but tremble.

Even when] So אם is tranſlated. Pſal. 63. 6.

I remember] When I ſeriouſly think of the things that have befaln me in ſuch an extraordinary way.

I am afraid] I am frighted as men are with troubles that come ſuddenly, and unexpectedly upon them. See on chap. 4. 5.

and trembling] As his minde was affrighted, ſo his body trembled. A great fear ſeized on him, that made his whole body ſhake.

my fleſh] See on chap. 14. 22. Heb. my fleſh hath taken hold on trembling. See the like, chap. 18. 20. Look on the notes there.

V. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?] Job now goes from his admiration to his confutation of Zophars oration in the former chapter. And herein 1. he ſhews that wicked men do proſper in the world, from this verſe to verſe 17. 2. that yet oftentimes they meet with troubles; from thence to verſe 22. 3, that it comes from Gods unſearchable decree, that ſome wicked men live and die comfortably, others miſerably, from thence to verſe 27. 4. removing the queſtion from the generall to the particular, he ſhews his own condition to be not unlike to many wicked mens in regard of troubles from thence to verſe 32. 5. he anſwers what Zophar ſaid in the end of the former chapter, concerning the violent death of ungodly men, verſe 32, 33. 6. He concludes all with a declaration of the vanity of their conſolations, verſe 34. In the firſt part, 1. he ſets out the proſperity of the wicked, in their own flouriſhing eſtate. In this verſe, in the proſperity of their children, verſe 8. in the ſafety of their families, verſe 9. in the increaſe of their cattell, verſe 10. in plenty and thriving of their children, verſe 11. in their pleaſures and delights, verſe 12. in their wealthy life, and quiet death, verſe 13. 2. He ſets out their impiety, which follows their proſperity, verſe 14, 15. 3. He ſhews his own diſlike of their courſes notwithſtanding their proſperity, verſe 16. In this verſe he begins to overthrow Zophars aſſertion of the ſhort proſperity of wicked men in this world, and their ſudden downfall, chap.20.5,8. by the experience of all ages, and the teſtimonies of ſenſe and reaſon. As if he had ſaid, that which thou ſayeſt, O Zophar, of the ſhort proſperity, and ſudden deſtruction of wicked men is eaſily confuted by the experience of all ages. Do not we ſee that they live in health and ſtrength, and lengthen their dayes to the utmoſt courſe of nature, and live in plenty all their days? This cannot ſtand with thy aſſertion.

Wherefore] Some take it to be an expoſtulation with God about the proſperitie of wicked men, when he himſelf was in miſery, like that, Jer.12.1. Others that he would know a reaſon of Zophar, why the ungodly proſper ſo. But the truth is, it is an argument drawne from experience to confute Zophars poſition. How can it be ſo, when we daily ſee the contrary?

Do the wicked] See on chap.3.17.

live] To wit, in health, and ſtrength. And Broughton renders it, are lively. So 1 King.1.25. God ſave King Adonijah. Heb, Let King Adonijah live. To wit, in health and ſtrength, 1 Sam.25.6.

become old] Live long upon the earth. He doth not hereby intend to ſet out the infirmities of old age, as the word is uſed, Pſal. 6. 7. but the ſtrength of thoſe wicked men, that makes them outlive many others. As Dan. 7.9.

ye] Leſt any man ſhould think they might live long in health, and yet in a low and mean condition, he addes this as a greater matter, yea they live in an higher faſhion, then many better men. For the word, ſee on chap.16. 4. on the word, Alſo.

are mighty] Or, prevaile. Have more power then other men, and more ſtore.

in power] Or, in wealth. For theſe two ordinarily go together. See on chap.15.29. ſee Pſal.17.14. & 73.12. Jer.12.1. Hab.1.16

V.8. Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight with them, and their off-ſpring before their eyes.] As Zophar had in the former chapter particularly in ſeverall branches laboured to ſhew, that the proſperity of the wicked is very ſhort, ſo Job here doth elegantly deſcribe the continuance of it in many particulars the better to convince Zophar of his errour. And he begins with their children, which next after their own health, and wealth are the greateſt comfort to them in the world. And it is likely, that he alſo hath relation to Eliphaz his words, chap.5. 25. and tells him that the comfort of a numerous and rich poſterity, which he promiſed to him upon repentance, is often beſtowed upon wicked men.

Their ſeed] Their children which come of their ſeed, Gen. 9. 9. Some take it here for their children only, and bring their childrens children under the word off-ſping. Others take it of the ſeed ſowne in their fields, and the other word off-ſpring of plentifull crops. But the former interpretation, of their poſterity, is better.

is eſtabliſhed] They ſhall not only proſper themſelves, and live long, but alſo their poſterity.

in their ſight] They ſhall ſee their children and childrens children thriving in the world, and living proſperouſly in their families. They ſhall behold this with great delight. Heb. before their faces. For the word, Face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word, Countenance.

With them] Living as long as they doe, and none of them, or few of them dying before them. Or, they proſper as much as themſelves.

and their off-ſpring] See on chap.5. 25. It may be either taken for poſterity in generall, or for childrens children.

before their eyes] In their ſight, as before. The thing is doubled for greater aſſurance. As chap,14, 19,11. For the word, eyes, ſee on chap.15.19. & 18 3.

V.9. Their houſes are ſafe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.] In this verſe is ſet out the great immunity of theſe wicked oppreſſours, that not they onely, but all theirs are free from thoſe afflictions that befall better men.

Their houſes] See on chap.15.2 8.

are ſafe] Heb. are peace. That is, in a moſt peaceable, and ſafe condition, 1 Sam.25.6. 2 Sam.20.9. Iſa.41.3. Job.5.24.

from fear] They are ſo quiet, that they fear not any harm to befall them from abroad to diſturb their quiet. Some read it, their houſes have peace without fear. Others, in their houſes there is peace from fear. Others, their houſes are in peace without fear. See on Chapter 15. 21.

neither is the rod] By Gods rod is meant affliction ſent from God. See on chap.9.34.

of God] See on chap.4.9. & 11.5.

upon them] Upon the oppreſſours themſelves. Or, upon their houſhold and family.

V.10. Their Bull gendereth, and faileth not, their cow calveth and caſteth not her calfe.] As they have comfort in themſelves, and their family, ſo likewiſe great increaſe in their cattell, which makes them to grow rich, and wealthy.

their bull] Heb. His bull. Every oppreſſours for the moſt part, gendereth] Heb. makes to paſſe. To wit, his ſeed, of which the calfe is formed.

and faileth not] Heb. and caſteth not away. Loſeth not his ſeed at any time. Or, and loſeth not. That is, he is ſo luſty, that he never refuſeth the cowes. So the word is tranſlated, Levit. 16. 11. Ezek.16. 45.

their cow] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to be fruitfull, and it ſignifies a young cow. Such uſe to be moſt fruitfull.

calveth] Heb. ſendeth forth. And the word imports ſafety, and deliverance.

and caſteth not her calfe] Loſeth not her calfe. Never comes before her time, nor bringeth forth a dead calfe. A great increaſe muſt needs follow, where the bulls are never faint, nor the cowes never miſcarry, Gen.31.38. Exod.23. 26.

V. 11. They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.] As they have ſome children growne, and proſpering, verſe 8. ſo they have little ones ſtill coming on for their comfort at home, when their elder children are gone abroad.

They ſend forth] They beget many children. Or, they ſend them abroad into the ſtreets, or fields, that men may ſee their ſtore. Others take it of the cattell, the bull and cow ſpoken of, verſe 10. for the word ſee on chap. 14. 28.

their little ones] See on chap.19. 17. upon thoſe words children.

like a flock] Abundantly, ſo that they grow numerous like a flock of ſheep. Or, their greater cattell ſpoken of, verſe 10. multiply like ſheep, which is ſeldom ſeen, for the leſſer cattell increaſe moſt, Pſal. 107.41. ſheep bring forth more abundantly then greater cattell. Pſal.144.13. Ezek.36. 37,38.

and their children dance] Their little ones being brought up at home like flocks do cheerfully and merrily skip up and down. This is a great delight to parents.

V. 12. They take the timbrel and harp; and rejoyce at the ſound of of the Organ.] Some underſtand this verſe of the children, whom they bring up with great coſt to ſinging, playing on inſtruments, and dancing. Others of the parents themſelves rejoycing in their proſperitie, and ſolacing themſelves with all kind of muſick. Others of both, the children playing on muſical inſtruments, and the parents ſinging thereunto. Muſick is not here condemned, but their ſecuritie, who lived merrilie, and regarded not God, Amos 6. 5.

They take] The inſtrument into their hands to make muſick, Others read it, They lift up. To wit, their voice with the timbrell. They ſing in conſort with them that play. For the word ſee on verſe 3.

the timbrell] It is eſteemed to be a woodden inſtrument with parchment at both ends, to be beaten on with ſticks, much like our drums or tabers.

and harp] An inſtrument of wood hollow with ſtrings to be plaid upon.

and rejoyce] Take delight and pleaſure in that kind of muſick.

at the ſound] See on chap.15.21.

of the organ] An inſtrument with many pipes like that which we now call organs. It comes from a word that ſignifies love, ſport, delight. And it ſeems to be a very pleaſing inſtrument. Such men uſed on feaſt dayes for mirth, Pſal. 81. 2,3.

V. 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.] They live long in an uninterrupted proſperity to the very minute of their death. They have no loſſes in their life, nor long ſickneſſes to bring them to their end. For Job did not intend here to ſhew their puniſhment, but their pleaſures laſting all their life, as appears by the words before and after.

They ſpend] They finiſh or conſume all their dayes in pleaſure. Others read it, They make their dayes old. They live long in mirth.

in wealth] Or, in mirth] Heb. in good. The Hebrew word טוב is uſed to expreſſe many things. 1. it ſignifies, that which is right and and juſt, 2 Sam.15.3. 2. that which is profitable, Deut.6. 11. & 30.5. 3. that which is pleaſing, 2 Sam.19. 27. & 35. 5. 4. that which is full or compleat, Gen.15.15. & 25. 8. 5. that which is joyfull or delightfull. As feſtivall times, 1 Sam.25.8. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe for riches, or in the fifth for mirth.

and in a moment] They lye not ſick, nor in pain as others, but are ſoon gone: in the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor.15.52. A moment is the leaſt diviſion of time. They dye very eaſily without that ſenſe of pain, which other men feel, Pſal.73.19.

they go down] For graves are in the earth, and thither mens dead bodies deſcend, which walked upon the earth alive. It is alſo a deſcent from life to death.

to the grave] See on chap.7.9.

V. 14. Therefore they ſay unto God, Depart from us; for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways.] Now leſt any man ſhould think, that Job ſhould ſpeak of ſuch wicked men, as had ſome eminent parts in them, he ſhews plainly in this verſe and the next, that he ſpeaks of men moſt notoriouſly wicked againſt God, which nevertheleſſe lived in plenty and died eaſily. He ſets out their wickedneſſe, 1. by their rejecting Gods acquaintance in this verſe, 2. by diſgracing his ſervice in the next. For the firſt in this verſe, They were open contemners of Gods Majeſty, and did in effect bid him be gone, neither would they at any time ſuffer themſelves to be taught, and inſtructed by him.

Therefore] Becauſe they proſper ſo, they deſpiſe God. So this particle is tranſlated, Job 35. 16.

they ſay] It is likely, they would not be ſo groſſe, as to ſpeak thus in their mouths, but in their hearts and ways, living as if they deſired to have no acquaintance with God. Pſal. 14. 1. & 39. 1. For the word ſee on chap. 16. 1.

unto God] See on chap. 8. 3, 5.

Depart from us] If they be called upon at any time to know God; they utterly refuſe it and ſtop the mouths of their own conſciences, chap. 22. 17.

for] So this particle is tranſlated, chap. 17. 10.

we deſire not] We take no pleaſure in walking in thy ways, and therefore care not for the knowledge of them. They are accuſed of an affected ignorance, and deſpiſing of knowledge, when they might have it.

the knowledge of thy wayes] The underſtanding of thy precepts, and of thoſe things thou wouldſt have us to do. He doth not mean thoſe ways God walks in, but thoſe in which he would have us to walk. For the word way, ſee on chap. 17. 9.

V. 15. What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhould we have, if we pray unto him?] They think it a vain thing for them to trouble their heads with matters of Religion, and lay bands of ſtrictneſſe upon themſelves, who now live ſo much at liberty, and wallow in all worldly pleaſures in their ſinfull courſes. See the like expreſſions, Exod. 5. 2. Mal. 3. 14. chap. 35. 3.

what is] What is there in him, more then in others, that we ſhould addict our ſelves to his ſervice? We ſee nothing extraordinary in him deſerving ſo much reſpect. The like phraſe is found, chap. 7. 17. Pſal. 8. 4. Cant. 5. 9.

the Almighty] Some derive it from a word that ſignifies to deſtroy and lay all waſte, Iſa. 13. 6. Joel 1. 15. And they tranſlate it, The Almighty. Others from a word, that ſignifies ſufficiency. One who hath ſufficiency of all good things to give to others, Gen. 28. 3. And they would have it tranſlated, Allſufficient. Others from a word that ſignifies a Dug, as if God did as it were out of his breaſts nouriſh all creatures in the world, Gen. 49. 25.

that we ſhould ſerve him] The word עבר ſignifies 1. to worſhip God, Deut. 6. 13. 2. to ſerve men, Gen. 15. 13, 14. 3. to labour or work, Exod. 20. 9. 4. to till the ground, Gen. 4. 2. 5. to make one to ſerve, or ſerve our ſelves of him, Ezek. 34. 27. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for worſhipping God.

and what profit ſhould we have] No benefit will come to us by praying to him.

if we pray unto him] Heb. if we meet him. To wit, with our prayers, Jer. 7. 16.

V. 16. Loe their good is not in their hand; the counſell of the wicked is far from me.] Here Job ſpeaks in his own perſon that before ſpake in the perſon of wicked men, and ſhewes his deteſtation of their impiety. As if he had ſaid, I cannot but admire at the fooliſh ſecurity of theſe men, who contemn God, as if they had no farther need of his help, but had their happineſſe in their own hand. But they are deceived. All is in Gods hand, who can take away their wealth, when he pleaſe. And therefore I will follow none of their wicked devices.

Loe] This uſeth to bring in ſome ſtrange thing beyond mens expectation. See on chap. 1. 12. Such would be the ſudden poverty of theſe ungodly men, when it came.

their good] Their wealth. They can keep it no longer then God gives leave. They may fall ſooner then they roſe. For the word ſee on verſe 13.

is not in their hand] It is not in their power to keep their great riches. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 23.

the counſell] I am ſo far from envying their proſperity, that I cannot approve of their courſe of life for all their wealth, chap. 22. 18. & 10. 3. & 18. 7. Pſal. 1. 1. In all theſe places counſell is put for a courſe of life, for wicked men as well as good, guide their lives by counſell good or bad.

is far from me] I could never approve of it. It was not far from him in place, but in affection: it was abominable to him.

V. 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their deſtruction upon them? God diſtributeth ſorrowes in his anger] Some take theſe words, and all the reſt to the end of verſe 21. as a continued deſcription of the proſperity of wicked men, and read all the verſes by interrogation. Have ye ſeen wicked men or their children often puniſhed? It is very rare. But this croſſes the former verſe wherein he began to ſpeak of the ruine of ungodly men. And it croſſeth verſe 22. &c. wherein he ſhewes that God in his wiſdom lets one wicked man live proſperouſly all his days, and brings another to an untimely end. Theſe words therefore are rather ſpoken by way of admiration. See on chap. 14. 14. As we have ſeen many wicked men live in plenty, till they dye, ſo oftentimes God brings them to untimely ends, and lets them feel much want and ſorrow before they dye.

How oft] See on chap. 13. 23.

is the candle] Or, lamp. Some underſtand it of the riches of the oppreſſour, which ſhine for a time, but afterwards are taken away. Others of a violent death of the wicked man, when his life is taken away before it be finiſhed by the courſe of nature, as a candle is put out before it be done. This agrees beſt with the deſtruction following in this verſe.

put out] See on chap. 18. 5. & 6. 4.

and how oft cometh] For lively actions attributed to liveleſſe things, ſee on chap. 1. 19. And for the word ſee on chap. 15. 21.

their deſtruction upon them] See on chap. 18. 12.

God] This is not in the originall, but added to fill up the ſenſe, See on chap. 20. 23.

diſtributeth] He gives to the wicked man his portion of ſorrowes, as parents give their children their portion of goods. The meaning is, he puniſheth ungodly men according to their merits, chap. 20. 29.

ſorrowes] The word ſignifies ſuch ſorrowes, as women feel in their labour, which hold them like bands.

in his anger] See on chap. 4. 9. & 16. 9. & 14. 13.

V. 18. They are as ſtubble before the wind, and as chaffe, that the ſtorm carrieth away.] When God begins to deal with them in anger, they are no more able to ſtand before him, then chaffe before a violent wind. They are ſoon blown away out of their place.

They are as ſtubble] This ſimilitude is often uſed in Scripture to ſet out the ſudden deſtruction of ungodly men, chap. 27. 21. Pſal. 1. 4. Iſa. 17. 13. & 29. 5. Hoſ. 13. 3.

before] Heb. at the face. For the word, Face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word, Countenance.

of the wind] See on chap. 15. 2. upon the words, Vain knowledge.

and as chaffe] Which is lighter then ſtubble, and ſooner blowne away.

that the ſtorm] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to make an end of a thing. A wind may leave ſomething, but this ſweeps all away before it like a whirl-winde.

carrieth away] Heb. ſtealeth away. That is, taketh away ſuddenly, as a theef doth mens goods, leſt he ſhould be taken himſelf. So Chriſts coming to judgement is compared to the ſudden and unexpected coming of a thief in the night, 1 Theſ. 5. 2.

V. 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his children: he rewardeth him, and he ſhall know it.] In this verſe he ſhews that the puniſhment of the cruell oppreſſour ſhall be ſo ſharp, that his children ſhall feel the ſmart of it. And this was proportionable to his great oppreſſion, whereby he had undone other men and their poſterity.

God] See on chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

layeth up] In the treaſures of his juſtice to be produced in due time He deales with the children, as he did with the parents. He doth not preſently puniſh them, but watches a time, when they think their condition moſt proſperous, that he may the more terrifie them.

his iniquity] The puniſhment of his iniquity. Others read it, his riches, Or, his ſtrength. That is, his violence, who by his ſtrength got other mens riches. God will keep this his cruell dealing upon record to puniſh his children for it with temporall puniſhments, that the world may ſee, how much God hates oppreſſion. For the word, ſee on chap. 18. 7.

for his children] See on chap. 14. 21. Either he will puniſh both him and his children; or if he ſuffer him to go to his grave in peace, he will ruine his poſterity.

he rewardeth him] The word שלם properly ſignifies paying of a debt. God by his juſtice owes them puniſhment for their oppreſſion, and he will pay it. Sometimes it ſignifies to give a good reward for things well done, as Ruth 2. 12. 1 Sam. 24. 19. Sometimes an evill reward for evill deeds, verſe 31. of this chapter. Judg. 17. 2 Sam. 3. 39. Jer. 32. 18. Some underſtand it of the puniſhment of his ſons falling out in his days. Others, of his own deſtruction.

and he ſhall know it] Or, ſo that he ſhall know it. He ſhall feel Gods hand upon himſelf for his oppreſſion. Or, he ſhall take notice, that God hath plagued his children for it.

V. 20. His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction, and he ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.] Leſt any man ſhould think, becauſe he had ſaid in the former verſe, that God layes up the iniquity of the wicked man for his children, that he ſhould eſcape himſelf, he addes, he ſhall ſee Gods judgements lighting upon himſelf to deſtruction. And ſets out that deſtruction by an elegant ſimilitude, wherein Gods wrath that ſhall light upon ungodly men is compared to a poyſoned cup, which deſtroyes them that drink it. See the like Pſal. 75. 8. Jer. 25. 15. Rev. 14. 10.

His eyes] See on chap. 20. 9.

ſhall ſee] He ſhall feel by experience Gods wrath in his deſtruction. The eye being the moſt noble ſenſe is put ſometimes for the other ſenſes. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 27.

his deſtruction] The Hebrew word here uſed is found no where elſe in the old Teſtament. And therefore the ſenſe muſt be helped by the coherence. And what leſſe then deſtruction can be expected by him, that drinks of the wrath of the Almighty?

and he ſhall drink] He ſhall not taſte, but have plenty of it poured upon him and into him. Leſt any one ſhould think, he ſhould but look upon evill, and not feel it, he addes, he ſhall drink of it. For the word ſee on chap. 6. 4. & 15. 16.

of the wrath] It comes from a word, that ſignifies heat: For anger makes a mans paſſion boyle within his breaſt, and heats his blood, and burnes and conſumes others.

Of the Almighty] See on verſe 15.

V. 21. For what pleaſure hath he in his houſe after him; when the number of his months is cut off in the midſt?] A reaſon is here rendred why God puts off the puniſhment of ungodly men till after their death to lay it all upon their poſterity. Becauſe elſe they would live merrily all their dayes, and not regard what befell their poſterity, when they are gone out of the world, and have no knowledge or worldly things, chap 14.21. & 24.20.

For what pleaſure hath he] He hath not, nor can have any content or delight in things done after his death.

in his houſe] In his poſterity, who are left in his family. For the word, ſee on chap. 15.28.

after him] After his death. While he lives he may take much comfort in the ſafety and proſperity of his children: but when he is dead he can have no comfort therein, though his death ſhould enrich them, nor be grieved at their ruine, although his fall ſhould be the cauſe of it.

when the number of his months] That is, his months numbred by God. When God takes him out of the world at the time, that God hath ſet for that purpoſe. See on chap. 16.22. & 15.20. & 14.5.

is cut off in the midſt] To wit, from the reſt of the months, which he might have lived by the courſe of nature. A metaphor taken from weavers, who cut off the web from the threds remaining, Iſa. 38.12.

V. 22. Shall any teach God knowledge? ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high.] It might be objected, that it is not alwayes thus, neither doth God alwayes deal thus roughly with ungodly men, but ſometimes more mildly with them. Job anſwers, that God, whoſe wiſdom is far beyond ours, proceeds diverſly in his dealings with ungodly men. Some he permitteth to live long, and in abundance, and to die in in peace. Others he takes away with heavie and bitter judgement. Yet we that are low both in place and underſtanding, muſt not take upon us to cenſure Gods proceedings, who is high in both.

Shall any teach] Any man or Angell. Or, any ſuch as uſe to teach others. The nominative caſe included in the verb, as Gen. 50. 26. They embalmed Joſeph, that is, ſuch as uſed to embalme dead men, verſe 2. of that chapter. So here. Is there any ſo skilfull a teacher, that wil undertake to teach God? Men that diſallow of Gods proceedings, take upon them to be Gods teachers, Iſa. 40.13. & 45.9. Rom. 11.34. 1 Cor. 2.16.

God] See on chap. 8.3.5.

knowledge] Undertake to teach him, what to do, and how he ſhould govern the world.

ſeeing he judgeth] A Judge ſhould know what becomes him to do in all caſes. Ye diſparage Gods wiſdom by cenſuring his judiciary proceedings, who governs and judges all things.

thoſe that are high] We that are low muſt not cenſure God, who hath the higheſt authority, and judgeth thoſe that are higher then we, chap. 34.13, 17, 18, 19. Gen. 18.25. Rom. 3.5, 6. If he be fit to govern Angels, that dwell on high in heaven, much more to governe men here below, as he doth, verſe 23, &c. Eccleſ. 5.8.

V. 23. One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet.] Now he comes to ſet out by examples Gods various dealings with ungodly men. So that it hath gone well with the one of them, and ill with the other, both in life and death. And yet both of them alike bad.

One] Heb. This man, as if he had pointed to ſome one eminent wicked man whoſe proſperous life, and quiet death their eyes had been witneſſes of. See the like expreſſion, chap. 13.28. & 19.26.

dieth] His proſperity continues without interruption, till he die. He never feels croſſes, nor loſſes, nor feebleneſſe all his life long.

in his full ſtrength] Heb. in his very perfection. Or, in the ſtrength of his perfection. In the higheſt degree of earthly felicity.

being wholly at eaſe] Proſperous in eſtate, and healthfull in his body, and peaceable in mind.

and quiet] See on chap. 16.12.

V. 24. His breaſts are full of milke, and his bones are moiſtned with marrow.] An allegoricall deſcription of the higheſt proſperity. He is like a fat cow, that gives ſtore of milk. He abounds in health and wealth, in goods of body and eſtate. He is fat, rich, and well liking. He hath ſtore of riches, and pleaſures.

his breaſts] Or, milk-pails. So it may either ſet out plenty of ſtrength or riches.

are full] Himſelf hath abundance of health and ſtrength, or his cowes give abundance of milk to fill the pails. For the word, ſee on chap. 15.2.

of milk] He is as healthfull or proſperous, as a cow, whoſe dugs are full of milk. Or literally, his cowes yeeld abundance of milk, and ſo enrich him.

are moiſtned] Heb. watered. There is an elegancy in the originall, His bones is watered. That is, every one of them. Not a bone wants moiſtneſſe.

with marrow] The word imports outward fatneſſe, as well as inward moiſtneſſe. For where the bones are full of marrow, there the fleſh growes fat. It may be underſtood of a thriving body, or eſtate, or both. In ſuch a flouriſhing condition many a wicked man continues, while he dies.

V. 25. And another dieth in the bitterneſſe of his ſoul, and never eateth with pleaſure.] As ſome wicked men live comfortably, and lye quietly, ſo ſome others dye full of ſorrow and heavineſſe, having never had any ſmack or taſte of the pleaſures and commodities of this life.

And another dieth] Heb. and this. As if he pointed to another wicked man, who lived and died in anguiſh, and miſery. See on verſe 23.

in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule] Heb. with a bitter ſoule. In a ſad condition of ſpirit, and full of ſorrow. Having been afflicted all his life, he dies with extraordinary pangs. Bitter things are diſpleaſing to the palat, ſo are ſorrows to the mind, chap. 3.20. 2 King. 4.27. For the word, ſoule, ſee on chap 14.22. & 7.11. & 10.1.

and never eateth with pleaſure] Or, never enjoyeth any good. He was ſo full of troubles, all his life long, that he could never make one quiet meal, or take any content in what he did eat. Or, never eateth of good. He affords not himſelf any part of any good thing he enjoyeth. So ב is taken, Prov. 13.16. For the word, Eateth, ſee on chap. 15. 34. upon the word, Conſume. For the word, Pleaſure, ſee on verſe 13. of this chapter upon the word, Wealth. The ſame words which are here uſed in the originall, are there uſed alſo.

V. 26. They ſhall lie down alike in the duſt, and the wormes ſhall cover them.] Though there be great unlikelineſſe, and inequality between theſe ungodly men in this life, yet death makes them equall. They lie both of them in the grave, and are clothed with worms, chap. 5.18, 19.

they ſhall lie down] See on chap. 14.12.

alike in the duſt] See on chap. 17.16. & 14.8. & 16.25, & 20.11. & 10.9. A periphraſis of the grave.

ſhall cover them] It may be the one of them, who lived and died in plenty, had curious apparell, while he lived, but now in the grave the worms will crawle on him, and cover him, till they have eaten him up, Iſa. 14.11.

V. 27. Behold I know your thoughts, and the devices, which ye wrongfully imagine againſt me.] When Job had thus in generall confuted the opinion of his friends, of the unhappy life and death of wicked men, as if they alone, and alwayes were ſubject to ſuch calamities, he now particularly denies, what his friends did tacitly inferre thereupon againſt him, becauſe of his miſeries, and againſt his children becauſe of their violent death, verſe 27, 28. I know that out of your diſputes about Gods proceedings with ungodly men your aime is to conclude both me, and my children to be wicked men. But it will appear by my former anſwer, that you wrong us, and miſunderſtand Gods dealing with the ungodly, which is various, as I have ſhewed unto you.

Behold] What I ſay is a certain truth, and ſhews Gods wonderfull proceedings to be farre above mans reach. See on chap. 1.12.

I know your thoughts] He doth not mean, that he knew their thoughts certainly, and immediately, for that is Gods prerogative, but by their diſcourſe he could gueſſe at their intentions. So a wiſe man can do, Prov. 20.5.

and the devices] The originall מזמות word ſometimes ſignifies thoughts in generall, or purpoſes, as chap. 17.11. Sometimes evill thoughts and devices to hurt others. As Prov. 12.1. & 14.17. And ſometimes ſubtile thoughts, whereby men wiſely foreſee things to come, as Prov. 1.4. & 3.21. Here it is taken for evill devices to hurt Job.

which ye wrongfully imagine] Which ye conceive againſt me injuriouſly to take away my good name, and comfort, as theeves take away mens goods violently, and unjuſtly, Zeph. 3.4.

againſt me] Or, concerning me.

V. 28. For ye ſay, where is the houſe of the prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked?] Some take theſe words as ſpoken of wicked men in generall, as if Job had ſaid, Ye think ye have confuted my opinion ſufficiently in bidding me to ſhew, where are the habitations of former tyrants and ungodly men. And if I cannot, then ſurely God hath deſtroyed them by his judgements, and will do ſo with all other ungodly perſons. But it is rather to be underſtood more particularly of Job and his children, whom they deemed to be wicked men, becauſe of Gods judgements upon them. So in the former verſe, he chargeth them with miſchief imagined againſt himſelf.

For ye ſay] Or, Becauſe ye ſay. Or, When ye ſay. Or, How ye ſay. For the word אמר ſee on chap. 16.1. It is likely that Job intends, they thought ſo, and gathered it out of ſome former paſſages of theirs, for theſe very words are no where to be found before.

where is the houſe of the prince] Some underſtand of Jobs own houſe, and the words following of his childrens. Others of his eldeſt ſons houſe, which was blown down, chap. 1.18, 19. and the words following of the younger brethrens houſes. How ere it be, it cannot be underſtood of their materiall houſes, for none was deſtroyed, but the eldeſt brothers. But it muſt be meant of their family, and princely port, which was now gone. For the word בית an houſe, ſee chap. 15.28. For נדיב in the primary ſignification of it imports, a liberall or bountifull perſon. And ſecondarily becauſe princes ſhould be ſuch, it ſignifies a prince. So here.

and where are the dwelling places of the wicked] Heb. the tent of the dwelling places of the wicked. Their curious tents fit for many to inhabit. For אהל a tent, ſee on chap. 5.24. & 11.14. upon the word, Tabernacle: For, The wicked, ſee on chap. 3.17.

V. 29. Have ye not asked them, that go by the way? and doe ye not know their tokens?] Here Job begins to anſwer to the words attributed to his friends in the two former verſes, and confutes them by the teſtimony of paſſengers.

Have ye not asked] Sure ye ſhould have asked. They could have informed you. Or, Cannot ye aske? ye might eaſily be reſolved of the truth of what I have ſaid, if ye pleaſed but to ask.

them that go by the way] Such as in their travells have obſerved ſuch things, and ſeen the flouriſhing eſtate of many a wicked man, and are skilfull by their obſervations of Gods proceedings with ſuch. Or, every mean man, that goes by the way ſide ſuddenly taken up at all peradventure could inform you of this truth. And therefore it is a wonder, that ſuch wiſe men as you, ſhould be ignorant of it. For עבר ſee on chap. 14. 20. For דרך See on chap. 16. 22. & 17. 9. But here it is taken properly for a travellers way, and not figuratively, as in thoſe places.

and do ye not know their tokens] Some take it as a metaphor from travellers, who uſe to ſet up marks by the way to inform others, that they might not erre, where the way divided it ſelf into ſeverall parts. Others from the notes that travellers uſe to take in their journies of things remarkable. Some underſtand it of ſuch tokens, as travellers could give of the remainders of Jobs houſe, and his childrens. Others of thoſe examples they could give of rich wicked men, who lived and died in peace, as Job had affirmed, and his friends denied. They could name perſons, times, and places to confute you. So he overthrowes what Zophar had ſaid, Chap. 20. 7, 8, 9.

V. 30. That the wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction; they ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath.] In this verſe, and ſo forward to the laſt, he tells what thoſe things were paſſengers uſed to obſerve and report to otherrs concerning the proſperous life, and quiet death of many ungodly men. To wit, that they are not puniſhed here according to their merits, but ſhall be in the world to come, Prov. 16. 4. yet the whole verſe may better be read thus. That at the day of deſtruction the wicked is kept back, and they are carried out in the day of wrath. This tranſlation ſuites well with the following verſe. And the ſenſe is, that wicked men of all others are leaſt ſubject to outward calamities, and that they are often ſpared, when the teſtimonies of Gods wrath are rife, and almoſt every where to be ſeen upon the earth.

That the wicked is reſerved] Or, kept back, That is, preſerved, and kept out of common calamities. So the word is uſed, 1 Sam. 25. 39. Or, ſpared. As 2 King. 5. 20.

To the day] Or, in the day. So this particle is uſed, Zech. 7. 3. for the word, ſee on chap. 14. 14.

of deſtruction] See on chap. 18. 12.

they ſhall be brought forth] Or, carried out. As it is uſed. verſ. 32. and chap. 20. 19.

to the day of wrath] Heb. of wraths. Or, In the day of wrath. As before: It may be in the plurall to ſignifie extreme wrath, that is heavie, ſuch as God in his ſevereſt wrath uſeth to pour upon men in generall, and manifeſt judgements. It comes from a word, that ſignifies to paſſe or go beyond ones bounds. Not that God in anger ever goes beyond his: but to ſignifie Gods fierce anger, ſuch as mans is, when he is tranſported beyond all bounds and limits of reaſon.

V. 31. Who ſhall declare his way to his face? and who ſhall repay him, what he hath done?] Neither is it any marvell that the wicked man eſcapes often, when others are afflicted. His riches and power are ſo great, that no man dare reprove him to his face for his ſins, or puniſh him for the injuries which he hath done. It may be, many have cauſe to grumble at him for private injuries, but they dare not out outwardly expreſſe it.

who ſhall] None dare tell him of his faults. All are afraid of him. None dare appear as a witneſſe againſt him in judgement, or ſit on the bench to condemn him. Here he contradicts what Zophar had ſaid, chap. 20. 27. the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.

declare] Set his wicked life before him ſo plainly, that he might ſee his ungodlineſſe in their words, as in a glaſſe. So much the word imports, ſee on chap. 15. 18.

his way] His wicked courſe of life, ſee on chap. 16. 22. & 17. 9.

to his face] Many may mutter behind his back, but his countenance is ſo terrible, that no man dare come into his preſence to tell him his faults. See on chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance.

and who ſhall repay him] God lets him alone here in his wickedneſſe, and no man dare ſtirre him.

what he hath done] See on chap. 14. 9. upon the word Bring forth. Who dare puniſh him for his wicked actions: Others read it thus, And he doth what he liſt, and who ſhall repay him?

V. 32. Yet ſhall he be brought to the grave, and ſhall remain in the tomb.] This verſe may be better read thus, Yea he is brought to the grave, and remaineth in the tomb. Wherein ye ſay, if God ſpare a wicked man all his life long, yet he will be ſure to bring him to his end by ſome exemplary judgement, it is farre otherwiſe, for many a wicked man lives plentifully, dies quietly, and is buried honourably.

yet ſhall he be brought] He ſhall be carried forth in pomp to be buried in a ſtately faſhion, and not brought forth to the block or the gallows as he did deſerve. For the word ſee on verſe 30. and chap. 10. 19.

to the grave] Heb. to the graves. That is, to ſome one of the graves, ſee on chap. 7. 9. & 16. 1.

and ſhall remain] Heb. ſhall watch. That is, he ſhall abide as quietly in the grave, as a watch-man, that ſtands ſtill in his watch-tower, and looks about him, Others underſtand it thus, he ſhall regard nothing but his tomb. That is, he ſhall forget all things in the world, and feel no pain in his body. See on chap. 24. 22. Others thus, If he had ſenſe, he would watch over his tomb, leſt any man ſhould rob him of his quiet eſtate there. Others thus. Some other ſhall be ſet to watch over him, when he is dead, that no man offer any violence to his dead carkaſſe, ſo farre was he from a violent death. The firſt ſenſe is the plaineſt, and ſuits well with the verſe following.

in the tomb] Heb. over the heap. The word properly ſignifies a ſhock of corn, in which many ears are gathered together like ſtones in an heap, chap. 5. 26. So graves uſe to have a heap of earth laid on the top of them, much like to a ſhock of corn in the field, or an heap in a barn.

V. 33. The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet unto him, and every man ſhall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.] There is no difference between the ungodly man and others in regard of the body in life, death, after death, while it lies in the grave. He lives as plentifully, dies as honourably, ſleeps as quietly in his grave, as the beſt of men do, chap. 24. 24.

The clods] The mould that fills up the grave.

of the valley] Where graves are made for the moſt part. For the word ſee on chap. 20. 17.

ſhall be ſweet unto him] An action of a living man attributed to a dead; to ſhew how free the wicked is from all trouble in the grave. Even as free as a man that reſts quietly in his bed, and fears no ſtorms, In his life he felt trouble, now he feels none.

and every man ſhall draw after him] It is not peculiar to him alone to dye; others alſo muſt draw out their dayes toward the grave. Or, he ſhall draw every man after him] intimating that there is as great a neceſſity for other men to dye, as if the dead man were alive, and ſhould draw them with cords after him to the grave. Or imperſonally, every man ſhall be drawn after him. Not intimating by whom, as chap. 3. 3.

as there are innumerable before him] Heb. and there is no number before him] That is, of thoſe that went before him to the grave. Many go before him to the grave, and many follow him. Thus predeceſſours and ſucceſſours are ſet out, chap. 18, 20. Eccleſ. 4. 16.

V. 34. How then comfort ye me in vain, ſeeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood?] He concludes now that as he hath confuted their diſputations, ſo he may juſtly reject their conſolations For their diſputations were full of falſhood, and their conſolations ſuch as could no way aſſwage his grief, chap. 16. 2. They ſought to condemn him for a wicked man, becauſe of his afflictions, which was a falſe ground: and perſwaded him to repent of his ill led life, which was not the right way to comfort him.

How then] Seeing I have diſproved your tenets, why do ye ſtill proceed to deal thus with me?

comfort ye me] Do ye my friends ſeek to cheer me up in ſuch a falſe way?

in vain] With empty words, or without ſolid grounds. Afford me ſuch comfort, as will not ſtand, or abide, Or, why do ye diſcourage me inſtead of encouraging me?

ſeeing in your anſwers] In your diſcourſes by way of anſwer to my arguments.

there remaineth] As I have proved your arguments to be falſe, ſo ye have not taken off my objections againſt them: and therefore I muſt ſtill judge them to be ſo for ought you have ſaid to the contrary.

falſhood] There is no truth in what ye have ſaid. O, Tranſgreſſion. Ye have gone beyond the rule of truth, and equity. Or Prevarication. Ye have dealt doubly with God, and with me, Ye have undertaken to clear his juſtice, and have limited his authority, as if he might not proſper wicked men here, and puniſh them only in another world, caap. 13. 7. Ye have made me believe, ye came to comfort me, and ye have altogether diſcouraged me, Numb. 23. 11.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſe 1. THen Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered and ſaid] This is Eliphaz his third and laſt conflict with Job, wherein thoſe things which he indirectly charged him with before, now he chargeth home, and particularly upon him, and ſo ſhewes plainly that in all thoſe harſh ſpeeches againſt ungodly men before he aimed at Job himſelf, though he did not expreſſe ſo much before: yet being puzled with Jobs arguments, like a bad diſputant, he repeats what he had ſaid before in ſubſtance, chap. 4. & 5. & 15. yea his ſpirit is come for farre as to put Job in hope of proſperity upon repentance which he did not do, chap. 15. Eliphaz alwayes begins, either becauſe he was eſteemed wiſeſt, and ſo the reſt gave place to him: or elſe becauſe they would keep their turns as they did in the firſt conflict, and no man ſpeak twice together, that ſo every one might be heard in his courſe, or becauſe he was more ancient then the reſt, as ſeems to be intimated by his modeſt ſpeech, chap. 15. 10. Eliphaz not onely repeats his former grounds, and grows more bitter, as the reſt alſo did in their ſecond conflict with Job, but he only directly accuſeth Job of a wicked life, and rips it up in particulars, as appears ver. 5. of this chapter, &c. and by their double diſputes before, and Bildads third, chap.25. The neareſt they came to him, was to ſtrike at him in generall in thoſe evills they threaten to wicked men, as chap.4. 8. &c. or by gathering ill concluſions out of his paſſionate ſpeeches now, which were nothing to his former life, as chap. 11. 4. &c. or by grating upon his children, as chap. 8. 4. But now Eliphaz falls directly upon himſelf, and reckons him among wicked men. In this ſpeech of his, 1. note a reprehenſion of Job to verſe 21. 2. an exhortation to repentance from thence to the end of the Chapter. In the reprehenſion, 1. he labours to cut off all hope of pleading with God from Job to verſ. 5. 2. he enumerates the groſſe ſins, which he ſuppoſed him guilty of, from thence to verſ.12. 3. he charges him with certain abſurdity gathered out of his former ſpeeches, from thence to verſe 15. 4. he indeavours to confute him out of his own argumens, chap. 21. 14, 15, and that from verſ. 15. of this Chapter, to verſe 21.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap.16.1.

V. 2. Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelſe?] What means this Job, that thou ſtandeſt ſo much upon thine own uprightneſſe; Thou wouldeſt have men to think, that God is greatly beholding to thee for thy integrity aud juſtice, ſo that he may ſeem to have done thee wrong in dealing thus hardly with thee. But thou art deceived, if thou ſuppoſe that God can reap any benefit or commodity at mans hand. Nay doubtleſſe, but if any man do well and wiſely, the good and profit redoundeth to himſelf.

Can] So the future is tranſlated, chap. 8. 11. and the meaning is, Certainly he canoot profit God, chap.35. 6,7,8. Pſal.16. 2,3. Luke 17. 10.

a man] Though he be never ſo ſtrong or ſtout, for ſo much the derivation of the Hebrew word imports, ſee on chap.14. 10.

be profitable] Adde any thing to God to make him better or happier. No man can do it, for God is perfectly holy and happy.

unto God] See on chap.8. 3,5.

as he that is wiſe] Or, but he that is wiſe. So the Particle כי is tranſlated chap.9.18. And then the ſenſe may be, Though a man can do no good to God by his good actions, yet it is not in vain to do good, for a wiſe man may much benefit himſelf by his diſcreet carriage Deut. 10,13. Prov.9.12. The word that here is tranſlated wiſe, ſometimes ſignifies proſperous, for good ſucceſſe uſeth to follow men of prudent carriage.

may be profitable unto himſelfe] See before on this verſe, for the word is the ſame, that was before. Others read the latter end of the verſe thus, Or if it may be profitable doth his good ſucceſſe depend thereon? But the former reading is better, as anſwering beſt to the ſcope of the place, and agreeing beſt with that which follows in the next verſe.

V. 3. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makeſt thy wayes perfect?] Can thy vertue and godlineſſe (if thou canſt prove thy ſelf a godly man, which ſure thou canſt not) do God any pleaſure? will it bring him any joy or delight which before he wanted? or will any gain thereby ariſe to the Almighty, who in himſelf and of himſelfe is moſt happy and perfect? Sure it cannot.

Is it any pleaſure] The word חפץ ſometimes imports liking of a thing, and taking content in it, Pſal. 16. 3. Sometimes it imports an addition of joy and comfort to one, that had none before, chap. 21. 21. So it is taken here. Thy righteouſneſſe cannot adde any joy to God. He wants none.

that thou art righteous] See on chap.9. 20.

or is it gain to him] The word ſignifies profit or increaſe of wealth, ſuch as tradſemen get by labour, and merchants by travell. God can have no wealth added to him, who owes all already, Pſal.24. 1.

that thou makeſt perfect] That is, ſincere, and upright; for no mans wayes on earth are anſwerable to Gods Law, ſee on chapter. 1. 1.

thy wayes] See on chap.16.22. & 17.9.

V. 4. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgement?] As thy righteouſneſſe cannot adde any good to him, ſo thy wickedneſſe cannot hurt him, that he ſhould contend with thee, and take thee away, as corrupt Judges do malefactors, leſt they ſhould accuſe them, or do them any harm. Others read it thus, Would he reprove thee for thy religion? would he come into judgement with thee? Here can come no good to God, if thou wert a righteous man, but thou art farre from it. God would not deal thus harſhly with thee, if thou didſt fear him. But thou haſt given him juſt cauſe to proceed ſo ſeverely with thee, becauſe thou hadſt led a moſt ungodly life, verſ. 5. Thus he removes the falſe cauſe and ſets down the true cauſe, as he conceives of Jobs afflictions. And this interpretation agrees well with the preceding and following ſentence, and the words will bear it.

will reprove thee] Really by laying ſuch ſore afflictions upon thee. So the word is uſed for reall rebukes or ſtroakes, Pſal.39. 11.

for fear of thee] As thou ſeemeſt to intimate, chap.7. 12. Or, for thy religion. See on chap.1.1. & 4.6. & 15. 4.

will he enter with thee] Heb. come. See on chap.15.21. Pſal.143.2.

into judgement] The Hebrew word משפט ſignifies 1. the Law by which judgement is to be given, and ſo Gods word, which is the ſupreme Law, Pſal.19.9. 2. the ſuit or caſe to be tryed in judgement, Numb. 27.5. 3. the ſentence paſt in judgement, 2 King. 25. 6. 4. the crime or cauſe of that ſenteuce, Jer.49.12. 5. the puniſhment inflicted by vertue of that ſentence, 2 King.20.40. 6. juſtice which ought to be in every ſentence, Pſal. 146. 7. 7. the inſtrument of executing the ſentence, or judgement, Ezek. 14. 21. 8. the judiciall Law of God, Mal. 4. 4. 9. wiſdome, and diſcretion, which are very needfull in judgement: Iſa.30.18. 10. moderation, which is very requiſite in judgement, Jer. 10. 24. 11. righteous promiſes, Pſal. 119. 1, 6. 12. the right, cuſtome, or manner of doing a thing, which requires judgement, Judg.13. 12. 13. the form or ſhew of a perſon, or thing, 2 King.1.7. 14. right or title to a thing. Deut. 18.3. 15. a pattern according to which a thing is to be made, Exod.26. 30. Here it is taken in the fift ſenſe for the puniſhment. God would not have puniſhed thee ſo ſeverely if thou hadſt been a godly man. And then it is ſame, which was expreſſed in other words in the beginning of the verſe, and ſhews Eliphaz his confidence, though he were in an errour, As if he had ſaid, I am ſure God would not have dealt thus with thee, if thou hadſt been pious.

V. 5. Is not thy wickedneſſe great? and thine iniquities infinite?] Here Eliphaz ſets out Jobs ſins in generall in this verſe, and in particular his deeds of cruelty and pride, verſe 6,7,8,9. and ſhewes that theſe are the cauſes of his miſerie, verſ. 6. 10,11. In this verſe Eliphaz ſeems to ſpeak to this purpoſe, What ſhould I need to uſe many words, O Job, to convince thee of the juſtneſſe of thy ſufferings, when as the very matter it ſelf ſheweth thy wickedneſſe to have been ſo great, as that thou didſt never ceaſe to commit ſin? Marvel not therefore at the greatneſs and durableneſs of thy afflictions, for it is but anſwerable to thy ſins, which have been great and endleſſe.

Is not] He cunningly takes it for granted, as if Job had confeſſed it. Thou canſt not deny but art convinced in thy ſoul, that thy wickedneſſe is very great, although thou ſetteſt a good face upon the matter before us.

thy wickedneſſe] See on chap. 20. 11.

great] The word ſometimes ſignifies much, but here it ſignifies great, for he accuſeth Job of great ſins in the verſes following. And the multitude of his ſinnes charged on him in the end of this verſe.

and thine iniquities] See on chap. 7. 21.

infinite] Heb. There is no end of thine iniquities] Whereby is not only intended, that he was guilty of many ſins, but alſo that he would have made no end of oppreſſing others, if God had not laid this heavie affliction upon him. For the word ſee on chap. 16.3.

V. 6. For thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing.] It ſeems in the fourth chapter that Eliphaz had a little better opinion of Job, then now he hath. For there conceives, that he made ſome ſhew of piety, though he might diſſemble: but here he makes him an open prophane wicked man. In this verſe he taxeth him with extreme cruelty both to kindred, and poor, whom men uſe moſt of all to pity. But he was ſo far from clothing them, that he took away their clothing from them.

For] Theſe particulars, which now I ſhall repeat, will prove thy ſins to be very great.

thou haſt taken a pledge from] Taken his goods to pawn, or apparell, as follows in this verſe, Exod.22. 26,27. Deut. 24. 6,10.

for nought] See on chap. 1.9. Here lay the firſt fault. It was not a ſin to take a pledge, nor to take it of a brother, but to take it without a juſt cauſe, where nothing was due, or elſe the debt was paid, and yet the pawn detained.

and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing] Heb. and ſtript off the clothing of the naked. Spoyled them, taken all away from them, clothes and all, and left them like a beaſt without a skin. For ſo much the word imports. For בגד a garment ſee on chap.6. 15. upon the word Deceitfully. Thou haſt taken away the garments of poor men for debt, and left them naked. Thoſe that are now naked were made ſo by thee. Or, Thoſe that had but mean apparell, which could ſcarce cover their nakedneſſe, and ſo were naked in compariſon of others, thou haſt ſtript off that poor habit. So unmercifull and cruell waſt thou to the poor. So ſome interpret that place, Deut. 28.48. This is the ſecond ſin to take away the poor mans garment, and lay him open to cold and nakedneſſe.

V. 7. Thou haſt not given water to the weary to drink, and thou haſt withholden bread from the hungry.] Now followes the third ſin of cruelty, not affording to ſuch as needed it, the meaneſt drink or meat.

Thou haſt not given drinke] Thou couldeſt not afford the poore a draught of drink.

water] Thou wouldeſt not give ſo much as a cup of cold water, which was ready at hand, eaſie to be gotten, and of little coſt, or none at all, much leſſe a cup of wine. So chap.14.4. Not one, that is, not ſo much as one. For the word ſee on chap.14.9.

to the wearie] To him that being weary with labour or travel, was very thirſty, and ready to periſh for want of it, to whom it had been very acceptable, and not coſtly to thee, Prov.25.25. Iſa.21.14.

thou haſt withholden] Thou hadſt it to ſpare, but wouldſt not give it, ſee on chap.20.13. upon the word Keep.

bread] Thou wouldſt not part ſo much as with a bit of bread. For the word ſee on chap.15.23.

from the hungry] From him, that was ready to ſtarve for want of it, as men in a famine are wont to do. So much the word imports. And this argued extreme covetouſneſſe and cruelty to let men periſh for want of a little relief, Iſa.58.7.

V. 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it.] Some interpret theſe words as an accuſation of pride in Job, who ſhould be meant to be this honourable man, who by his might had rooted out his poor neighbours, that he might have all to himſelfe. But rather Eliphaz accuſeth Job of groſſe partiality, who deſtroyed the poor every where, whom by his might he could oppreſſe, and ſpared none, but ſuch as he durſt not meddle withall for their might and greatneſſe. And this is the fourth fault here objected to Job. It agrees well with the foregoing and following words. And it argued crueltie alſo, for he would have deſtroyed the rich and great ones alſo, if he had durſt.

But] So this particle is tranſlated, chap.14. 10.

as for the mighty man] Heb. the man of arme. That is, a man of ſtrength or might, who is rich and able to defend himſelf againſt thee. So a man of lips is a man full of talk, chap. 11. 2. Riches are gotten by the arm by labouring or fighting, and by the ſtrength of the arme men oppreſſe others, and take away their goods, chap.35. 9. & 38. 15. For the word, Man, ſee on chap. 1. 1. The word זרוע Arme is taken, 1. for the member of the body, which we ſo call, Pſal.18. 34. 2. for ſtrength which is exerciſed by the arme, or wealth gotten thereby, Pſal. 37.17. So it is taken here.

he had the earth] Or, he had the land. Heb. the earth (or, land) was his. Thou didſt oppreſſe weak ones, and ſpare the ſtrong and wealthie. For the word, ſee on chap.9. 24. & 15.19.

and the honourable man] Heb. eminent or accepted for countenance. He that had ſtrength or wealth, or other outward endowments, Lev. 19. 15. 2 King, 3. 1. Iſa.3.3. & 9. 15. Deut. 16. 19. For the word נשא ſee on chap. 21.3. upon the word, Suffer. For Countenance, ſee on chap. 14. 20.

dwelt in it] Lived quietly there, not moleſted by thee, as meaner men were. The word ישב ſignifies, 1. to ſit down, as chap.2. 8. 13. 9. to abide, or remain, or endure, Pſal.102.12. 3. to dwell in a place, Gen.13.12. 4. to ſit in ſtate on a throne, 1 King. 1. 17. Here it is taken in the third ſenſe, as it is tranſlated. See Pſal. 37. 3.

V. 9. Thou haſt ſent widowes away empty, and the armes of the fatherleſſe have been broken.] Here are the two laſt ſinnes which are charged upon Job, unmercifulneſſe to widowes, and oppreſſion of orphans: two crying ſins, Exod. 22.22. Deut. 27. 11. Pſal. 94 6. Some underſtand this of denying juſtice to widowes, and oppreſſing the fatherleſſe in judgement. But it may better be underſtood of Jobs unmercifull and unkind carriage toward them in his own dealings with them, as the reſt of the crimes objected are.

widowes] Such as have loſt their husbands, who ſhould provide for them. It comes from a word that ſignifies to be dumbe, for widowes are ſad and ſilent.

empty] Without giving them any relief if they were poor, Or, becauſe they had no husbands to defend them, thou haſt taken away their goods, and turned them out of dores with nothing to maintain them, Ruth 1.21. Luke 1. 53. The word ריקם ſignifies, 1. emptie, as 1 Sam.6.3, 2. without a cauſe; Pſal. 25. 3. Here it is uſed in the firſt ſenſe, as the tranſlation ſhews.

and the armes[The ſtrength wherewith they defend themſelves, 2 Chron. 32. 8. thou haſt taken away all their meanes, and left them poor, becauſe their parents were gone, who ſhould defend them. See on verſ. 8, of the fatherleſſe] Now by the widowes and fatherleſſe he may meane all miſerable and helpleſſe perſons, as well as thoſe that have loſt parents or husbands: ſo the word is uſed, chap.6.27. Lam. 5.3.

have been broken] By thee, thou haſt taken away all help from them. The verb ſingular with a noun plurall intimates the breaking of each arm, or both arms, and rendring them utterly helpleſſe. For the word ſee on chap. 19. 2.

V. 10. Therefore ſnares are round about thee, and ſudden feare troubleth thee] Now Eliphaz ſets out the miſeries, that he conceived would befall Job for thoſe ſins, which he had laid to his charge. And that by four ſimilitudes: two in this verſe, and two in the next. The firſt is taken from a beaſt, that hath ſnares laid for it on every ſide by the hunter, ſo that it can hardly eſcape. The ſecond from a man frighted with ſome terrible judgement ſuddenly and unexpectedly ſeizing on him, which he ſees no way to reſiſt, & third from a man in danger in the dark night, that knowes not which way to turn to avoid it, but may fall into a pit, or the enemies hand, while he flies for ſafetie. A fourth from a floud or deluge covering living creatures, and drowning them without diſtinction or mercie, Iſa. 24. 17, 18. Jer, 48. 43, 44. Lam.3. 47.

Therefore] Becauſe of theſe forementioned ſins.

ſnares] Troubles brought upon thee by the cunning devices of men, that lye in wait to deſtroy thee, or brought upon thee by Gods own hand. See on chap.18. 8, 9, 10. & 19.6.

are round about thee] So that that thou art in danger, which way ſoever thou turneſt thee, and no way likely to eſcape.

and ſudden fear] Some terrible object comming unexpected, and preſently overthrowing thee, Prov.3.25. For the word, Fear, ſee on chap.15. 21.

troubleth thee] See on chap.4.5. & 21.6.

V.11. Or darkneſſe that thou canſt not ſee, and abundance of waters cover thee.] The other two ſimilitudes to ſet out the depth of thoſe miſeries, which would befall Job for his ſins, as Eliphaz thought, are ſet down in this verſe.

or darkneſſe] Some great miſerie and trouble will ſeize upon thee, Iſa.8. 22. For the word, ſee on chap.15. 22, 23.

that thou canſt not ſee] So that thou canſt not diſcern any comfort at all, or way of eſcaping out of it. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 27.

and abundance] The word properly ſignifies a multitude of troubles comming ſuddenly and furiouſly upon him, as waters in a floud, ſo that he could not eſcape.

of waters] Of troubles. So the word is uſed, Pſal.32.6. & 18. 16. & 66.12. & 69. 1. Iſa.43.2. For the word, ſee on chap.14. 9.

cover thee] All over, ſo that thou ſhalt be drowned in them, and utterly deſtroyed. Here is a gradation in this verſe and the former. It may be, a man may eſcape ſnares, and not be taken, troubled with ſudden fears, and not ruined, run away in the dark, and ſcape an enemy, but there is no way to eſcape a floud, when the waters ſuddenly overwhelm a man. So that it appears, that Eliphaz gives Job as a loſt man paſt all hope of recovery.

V. 12. Is not God in the height of heaven? and behold the height of the ſtarres, how high they are,] Here he begins to charge Job with abſurdities gathered out of ſome ſpeeches of his. Belike thou thinkeſt that God cannot take notice of thy ſins to puniſh them, becauſe he is ſo farre remote from the earth, and as it were ſo ſhut up in heaven that he cannot diſcern things done here below. And then the words are ſpoken by Eliphaz, but in the perſon of Job. And this interpretation agrees well with the two following verſes. Yet thay may be ſpoken by Eliphaz in his own perſon checking Job for not making the right uſe of Gods great Majeſty in heaven to be afraid of ſinning againſt him, but rather encouraging himſelf thereby to ſin, as if God were therefore ſo farre abſent, that he could not take notice of mens iniquities here to puniſh them. This he chargeth Job with in the next verſe.

Is not] Sure he is.

God] See on chap.4. 9. & 11.5.

in the height of heaven] In the higheſt heaven where the angels are, and above theſe viſible heavens, where the ſtarres are. See on chap.11.8. & 9. 8.

and behold] See on chap.19.27.

the height of the ſtarres] Thou ſeeſt how high they are; but God is much higher. Heb. the head of the ſtarres. God is above the higheſt of them. The head of a man is the higheſt part of his body. See on chap, 19.9. & 20.6.

how high they are] As being in the middle heaven the higheſt things that our eyes can reach, Obad verſe 4: yet God is higher, in the third and higheſt heaven.

V. 13. And thou ſayeſt, How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?] He reproveth Job as if he denied Gods providence, and affirmed that God could not ſee things done here upon earth. Peradventure becauſe he had ſpoken ſo much before of Gods proſpering wicked men, Eliphaz thought that Job conceived that God did not ſee their wicked wayes, which if he did, he would not ſo proſper them.

And] Or, Therefore. Thou makeſt this wicked concluſion out of Gods high glory in heaven, to deny his providence on earth. So this particle is tranſlated, chap.35. 16.

thou ſayeſt] Thou thinkeſt ſo, as I gather out of thy confuſed ſpeeches of Gods providence, For the word, ſee on chap. 16.1.

How] How can it be that God ſhould know what is done here below? So מה is tranſlated, chap. 25. 4. Or, what. He knowes nothing at all of things done here below.

doth God] See on chap.3.5.

know] Perceive or take notice of things done here.

can he judge] Can he diſcerne things done on earth, that he may puniſh men for their ill deeds? Sure he cannot. Thus Eliphaz would make Job to ſpeak as Atheiſts doe, Pſal. 10. 12. & 73. 11. & 94. 7.

through the dark cloud] We cannot ſee through the clouds to diſcern Gods glory in heaven: how then can he ſee us through them, they are ſo dark?

V. 14. Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of heaven.] There are ſo many impediments of ſight between God and us, and ſuch dark clouds, that God cannot diſcern through them, what we do, or if he could, yet he will not, as having enough to do, and content enough in heaven above.

Thick clouds] Heb. clouds. Thick is added as included in the derivation of that name, which in the originall is taken from a word ſignifying thickneſſe. And indeed they are the thickeſt and darkeſt part of heaven by reaſon of the waters lodged in them.

are a covering to him] Heb. an hiding place. But it is well expreſſed by a cover. An hiding place keeps others from ſeeing us, a cover keep us from ſeeing other things. The meaning is the clouds hinder God from ſeeing mens ſins. A wicked ſpeech, and falſely fathered upon Job.

that he ſeeth not] See on chap. 19. 27.

and he walketh] He findes enough to do in heaven, and needs not meddle with earthly things below. Or, he hath ſo much pleaſure there, that he takes no care of us here. The word imports a conſtant imployment, Chap. 1.7. & 2. 2.

in the circuit] The word properly ſignifies a circle made to keep things within compaſſe, Iſa. 44. 13. So God made a circle for the earth, Iſa. 40. 22, and for the ſea to keep it within its bounds, Prov, 8. 27. So for the heaven here, which is conceived to be circular, and ſpherical. Some underſtand it of guiding the Angels in the higheſt heaven. Others of ordering the ſtars in the middle heaven. Others of a circle to keep God in, ſo that he can meddle with nothing below, as Atheiſts imagine.

of heaven] See on Chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

V. 15. Haſt thou marked the old way, which wicked men have troden ?] Some underſtand this verſe (wherein Eliphaz confutes that Atheiſtical opinion he had attributed to Job verſ. 13.) in general thus. If thou O Job hadſt but obſerved Gods conſtant dealing with the ungodly, thou wouldſt have perceived, that God did ever take notice of ungodly men, and deſtroyed them for their ſins. But it may better be underſtood of thoſe ungodly men that lived before the flood, and were deſtroyed in the flood for their wickedneſſe, verſ. 16. And ſo Broughton reads it, Haſt thou marked the way of the old world ? It was ſufficient to mention this Deluge being freſh in memory, whereby it appears that Job lived before the deliverance out of Egypt, becauſe he mentions the creation, and the flood, but not that deliverance, which had he known it, would have afforded him an excellent argument to prove that godly men might be in great affliction, as the Iſraelites were in Egypt, and his friends a plauſible argument, that God uſeth to deſtroy wicked men for their ſins, as he did the Egyptians in the red Sea. Eliphaz his argument from the Flood ſtands thus, God did then deſtroy all thoſe ungodly men of the old world for their wicked courſes. Therefore though he be in heaven, yet he takes notice of mens ſins here to puniſh them.

Haſt thou marked] See on Chap. 7. 12. 20. & 10. 14.

the old way] Heb. the way of old: that is, of the ungodly men before the Flood, how wickedly they lived. Haſt thou obſerved their courſe, and what became of them ? For the word Way, ſee on Chap. 16. 22. For the word עולם It comes from a word that ſignifies to hide, becauſe the ages paſt or to come are hidden from us. And 1. it ſignifies a time paſt, or of old, Iſa. 57. 11. Jer. 2. 20. & 28. 8. 2. A time to come, and laſting long, Numb. 10. 8. For ever there, is for a long time: for now thoſe trumpets there mentioned are of no uſe. 3. Eternity properly ſo called, without beginning or ending, Pſal. 41. 13. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

which wicked men] Heb. mortals of iniquity. For Mortals, ſee on Chap. 19. 19. For Iniquity, ſee on Chap. 15. 35.

have troden] Wherein they have conſtantly walked, and made paths to be ſeen by others by their often treading them.

V. 16. Which were cut down out of time, whoſe foundation was overflowne with a flood.] Having ſet down the ſins of the old world in the former verſe, now he ſets down their deſtruction.

Which were cut down] Or, which grew full of wrinkles. Either becauſe old age crept on them before they were aware; or elſe becauſe their bodies bring drowned in the flood the fleſh conſumed, and the skin wrinkled. The word is uſed onely here, and Chap. 16. 8.

out of time] Heb. and not time. That is, before their time. By the courſe of nature they might have lived longer, had not the flood drowned them, Pſal. 55. 23. & 102. 24. Eccl. 7. 17. Job 15. 32.

whoſe foundation] Whoſe life was ſoon gone: or whoſe wealth and proſperity upon which they built themſelves, and which made them carry themſelves ſo arrogantly, and ſeemed to be ſo firmly founded, as if it could never be removed: or the earth upon which they trod, which upheld them as a foundation. For upon all theſe was the flood poured, and they were overflown, or overthrown by it. Heb. a flood was poured upon their foundation.

was overflowne] All over-covered, ſo that they and all the beaſts and birds out of the Arke died, Gen. 7. 10, 20, 21.

with a flood] Heb. a river. All the World was like one great river having plenty of water, and running ſwiftly, and overflowing all.

V. 17. Which ſaid unto God, Depart from us: and what can the Almighty do for them ?] They were grown ſo wicked, that they caſt off all fear of God and true religion, and baniſhed God out of the world, and therefore deſerved to be deſtroyed by the flood.

Which ſaid unto God, Depart from us] Theſe are the ſame words, that Job had ſpoken of ungodly men, Chap. 21. 14. See the interpretation of them all there. Thus they think to cut Jobs throat with his own ſword, and confute him with his own words. But they bring them to a far other end. Job ſpake them as an effect of the proſperity of ungodly men in themſelves breeding ſecurity, and impiety in them. Eliphaz brings them here as a neceſſary cauſe, why God ſhould alwayes deſtroy ungodly men by ſome notable judgement, though they proſpered for a time.

and what can the Almighty do for them] Some interpret theſe words as ſpoken by Eliphaz, expreſſing the thoughts of the ungodly ones before the flood. And then the ſenſe is, they thought God could do no good for them, and therefore they would not ſerve him, but follow their own luſts. And the words had been plainer if thus tranſlated, and asked, what the Almighty could do for them. Others interpret theſe words as if Eliphaz did expreſſe his own thoughts concerning Gods juſtice in ſending the flood upon them, and read it thus, and what ſhould the Almighty do unto them ? This may agree with the words before. What ſhould he do with them that had caſt him off, but drown them with a flood ? But it agrees not well with the following words, yet he filled their houſes with good things. For then the ſenſe ſhould be, He might juſtly have deſtroied them, but he did not. Like Pſal. 78. 38. But this is not true here, for God did deſtroy them with a flood. Others take it as Eliphaz his aggravation of their ſin what cauſe had they to forſake God who never did them hurt, but had done them much good, as follows, verſ. 18. what cauſe had they to complain of God ? See the like, Iſa. 5. 4. Jer. 2. 31. Mic. 6. 3. And they read it thus, and what had the Almighty done to them ?

The firſt interpretation is the beſt, and the ſenſe this; They forſook God upon an opinion, that he could do them no good, yet they had received many good things from him. This anſwers well to Chap, 21. 15.

and what] See on verſ. 13.

can] See on Chap. 8. 11.

the Almighty] See on Chap. 8. 3. & 15. 25.

do for them] What good could he do for ſuch wicked men ? Or, do unto them. What evil ſhould he do to them ? No miſery was bad enough for them.

V. 18 Yet he filled their houſes with good things: but the counſel of the wicked is farre from me.] Eliphaz doth two things in this verſe, firſt he clears God againſt that falſe accuſation laid upon him by the wicked world before the flood, that he could do them no good, and ſhewes that they had no cauſe to ſay ſo, for he had done them much good. Secondly, he ſecretly taxeth Job of hypocriſie for affirming that he hated the wayes of wicked men, Chap. 21. 16. and yet continued in them, as he ſuppoſed, adding that himſelf might ſay ſo much better then Job, who had really forſaken their wicked wayes and courſes 2. and did foretel their deſtruction, whereas Job had flattered them with hope of continuance of their proſperity to their dying day.

Yet] So this particle is tranſlated, Pſal. 119. 109, 110.

he filled] God gave them abundance of worldly goods, Act. 14. 17. He ſtuffed their houſes up to the top with all manner of good things. Prov. 1. 13. He accuſeth them of great ingratitude, that contrary to the cuſtome of men would ſpeak ill of God, who had done them ſo much good. And it may be he caſts Jobs former proſperity and unthankfulneſſe, (as he conceived) in his teeth. For the word, ſee on Chap, 15. 2.

their houſes] Their dwelling places, for there men uſe to keep their ſtore about them. See on Chap. 15. 28.

with good things] Heb. with good, That is, with riches, houſholdſtuffe, food, and other neceſſaries, which are good, if well uſed. For the word ſee on Chap. 21. 13. upon the word Wealth.

but] So the word is tranſlated, Chap. 14. 10. Or, therefore. Far be it therefore from me, that I ſhould once harbour in my breaſt any one thought of theſe profane perſons, for whom God hath done ſo much, and yet they caſt him off.

the counſel of the wicked is far from me] Then was he a bleſſed man, Pſal. 1. 1. Theſe words Job had ſpoken after a long repetition of the proſperity of ungodly men, affirming that for all their wealth he abhorred their wayes. See the expoſition of all theſe words, Chap. 21. 16.

V. 19. The righteous ſee it and are glad: and the innocent laugh them to ſcorn.] Some interpret theſe words in general of the joy that good men have in all ages, when they ſee the ungodly of the world conſumed by the judgements of God. Others particularly of Noah and his ſons rejoycing when they ſaw the wicked of the old world drowned, and themſelves preſerved. And theſe latter read the words thus, The righteous ſaw it and were glad; and the innocent laughed them to ſcorn.

ſee it] See on Chap. 19. 27. upon the word Behold.

and are glad] See on Chap. 21. 12. upon the word Rejoyce. They are not glad of the deſtruction of men conſidered in it ſelf, but that God gets glory, and his people eaſe by their deſtruction, Pſal. 58. 10. & 107. 42. Others read it, Let the righteous ſee it, and be glad.

and the innocent] See on Chap. 17. 8.

laugh them to ſcorn] Derides their vain confidence, when he ſees their miſerable end. Others read it, And let the innocent laugh them to ſcorn.

V. 20. Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down; but the remnant of them the fire conſumeth.] Theſe words are variouſly interpreted. Piſcator takes them to be ſpoken in the perſon of Noah, whom he takes to be the innocent man mentioned, verſe 19. and addes Saying in the beginning of this verſe. As if Noah coming out of the Arke ſhould ſay, God had preſerved him and his, and in his wrath deſtroyed the ungodly. Others take it to be ſpoken of Noah, but not in his perſon, and that Eliphaz reckons himſelf among them that eſcaped the flood, becauſe he counted himſelf godly as Noah was. Others conceive, that Eliphaz looked towards Sodom, and acknowledged Gods mercy in ſparing the Edomites, and not deſtroying them with fire and brimſtone as he had done the Sodomites. Others take it for a prophecy of the preſervation of the godly to the end of the world, and the deſtruction of ſinners then by fire. But it may better be interpreted of other preſervations of the godly, and deſtruction of the wicked in Eliphaz and Jobs time, and peradventure of the continuance of Eliphaz and his companions, family and goods, when Jobs children and goods were ſtrangely deſtroyed; and ſo it may well depend on the former words, and make way for them that follow, as if he had ſaid, Thou knoweſt well O Job, how God deſtroyed the ungodly of the old world with a flood, and yet ſpared Noahs family: and thou as well as we have ſeen many families of ungodly men deſtroyed, yea thine own, when ours and ſuch other godly mens are preſerved. Therefore now it is high time that thou quickly return to God by repentance leaſt he deſtroy thee, as he hath done thy children, verſ. 21.

Whereas] Or rather. Though. As it is tranſlated, Judg. 13. 16. Though we be ſpared, yet the ungodly are deſtroyed continually.

our ſubſtance] Our life, which makes us to ſubſiſt and ſtand up in the world. Or, our eſtate which upholds mens lives.

is not cut down] See on Chap. 4. 7. upon the word Cut off, and on Chap. 15. 28. upon the word Deſolate.

but] Or, yet. See on verſ. 18. of this Chapter.

the remnant of them] Of ſuch wicked men who are like thoſe ungodly ones who were drowned in the flood. God doth not onely deſtroy ungodly men, but their ſeed alſo. Thus the word is taken for poſterity, 2 Sam. 21. 2. Or, their excellency, ſee on Chap. 4. 21. And by their excellency may be meant their wealth, and honour, wherein they excelled others, and which made them more regarded then others.

the fire] For the various ſignifications of the word, ſee on Chap. 18. 5. Here it may be taken literally, for no doubt but Job and Eliphaz had ſeen many wicked men, and their goods deſtroyed by fire. And Job loſt ſome of his cattel by fire from heaven, which it is likely Eliphaz here aimed at. Or it may be underſtood of ſome conſuming judgement which God in his anger ſent upon wicked men, as Chap. 20. 26. Pſal. 78. 21.

conſumeth] Or, hath conſumed. For he ſpeaks of things already done. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 34. on the word Conſume.

V. 21. Acquaint now thy ſelfe with him, and be at peace: thereby good ſhall come unto thee.] Eliphaz having endeavoured to terrifie Job from evil wayes by threatnings before, now he labours by promiſes to perſwade him to be reconciled to God by true repentance. And firſt he ſhewes him the way in this verſe, and the next, and ſecondly the benefits of the way. And that 1. In general, reſtitution of proſperity and comfort, verſ. 23. 2. In particular. 1. Outward wealth, verſe 24. 25. 2. Inward comfort, verſ. 26, 27, 28. 3. Meanes to do good to others, verſ. 29, 30. In this verſe he ſecretly intimates that Job had been eſtranged from God by a wicked life, and ſo had found little peace. And therefore perſwades him to alter his courſe, that it might go well with him.

Acquaint thy ſelfe] This word הסכן in this conjugation is uſed but twice beſides in the Scripture. In the one place, Pſal. 139. 3. it ſignifies knowledge of a thing. In the other, Numb. 22. 30. it ſignifies uſe and cuſtomable converſe with one. Here it may be a perſwaſion of Job to get more knowledge of God, or to walk more carefully in his wayes.

now] Now thou heareſt what miſchiefs have befallen ungodly men, for want of acquaintance with God. Or, I pray thee, ſpeaking gently to him to mollifie his former ſharpneſſe and make his counſel go down the better. So Phyſitians ſweeten bitter pils; ſee on Chap. 13. 18.

with him] To wit, with the Almighty, verſ. 23. So the antecedent is taken out of the following words, Pſal. 87. 1, 2. & 116. 1.

and be at peace] So ſhalt thou be at peace, ſee the like phraſe, Pſal. 37. 3. The meaning is, This is thy way to recover thy former proſperity, ſee on Chap 5. 24. & 9. 4. & 12. 6. Or, thou ſhalt be in a ſafe condition: ſo the word is uſed, Chap. 21. 9. Others take it for an exhortation to reconciliation to God. Reconcile thy ſelf to him.

thereby] Heb. by them. That is, by acquaintance with God, and reſtauration of thy peace and ſafety. Upon theſe will follow riches.

ſhall come unto thee] From God. He ſhall make thee proſper. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 21.

V. 22. Receive I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.] Job might object and ſay, How ſhall I know how to get and keep acquaintance with God? Eliphaz anſwers, By laying up Gods law in thy heart.

Receive] Learn it of him. The maſter gives, when he teacheth: the ſcholars receive, when they learn. See on Chap. 15. 12. on the word Carry away.

I pray thee] See on verſ. 21. of this Chapter, upon the word Now.

the law] Some underſtand it of Moſes Law, which they conceive, was then newly written. But it is more likely that Job lived before Moſes; ſee on verſ. 15. of this Chapter, and on Chap 1. 1. By the law therefore muſt be meant ſuch inſtructions in matter of faith and life, as God was pleaſed to communicate by revelation to the Patriarchs, and they by tradition to their children. It comes from a word that ſignifies to rain, or ſhoot, and metaphorically to teach. For good precepts are dropt in by little and little like rain, and faſtned in the heart, as an arrow ſhot into the fleſh. The word is ſometimes uſed for any inſtruction, though by man, but here for ſuch as comes from God originally.

from his mouth] As godly men have taught thee, and as it came originally from God. See on Chap. 15. 5.

and lay up] Heb. put. Not onely receive inſtruction from God, but keep it ſafe, as treaſure to be uſed upon all occaſions.

his words] Such as godly men have communicated to thee from God.

in thine heart] Pſal. 119. 11. Luk. 2. 19. 51. For the word ſee on Chap. 15. 12.

V. 23. If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built up, thou ſhalt put away iniquity farre from thy tabernacles.] If thou being acquainted with God, and receiving, and keeping his law within thee ſhalt alſo return unto him by true repentance, thou ſhalt recover thy former proſperity: and if thou leave thy wicked wayes, thou ſhalt grow rich, verſ. 24.

If thou return] See on Chap. 15. 13. upon the word Turneſt. Here it is underſtood of repentance, which is a returning from ſin to God.

thou ſhalt be built up] The ruins of thy former proſperity ſhall be repaired, and thy eſtate more wealthy and proſperous then it was. A metaphor from repairing or building houſes, Mal. 3. 15. Are ſet up. Heb. Built. Others underſtand it of having many children again, as the word is uſed, Gen. 16. 2. & 30. 3. Ruth. 4. 11. For the word ſee on Chap. 20. 19.

thou ſhalt put away far] Or, if thou put away far, &c. Then thou ſhalt get gold, verſ. 24. It is not enough to remove away iniquity, but it muſt be ſo far alienated from our affections, that we entertain no thought of returning to it, Chap. 11. 14.

iniquity] See on Chap. 13. 7. on the word Wickedly.

from thy tabernacles] See on Chap. 5. 24. & 11. 14.

V. 24. Then ſhalt thou lay up gold as duſt, and the gold of Ophir, as the ſtones of the brooks.] Thou haſt been a man much addicted to gold, and uſed much indirect means to get it, verſ. 6, 7. If thou wilt return to God, thou ſhalt have plenty of it, which thou mayeſt take comfort in, as coming from Gods bleſſing.

Then] When thou haſt repented of thy miſlead life, and reformed it. So this particle is tranſlated, Chapter 13. 12.

ſhalt thou lay up] Heb. lay up, without, ſhalt: the imperative for the future, as Pſal. 37. 3.

gold] Golden coin or riches. The word בצר ſignifies 1. A defence, ver. 25. 2. Gold, Chap. 36. 19. becauſe it is the worldly mans defence. So here.

as duſt] In abundance as the duſt of the earth. Or, above the duſt, that is, more then the duſt of the earth. An hyperbolical expreſſion of great wealth. So על is uſed Chap. 23. 2. Or, upon the duſt. As it is tranſlated, Pſal. 24. 2. Or, beſide the duſt. As Pſal. 1. 3. By or beſide the rivers of water. For the word Duſt, ſee on Chap. 14. 8.

and the gold of Ophir] That comes from Ophir, 1 King. 9. 27, 28. & 10. 11. & 22. 48. Thence uſed to come excellent gold, and therefore the word is put for choice gold here. For the word Gold ſet before it is not in the Original.

of the brooks] Or, of the valleys. See on Chap. 20. 17. This is diverſly interpreted. Some render the ſenſe of it thus. Thou needeſt not build caſtles on hills to ſecure thy wealth: it ſhall be ſafe enough in the valleys, and low places. But this argues ſafety rather then plenty. Others thus, Thou ſhalt have ſuch plenty of gold, that thou mayeſt cover houſes and palaces with it, if thou wilt. But it is rather a preferring of Jobs future condition upon his repentance far above his former proſperity. Thou ſhalt have far more riches then ever thou hadſt, as much or more then the duſt of the ſtreets, and ſtones of the brooks or valleys, 2 Chron. 1. 15. & 9. 27.

V. 25. Yea the Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver.] As thou ſhalt attain to plenty of riches, ſo thou ſhalt keep them ſafe, for God will not take them away from thee any more, but he himſelf will defend thee, and encreaſe thy ſtore daily.

Yea] God who is better then all gold, will defend thee: This is a greater favour then to have ſtore of Gold. Thus this particle is uſed, Chap. 5. 19.

ſhall be thy defence] Heb. defences. That is, ſtrong defenſe, ſtronger then many Caſtles. See on verſ. 24. Or, thy gold, Thy beſt treaſure, in which thou ſhalt take moſt delight, as verſ. 26. His favour and bleſſing ſhall be better to thee, then all the treaſures of the world.

and thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver] Heb. ſilver of ſtrengths. That is, ſtrong ſilver, which hath power to defend thee againſt all thine adverſaries. For money is the ſinews of war. The word for Silver comes from a word that ſignifies to deſire, becauſe all men deſire mony, and it can help them to all worldly comforts they do deſire. 1. כסף ſignifies ſilver in the oare, heap or wedge, as Hag. 2. 8. 2. When it is joyned with words of number, it ſignifies ſilver coin, or money made of ſilver, Gen. 23. 16. So here. For the word Plenty, or of ſtrength, ſome underſtand by it ſtore of money, becauſe the more a man hath, the ſtronger his eſtate is, and the more likely his continuance. But it may be underſtood of money ſimply without reſpect of ſtore, and ſo it anſwers well to the beginning of the verſe which ſpeaks of ſafety, whereas the former verſe ſpake of plenty.

V. 26. For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and ſhalt lift up thy face unto God.] Eliphaz and his companions had before plyed Job with temporal promiſes; now he brings ſpiritual ones, which neither he, nor any of his fellows had done before. And this is the higheſt of ſpiritual favours to enjoy God.

For] A proof of that which went before. God who gives thee plenty of comfort in himſelf, will not deny thee the creature for thy content and delight.

then] There is in this particle both an elegancy, and an oppoſition. Then when thou haſt reformed thy wayes, and not till then. Then thou mayeſt make account to find that comfort in God, which thou never didſt find in him before and till then, it is in vain to think of it. Thus he ſets out the good that comes to men by godlineſſe, and puts all ungodly men out of hope to attain it.

ſhalt thou have thy delight] Heb. ſhalt thou delight thy ſelfe. Thou ſhalt not onely be ſuſtained by God, as others are, but find ſpecial delight, and ſingular pleaſure in him.

in the Almighty] See on Chap. 8. 3, 5. and ſhalt lift up] See on Chap. 21. 3.

thy face] See on chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance. Thy countenance, which is now caſt down with grief, and fear, by reaſon of thy afflictions, thou ſhalt then lift up with boldneſſe, and comfort, even to God himſelf, chap. 11. 15.

unto God] See on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

V. 27. Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him, and he ſhall hear thee, and thou ſhalt pay thy vowes.] In this verſe and that which follows are ſet out the benefits, which the godly obtain of God by faithful prayer, to wit, audience, granting their deſires, eſtabliſhing their purpoſes, proſperity in their wayes.

Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him] The word ſignifies to pour out many words in prayer, and make many ſupplications. Yet God will hear them all.

and he ſhall hear thee] That is, when thou prayeſt then God will hear thee. See the like phraſe in the notes on chap. 14. 11. For the word Hear, ſee on chap. 13. 17.

and thou ſhalt pay thy vowes] God ſhall give thee thoſe favours or that freedom, which thou didſt ask of him, when thou madeſt vowes unto him in the time of thy diſtreſſe. So ſhalt thou have cauſe to pay thy vowes with cheerfulneſſe. His purpoſe is not here to call on Job to perform his vowes, when God ſhould proſper him, but to aſſure him that God would grant all his deſires upon his repentance. He mentions vowes, becauſe godly men uſed then to joyne vowes to their prayers, Gen. 28. 20. Pſal. 66. 13, 14.

V. 28. Thou ſhalt alſo decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee; and the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes.] God will not onely hear thy prayers, and give thee the things thou prayeſt for, but whatſoever elſe thou ſpeakeſt of, or purpoſeſt to go about, God will give it good ſucceſſe.

Thou ſhalt alſo decree] The Heb. word גזר ſignifies, 1. To cut a thing into two pieces. As 1 King. 3. 25. 2. To decide or determine a thing. To ſeparate it from another, and reſolve.

A thing] Which is to be done. As here. a word, or a decree. That is, any thing whatſoever thou determineſt to be done, ſhall be done.

and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed] See on chap. 14. 12. It ſhall be firm, or effected; for then are purpoſes and words eſtabliſhed, when they are brought to action, Iſa. 7. 7. & 8. 10. & 14. 24. 46. 10. Numb. 30. 4.

unto thee] Thou ſhalt but ſpeak the word and it ſhall come to paſſe. So ready is God to hear and help thee. Or, For thee. God will preſently effect it for thy good.

and the light] Good ſucceſſe ſhall attend upon all thy actions, which ſhall bring joy unto thee. Gods favour and bleſſing ſhall be upon all thy endeavours. See on Chap. 17. 12.

ſhall ſhine] God ſhall proſper thy endeavours as the Sun ſhining upon the earth ripens the fruits thereof. His bleſſing ſhall come forth upon thee like the morning Sun, ſee on Chap. 18. 5.

upon thy wayes] See on Chap. 17. 9. All thy actions ſhall proſper.

V. 29. When men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay, There is lifting up: and he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.] In the concluſion of this Chapter Eliphaz aſſures Job, that if he repent, and leave off murmuring againſt God, he ſhall not onely be free of that dejected condition, in which now he was, but alſo be exalted when others are caſt down, and prevaile with God for mercy for others alſo.

When men are caſt down] When God ſhall throw down wicked and ungodly men. Or, When they are caſt down. That is, thy wayes, verſ. 28. Or, Though thy wayes be caſt down. Though now thou be in a low condition, yet thou ſhalt be very high. So כי is tranſlated, Pſal. 44. 19.

thou ſhalt ſay] See on Chap. 16. 1. Thou ſhalt be confident of recovery, and exaltation. Or, thou ſhalt pray confidently to God for it, and make no doubt of being heard, and he ſhall anſwer thee accordingly, and deliver, and exalt thee.

there is a lifting up] Thou ſhalt confidently expect it in thy miſery. Or, thou ſhalt be delivered, and then mayeſt boldly ſay, thou art exalted. See other ſignifications of the word, Chap. 20. 25.

and he ſhall ſave] God ſpoken of verſ. 26, 27. He that will not regard the proud will ſave the humble, Jam. 4. 6. 1 Pet. 5. 5. He will deliver them out of their miſery and make them proſper.

the humble perſon] Heb. him that is low of eyes. It is likely he means Job himſelf who was now in a low condition. And miſery makes men aſhamed, and to look downward, whereas proſperity makes men take courage, and look upward. He aſſures Job, that upon his ſubmiſſion God would reſtore him to a great height of proſperity.

V. 30. He ſhall deliver the iſland of the innocent: and it is delivered by the pureneſſe of thine hands.] Moreover if thou cleanſe thy ſelf from iniquity, and walk uprightly, God will deliver thy neighbours amongſt whom thou liveſt, upon thy prayers from the dangers threatned againſt them for their ſins. So thou ſhalt not onely do good to thy ſelf, but to others alſo.

He ſhall deliver the iſland of the innocent] The man in a low condition upon repentance ſhall not onely eſcape out of miſery himſelf, but alſo by his prayer delivers all his neighbours. Or, the innocent ſhall deliver the iſland. The ſenſe is the ſame. Or, he ſhall deliver him that is not innocent. So good men by their prayers ſometimes turn away Gods judgements from the wicked and ungodly, Jer. 5. 1. Gen. 18. 32. Exod. 32. 11. 14. For the word, Innocent, ſee on Chap 17. 8.

and it is delivered] The Iſland, Or, He. That is, the innocent man.

by the purneſſe] It ſignifies an exact cleanneſſe, ſuch as is in gold purged from droſſe, or in garments cleanſed with ſope. Such is in a good man, that makes conſcience of avoiding all kinds of ſin.

of thine hands] Of thy works. God will reward thy good actions not onely with doing good to thee, but to others alſo for thy ſake. For the word Hands, ſee on Chap. 16. 17. For the change of the perſon, of thine hands, before he ſpake in the third perſon: ſee the like, Chap. 8. 20, 21. And it is likely Eliphaz did it of purpoſe here to make Job underſtand that he meant him, as it is very probable, that Bildad did there. Others underſtand it of lifting up the hands in prayer for others. Thou ſhalt deliver them by thy prayers holding up pure hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. And then it anſwers well to the former verſes. And ſo Job by Gods own appointment did deliver his three friends from Gods anger conceived againſt them, chap. 42. 7, 8, 9.

CHAP. XXIII.

V. 1. THen Job anſwered and ſaid,] In this Chapter and the next Job anſwers Eliphaz his large Oration. In this Chapter he defends himſelf againſt Eliphaz, who had in the former Chapter charged him with many grievous offences. In the next he confutes his opinion of Gods certain ruining wicked men in this world. This Chapter (though many interpret it in favour of Job, as if he onely cited his friends to Gods judgement-ſeat out of confidence of relief there) is ſpent in charging God to deal too hardly with him, as appears all the Chapter over, where he never charges his friends with any thing, but charges God all along. 1. With laying upon him things that he could not ſufficiently complain of, verſ. 2. 2. In denying him audience, to verſ. 10. 3. In puniſhing him as he doth wicked men, though he knew him to be godly, and ſhould find him ſo in the end. From verſ. 10. to verſ. 13. 4. In being inexorable, and not leaving off to afflict him, verſ. 13, 14. Then he ſhews the greatneſſe of his fear, and the grounds of it in the three laſt verſes of the chapter.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter: my ſtroak is heavier then my groaning] As if Job had ſaid, Thou art deceived, O Eliphaz, if thou thinkeſt, that thy words can make me hold my peace. Thou dealeſt very unequally with me, who interpreteſt my complaints to be rebellion againſt God, as Bildad alſo objected rage unto me (chap. 18. 4.) ſeeing my plague is greater then can be expreſſed by any ſighs or words. Thou doſt rather hereby enforce me to ſhew how greatly my minde is troubled, and diſtracted: as alſo to renew thoſe my wonted complaints, which cannot any way be anſwerable to the greatneſſe, and grievouſneſſe of my miſery; neither do I complain ſo much, as I have cauſe; much leſſe am I to be blamed for exceſſe in my complainings.

Even] Notwithſtanding your words my ſorrows are not allaid. I have as much cauſe to complain now as ever. Or, Notwithſtanding my words, whereby I have ſhewed my juſt cauſe of complaining, yet ye count my juſt complaints rebellious againſt God to this very day. For the word ſee on chap. 16. 4.

to day] At this very time. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 14. & 15. 23.

is my complaint] See on chap. 21. 4.

bitter] I complain of heavy afflictions, which are very bitter unto me: and no wonder then if I complain bitterly. It is bitter to me, that feel what I complain of, and to you, that cannot endure to hear it, nor will not pity me. See on chap. 13. 26. Or, is rebellion. That is, you account it ſo notwithſtanding my many proteſtations, and juſtifications, becauſe ye ſtill miſinterpret my words, and gather wrong concluſions out of them.

and my ſtroak] Heb. my hand. That is, the ſtroak which Gods hand hath given me, or the plague which he hath inflicted upon me. See on chap. 15. 23.

is heavier] More troublſome, for weighty things are troublſome to the body. See on Chap. 6. 3.

then] So this word ſignifies. See the notes on Chap. 22. 24. Ye think me very impatient, and that I complain more then I have cauſe; But ye are deceived. I have reaſon to complain yet more heavily. Or, upon my. The more I complain and ſigh, the more I am ſmitten.

my groaning] Or, my ſighing. Chap. 3. 24. He intimates how cruel his friends were to him, that would not allow him ſo much as to ſigh in his extream pain: but counted him rebellious againſt God for ſo doing.

V. 3. O that I knew where I might finde him! that I might come even to his ſeat!] He ſpeaks of God here after the manner of men. Judges appoint certain places, where to ſit in judgement to hear all cauſes, where all men, that are wronged may come and plead for themſelves and be righted, 1 Sam. 7. 16, 17. So Job here truſting to the equity of his cauſe deſires to appear before God, making no doubt but he could clear himſelf before Gods judgement-ſeat. And ſo he might againſt his friends, and the things they laid to his charge. But Jobs fault here is, that in his eagerneſſe to clear himſelf, he forgets to charge his friends, and reflects too much upon the Judge in his complaints, as denying him audience, and handling him too harſhly.

O that] Heb. who will give. The ordinary forme of wiſhing among the Hebrews intimating their own inability to accompliſh it, and great deſire of it, ſo that they would accept of it of any one that could give it. See on chap. 6. 8. & 11. 5.

I knew] That ſome one would acquaint me, where God is to be found.

where I might finde] See on Chap. 17. 10.

Him] God. He doubted not, but his friends knew well enough, whom he meant. See on chap. 20. 23.

that I might come] Or, then would I come. Or, go. As the word ſignifies, Jon. 1. 3. An argument of a much diſtempered ſpirit in a great affliction. I would ſpare for no labour, but go on to the remote parts of the world, that I might plead my cauſe with him, chap. 13. 3. & 31. 35. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 21.

even to his ſeat] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to prepare. I would not be afraid to go to his very throne, or ſeat of judgement prepared for him. Too bold a ſpeech for a mortal creature, and Job is reproved by God for it, chap. 38. 2. & 40. 2.

V. 4. I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.] In this verſe and the next Job ſets out the manner of proceeding in judgement. The plaintiff brings forth his bill, and the defendant his anſwer.

I would order] See on chap. 13. 18.

my cauſe] Heb. the judgement. See on chap. 22. 4.

before him] Heb. to his face. That is, in his preſence. I would ſhew what hard meaſure I endure. For the word, Face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word, Countenance.

my mouth] See on chap. 15. 5.

with arguments] Whereby to prove, that I am wronged. Arguments on both ſides pleaded in judgement come under this word. See on chap. 13. 6. on the word, Reaſoning.

V. 5. I would know the words, which he would anſwer me, and underſtand what he would ſay unto me.] I deſire much to know what reaſon God would give, why he handleth me more ſharply then other men which yet I cannot imagine what it ſhould be.

I would know] Or, I ſhould know.

which he would anſwer me] See on chap. 16. 1.

and underſtand] Or, conſider.

what he would ſay unto me] For the word, Say, ſee on chap. 16. 1.

V. 6. Will he plead againſt me with his great power? No, but he would put ſtrength in me.] I confeſſe if God ſhould uſe his almighty and invincible power againſt me, he would eaſily ruine me: but I am confident he will not ſo deal with me, but will bring forth his arguments againſt me, and let me plead with him in his court of Juſtice, and then I doubt not but to clear my ſelf.

Will he plead againſt me] Heb. Will he plead with me. For they that plead with men in law, plead againſt them. For the word Plead, ſee on chap. 13. 3, 6.

with his great power] With his Almighty power. For the word, Great, ſee on chap. 22. 5.

No, but he would put ſtrength in me] It may better be read thus, no, but he would produce arguments againſt me. He would proceed with me in a legal, not in a violent way. This beſt agrees with Jobs ſcope going on in a way of pleading. So ב is uſed for againſt, chap. 19. 19.

V. 7. There the righteous might diſpute with him: ſo ſhould I be delivered for ever from my judge.] He ſhews his great confidence of clearing himſelf, if he might but have a free trial before God.

There] In ſuch a judgement, wherein God doth not terrifie me with his power, as corrupt Judges often do innocent men, chap. 9. 34, 35. & 13. 21, 22.

the righteous might diſpute with him] Or, I being righteous might diſpute with him. Or, I ſhould be found righteous, if I did diſpute with him. He makes no queſtion of proving himſelf righteous before God, that is, not an hypocrite, not one that ſhould be ſo ſorely afflicted more then other men. For the word Righteous, or Upright, ſee on Chap. 1. 1. For the word Diſpute, or Plead, ſee on Chap. 15. 3.

ſo ſhould I be delivered] Pronounced innocent, that now am handled like one nocent, being ſubject to many plagues.

for ever] The word ſignifies victory, and ſometimes eternity, which gets the victory over all time. I ſhould never be queſtioned more by God, nor thus afflicted as a guilty perſon.

from my Judge] From Gods condemning ſentence. In the agony of his ſpirit he looks upon God in the beginning of the verſe, as his accuſer, in the end of it, as his Judge. See the like, Pſal. 143. 2.

V. 8. Behold, I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him.] Job had a while intermitted his deſire, verſ. 3. of finding God to ſhew his confidence of ſpeeding well in that triall. Now he reſumes it, but withal ſhews, that his deſire is to no purpoſe, for God will not offer a trial, and he knows not where to find him. He may ſeek for him all the world over, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, and yet miſſe him. This is the ſum of this verſe and the next.

Behold] See on Chap. 1. 12. Or, If. See on Chap. 9. 11.

I go] For this word, ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth.

forward] That is, Eaſtward. The World in it ſelf hath no forepart, nor backpart: but man is conſidered as ſetting his face to the riſing Sun, which is the eye of the World. And then Forward is Eaſtward, Backward is Weſtward, Left hand is Northward, Right hand is Southward. Some take it for Eaſtward in reſpect of the Holy land: but Job could not mean ſo, for it was not in requeſt in his time, and he was more eaſtward then it, Chap. 1. 3. and muſt look weſtward towards it, but eaſtward to the riſing Sun.

but he is not there] Job knew that God is in all the world, but his meaning is, he will not appear to me there, that I may reaſon my caſe with him. Heb. and not he. I finde him not there, but ſeek him in vain, and loſe my labour.

and backward] That is, Weſtward. When a mans face is to the riſing Sun, the Weſt is behinde him.

but I cannot perceive him] Heb. underſtand him. That is, I cannot ſo ſee him, or perceive him, that I may reaſon with him.

V. 9. On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himſelf on the right hand, that I cannot ſee him.] It is true that God may be ſeen in his works in the Northerne parts of the world, which is more inhabited then the South. Becauſe more temperate, but I cannot find him there to reaſon with him: and I have leſſe hope to find him in the hot countries of the South, which are leſs inhabited, and Gods works leſſe ſeen in them. See more on Chap. 9. 9. on the chambers of the South.

on the left hand] Northward, See on verſ. 8.

where he doth work] More then in the ſoutherne part of the world, as before in this verſe.

I cannot [See on Chap. 22. 2.

behold him] So as I may have conference with him.

he hideth himſelf] He works not ſo much in thoſe parts, as in other parts of the world. It were in vain for me to travel thither to ſeek him, for he will not be found of me there, but will as it were of purpoſe hide himſelf from me.

on the right hand] In the Southerne parts of the world. See on verſ. 8. The word ימין ſignifies 1. The right hand, as Jer. 22. 24. 2. Strength which as it is moſt ſeen in the uſe of the hands, ſo eſpecially in the right hand, which in moſt men is readieſt for uſe, Exod. 15. 6. 3. Swearing, covenanting; for the one is done by lifting up the hand to God, Gen. 14. 22. and the other by joyning hands together, Prov. 11. 21. Now becauſe men do this for the moſt part with the right hand, therefore that act is ſet out by that word, Pſal. 144. 8. 4. It ſignifies the right ſide, 2 Sam. 24. 5. 5. The ſoutherne part of the world, Cant. 4. 16. So here.

V. 10. But he knoweth the way that I take, when he hath tryed me, I ſhall come forth as gold.] God knows that I have carried my ſelf uprightly, and if I could get audience of him, I ſhould come clear from the bar as gold doth out of the fire.

But] So it is tranſlated, Chap. 9. 18. Though I knew not where to find God, yet he knows where to find me, and what my wayes have been.

he knoweth] He perfectly underſtands it, which no man doth.

the way] The courſe of life, See on Chap. 17. 9.

that I take] Heb. that is with me.

when he hath tryed me] Not by afflictions, for that he had abundantly done, but in a judiciary way. When he hath heard what I can ſay for my ſelf. This interpretation agrees with the ſcope of the whole Chapter.

I ſhall come forth] Now I lie under hard cenſures of men, and God ſeems to think hardly of me by laying ſuch a load of ſorrows on me. If I could but get a fair hearing, I ſhould come out of this obloquy. For the word, ſee on Chap. 20. 25.

as gold] No droſſe of an ill-led life will cleave to me. I ſhall be freed from all ſcandals objected to me, and gliſter like pure gold coming out of the fire. My good name ſhall be precious. I ſhall appear loyall to God ; and righteous to men.

V. 11. My foot hath held his ſteps, his way have I kept and not declined.] Eliphaz had in the former chapter, verſe 22, &c. given Job good counſell to acquaint himſelf with God and learn of him and obey him. Now in this verſe and the next, Job ſhewes that he had ſo done, and kept cloſe to Gods wayes and followed him foot by foot, and ſo carefully obeyed him, that he had not at any time turned away from his precepts : but made great account of his words.

My foot] I have walked in them, I have conſtantly followed his ſteps.

hath held] Or, hath laid hold on. It is the proper action of the hand to lay hold on, becauſe it ſignifies keeping a thing faſt, and not parting with it, it may be applyed to conſtant walking after God, chap. 17. 9, See on the notes there.

his ſteps] Some take it for thoſe that God hath appointed for man to walk in them. Others for the wayes that lead to God. But the word is not ſo uſed elſewhere, but ſignifies Gods own footſteps. I have imitated God, and followed him ſtep by ſtep in thoſe things which I ought to follow him.

his way] The way in which he hath appointed me to walk in. So it is taken, chap. 21. 14.

have I kept] Obſerved, and walked in it. For the word, ſee on chap. 7. 12, 20. & 10. 14.

and not declined] Not gone aſide to the right hand nor to the left, in exceſſe or defect, Joſh. 1. 7. Pſal. 18. 21. & 44. 17, 18.

V. 12. Neither have I gone back from the commandement of his lips, I have eſteemed the words of his mouth more then my neceſſary food.] Here Job ſhewes by theſe ſeverall branches the great care he had to keep Gods commandements and goes in a gradation. Firſt he choſe that way. 2. He kept to it, and went on in it. 3. He went not aſide out of it, verſ. 11. 4. He went not backward at any time. 5. He was more carefull to do Gods will, then to look after his bodily food. The ſumme of this verſe is; I have taken ſo great delight in thoſe ordinances, which our fore-fathers receiving from his mouth have delivered unto us, that laying them up in the treaſure-houſe of mine heart, I have preferred them before whatſoever was requiſite, and neceſſary for the maintenance and preſervation of this preſent life.

neither have I gone back] The word ſignifies a quite leaving or forſaking a thing. But Job by a Meioſis means that he had carefully obſerved all Gods precepts. As if he had ſaid ; They that ſee my ſad condition would judge that I had caſt off all piety. But it is not ſo. I have made conſcience of every good duty.

from the commandement of his lips] From thoſe precepts, which God hath made knowne to me, as men make theirs knowne by their words, which come out of their lips. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 6.

I have eſteemed] Heb. I have hid or laid up. Becauſe thoſe things we eſteem highly, as gold, ſilver, jewels, we hide, leſt any ſhould take them away from us. So did Job hide Gods word in his heart, that he might not loſe it. Or, as houſe-keepers lay up proviſion for their family to bring forth in time of need. Pſal. 119. 11. Prov. 2. 1. & 7. 1. Job kept Gods words in his memory.

the words of his mouth] The ſame in ſenſe with the commandement of his lips, which was expounded before in this verſe. For Mouth ſee on chap. 15. 5.

more then my neceſſary food] Or, my appointed portion. Men cannot want daily food, and therefore treaſure it up. I took more pains to lay up Gods Word in my heart, then men do to lay up in ſtore proviſion for the belly, Prov. 30. 8. & 31. 15. Gen. 47. 22.

V. 13. But he is in one minde, and who can turn him ? and what his ſoule deſireth even that he doth.] Job in this verſe and that which followes, ſhewes much humane infirmity, and is therefore afterwards juſtly blamed both by Elihu, and by God himſelf. As if he had ſaid, Although my conſcience tells me, that I am innocent from ſuch great offences, as uſe to bring ſuch heavie judgements upon men, yet God will not be moved from his reſolution of dealing rigorouſly with me.

But he is in one mind] He is reſolved to lay a load of afflictions upon me, and continues in his purpoſe.

and who can turn him] None can alter his reſolution by power or perſwaſion, chap. 9. 12, 13. & 11. 10. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 13. Some read it thus, if he be againſt one, who can turn him ? That is, God hath conceived an implacable anger againſt me, and will not leave afflicting me, till I dye.

and what his ſoule] That is, himſelf. Spoken of God after the manner of men. Lev. 16. 30. Iſa. 1. 14. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 22.

deſireth] Whatſoever pleaſeth him, or whatſoever he will have done. There is no diſſwading of him.

even that he doth] He will certainly have his will, and bring it to paſſe, Pſal. 115. 3. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 9.

V. 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me : and many ſuch things are with him.] We ſee and feel by experience, that God will not be moved from what he intends to do : and therefore I have cauſe to expect many more ſuch afflictions from him, rather then any relaxation of theſe paines.

For] It will appeare in the end, that God will have his will, when he hath brought all the miſery upon me, with which he intendeth to afflict me. Or, Surely, As it is tranſlated, chap. 8. 6.

he performeth] No man can hinder him from performing the uttermoſt of his will upon me.

the thing thath is appointed for me] He will ſend all thoſe plagues on me that he hath reſolved to ſend, and will not ceaſe afflicting me till all be done. The ſame word was uſed for appointed or neceſſary food, verſ. 12.

and many ſuch things are with him] He hath not yet ſhewed all the evill he intendeth to me. He hath many more plagues yet to bring upon me. This cauſed the following fear in Job, as he confeſſeth in the next verſe.

V. 15. Therefore am I troubled at his preſence : when I conſider, I am afraid of him.] And this is it which doth trouble and amaze me greatly ſo often as I look upon Gods proceedings with me, and likewiſe conſider with my ſelf both the greatneſſe and alſo the long continuance of my miſeries, and ſee no likelyhood of an end. I have cauſe then to fear that God will goe on to uſe his great power to afflict me more and more till I die.

Therefore] I am not troubled with the conſcience of an ill-led life, as ye uncharitably conceive of me ; but frighted by Gods mighty power manifeſted in afflicting me more then others, I am troubled at my preſent calamities, and afraid of fiercer.

am I troubled] See on chap. 21. 6. I am ſo troubled that I would run away from it, if I could. For the word ſignifies haſte, as well as fear or trouble.

at his preſence] Heb. at his face. Or, becauſe of him. Or, for fear of him. For the word Face ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance.

I am afraid of him] See on chap. 22. 10.

V. 16. For God maketh my heart ſoft, and the Almighty troubleth me.] For my heart faileth me, and I am ſo troubled with the many miſeries God hath laid upon me, and the uncertainty of the end of them, that I have no ſtrength left to bear them, 1 Sam. 28. 20.

For] Heb. And. But it is tranſlated, For, chap. 17. 10. And ſo it may here. Ye marvell that I am ſo dejected. Ye ſhould not wonder at it, for God hath caſt me down.

God] See on chap. 8. 3, 5.

maketh ſoft] Maketh me ſo afraid and dejected, that like ſoft wax I am not able to bear his heavie blowes of affliction, but if they continue they will break me to pieces. So that Job here doth not by a ſoft heart mean a penitent or patient one, but one worne with afflictions, and able to bear no more. It was broken with ſorrows. As verſ. 17. It may be he meant, that God had taken away ſtrength within, and yet laid on load without.

my heart] See on chap. 15. 12.

and the Almighty] See on chap. 8. 3. 5.

troubleth me] See on verſe 15. of this chapter.

V. 17. Becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſſe, neither hath he covered the darkneſſe from my face.] Here he ſhewes the cauſe of his ſo grievous fear, becauſe there appeared no iſſue out of his troubles, which as he uſeth, he compares to darkneſſe. As if he had ſaid, I have juſt cauſe indeed to fear and tremble, becauſe God hath brought ſuch great troubles upon me, out of wkich I ſee no way of eſcaping.

Becauſe I was cut off] Deſtroyed by death, which is Gods executioner to cut off mens lives.

before] Heb. From the face of. So that theſe troubles might not have found me out, nor I ſeen or felt them, which I ſhould not have done, if God had killed me before. Others underſtand it thus, Becauſe theſe troubles have not yet made an end of me, but I muſt live to ſuffer more. And this he ſpeaks by way of wonder and admiration, that his poor carkaſſe could endure ſo much miſerie, and not ſink under it, See the like complaint, chap. 3. 20. & 10. 18.

the darkneſſe] The afflictions that now are upon me. I wiſh I had died, before they had come upon me. For Darkneſſe, ſee on chap. 15. 22, 23.

neither hath he covered] God hath not quite kept the darkneſſe of affliction from me as a thing couered, that I might not ſee evill or feel ſorrow. Heb. and he hath, &c. But the negative particle is to be taken out of the former part of the verſe, as it is Pſal. 1. 5. And ſo to be read as before. Some read it affirmatively, and underſtand a keeping of him from death, which would have ended all his ſorrows. As chap. 3. 23. & 6. 8. So death is called darkneſſe, chap. 14. 23. But the former interpretation is better.

the darkneſſe] Theſe great afflictions which are tedious to me, as a long dark night to a man that cannot ſleep. See before on this verſe.

from my face] From me, that I might not have felt theſe ſorrowes. For the word Face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verſe 1. VV*Hy ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty do they that know him not, ſee his days?*] In this other part of Jobs anſwer in this chapter he pulls down the foundation, which his friends had laid, concluding him to be a wicked man, becauſe ſo many and great troubles fell on him, as befell none but ungodly men. The words ſhould rather be read thus, Why are not times hidden from the Almighty ſeeing they that know him do not ſee his dayes? It would make a man not well inſtructed in Gods providence think, that God takes no notice of things done here, nor regards them, ſeeing the beſt of his ſervants could never obſerve that he puniſhes many ungodly men according to their deeds in this world. So that either Job ſhewes what worldly men would conclude out of Gods indulgence to wicked men here; or elſe he ſpeakes in a paſſion or ſtrong temptation, as doubting for the preſent of Gods providence in puniſhing ſinners, though elſewhere, when he was in a better mood, freely and fully confeſſed by him. See the like paſſion in godly men upon the like occaſion, Pſal.73.2. &c. Jer.12.1. Hab.1.12. &c. And this ſuits well with that which follows, wherein he repeats innumerable groſſe wickedneſſes committed by ungodly men at which God winks, and puniſheth them not in this world.

why are not] It ſeems ſo, and ungodly men are ready to think ſo.

times] The wicked actions that ungodly men do in their times, as followes verſ. 12. &c.

hidden] Unknowne, as things hidde or covered are unſeene of us.

from the Almighty] from God. Or, by the Almighty. So that good men cannot ſee him execute judgements on the wicked, nor know not when he will, as followes in this verſe. For the word Almighty ſee on chap. 8. 3.5. For מן By, Jer. 10. 14.

ſeeing] So ו is tranſlated, chap. 19. 28.

they that know him] They that fear him, and are beſt acquainted with him.

doe not ſee] Cannot behold them. If it had been ſo generall a truth, as thou O Eliphaz doſt affirm, that God uſeth to puniſh ungodly men here in this world alwayes, I and other godly men ſhould have obſerved it before now.

his dayes] The puniſhments which he had laid on ungodly men for their ſins in the time appointed by him: chap. 20. 28. So the day wherein God powres out his wrath is called His day. Iſa. 2. 12. & 13. 6. Jer. 46. 10. Joel 2. 11. For the word Day ſee on chap. 14. 14.

V. 2. Some remove the land-markes; they violently take away flocks, and feed thereon.] Here Job begins to give a reaſon, why many may think that God doth not guide the world, and makes a large Catalogue of groſſe ſinners not puniſhed by him in this world: And firſt he gives inſtance in great oppreſſours to verſe 14. In this verſe he beginnes with theeves and robbers, and ſuch as remove land-marks. As if he ſhould ſay, What is it, that theſe men dare not do? For not regarding the land-marks, which are ſet for the dividing of one mans land from another, and in keeping whereof no ſmall part of the publique peace and tranquility conſiſteth, they encroach upon other mens grounds, and they feed on the heards of cattell, and flocks of ſheep, which they have alſo violently, and wrongfully taken from others.

Some remove] Some is not in the originall, but added to make the ſenſe plaine. Or, They remove. That is, the wicked ſpoken of verſe 6. So the antecedent followes the relative. Pſal. 87. 1, 2. They remove the bounds for their own advantage to get away their lands from other men. This is often condemned in ſcripture. Deut. 19. 14. & 27. 17. Prov. 22. 28. & 23. 10. Or, Some touch, For land-marks were counted ſacred, and it was eſteemed a fault ſo much as to touch them.

the land marks] Heb. The bounds. Theſe were ſet to determine all controverſies between neighbour and neighbour about the limits of their lands. And therefore men anciently durſt not touch them, much leſſe remove them.

they violently take away] See on chap. 20. 19.

flocks] Heb. a flock. It ſignfies an herd of ſheep and goats. It comes from a word that ſignifies to ſet in order. Cattell of the flock are kept in order, and not ſuffered to ſtray as other cattell do.

and feed thereon] Nouriſh themſelves and their families on other mens cattell. Or, feed them, that is, thoſe cattell they have taken from others, they do not make away privily as theeves uſe to do leſt they ſhould be apprehended, but feed them openly in their own ground, or in the lands taken away from the owners of thoſe cattell, or others, to ſhew that they are not aſhamed of what they have done, nor fear no puniſhment for it. The word רעה ſignifies 1. to feed others, men or beaſts. Gen. 29. 7. & 48. 15. 2. To feed men, or rule over them. Pſal. 78. 72. 3. To feed upon or eat up, as Jer. 22. 22. 4. To wander or remove from place to place, as ſheep go about for food, and flocks are removed from paſture to paſture: Numb. 14. 33. 5. To be a companion to another, for ſuch feed together like ſheep, Prov. 13 20. Here it may be taken in the firſt ſenſe, for feeding them, or in the third ſenſe to feed upon them.

V. 3. They drive away the aſſe of the fatherleſſe, they take the widowes oxe for a pledge.] Yea they are ſo much delighted with tyranny and oppreſſion, that they ſpare not the moſt miſerable and helpleſſe among men, but ſeek to ruine them.

they drive away] Take them from the owners for their own uſe.

the aſſe] The aſſes. The ſingular for the plurall, as Gen. 1. 20. Fowl for fowles. Or, the only aſſe of the fatherleſſe, who had no more. So the ſin is aggravated like Davids, 2 Sam. 12. 3. Or, one aſſe from each of thoſe fatherleſſe people. An aſſe was a great loſſe to one of them, who needed it much to fetch home proviſion.

of the fatherleſſe] So impudent and cruell were they, that they would not ſpare poor orphans. See on chap. 22. 9.

they take for a pledge] See on chap. 22. 6.

the oxe] Wherewith ſhe muſt till her ground, and being ſo neceſſary for her ought not to be kept from her for a pawne, Exod. 22. 26, 27. Deut. 24. 6. 10, 11, 12, 13, 17.

of the widow] See on chap. 22. 9.

V. 4. They turn the needy out of the way: the poor of the earth hide themſelves together.] Some underſtand this verſe of the pride of theſe wicked men, who cannot endure to ſee a poor man in the way with them, and make them afraid to come in their ſight. But the words foregoing and following require rather, that it ſhould be underſtood of their oppreſſion, which was ſo grievous, that the poor were forced to hide themſelves out of their way, leſt when they had taken their cattel, they ſhould take them alſo for ſlaves.

they turn] The fear of them makes the needy to go out of thoſe wayes they ſhould walk in.

the needy] It comes from a word that ſignifies to deſire, for poor mens wants make them alwayes deſirous of ſupply.

out of the way] See on chap. 17. 9. It is ſometimes taken for a courſe of life, but here it is taken literally for a way that men walk in about their neceſſary affaires. Yet the poor durſt not walk there for fear of the rich oppreſſours.

and the poor] The word ſignifies ſuch as are afflicted, and thereby impoveriſhed.

of the earth] Or, of the land. See on chap. 9. 24.

hide themſelves] They have been ſo roughly dealt withall by them, that they are afraid to appear in their preſence, Prov. 28 28.

together] Being all in one condition they may hide themſelves in one place to condole with one another. Or, alike. None hath more hope to eſcape the fury of theſe unmercifull men, then other, notwithſtanding any relations or other bands. So the word is tranſlated, chap. 21. 26.

V. 5. Behold as wild aſſes in the deſert, go they forth to their work rising betimes for a prey: the wilderneſſe yeeldeth food for them, and for their children.] He ſets out the cruelty of theſe oppreſſours, and the ſpoile they make in the world by the ſimilitude of the wild aſſe, a ſwift and untamable creature, as if he had ſaid, theſe are rather to be accounted wild and ſavage beaſts then men: not unlike to the wild aſſes, which keep in the wilderneſſe, early in the morning they go forth unto the ſpoile, as if this were the trade and occupation, whereby they muſt needs get their living. Fields and tillage they have none, but the wilderneſſe and deſert places, in which they practice this their pillage, are to them inſtead of great lands and poſſeſſions; out of which they gather no ſmall revenues, and furniſh themſelves and theirs with all neceſſary proviſions for life. So theſe oppreſſours live in this world as in a wilderneſſe, making a ſpoile of all they meet withall.

Behold] See on chap. 1. 12. Men may well look upon their cruelty with admiration.

as] This is not in the originall, and therefore is added in leſſer letters to make the words plainer. See the like chap. 7. 9.

wild aſſes] Theſe are they that do all the ſpoile: the tame ones are fed by men, and kept in order.

in the deſert] For that is the place of wild aſſes: tame ones are in paſtures among other cattell.

go they forth] Out of their thickets where they lay hid all night. For the word ſee on chap. 20. 25.

to their work] Wilde beaſts go not forth to work, but tame ones. Yet they go as conſtantly out to their prey every day as the tame ones do to their work. Heb. in their work. That is, to be employed in their work. One verb included in another, ſee on chapter 15. 8.

riſing betimes] As men that would thrive riſe early in the morning to follow their work, ſo do wild aſſes to get a prey. This ſets out the diligence of oppreſſours to watch all advantages to make a prey of others, chap. 7. 21.

for a prey] The word טרף ſignifies 1. a prey gotten by wilde beaſts or theeves, Pſal. 76. 4. 2. food, becauſe the beaſts food is their prey, which they get by violence. So it is tranſlated Meat, Mal. 3. 10: Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

the wilderneſſe yeeldeth food] Though the wilderneſſe be very barren, yet the wild aſſe can pick out ſuſtenance there for him and his young ones. So oppreſſours can pick maintenance for them and theirs out of the throats of the poor. For the word Food, ſee on chap. 15. 23.

for them] Heb. for him. For every one of theſe aſſes. So violence yeelds maintenance to every oppreſſour.

and for their children] Or, to him for his children. To the aſſe for his young ones: to the oppreſſour for him and for his family, for the word is, for the young men. So the word is tranſlated, 1 Sam. 21. 5.

V. 6. They reap every one his corn in the field: and they gather the vintage of the wicked.] In the time of harveſt they reap down other mens corn and by force carry it away, and take their vintage away alſo, like ungodly men, as they are, and ſo deprive them of the benefit of all their coſts and labours paſt, and the hope of meat or drink in the winter following.

They reap] The oppreſſors ſpoken of before.

every one his corn] Every one the corn of another man laying ſome title to it, as if it were his. Or, it may be read, his corne; without every one. And then the ſenſe may be, the ſervants of the oppreſſour fetch meat for their maſter out of other mens fields. Or, its corne. That is, the fields, as follows. Some divide the Heb. word thus. בלי לו They reap the corne that is not his. Which is not their maſters. The word properly ſignifies provender for cattel. See on Chap. 6. 5. Heb. mingled corne, Or, dredge.

in the field] They ſtay not, till the owners have reaped it, but prevent them.

and they gather] They take it as boldly, as if it were their own.

the vintage] Heb. the vineyard. That is, the grapes, that grow there.

of the wicked] Of him whom they count wicked. Or, of him that is as bad as themſelves. They ſpare neither good nor bad: Others read it, the wicked gather the vintage. Ye need not marvel they deal ſo unjuſtly, as to gather other mens crops, for they are wicked, and make no conſcience of wronging any man. A verbe plurall after a noune ſingular is common in Heb.

V. 7. They cauſe the naked to lodge without clothing, that they have no covering in the cold.] Thoſe that come in their hands they not onely ſpoile of their cattel and crops, but alſo of their garments, and ſo lay them open to the pinching cold, that they can take no reſt.

they cauſe to lodge] They take away their garments, and ſo make them lie naked all night. This was an aggravation of their cruelty, for the nights were colder then the dayes, neither could they then work to keep them warm.

the naked] Such as they have made naked.

without clothing] Without bed-clothes, ſuch as men uſe to lay on them in the night. Theſe pawns men ought not to keep all night, Deut. 24. 13. But theſe unconſcionable men make no ſcruple of breaking Gods Commandements. It may be read, They cauſe them to lodge naked; becauſe they have no clothing. So, Him, in the Heb. is tranſlated, Them, verſe 5. And he means, that the poor, whom he had before ſpoiled of their cattel, now he ſpoiles of their clothes. And מבלי is tranſlated, Becauſe not, Lam. 1. 4. Exod. 14. 11. So verſe 8. of this chap. For want of a ſhelter, that is, becauſe they had no ſhelter.

that they have no covering] They have taken away all their clothes, ſo that nothing at all is left to cover them, and keep them warm.

in the cold] This is a ſecond aggravation. In the hot Summer nights they might better ſpare their bed-clothes, but in the cold Winter, beſides the trouble and pain, it might indanger their health and lives.

V. 8. They are wet with the ſhowers of the mountains, and embrace the rock for want of a ſhelter.] He goes on to ſhew the progreſſe of the malice of the oppreſſours and ſufferings of the oppreſſed, which having their cloths taken away, dare not go abroad about their buſineſſe, nor keep their houſes, leſt they ſhould be dragged to priſon by the oppreſſours, but go like conies or wilde beaſts to lodge in holes in the rocks, where the water falls on them ſo abundantly and violently from the mountains, that they are in danger of drowning, or catching their death by cold.

They are wet] Being driven out of their houſes they lie in holes, where they cannot lie dry for the rain.

with the ſhowers] With the abundance of water; that runs down the mountains after ſhowers of rain, and falls into their lurking places.

of the mountains] Which are over their heads.

and embrace the rock] Make much of it, and are glad they may be hidden there from their oppeſſours. See the like phraſe, Lam. 4. 5. They go into dark holes and are glad to lie on the cold ſtones inſtead of a warm bed.

for want of a ſhelter] Becauſe they know not where elſe to be ſafe.

V. 9. They pluck the fatherleſſe from the breaſt, and take a pledge from the poor.] Lo the former outrages committed abroad ſuffice them not, but they are as cruel within doors: where to the mothers great grief they violently ſnatch her infant from her breaſt, and ſtrip the poor of their raiment.

They pluck] Not the oppreſſed, verſ. 8. but the oppreſſours ſpoken of before. For the word, ſee on Chap. 20. 19.

the fatherleſſe] See on Chap. 22. 9. But here it is meant of ſucking children, whoſe fathers are newly dead, which is a double grief to the mother to loſe the husband, and have the child violently taken from her.

from the breaſt] From ſucking the breaſt, that the mother being a ſlave may go to her work. They allow her not time to give her child ſuck. Or make her wean it before it be fit, that ſhe may be freer for her ſlaviſh work. Or, they take it before it be weaned, to bring it up or ſell it for a ſlave. Others read it, from the prey, or deſtruction. They had gotten all his goods before, and left him nothing, and now they ſeize upon his perſon to make him a ſlave. Others, out of miſchievouſneſſe. They are ſo ſpightful, that they will not ſpare the fatherleſſe.

and take a pledge] See on verſ. 3. and Chap. 22. 6.

of the poor] See on verſ. 4. They take ſome neceſſary thing away which they cannot ſpare. See more on Chap. 22. 6. ſome read, they take that which is on the poor for a pledge. That is, they take away their raiment, verſ. 10. and leave them naked by day, as they had done by night before. And this argued more cruelty, and impudence then the former. For men might take notice of this, which knew not what they wanted in the night. Others thus, they take the poor for a pledge. As the widowes oxe before, verſ. 3. And this was the height of cruelty and impudency, not to be content with their cattel, and clothes, but to force them by hard labour (having ſeized on their perſons) to redeem themſelves.

V. 10. They cauſe him to go naked without clothing, and they take away the ſheafe from the hungry.] Some underſtand this verſe and the two verſes following of their progreſſe againſt thoſe, whom they had oppreſſed before. Others of detaining the wages of ſuch as they hired to do their work, and denying them neceſſary proviſions in time of their labour in the oppreſſours ſervice.

They cauſe him to go naked] Him whom they have oppreſſed before, they now oppreſſe more, and take away his cloths. Or, they make the hireling to go naked, in that they will not pay him his wages, that he may buy him cloths.

without clothing] The word was uſed for bed-cloths verſ. 7. here for wearing cloths in the day.

and they take away] See on Chap. 21. 3.

the ſheafe] That ſmall quantity of corne, which the poor man hath in his ground, or hath leaſed. This was great cruelty to oppreſſe the poor, 2 Sam. 12. 3.

from the hungry] From him that was ready to ſtarve. This was extream cruelty. See on Chap. 22. 7. Others read it thus, And thoſe that carried their ſheaves they made to go away hungry. That is, their labourers in harveſt. Either they deprived them of their food they ſhould then have had of them, contrary to Deut. 25. 4. Or, kept back their wages, ſo that they could not buy themſelves victuals; contrary to Levit. 19. 13. Jam. 5. 4. Or, it may be they ſhould have paid them in corne in exchange for their labour, for it is likely that money was ſcant in Jobs time. But this they did not, and ſo expoſed them and theirs to ſtarving.

V. 11. Which make oyle within their walls, and tread their wine-preſſes, and ſuffer thirſt.] Some interpret this verſe of poor men, who having but little oyl or wine to make, yet for fear of theſe oppreſſours dare not do it openly in the vineyard, but do it privately within their own walls, yet have it taken away by cruel oppreſſours, ſo that they cannot quench their thirſt with their own oyl or wine. Others underſtand it of the labourers, who made oyl and wine for theſe oppreſſours within their walls, yet might not taſte of it.

Which make oyle] This word is no where elſe uſed, and coming from a word, which ſignifies oyle is fitly tranſlated making oyle.

within their wals] Which oppreſſed men make oyle within their own wals for their own uſe, or within the wals of the oppreſſours for theirs. Or, within their ranks. That is, between the olive trees, that grow in ranks, between which the olives ordinarily were preſſed. Or, between the olives laid on heaps on each ſide to be caſt into the preſſe. Or, between the bounds ſet up in order to make a preſſe to preſſe the olives.

and tread their wine preſſes] To preſſe the wine out of the grapes, Iſa. 63. 3.

and ſuffer thirſt] If it be meant of the wine-preſſes of the oppreſſours, then the meaning is, that they would not ſuffer the poor labourers, that trod out their wine to drink of it, contrary to Deut. 25. 4. If of their own wine-preſſes, then the ſenſe is that the oppreſſours took all away, and would not let them drink of that ſmall ſtore of wine, they had left.

V. 12. Men groane from out of the city, and the ſoule of the wounded cryeth out: yet God layeth not folly to them.] Theſe cruel men not onely oppreſſe men in the country, where few can behold or relieve them, but alſo are grown ſo impudent, that openly in the midſt of Cities where many look on, and laws ſhould be in force moſt of all to reſtrain them, they do ſo grievouſly perſecute the inhabitants that they cry out of their pain to God for juſtice againſt them, yet he calls them not to account for their cruelty.

Men groane] That is, ſuch of the citizens, as are oppreſſed by them. For the word Men, ſee on Chap. 19. 19. For the groaning of the oppreſſed, ſee Exod. 2. 24. & 6. 5. Ezek. 30. 24.

from out of the city] Such as dwell in the city groan. Or, their complaints are heard out of the city, which they are forced to leave, and come to bewaile their miſerable eſtate in the countrey. Thus theſe oppreſſours wrong city and countrey. For the word, ſee on Chap. 15. 28.

and the ſoul] The perſon himſelf, for the ſoul cannot groan, yet it imports an earneſt and hearty groaning coming as it were from the ſoul, as if they were dying and giving up the ghoſt. See Ezek. 30. 24. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 22.

of the wounded] The word ſignifies one deadly wounded, as it is tranſlated, Ezek. 30. 24. And ſuch ſend out heavy groanes. This ſets out the greatneſs of the oppreſſion.

cryeth out] This alſo ſhews the greatneſs of the oppreſſion, for men cry out aloud and earneſtly in great preſſures. See on Chap. 19. 7.

yet] So it is tranſlated, Pſal. 119. 110.

God] See on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

layeth not folly to them] See on chap. 1. 22. He doth not handle them as malefactours, nor call them to account for their fooliſh, and ſinful actions done againſt all reaſon and equity.

V. 13. They are of thoſe that rebell againſt the light, they know not the wayes thereof, nor abide in the pathes thereof.] Having before ſet out the open iniquities of oppreſſours, now he comes to ſet out the ſecret works of darkneſſe, and the horrible wickedneſſes, which ſome commit in ſecret unknown to the world, yet not hid from God, nor puniſhed by him.

They] Thoſe wicked opreſſours ſpoken of before beſides their violence known to the world, commit many horrible ſins in ſecret. Or beſides theſe open oppreſſours, there are ſome that commit horrible ſins in ſecret. God knows all this, but puniſhes neither.

They are of thoſe that rebell] That fight againſt the light, as rebels do againſt lawful authority.

againſt the light] Some underſtand it of ſpiritual light. They ſin againſt the light of nature and Scripture. But the words following enumerating the great ſinnes they commit in the night, ſhews plainly that it is meant of the light of the day, as is expreſſed plainly, verſe 14. And the ſenſe is, they cannot abide the day light, no more then rebels can lawful authority: and if it were in their power, they would pull the Sun out of heaven, that it might be alwayes night, that they might ſinne unſeen. For the word, ſee on Chap. 17. 12.

they know not] They do not acquaint themſelves with it. They are meer ſtrangers to it. They love not to walk in it.

the wayes thereof] The wayes of the light. They love to do their buſineſſe by night, and not by day, leſt their ſins ſhould be diſcovered, 1 Theſ. 5. 7. Eph. 5. 11, 12. Or, his wayes, That is, Gods wayes, who was mentioned, verſ. 12. They are unacquainted with Gods word the Rule of life. For the word, ſee Chap. 16. 22.

nor abide] Are not conſtant in them. If they ſtumble on a good action, they quickly give it over. For the word, ſee on Chap. 22. 8.

in the pathes thereof] Of the light. Or, in his pathes. That is, Gods; as before.

V. 14. The murderer riſing with the light, killeth the poor and needy and in the night is as a thief.] He ſets out the indefatigable ſtudy and diſcovery and obſervation of fit times by wicked men to ſpoil and rob others. In the day time they either bide in their habitations, or lie ſculking in woods and by-wayes, but early in the morning they ſet out to rob thoſe that go forth in the firſt light of the day to do their buſineſſe, and at night they watch ſuch as travel late, to make a booty of them.

The murderer] He that kills men without authority, contrary to the ſixth Commandement, where the ſame word is uſed in the Original with the light] Heb. at the light. That is, as ſoon as the day-light appears, at day-break before it be too light to diſcover him, Mic. 2. 1. Pſal. 10. 8. As honeſt men riſe early to go about the works of their calling, ſo he to rob and kill. For the word, Day, ſee on Chap. 14. 14.

killeth] Thoſe that oppoſe him, or that he thinks can diſcover him.

the poor and needy] See on verſe 4.

and in the night] When the light is paſt, and the dark comes again, he goes to ſeek his prey, as the wilde beaſts do, Pſal. 104. 20, 21.

is as a thief] That is, is a very thief indeed. So as ſometimes in ſcripture language, ſets not out the ſimilitude, but the thing it ſelfe. They would be angry, if they were called theeves, but they are ſo indeed. See the like phraſe, Hoſ. 4. 4. & 5. 10. Joh. 1. 14.

V. 15. The eye alſo of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, ſaying, No eye ſhall ſee me, and diſguiſeth his face.] As he had before ſet out the ſecret wayes of the murderer, ſo now of the adulterer, who never thinks himſelfe ſafe enough, but gets him a double cover, the one of the dark night, the other of a vizard, that he may not be diſcovered.

The eye] The adulterer himſelf uſeth his eye to that purpoſe. For the word, ſee on Chap. 20. 9.

alſo] He is as watchful of his opportunities as the murderer.

of the adulterer] Of him that deſires to defile his neighbours bed. It is the ſame word, which is uſed in the ſeventh Commandement.

waiteth for] Expecteth it, longeth till it come, or obſerves and takes notice of it as ſoon as it comes, that he may execute his filthy deſires. For the word, ſee on Chap. 7. 12. 20. & 10. 14.

for the twilight] Not in the morning, when the day comes on, but in the evening, when it begins to be dark, and the night coming on affords him a large time to ſatisfie his luſt, Prov. 7. 9, 10.

ſaying] In his heart; not with his mouth to himſelf, not to others, Pſal. 10. 11.

No eye ſhall ſee me] My adultery ſhall not be diſcovered, but be kept ſecret. See the like phraſe, Chap. 7. 8.

and diſguiſeth his face] Heb. and he putteth his face in a ſecret place. Hideth it with his cloak or with a vizard, that he may not be diſcovered. So whores were wont to hide their faces, Gen. 38. 14. For the word, Face, ſee on Chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance.

V. 16. In the darke they dig through houſes, which they had marked for themſelves in the day time: they know not the light.] From deſcribing the courſe of murderers, and adulterers he goes on to ſet out the extravagant courſes of theeves and robbers, who ſpare for no labour by day or night to enrich themſelves by the ſpoiles of others. Or, it may be underſtood of adulterers, as ſhall be ſhewed in the particulars.

in the darke] In the night: for either they dare not, or are aſhamed to do it in the day. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 22, 23.

they dig through] Heb. he digs through. The thief, or murderer, verſ. 14. Or, rather the adulterer, verſe 15. which is the immediate coherence.

houſes] To come at his prey, enemy, or ſtrumpet. For the word, ſee on Chap. 15. 28.

which they had marked for themſelves in the day time] The theeves or murderers go abroad in the day time to ſee, where are houſes likely to afford good booty, and eaſie to be broken up, or enemies eaſie to come at, and in the night they divide themſelves every one to the place deſigned for him in the day. Or, the adulterer and adultereſſe confer together in the day, and appoint ſome houſe to meet in at night, and the adulterer takes care for a ſecret paſſage. The digging through walls that are near for adultery, and ſecret paſſages unknown to the husband, are no new things, as appears by the ancient heathen Poets, who deſcribe ſuch privy meetings of ſuch lewd perſons for ſuch ſinful purpoſes.

they know not the light] They cannot abide it, but wiſh for night ſtill to execute their wicked deſignes, which if done in the day would either be prevented or diſcovered. See on verſe 13.

V. 17. For the morning is unto them even as the ſhadow of death: if one know them, they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death] In this verſe, a reaſon is given why ſuch wicked perſons make haſt to diſpatch their unlawful deſigns in the night, becauſe they think they are quite undone, if the morning light diſcover them.

For the morning is unto them even as the ſhadow of death] Or, For as ſoone as it is morning, the ſhadow of death comes upon them.] If thoſe murderers or theeves come too late or tarry too long about their evil exploits, and the day-light appear before they have finiſhed them, then are they in a deadly feare, leſt they ſhould be diſcovered, and brought to condign puniſhment. Or, if the adulterer and adultereſſe lie too long in bed, they are in a ſad condition, fearing diſcovery and puniſhment. The morning is to ſuch malefactours horrible, and fearefull as a darke Grove to a Paſſenger, who feares death every ſtep he treads. Or, They think death approaching, as a man doth, whoſe ſight decayes. Or, as by the ſhadow is diſcerned the aproaching of the ſubſtance, ſo they think death at hand. For Morning, ſee on Chap. 7. 18. For the ſhadow of death, ſee on Chap. 3. 5.

if one know them] If any man ſpy them about their wicked enterprizes when the day peepes. Or, If they can diſcerne one another. As this phraſe is uſed, Ruth 3. 14. At break of day ſuch perſons are aſhamed to look upon one another, and afraid leaſt others ſhould take them in their wickedneſſe, and diſcover them.

they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death] As full of feares as men who diſcerne death ſtanding before them to lay hold preſently on them. See on verſe 11.

V. 18. He is ſwift as the waters, their portion is curſed in the earth; he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.] When he hath robbed, murdered, and committed adultery, till the earth be weary of him, then he turnes Pirat, and doth what miſchief he can at Sea or on great rivers.

He is ſwift] He gets him ſwift boats or ſhips to ſpoil ſuch as trade upon the waters.

as the waters] Heb. upon the waters: upon the Sea or Rivers. They that read it, as the waters, give this ſenſe, When he is like to be taken in his wickedneſſe in the morning, he flies away ſwiftly like water in the river to ſcape puniſhment. Others underſtand it of his flying by Sea. But it is beſt interpreted of piracy. For Water, ſee on Chap. 14. 9.

their portion is curſed in the earth] They have carried themſelves ſo ill on the Land, that they looke for no portion there, but all mens curſes, and therefore they will come there no more. Or, They dwell in deſolate places near the Sea, which are barren; as if they were curſed, that ſo they may be ready to rob on the waters upon all occaſions. So barren ground is curſed ground, Gen. 3. 17. fruitfull ground bleſſed, Gen. 27. 27. Others underſtand this and the words following of the deſtruction of wicked men by Gods judgements on them and their poſſeſſions. But then ſhould Job croſſe all he had ſaid before, and yeeld up the bucklers to his enemies, and ſay as they ſaid. It is more likely therefore, that he goes on to ſet out the proſperous life, and quiet death of men ſo bad, that all the World hates them. For the word Portion, ſee on Chap. 20. 29. For Curſed, ſee on Chap. 3. 1. For Earth, on Chap. 9. 24.

He beholdeth not the way of the Vineyards] He did heretofore live by husbandry and planting, but now he hath got an eaſier trade, and lookes after it no more. Or, he turneth not, &c. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 25. 16. Others interpret it of never enjoying a fruitfull land more, but living in poverty, which is contrary to the ſcope of the place, as was noted before. For the word Beholdeth, ſee on chap. 5. 1. upon the word Turn. For the word Way, on chap. 17.9. Others underſtand it of keeping himſelf in deſert places, and not walking in thoſe wayes, where men uſe to travell to their work, leſt he ſhould be taken.

V. 19. Drought and heat conſume the ſnow and waters: ſo doth the grave those which have ſinned.] As the ſnow waters are eaſily and quickly conſumed by drought and heat, ſo wicked men continue proſperouſly in their ſins all their life long, and then die a naturall death quickly and eaſily, and are not taken away violently by Gods judgements. See the like affirmed by Job, chap. 21. 13. 32. Pſal. 23. 4.

Drought] It properly ſignifies the drought of the ground, which ſpeedily drinks up the ſnow waters melted by the heat of the Sun.

and heat] Heat will melt ice, and much more ſnow.

conſume] Heb. ſnatch away; quickly take away, as theeves do other mens goods leſt they ſhould be taken.

the ſnow waters] The ſnow melted into water, which is eaſily diſſolved, and ſuddenly gone.

ſo doth the grave] See on chap. 7. 9.

thoſe which have ſinned] Groſſe ſinners die as eaſily as other men. The word ſignifies to erre and miſſe the mark. See on chap. 5. 24. But here it points at oppreſſours and great malefactors. The whole verſe may be read thus, In the drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow waters: they ſin to the grave. That is, they rob in all weathers, ſummer and winter, and never give over till they die. The prepoſitions in and to are not in the originall, but ſuch are often omitted.

V. 20. The womb ſhall forget him, the worm ſhall feed ſweetly on him, he ſhall be no more remembred, and wickedneſſe ſhall be broken as a tree.] He goes on to deſcribe the eaſineſſe of the death of the wicked man, as ſhall be ſhewed in the interpretation of the ſeverall parts of the verſe.

The womb ſhall forget him] His mother that bare him, ſhall not be much afflicted at his death, becauſe he died ſo eaſily, free from the torments and violences that others endure, when they go out of the world. The word Womb in the originall comes from a word that ſignifies affection, for mothers affect their children tenderly whom they have borne in the womb. Prov. 31. 2. And they are much afflicted at their painfull death and would not forget it, but ſpeak often of it.

The worms ſhall feed ſweetly on him] See on chap. 17. 14. He ſhall no more feele the worm eating his carkaſſe then other men doe. See the like expreſſion of lying quietly in the grave, chapter 21. 33.

He ſhall be no more remembred] Had he died by ſome memorable judgement of God for his wickedneſſe, he would have been talked of long after, but dying a naturall and eaſie death, as others do, he is ſoon forgotten as well as they, verſe 24. Pſal. 31. 12.

and wickedneſſe] See on chap. 13. 7. upon the word Wickedly. But here by wickedneſſe is meant the wicked man, or oppreſſour ſpoken of before. As Pſal. 107. 42. So vanity for a vain man, chap. 35. 13.

ſhall be broken as a tree] The wicked oppreſſour ſhall die as eaſily as a rotten tree it broken down. Or, all his wickedneſſes ſhall as eaſilie be forgotten as the pieces of a rotten tree moulder away. For a Tree ſee on chap. 14. 7.

V. 21. He evill entreateth the barren that beareth not: and doth not good to the widow.] He looks back to other ungodly actions of this cruell oppreſſour before he died, and ſhews that after he had robbed the husband, and murdered him, he deales harſhly with his wife now left a widow, and ſometimes barren, and having neither husband, nor child to relieve her.

He evill entreateth] Heb. He breaketh: So the word is uſed, Jer. 11. 16. Pſal. 2. 9. Or, He, feedeth upon, Or, deſtroyeth. For the the word, ſee on verſ. 2.

the barren] Such were dejected enough of themſelves, barrenneſſe being eſteemed a curſe in thoſe times, yet this cruell man addes to her affliction, 2 Sam. 1. 5. 6.

that beareth not] That bringeth not forth children.

and doth not good] That is, doth much hurt. For he intends to ſet out the cruelty of oppreſſors to ſuch as have none to defend them. This manner of ſpeaking is uſuall in Scripture, as in the third Commandement, God will not hold him guiltleſſe, that taketh his name in vain, that is, he will hold him very guilty. See the like, Pſal. 51. 17.

to the widow] See on chap. 22. 9.

V. 22. He draweth alſo the mighty with his power; he riſeth up, and no man is ſure of life.] While the oppreſſour was alive, he went on from one degree of cruelty to another. And when he hath made a prey of the poor, and helpleſſe, then he ſets upon the rich and mighty, and never leaves proſecuting of them, till he have them in danger of their lives.

He draweth alſo] To wit, into his power and danger, as a Fowler drawes Fowles into the net. Pſal. 10. 9.

the mighty] The ſtrongeſt or richeſt of men are not able to ſtand out againſt him.

with his power] He is ſtronger and richer then they, and ſo prevailes againſt them.

he riſeth up] To oppreſſe others. When he ſets himſelf againſt them, he ruines them. So enemies in battell are ſaid to riſe up againſt men, Pſal. 18. 39. & 44. 5. For the word ſee on chapter 14. 12.

and no man is ſure of life] Heb. and he is not ſure of life. Though he be ſtrong, yet he is not able to ſtand up againſt the oppreſſour, who not onely takes his wealth away, but alſo endangers his life, Deut. 28. 66. For the word Sure ſee on chap. 15. 22. upon the word Believeth.

V. 23. Though it be given him to be in ſafety whereon he reſteth, yet his eyes are upon their wayes.] Job goes on to ſet out the proſperitie of theſe wicked men contrary to the opinion of his friends, ſhewing that although they got their goods ſo wickedly, and God was not ignorant of it, yet he gave them a plentifull ſetled eſtate till their death.

Though] this word as it is not in the Originall, ſo it may well be left out, and the words read thus, It is given him to be in ſafety, whereon he reſteth, though his eyes are upon their wayes.

it be given him] Or, he gives it him. That is, God, often underſtood in this book, whenſoever any thing is ſpoken belonging to him. God makes them thus to proſper, though they be extreme wicked. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 4. upon the word Bring.

to be in ſafety] God hath beſtowed upon them all things needfull for preſervation and maintenance plentifully.

wheron he reſteth] So that he feares no danger, but lives as he liſt.

yet his eyes are upon his wayes] Or, though his eyes be upon their wayes. That is, Although God ſees all their wickedneſſe, yet he makes them proſper. Or, and his eyes are upon their wayes. Gods eyes ſeem to be continually fixed upon them, ſo that he bleſſeth all their labours, and ſuffers them to want nothing. Ezr. 5. 5. Pſal. 34. 15. Deut. 11. 12. For the word Eyes ſee on chap. 15. 15. upon the word Sight. For the word Wayes ſee on chap. 17. 9.

V. 24. They are exalted for a little while, but are gone and brought low, they are taken out of the way as all other, and cut off, as the tops of the ears of corn.] Here Job ſhewes that he did not intend to ſpeak of any judgements of God, that cut off wicked men before their time, but to ſhew that both in life and death they fared like other men. Mans life is not long, yet all that time they lived they proſpered, and lived as long as others, and died in a full old age, and eaſily, as corn cut down when it is ripe.

They are exalted] They grow rich and are promoted to great honours.

for a little while] For that ſmall time they live upon the earth.

but are gone] Heb. and are not. To wit, here upon the face of the earth among men, chap. 3. 16. The beginning of the verſe may be read thus, They are exalted, and within a little while they are not. That is, they live in proſperity, and die eaſily without any long or lingring ſickneſſe.

and brought low] As low as death.

They are taken out of the way] Heb. They are ſhut up. To wit, in the grave.

as all other] They die and lie quietly in the grave, as other men do, chap. 3. 14. & 21. 33. Eccleſ. 2. 16.

and cut off] But he ſickle of a naturall death, ſee on chapter 14. 2.

as the tops] Heb. as the head. See on chap. 19. 9.

of the ears of corn] This was that hard word in the originall, that coſt the lives of many Ephraimites, they could not ſay Shibboleth. Judg. 12. 6. By the tops of the ears of corn may be meant the eares themſelves which grow on the top of the ſtraw. See the like phraſe, chap. 22. 12. about the height of the ſtars.

V. 25. And if it be not ſo now, who will make me a lyer, and make my ſpeech nothing worth?] In the concluſion Job by his earneſtneſſe ſhews his confidence in the equity of his cauſe, which he pleaded that it was ſo juſt and ſo fully laid open and proved by him, that no man could confute what he ſaid.

And if it be not ſo] If this be not a truth, which I have contended for, that ſuch as oppreſſe others, live proſperouſly, and die eaſily.

now who will make me a lier] If any one of you think he can confute me, let him come forth, and do it, Or, where, who is he that will make me a lier? See the words ſo uſed, chap. 9. 24. As if Job had looked round about him for an Antagoniſt. By making him a lier, he means diſproving what he had ſaid, and convincing him of untruth.

and make my ſpeech nothing worth] Heb. and bring my ſpeech to nothing. So the Dutch tranſlation reads it alſo. That is, ſhew that my reaſons are nothing worth, and do not prove that for which I brought them.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 1. THen anſwered Bildad the Shuhite and ſaid] Bildad is very brief in this laſt reply upon Job. Either he thought Job obſtinate, and would not ſpend many more words upon him; or elſe he was convinced that Job was in the right, and therefore gives no anſwer to his diſpute chap. 24. but only to his complaint againſt God, chap.23. and ſeeks to convince him by arguments taken from Gods Majeſty, and the heavenly creatures, as Eliphaz had done before, chap.4. 17. &c.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap.16. 1.

V. 2. Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.] As if he had ſaid, ſurely Job thou doſt forget Gods ſupreme authority and power, which might ſtrike awfull fear of him into all creatures, as it doth to the mighty Angels, whom together with the other heavenly bodies he rules ſo powerfully and peaceably, that they have neither cauſe nor will to complain of his proceedings. How dareſt thou then being a weak ſorry man call the great God to give an account to thee of his judgements? As he did, chap.23. 3, 4.

Dominion] The ſupreme authority over all things in heaven and earth. Heb. To rule. It is his due to rule, thine to be ſubject.

and fear] That is, Majeſty which may ſtrike a fear and terrour into others: for God fears none. For the word ſee on chap.15.21. upon, A dreadfull ſound.

he maketh] See on chapter 14. 9. upon the word Bringeth forth.

peace] Concord or agreement. Or, proſperity and tranquility.

in his high places] In the heavens both viſible and inviſible, which are clearly his. Men can lay ſome title to the earth, but no colour of title to heaven. Some read this latter clauſe thus, He worketh in peace in his high places, No Angell in heaven dare complain of his proceedings, and how dareſt thou O Job call him to account? Others read the whole verſe thus; The dominion and power which is with him, maketh peace in his high places. He hath ſo much authority and majeſty, that no Angell in heaven among thoſe many millions dare queſtion him. And though there be thouſands of ſtarres, yet he keeps them all from claſhing one againſt another, and rules the whole heaven in peace and happineſſe. For the word ſee on chap.16.19.

V. 3. Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom doth not his light ariſe?] It is in vain for thee poor man to think of contending with God, who hath innumerable Armies ready to fight for him, if any man oppoſe him. Yea thou haſt cauſe to ſubmit to him, who gives light to thee, and to all living creatures.

Is there any number] They are innumerable.

of his armies] All creatures in heaven and earth are Gods ſouldiers, but here are intended more ſpecially the innumerable company of Angels, or rather ſtarres in heaven, as appears by what went before and followes after. Theſe are all ready to fight at Gods command, and for his honour, 2 King.19.35. Judg.5. 20.

and upon whom doth not his light ariſe] There is no living creature, that enjoyes the light of the Sun, but is beholding to God for it. For it is light given by him to the Sun. For Light ſee on chap.17. 12. For Ariſe ſee on chap.14 12.

V. 4. How then can man be juſtified with God? or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?] Not only Gods Majeſty, but alſo thine own impurity ſhould make thee afraid to deſire to pead with God. For he is juſt and pure, thou art ſinfull and impure, and that by thy very birth.

How then can] It is not poſſible. If thou wilt contend with God thou muſt needs go by the worſt, for he is alwayes in the right.

man] A miſerable creature whoſe ſins bring diſeaſes and death upon him. See on chap.5.17. & 9.2.

with God] Some underſtand it before God, if he referre himſelf to Gods judgment, he muſt needs pronounce him ſinful. Others, in compariſon of God. Though he may be excellent in compariſon of other men, yet he is very unjuſt in compariſon of God. But the whole ſcope ſhewes that Bildad meant, if he will contend with God, as if God had done him ſome wrong in afflicting him more then was fitting. This was Jobs motion, chap. 23. 3, 4. of which Bildad here ſhewes the inequality, and injuſtice, and unprofitableſſe. For the word, God, ſee on chap.8, 3, 5.

or how can he be clean that is born of a woman] See on chap, 14.4. & 15. 14. &c.

V. 5. Behold even to the moon, and it ſhineth not; yea the ſtarres are not pure in his ſight.] Thou thinkeſt the moon and ſtarres are glorious creatures: and ſo they are indeed. Yet if God ſhould contend with them, he would find ſpots and blemiſhes in them: ſo will he find ſins in thee worthy of theſe corrections, notwithſtanding thy vain confidence in thine own uprightneſſe.

even to the moon] If thou conſider all the glorious things in the world beginning with earthly things, as gold, ſilver, jewels, and then look above theſe to the moon and ſtarres, thoſe heavenly lights, which are clearer then they, thou wilt find, that God can ſpie blemiſhes in them. He mentions the moon either becauſe that is the loweſt of thoſe heavenly lights, or elſe it may be this conference held while night, and Bildad might with his finger point up to the moon, when he could not ſee the ſun. So Piſcator conceives that David made the eighth Pſalm in the night, and therefore mentions not the ſun, Pſal.8. 3. So Elihu is conceived to ſpeak according to the preſent occaſion, chap.37.21. and Piſcator thinks Chriſt ſaw a vine in his paſſage from the houſe to the garden, and took occaſion from thence to uſe that ſimilitude, Joh.15.1. The word in the originall is conceived to come from a word, that ſignifies to cool or refreſh, becauſe the moon cools thoſe things in the night, which the ſun over-heats in the day. And for the ſame reaſon God is pleaſed to give an entercourſe of fair weather and foul, ſummer and winter.

and it ſhineth not] Though it ſhine clear to us, yet God can ſee darkneſſe in it.

yea the ſtarres] Thoſe glorious lights that are thought to be higher then the moon, and farther from the earth.

are not pure] Free from blemiſhes and ſpots. See on chap.14.4. & 15.14.

in his ſight] He diſcernes obſcurity in them, though we cannot, Heb. in his eyes. See on chap, 15.15.

V. 6. How much leſſe man, that is a worm: and the ſon of man, which is a worm?] In the concluſion Bildad layes man as low as he can, ſhewing that he is ſo far below the ſtarres, that he is as baſe as the wormes, which are the vileſt creatures, trod upon by men, yea he is a very worm.

How much leſſe] See on chap. 4. 19.

man] See on chap.5.17. & 9.2.

that is a worm] That is, a vile creature like a worm. So the word of ſimilitude, As, is left out, chap.7.7. See on chap. 17.14. The word properly ſignifies ſuch little wormes as breed in fleſh or cheeſe, or other food, Exod.16.24.

and the ſonne] This ſhewes that this baſeneſſe comes by our birth, and is common to all men. For the word, ſee on chapter 14.24.

of man] See on chap.14.1.

which is a worm] The word in the originall differs from the former, and ſignifies both great and ſmall worms. And it is doubled to aſſure us of mans baſeneſſe.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſe 1. BUt Job anſwered and ſaid,] Job offended with Bildads ſpeech, as having ſaid nothing to the controverſie, ironically invades him, and whereas Bildad had ſpoken of Gods great power and wiſdom, he ſhewes that he could ſpeak more highly of God then Bildad had done, and therefore his ſpeech, as it was impertinent, ſo alſo needleſſe. His complaint againſt Bildad is in the four firſt verſes. His deſcription of Gods magnificencie in the reſt of the chapter.

But] Heb. And. It is uſed 1. as a word of connexion, as Prov. 2. 9. 2. as a word of oppoſition, Prov. 1. 25. 3. as a word of aſſimilation, Job 16.21. 4. as a word of augmentation, Job 30.9. 5. it gives a reaſon of a thing, Job.11. 4. 6. it inferres one thing from another Job 27. 12. And accordingly it is tranſlated, And, or But, or As, or Yea, or For, or Then. Here it is uſed in the ſecond ſenſe, for, But. And Job oppoſeth his anſwer to Bildads reply.

anſwered and ſaid] See on chap.16. 1.

V. 2. How haſt thou helped him, that is without power? How ſaveſt thou the arm that hath no ſtrength?] In this verſe and thoſe two that follow, there is an admiration of Bildads proceeding, but ironicall, and ſo the more emphaticall. Some underſtand it of God, as if Job had ſaid, O Bildad, how ſtoutly haſt thou ſtood up in defence of God, as if he were not able to defend himſelf? Thou haſt plaid the cunning advocate, where there was no need. Others interpret it as having relation to Job himſelf, as if he had ſaid, Thou art one of thoſe, that take upon you to comfort me in this my ſad condition, but ye have altogether diſcouraged me.

How] Thou haſt not well performed the task thou haſt taken in hand.

haſt thou helped] By pleading for God, or adviſing me. God appears never the more juſt, nor I am never the more comforted for any thing thou haſt ſaid.

him that is without power] Thou thinkeſt God is mightily beholding to thee for pleading for him: but he can defend himſelf without thy help. Or, thou thinkeſt I am much engaged to thee for upholding me in my weak condition by wholeſome counſell; but I ſee no ſuch thing.

How ſaveſt thou] What freedome or deliverance gets ſuch an one by thy words?

the arme] Him that is weak: for the ſtrength of man lies in his armes. Thou thinkeſt belike that God is weak and needs thy help to defend him. Or, though I be very weak, yet I have no help from thee at all. See on chap.22. 9.

that hath no ſtrength] Him that is unable to defend himſelfe.

V. 3. How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdome? and how haſt thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?] God hath wiſdome enough and needs not thy counſell, neither haſt thou ſpoken truly of the thing. Or, my ignorance is no whit informed by thy diſcourſe, neither haſt thou ſpoken truly of my condition.

How haſt thou counſelled] Thou ſpeakeſt as if thou wert of Gods privy counſell, and couldſt direct him how to guide the world. Or, thou haſt given me uncomfortable counſell in my ſad condition.

him that hath no wiſdome] Thou carrieſt thy ſelf in this caſe as if God had not wiſdome enough to guide the world without thy direction. Or, thou thinkeſt me a fool, and haſt given counſell alltogether unprofitable for me.

and how haſt thou plentifully declared] Thou thinkeſt that thou haſt ſo wiſely and plentifully handled the cauſe, that all muſt needs be of thy mind, but thou art deceived.

the thing as it is] The ſolid truth: the word ſignifies, 1. eſſence or being, or the ſubſtance of a thing. Or, that which is, as chap. 11, 6. & 30.22. From this תושיה comes the Greek word for eſſence ȣσία, 2, working or operation, which is an effect of eſſence. Things muſt be before they can work, and are to ſmall purpoſe, if they work not. So Iſa. 28.29. 3. wiſdome which is one of the moſt excellent things which are, or have a being, Prov. 2. 7. & 3. 21. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for that which is, as it is tranſlated, yet ſome take it in the third ſenſe, and read it thus, and haſt declared wiſdome abundantly. Thou thinkeſt thou haſt made a very wiſe oration, and couched much learning in few words: but it is not ſo. Others thus, and how haſt thou made him to know wiſdome abundantly? Which laſt reading is very anſwerable to the former part of the verſe, thou ſpeakeſt ſo highly, as if thou wert able to teach God abundance of wiſdome, how to govern the world.

V. 4. To whom haſt thou uttered words? and whoſe ſpirit came from thee?] Whom thinkeſt thou that thou haſt ſpoken to? If to God, he is wiſe enough, and needs not thy teaching: If to me, I know theſe things as well as thou thy ſelf, and thou mighteſt have ſpared thy paines. Thou conceiveſt O Bildad that thou haſt ſpoken high things revealed to thee in an extraordinary way by Gods ſpirit; but theſe are things commonly ſpoken of by other men, as well as by thee:

To whom haſt thou uttered words] Whom haſt thou gone about to inform? For, Uttered, ſee on chap. 15. 18. upon the word, Told.

and whoſe ſpirit] Or, whoſe breath. Chap. 32. 8.

came from thee] Or, came out of the. Doſt thou think that Gods ſpirit ſpake by thee, in an extraordinary manner? Surely no. For the word, ſee on chap. 20, 25. Others underſtand it thus, Whoſe ſad ſoule was recovered out of his dumps by thy ſpeeches? Others thus, Who received their ſouls from thee, that thou ſhouldeſt make thy ſelfe equall with God, as if thou couldſt inſtruct him? Thus God convinces Job of folly by ſetting his great works before him, chap. 38. Others read it thus, whoſe ſpirit admired thee. For the ſpirit goes as it were out of it ſelf after thoſe things it admires. Thou thinkeſt in the pride of thine heart, that men will admire at thy rare ſayings: but there is no ſuch cauſe.

V. 5. Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof.] Leſt any man ſhould think that Job did in his former ironicall ſpeech deride thoſe great things of God, which Bildad had ſpoken of the former chapter. And that Bildad might know, that Job underſtood theſe things as well as he, Job now makes a more majeſticall diſcourſe of Gods infinite power and knowledge then Bildad had done before. As if he had ſaid, thou haſt ſpoken of things viſible, but I will ſhew how Gods providence reaches to thoſe things, that no man can ſee how they are formed.

Dead things] Or, Liveleſſe things. It comes from רפא which ſignifies to heale or make ſtrong. And רפאים ſignifies 1. gyants, which are the ſtrongeſt men on earth, Deut. 2. 11. 2. Dead or liveleſſe things, which have no ſtrength at all, Pſal. 88. 10. So here, theſe dead things ſome take to be minerals and jewels and pearls, which are taken out of the bottomes of rivers or ſea-waters, or of mountains from under ſprings. Others for reeds, and ſome trees, which take root under the waters, and grow out of them. Others for the ſpawn of fiſhes, which bring forth great increaſe.

are formed] The word חולל ſignifies, 1. to bring forth children out of the womb, when they have their right form, chap. 39, 1. 2. becauſe children are brought forth with much pain and out-cryes both of the mother and child, it ſignifies to be in anguiſh, groan grievouſly or mourn, like a woman in travell, as Deut. 2. 29. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe. Such things are formed in the bottome of the waters or under them as in a womb, and by Gods providence brought forth to light, as children are.

from under the waters] Either in the earth in the bottome of the waters, or in the loweſt part of the waters. For Waters, ſee on chap. 14. 9.

and the inhabitants thereof] That is, and under the inhabitants thereof, which are the fiſhes. Or; with the inhabitants thereof, The fiſhes are ſtrangely formed by Gods power in the waters, which one would think ſhould ſcatter their ſpawn quite away, and not enliven it. Or, which are the inhabitants thereof, if it be meant of production of fiſhes from the ſpawn, or of dead bodies of men drowned, which may be called the inhabitants of the ſea. So ſome interpret this verſe. Or, and under the neighbours thereof. That is, under the mountaines near the ſea.

V. 6. Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering.[Not onely things in the bottome of the earth and of the ſeas are uncovered before God, but alſo thoſe that are in hell, and as it were clean deſtroyed to us, are clearly diſcerned by him.

Hell] Or, The grave. Some underſtand it of the loweſt parts of the earth: but thoſe were ſpoken of in the laſt verſe. This may therefore reach as low as hell, for God knowes what is done there as well as in the grave. For the word, ſee on chap. 7. 9. upon the word Grave.

is naked] As plainly diſcerned by God, as a body by us, that hath no garment to cover it, Pſal. 139. 8. Prov. 15. 11. Heb. 4. 13.

before him] In his ſight. That is, in Gods ſight. The things ſpoken ſhew whom he meant, though he named him not, ſo that his friends could not chuſe but underſtand of whom he ſpake.

and deſtruction hath no covering] It is the cuſtome of the Scripture for greater aſſurance to repeat things in other words negatively, which it had before delivered affirmatively. So here. Hell is called deſtruction, becauſe it doth for ever ruine all thoſe that come into it. So the Devill is called Abaddon (the ſame word, that is here uſed) Rev. 9. 11. becauſe he brings all his followers to eternall deſtruction in hell fire. And that is naked, which hath no covering to keep it from the eyes of men. The ſumme is, God knowes all, that is done in hell, which is covered from our ſight, but not from Gods.

V. 7. He ſtretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.] Having ſhewed Gods great power and wiſdom by his working in and knowledge of thoſe things, that are clean hid from men, now he ſets it out further by his upholding the mighty frame of heaven and earth. Ye ſee the ſtarry heaven, yet ye ſee no ſolid body near it to uphold ſo great a fabrick. Ye ſee the weighty earth compaſſed round about by the heavens, yet ye ſee no pillars to uphold it. All this ſets out the mighty power and wiſdome of God.

He ſtretcheth out] So the word is tranſlated, Prov. 1. 24. Sometimes it ſignifieth declining or bowing down, as Pſal. 102. 11.

the north] That part of the heaven where the North pole is ſeen, under which Job lived, and the South part was thought then not inhabited. See on chap. 9. 9. by a figure of the part for the whole, inſtancing in that part which he ſaw he may meane the whole heavens.

over the empty place] Over the aire, which ſeemes to us empty, and is ſo in reſpect of any ſtrength is in it to bear up ſuch a frame.

and hangeth the earth upon nothing] The earth is upheld onely by Gods almighty power, having no foundation at all, but hanging like a ball in the midſt of the heavens, Pſal. 104. 5. Heb. 1. 3. Whereas man cannot ſpread a curtain without ſome ſolid thing to uphold it. For the word, Earth, ſee on chap. 9. 24.

V. 8. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds, and the cloud is not rent under them.] From the framing of heaven and earth, he proceeds to the courſe of Gods daily providence. And firſt ſets out his wiſdom and power in cauſing thin clouds vaniſhing like ſmoak by a ſtrange art to hold mighty flouds of waters, as appears by many deluges in the world after a few dayes rain. The water no doubt is thicker and heavier then the cloud, that holds it, yet the cloud is not cleft aſunder with the weight of it, but keeps it as it were a ſtrong man in a cobweb, till God pleaſe to give order for it to drop upon the earth by little and little to make it fruitfull.

He bindeth up] He keepeth the waters in clouds as in veſſels, ſo that they break not all through to overwhelm the earth. Therefore the clouds are compared to bottels, chap. 38. 37. The word ſignifies keeping them in by main ſtrength, as things tyed up in ſacks, or ſowed up, are kept from falling out.

the waters] The rain waters, or waters above the firmament, Gen. 1. 7. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 9.

in his] The clouds are called Gods, 1. becauſe as he cauſeth the ſun to draw up moiſt vapours from the earth, ſo he turns them into rain water, and prepares the clouds to hold them. 2. Becauſe Gods incomprehenſibleneſſe in ſcripture is ſet out by dwelling in and covering himſelf with the clouds, which no man can ſee through, verſ. 9. Pſal. 18. 11. & 97. 2. 3. Becauſe his majeſty and ſtate is ſet out by riding on the clouds, as a King or Emperour on a ſtately horſe, Eſt. 6. 8. Iſa. 19. 1.

thick clouds] The word ſignifies any kind of clouds thick or thin It is derived from a word that ſignifies thickneſſe, becauſe the clouds are the thickeſt part of the air, yet farre thinner then the water which they hold. It ſhould rather have been tranſlated, in his clouds. As it is expounded in the end of the verſe by another Heb. word. For the thinner the cloud is, the more ſtrange is the thing. As 1. that waters ſhould be kept in, whoſe nature is to flow abroad. 2. that they ſhould not quite be reſtrained, but let down by degrees to water the earth. 3. that thin air ſhould hold water thicker then it ſelfe. 4. that the weight of the water or violence of the wind driving the clouds up and down ſhould not rend them, and let down all the waters in them to drown the earth, Gen. 7. 11. Theſe are all ſtrange things, and would be eſteemed miracles, and might ſerve to convince Atheiſts, if they were not ordinary.

and the cloud] Which upholds theſe waters.

is not rent] Or, cleft into two pieces, that all the water might run out.

under them] Under the waters by the weight of them, which is ſo great, that they might eaſilie break through a thinne cloud and drown the earth. Yet ordinarily God lets them out ſo as they do no harme, but good, although ſometimes in judgement he drowns men, and beaſts with them. And the wonderfull power and mercy of God is ſeen in keeping them in with clouds, as he doth the ſea with ſand, that the whole world, and all the creatures in it do not periſh in another floud, Jer.5.22.

V. 9. He holdeth back the face of his throne, and ſpreadeth his cloud upon it.] Here Gods incomprehenſibleneſſe is ſet out, as was hinted in the former verſe. He hath a glorious throne indeed in the higheſt heaven, but the clouds comming between keep us from the ſight of it.

He holdeth back] Heb. He layeth hold on. To wit, that he may hide it, as followes in the end of the verſe.

the face] The viſible demonſtration of it, as a man is known by his face. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word, Countenance.

of his throne] The higheſt heaven, which is his throne, Iſa. 66. 1. It cannot be meant of the aire, though that ſometimes be called heaven, for the clouds cannot keep the ſight of that from us, a great part whereof is below the clouds. they doe indeed ſometimes keep the ſight of the ſtarry heaven from us, and of the higheſt heaven alwayes. Chriſt was covered with one from his Apoſtles ſight, when he went up to heaven, Act. 1. 9.

and ſpreadeth his cloud upon it] To cover it from the ſight of men upon earth. As the clouds keep us from ſeeing Gods throne in the higheſt heavens, ſo mans underſtanding is too ſhallow to comprehend Gods eſſence.

V. 10. He hath compaſſed the waters with bounds, untill the day and night come to an end.] As before he had ſhewed Gods power in ordering the heavens, ſo now in bounding the ſeas: and that both in regard of place and time, that they may not go beyond their limits to the end of the world.

He hath compaſſed] He hath as it were with a paire of compaſſes drawne a circle about the ſea, that it may not paſſe to hurt the earth. For the word, ſee on chap. 22. 14. upon the word Circuit.

the waters] Heb. the face of the waters. So the face of the earth is put for the earth, Gen. 1. 29. For the upper part of it lies open to view like a mans face. For the word, Waters, ſee on chap. 24 9.

with bounds] The word חק ſignifies 1. a decree or ſtatute, Mal. 4. 4. 2. the thing decreed, as a bound of place, chapter 38. 10. a decreed time, chapter 14, 13. appointed food, chapter 23. 12. Here it is taken for a bounding place to the ſea, or a bounding time, as followes in the verſe, within which as within a circled wall the ſea is kept faſt, chap. 38. 8, 10, 11. Pſal. 104. 9. Prov. 8. 29. Jer. 5. 22.

untill] This word doth not prove, as ſome would have it, that afterwards the ſea ſhall overflow the land again, but that it ſhall not before, what it ſhall do afterwards is not revealed to us. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 110. 1.

the day] Heb. light. ſee on chap. 24. 13. 16.

and night] Heb. with darkneſſe. As light is put for day, chapter 24. 13, 16.

come to an end] Heb. untill the conſummation of light with darkneſſe. That is, to the end of the world, which cannot ſtand without the viciſſitude of day and night, Geneſ. 8. 22. Jerem. 31. 35, 36.

V. 11. The pillars of heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof.] So great is the power of Almighty God, that when he ſhewes any ſign of indignation, the ſtrong heavens, and thoſe things that ſeem to uphold them are likely to totter and fall down.

The pillars] Some underſtand hereby the heavens themſelves upheld by the ſtrength God hath put into them at firſt, as with pillars. As the pillar of a cloud, Exod. 14. 19. for the cloud it ſelf. Others underſtand it of the higheſt mountains, which ſeem by their height to uphold the very heavens.

of heaven] Of the ſtarry or airy heaven. See on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

tremble] Shew their weakneſſe, as a man afraid ſhewes his by ſhaking. Or, the mountains ſhake in an earthquake, Exod. 19. 18. Pſal. 114 4.

and are aſtoniſhed] In danger of ſubverſion, as a man trembling at ſome great object of fear knowes not whither to go for help, but looks for preſent ruine.

at his reproof] As a ſlave chidden by a prince trembles, and is agaſt, ſo the pillars of heaven at the ſignes of Gods indignation. Such as underſtand it of the heavens themſelves interpret it of the thunder, whereby God ſeems to ſhew his anger to the heavens, and to make them as it were to tremble, 2 Sam. 22. 8, 9. Pſal. 18. 13, 14, 15. Pſal. 104. 7. For God by the thunder ſpeaks ſo loud, that ſtout men are terrified, Exod. 9. 28. Pſal. 29. 3, &c. they who underſtand it of the mountaines, interpret it of earthquaks which make them to ſhake, and ſometimes to moulder away, as if God were angry with them. Some put, untill, in the beginning of the verſe out of the former verſe, and interpret both of reſtraining the ſea, untill the world end, when both heavens, and mountains ſhall be ſtrangely altered, as if God were angry with them, 2 Pet. 3. 10, 12.

V. 12. He divideth the ſea with his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud.] Gods great power and wiſdome is here further ſet out by raiſing ſtormes in the ſea, and quieting them again at his pleaſure, which is too great a work for any creature to do.

He divideth] Or, He moveth. Or, he cauſeth a ſtorme to come upon the ſea, wherein it ſeems to be divided by the wind, part of it flying up into the ayre from the reſt, and it lies as it were in ridges; the toppe of one wave farre from another, Iſa. 51. 15. Jer. 31. 35.

the ſea] See on chap. 14. 11.

with his power] God is ſo ſtrong that he can make the ſea tempeſtuous.

and by his underſtanding] As he is powerfull enough to raiſe ſtormes in the ſea, ſo he is wiſe enough to lay them again, Pſalm 107. 25. 29.

he ſmiteth through] Wounds them as it were, ſo that they are not able to riſe, Pſal. 18. 38. That is, he allayes the tempeſt, and makes the ſea as quiet as a man mortally wounded.

the proud] The proud ſea, for in a tempeſt it ſeems to be proud, and ſwells as if it would over-run all the world. Heb. pride. Some underſtand it of proud men, which is nothing at all to the coherence, which rather referres it to the ſwelling of the ſea, chap. 38. 11. Some underſtand the whole verſe of making tempeſts, and interpret the ſmiting through the waves to be the ſame with dividing the ſea before with the wind. Others conceive the dividing of the waters at firſt into ſeas and rivers to be here meant. Others underſtand it of dividing ſome arms of the ſea from the body of it by earthquakes, filling ſome channels with the fall of hills. Others think all is ſpoken of calming the ſea, and tranſlate quieting for dividing, as Jer. 31. 2. it is, cauſing to reſt. And ſo Jer. 50. 34. Others underſtand it of dividing the red ſea for the children of Iſrael to paſſe through it. And by the laſt word they underſtand Egypt or the Egyptians then and there drowned, as it is taken, Pſal. 87. 4. & 89. 10. Iſa. 51. 9. In the two laſt places dividing the ſea, and deſtroying the Egyptians are joyned together. Others by Rahab underſtand Pharaoh, for both he and the Egyptians proudly inſulted over Iſrael, as the ſea at laſt did over them: Pſal. 136. 13, 14, 15. This would ſtand well with the words, but that Job is conceived to be before that diviſion of the ſea. See on Chapter 22. 15. At leaſt if this were knowne to Job, it was likely to be by a relation of a thing new done before Moſes writ it.

V. 13. By his ſpirit hee hath garniſhed the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked ſerpent.] And that I may knit up my ſpeech with the moſt excellent work among all others, this is he which hath adorned the heavens with ſuch wonderfull and unſpeakle beauty: and thoſe circles, which like winding ſerpents fetch a compaſſe round about the heavens, are framed with his own hands.

By his ſpirit] By the holy Ghoſt, who wrought in the creation, Gen. 1. 2. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 2.

he hath garniſhed the heavens] He hath not only created them, but alſo adorned them beautifull to the eye. That is, he hath garniſhed them with ſtarres, as a palace is adorned with ſtately pictures. Others underſtand it of clearing the skie from dark clouds in ſunſhiny dayes, which is a beautifull ſight. Others of lightnings, and fiery meteors, which at ſome times give light in the aire. For Heavens, ſee on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

his hand] His power hath made it. For the word ſee on chapter 15. 23.

hath framed] See on verſe 5. upon the word, Formed; yet here it differs a little, as having no relation to forming in a dark place, like the wombe, but onely implying the making of them by God as truly as children are formed by him in their mothers belly. Others read it wounded, as Iſa. 51 9. where Rahab alſo is mentioned as here verſe 12. by which they man Egypt, and by the ſerpent Pharaoh.

The crooked ſerpent] The ſeverall circles of heaven or orbes, which are involved one within another, as a ſerpent crooks or bowes himſelf, and lies round, in ſeverall circles one within another. Others interpret it of a conſtellation, or company of ſtarres called the dragon. Others of the whales or great ſea-fiſh, called ſea-dragons, Iſa. 27. 1. And they ſay that Job concludes his ſpeech with two great and wonderfull works of God in two extreams of the world, the ſtarres in heaven, and huge fiſh in the ſea. The Heb. is word for word, the ſerpent the bar. If it be taken for the circles of heaven, then they are like a ſerpent and bar in their roundneſſe, as before, and ſmoothneſſe, If of the conſtellation called the Dragon, the ſtarres there it is likely are like a ſerpent, or bar at full length. So alſo are the whales long. If of the fiery meteor called Draco volans, the flying dragon, as ſome would have it, that alſo is long like a Serpent and barre of a doore. Thus Job labours many wayes to ſet out Gods infinite wiſdom and power by higher expreſſions, then Bildad had done in the former chapter, and more largely.

V. 14. Loe theſe are parts of his wayes, but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can underſtand?] Among Gods infinite and innumerable works theſe are to be reckoned. But theſe are but ſmall parts of them. For who is able to comprehend in his mind, much leſſe to unfold in words the number, greatneſſe, neſſe, and admirableneſſe of them? So he acknowledges the great wiſdom, power and Majeſty of God, which ſhines forth abundantly in his glorious works, ſo as it might aſtoniſh the beholders. And withall implies his owne and other mens ſlender ability to apprehend them according to the worth of them.

Loe] Or, Behold. See on chap. 1. 12.

theſe are parts] Theſe works of God, which I have repeated are indeed parcels of Gods glorious works. Others interpret it the ends. That is, extremities of utmoſt parts of them, But there are much more glorious things to be ſpoken of God, if we could penetrate further into his works.

of his wayes] Gods wayes are taken ſometimes for thoſe ways whereby he drawes near to us in his word and works, Iſa. 55. 8. Sometimes for the wayes wherein he would have us come to him, Pſalm 119. 33. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for Gods works, whereby he comes to us, or makes himſelfe known to us. Some underſtand it of tempeſts, which all ſee to be Gods ways, for men cannot bring them. So it anſwers to the thunder in the words following. So Gods coming is ſet out. Pſal, 18. 9. &c. And his way, Nah. 1. 3.

but how little] That which hath been ſpoken is but very little in compariſon of what might be ſaid, if we did fully underſtand, or were able fully to expreſſe Gods proceedings. chap. 4. 12.

a portion] Heb. a word, or thing. See on chap. 19. 28. upon the word Matter.

is heard] In that which I have ſpoken now. Or, In all mens diſcourſes. All that ever the wiſeſt men could ſpeak of Gods ways falls infinitely ſhort of the height of them.

of him] Of God. This word ſhews that the ſcope of Jobs ſpeech was not ſo much to make us underſtand Gods works, as to bring us to know God by them, and as it were to ſee him in them, as a builder in a ſtately houſe. For ב of, ſee on chap. 7. 11.

but the thunder of his power] Some underſtand it literally of the thunder, which wonderfully ſets out Gods power and frightens men. See on verſe 11. upon the word Reproof. See alſo chap. 37. 2. Others of Gods moſt glorious works, thundering in mens eares the great wiſdom and power of God all the world over, and that more loud then the thundering of the Captains in Warre, chapter 39. 25. Others of the ſetting out of the greatneſſe of Gods works in ſuch a glorious manner as becomes them. So men talk of thundering eloquence which amazeth the hearers, when great things are ſet out in high expreſſions. For the word Power ſee on chap 9. 4. upon the word Strength.

who can underſtand] No man can. It paſſes the capacity of the wiſeſt men in the world to underſtand all Gods wonderfull works. Thus Job purgeth himſelf from the ignorance of Gods wayes, and profane contempt of Gods works ſo often objected by his friends.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſ. 1. MOreover Job continued his parable and ſaid] Job having anſwered Bildad now ſtayes a while expecting that Zophar ſhould take his courſe. But he either hopeleſſe of reclaiming Job, or confounded with his arguments, or having a better opinion of him by reaſon of his high expreſſions in ſetting out Gods infinite wiſdom and power, though farre ſhort of the things themſelves, ye far beyond what himſelf and his companions had ſpoken of that argument, held his peace, and gives up the bucklers. So do the reſt of his companions diſcouraged by him. For which Elihu was angry with them all, chap. 32. 1, 2. becauſe they condemned him without a cauſe, yet he fails not to ſhew Job his faults. When Job ſees that his friends were ſilent, he goes on the more confidently to maintain his cauſe.

Moreover] The word is And. Here it is tranſlated moreover, to put us in mind of ſome ſpace between this and Jobs anſwer to Bildad.

continued] Heb. added to lift up. He ſpake again, and more freely and boldly then before, to maintain the truth and his own integrity, ſeeing no man oppoſed him, and his adverſaries were conquered. To Adde in Scripture language ſignifies to do the ſame thing again, and to do more in that kind then was done before. So to adde to ſinne is to ſin again, and to ſin more grievouſly. Judg. 3. 12. & 4. 1. & 10. 6. And for God to adde to appear to Samuel, is to appear again, and declare his mind more fully to him, 1 Sam. 3. 8. For lifting up of a parable it may be meant of bare ſpeaking or lifting up words into the mouth, as Aſcending into the heart is thinking, Jer, 7. 31. Or it may be ſpoken in regard of the voyce. Job being now more fearleſſe might ſpeak in a louder tone to expreſſe his confidence. Or, in regard of the matter, for he that ſpeaks in parables, or choice ſentences ſpeaks in an higher ſtile, then they that ſpeak in plain words. This phraſe of lifting up a parable is uſed, Numb. 23. 7. For the word נשא ſee on chap. 21. 3. upon the word Suffer.

His parable] It is derived from a word that ſignifies to rule. 1. Becauſe they rule in ſpeech, and illuſtrate our ſentences, as Rulers are eminent in a Nation, 2. Becauſe other ſpeeches are tried by them, as by Rulers and Judges. 3. Becauſe they come from Kings and eminent perſons, as Solomons Proverbs. 4. Becauſe they have a throne in all mens minds, and no man dares to contradict them. The word alſo from which it is derived ſignifies to be like. 1. Becauſe many parables are ſimilitudes and liken one thing to another. 2. Becauſe they are characters of good mens manners, and expreſſe them lively as the wax doth the ſeal ſtamped on it. By the word is meant, 1. Principles in Divinity commonly believed of all, and uſed in common ſpeech by them. Ezek. 18. 2. 2. Witty ſentences ſpoken by wiſe men of great note, as Prov. 1. 1. 3. Riddles or hard ſayings requirng labour for the underſtanding of them. Pſal. 49. 4. & 78. 2. 4. Similitudes, Ezek. 18. 2. Here it may be uſed in any or all of theſe ſenſes, for all are to be found in this Chapter and the next.

V. 2. As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgement, and the Almighty, who hath vexed my ſoule.] In this ſpeech of Job, 1. He clears his own innocency further, to verſe 11. of this Chapter. 2. He acknowledges that Gods judgements light on ungodly men ſometimes in this world, but not alwayes. This laſts to the end of the Chapter. 3. He ſets out Gods infinite wiſdom which goes beyond the wiſeſt projects of men, in the next chapter. In the clearing of his innocency, 1. He profeſſeth it to verſe 7. 2. He proves it by his juſt confidence, which he could not have, if he were an ungodly man, or an hypocrite. For the clearing of his own innocency, 1. He doth it by oath, and calling God to witneſſe that he ſpeaks nothing but the truth, verſe 2, 3, 4. 2. By the unjuſtneſſe of the act, if he ſhould pronounce himſelf wicked, whom he knew not to be ſo, verſe 5. 3. By ſelf-condemnation which would follow thereupon, verſ. 6. In his ſolemn oath, 1. He calls God to witneſſe, verſ. 2. 2. He profeſſeth his conſtancy in upholding his integrity to death, verſ. 3. 3. His uprightneſſe, verſ. 4. For the firſt, The ſumme of this verſe is, as if Job ſhould have ſaid, My friends I hear, what your opinion is of me, and I confeſſe, that Almighty God doth at this time ſo deal with me, oppreſſing this my languiſhing ſoul with ſuch extream miſery, that he ſeemeth to have debarred me from all right of defending, and maintaining mine own innocency againſt you.

As God liveth] The uſuall form of an Oath among the people of God. 1 Sam. 25. 34. 2 Sam. 2. 27. For God ſee on chap. 8. 3, 5. For the word Liveth ſee on chap. 19. 25. When we ſpeak of mens lives we mean at preſent, when we ſpeak of Gods life, we mean for ever. Jobs intention is to ſhew that as ſure as God is the living God for ever, ſo certainly he will not forſake his integrity, nor ſpeak falſly. He takes an oath here. 1. Becauſe he ſpeaks of a weighty matter. 2. Becauſe his arguments being ſpent, he had no refuge left but to appeal to God. 3. Becauſe elſe they might think he ſpake ambitiouſly rather then truly of himſelf in the following chapter. 4. That he might keep himſelf within compaſſe of truth ſpeaking upon his oath.

who hath taken away my judgement] If it be meant of the ſentence of judgement, then the ſenſe is, that God would not hear his cauſe, though often deſired to do it, nor clear him although hee were a godly man, and unjuſtly condemned by his friends. If it be meant of execution, then the ſenſe is, That God would not take away from him thoſe heavy judgements, which hee uſeth to lay upon ungodly men, and which his enemies uſed as arguments to prove him to be ſuch an one, and would not think any better of him, till they were removed. So hee accuſeth God to have no regard of his innocency. And this paſſionate ſpeech Elihu taxeth him withall, chap. 34. 5. For the word Judgement, ſee on chap. 22. 4. my ſoul] See on chap. 14. 22.

V. 3. All the while my breath is in mee, and the ſpirit of God is in my noſtrils] Now hee ſets out the time how long this Oath ſhould binde him, to wit, as long as he lived.

All the while] Heb. That all the while. That is, I ſwear, I will never alter my judgement of mine own integrity while I live. Or, Surely all the while. So כי is tranſlated, chap. 28. 1.

my breath is in me] So long as I live. An elegant deſcription of life, for as ſoon as man lives, he breathes, Gen. 2. 7. And when his breath fails, he dies, 1 King. 17. 17. Pſa. 146. 4. Iſa. 2. 22.

is in my noſtrils] See on chap. 14. 13. upon the word Wrath. While my breath goes in and out of my noſtrils, I will maintain mine integrity.

V. 4. My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſſe, nor my tongue utter deceit] How ill ſo ever ye judge of me, yet I will not ſpeak contrary to that which I have ſaid, and ſo do wickedly in betraying the truth, as ye have done, chap. 13. 7. I will not deny my integrity.

Me lips ſhall not] Heb. If my lips ſhall. The reddition is left out, Then let mee be counted a lyer, or, Let God puniſh me ſeverely for it. Another form of ſwearing, See on chap. 1. 11. So that here is a double Oath. The firſt in v. 2. The ſecond here. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 6.

ſpeak wickedneſſe] I will not confeſſe my ſelf to be a wicked and deceitfull man, as ye charge me, for then I ſhould ſpeak untruly. This interpretation ſuits well with the words before and after. For Wickedneſſe ſee on chap. 13. 7.

utter] The word הגה ſignifies ſometimes to meditate, as Pſal. 1. 2. ſometimes to ſpeak, Pſal. 37. 30. ſometimes to ſigh and mourn like Doves, Iſa. 59. 11. For men ſhould meditate of what they intend to ſpeak, and ſpeak what they have thought on, and mournings come from ſad thoughts. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe for ſpeaking and revealing the thoughts of our minds to others.

deceit] See on chap. 13. 7.

V. 5. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you: till I dye, I will not remove my integrity from me.] You condemn me as a wicked man, becauſe the hand of God is upon me. I cannot ſubſcribe to this opinion of yours. I will never confeſſe ſo long as I live, that God accounts me for a wicked man, notwithſtanding theſe heavy things inflicted upon me by him.

God forbid] Heb. Let it be a common or prophane thing unto me. Such things might not be touched, 1 Sam. 24. 6.

that] So אם is tranſlated, 1 Sam, 24. 6. Others make it a new oath, If I do juſtifie you, let God condemn me.

I ſhould juſtifie you] In this caſe, or think you are in the right when you condemn me. For Job had nothing againſt their perſons nor lives, but only againſt their carriage in this buſineſſe, and their raſh cenſuring of him. For the word ſee on chap. 4. 17. & 9. 20.

I will not remove] See on chap. 12. 20.

my integrity from me] I will not confeſſe my ſelf guilty of thoſe crimes of which ye accuſe me.

V. 6. My righteouſneſſe I hold faſt, and will not let it goe: my heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.] As in the laſt verſe, he had ſhewed it to be a moſt unjuſt act, if he ſhould confeſſe himſelfe a wicked man contrary to his knowledge, ſo here he ſhews, that his conſcience would perpetually check him for it.

my righteouſneſſe] I will maintain that I have kept a good conſcience toward God and man. Or, I know my cauſe is righteous, and that I am in the right, and ye in the wrong. And to this I will ſtick.

I hold faſt] Heb. I have held faſt. Ye ſee that I have ſtood cloſe to it, and maintained it againſt you all, and put you to ſilence, ſo that none of you hath a word to ſay againſt it. For the word ſee on chap. 18. 9.

ſo long as I live.] Heb. from my dayes. My conſcience ſhall clear me from a wicked life led by me in time paſt. Or rather, it ſhall have no cauſe, nor give way to confeſſe me a wicked man, for time to come ſo long as I live.

V. 7. Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riſeth up againſt me, is the unrighteous.] Ye conceive that I have ſpoken in the behalfe of the wicked, as though they ſhould alwayes ſcape unpuniſhed. But ye are deceived, and I am ſo confident, that howſoever wicked men may thrive in the world, and die in peace and plenty, that if I were diſpoſed to wiſh hurt and damage to mine enemies, I would not deſire any greater miſchief ſhould befall them, then befalls ungodly men after their proſperity. So much do I hate iniquity, though ye pleaſe to reckon me among wicked men.

Let mine enemy be as the wicked.] A popular manner of ſpeaking, wherein, when men expreſſe an abomination of a thing, they wiſh it to their enemies, taking it for granted, that the power of malice is ſo great, that no man can expreſſe it in the wiſh of any particular evill. See the like phraſe, 2 Sam. 18. 32. 1 Sam. 25. 26. Dan. 4. 19. There is no good ſo great, but men would wiſh it to their friends, nor no evill ſo great, but men would wiſh it to their enemies. as the unrighteous] Let him feel thoſe miſeries that unrighteous men ſhall one day feel.

V. 8. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his ſoule?] Ye conceive me to be an hypocrite. If it were ſo, though I might in health, and proſperity flatter my ſelfe, yet when God ſhall bring me to death, which I know not how ſoon it may be, I could not die with any comfort.

For] Or, Surely. As it is tranſlated, chap. 28. 1. For it gives no reaſon of the former verſe, but affords an argument to prove Job to be no hypocrite.

what is] He can have no hope at all, for he hath nothing to ground it upon.

the hope] How can he hope for any good in death, or what is the good he hopes for then? It may be in his height, he had ſome high thoughts, but his heart droops, when God warnes him before his Tribunall ſeat by death. Then he ſees that all his hopes are vain. though he hath gained] Though he be never ſo rich, yet all will fail him in death. Or, when he hath been covetous. All that he hath gotten by his covetous courſes, he muſt loſe, when he dies. V. 9. Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?] In this verſe and the next Job proves, that an hypocrite though never ſo rich can have no ſure hope in God in trouble or death. And that by three effects of hope. 1. It makes man confident, that God will hear his prayers in this verſe. 2. It affords him delight in God, when he wants it in the world. 3. It makes him with boldneſs in his loweſt eſtate conſtantly to ſeek to God for help, verſe 10. This an hypocrite cannot do.

V. 10. Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he always call upon God?] A godly man can find matter of delight in God in time of adverſity, and call upon him for delivery with ſome confidence, having had experience of his favour before: but a wicked man, or an hypocrite cannot.

will he delight himſelf] Will he or can he find comfort in God, when the world affords him none? See on chap. 22. 26. Others interpret it of Gods hearing his prayers, and granting his requeſts, and ſo giving him matter of delight. Which agrees well with the words before and after.

V. 11. I will teach you by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceale.] Some interpreters knit theſe words to the former, and read them thus, I teach you being under the hand of the Almighty, and what I am toward the Almighty, I do not conceal from you. As if Job had ſaid, I have ſhewed, that an hypocrite dare not ſeek to God for help in trouble. I dare and do do it in this great affliction, therefore I am no hypocrite, and your ſentence againſt me is unjuſt, verſ. 12. But as the words are read, they are a preface to perſwade them to attend to what he had to ſay in the reſidue of this Chapter, and in the Chapter following, wherein he ſhews, that though he be no wicked man notwithſtanding his afflictions, yet God doth often cut off wicked men by temporall judgements, although not always, and that they ſhall periſh in the end. And that Gods various proceedings are above the reach of humane underſtanding.

I will teach you] See on chap. 6. 24. & 8. 10.

by the hand of God] By Gods help. Or rather, of the hand of God. Concerning Gods actions wherein ye are very ignorant, for ye meaſure them by a wrong rule. Ye conceive, that whom he proſpers he loves, and whom he grievouſly afflicts he hates. But ye are deceived, for he proſpers or afflicts good men or bad, as he pleaſe himſelf. For he hath mens proſperous eſtates, or croſſe in his own hand to diſpoſe of, as he pleaſeth. So ב is tranſlated of Exod. 12. 43, 44, 45. Pſal. 87. 3. For the word Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23. For God ſee on chap. 8. 3. 5.

V. 12. Behold all ye your ſelves have ſeen it, why then are ye thus altogether vain?] Whereas I ſaid that I would teach you Gods proceedings, I doubt not but ye know them well, or at leaſt ſhould do, ſeeing you brag ſo much of your obſervations. But I will call thoſe things to your remembrance, which it may be ye have forgotten that ye have ſeen God afflict good men as well as bad. And therefore your concluſion is moſt vain, that Gods love may be known by proſperity, or his hatred by adverſity, Eccleſ. 9. 1. yet I deny not, but that God doth many times lay heavy judgements upon the ungodly, as I will now ſhew, and make plain. Neither did I deny it before: but ſhewed it not to be Gods perpetual way of proceeding.

why then] Heb. and why is this? To wit, that ye go againſt your own obſervation.

are ye thus altogether vain] Heb. are ye vain in vanity? Why do you make ſuch moſt vain concluſions, that have nothing to uphold them?

V. 13. This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppreſſors, which they ſhall receive of the Almighty.] Some take theſe words to be a repetition of what his friends had ſaid before; but they are rather a conceſſion of the truth thereof ſo farre, that God doth ſometimes deſtroy ungodly men by outward judgements, and ruine their poſterity after them. Yet ſo as that this could make nothing againſt Job, who could depend upon God in theſe miſeries, which hypocrites could not do, verſ. 6. 8. The words are almoſt the ſame with thoſe of Zophar, chap. 20. 29. See the expoſition of them there. Only a word or two of thoſe words, which differ in the originall.

V. 14. If his children be multiplied, it is for the ſword: and his off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.] He ſhewes 1. that if the wicked rich man doth eſcape Gods judgements, while he lives, yet his poſterity meets with them, when he is gone, if not before, verſ. 15, 16, 17, 18. 2. that hee often meets with them in his life time, and eſpecially at his death, from thence to the end of the chapter. The judgement of God upon his children are 1. the ſword and famine, in this verſe, 2. hatred of men, ſo that the world ſhall be glad to be rid of them, verſ. 15. 3. loſſe of their parents wealth, verſ. 16, 17. loſſe of their parents habitation, verſ. 18.

ſhall not be ſatisfied] That is, ſhall be ſtarved for want of bread. If the ſword kill them not, the famine will. Meioſis, more meant then ſpoken, for men may not be ſatisfied with bread, and yet live. But death by famine is here intended. See the like manner of ſpeaking on chap. 14. 10, 11. & 15. 18. with bread] With food. They ſhall not have enough to keep them alive. If men have bread enough, they can live, though they want other food. But if they cannot get that, they quickly periſh. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 23.

V. 15. Thoſe that remain of him ſhall be buried in death: and his widowes ſhall not weep.] If it happen that any of his remain having eſcaped the ſword and famine, ſo that they die by no violent death, but are brought to the grave like other men, yet not one of their widows ſhall bewaile her husband, but ſhall rather be glad, that ſhe is thus rid of him, and delivered from him.

thoſe that remain of him] Thoſe of his children or nephews, which eſcape the two former judgements mentioned, verſe 14. For the word, ſee on chap. 20. 21.

ſhall be buried in death] That is, they ſhall be preſently and privately buried, without any funerall pomp, ſuch as uſually is conferred upon rich men, when they die. This beſt agreees with what follows in the verſe. They had carried themſelves ſo ill, that their widows would beſtow neither coſt nor tears at their funerals. Some underſtand it of the plague, which is a moſt deadly diſeaſe. But the former interpretation is better.

and his widowes) The widowes of every one of them. Others conceive, that each of them had many wives, as rich men then uſed to have, but none of them would weep for their husbands death. For the word, ſee on chap. 22. 9.

ſhall not weep] At their funeralls, or for their death, Pſal. 78. 64. Either they were not left to mourn for them, or rather, their husbands were ſo unkind to them, and hatefull to the publick, that they thought them not worthy of lamentation, but rather were glad they were rid of them. Meioſis; as verſ. 14. on the word Satisfied. If they that are neareſt to them, be glad they are gone out of the world, much more others. This is a judgement, to die without being lamented, Jer. 22. 18. Eccleſ. 12. 5.

V. 16. Though he heap up ſilver, as the duſt, and prepare raiment as the clay.] He ſets out in this verſe and the next the fruitleſſe labour of the ungodly man in heaping up abundance of riches by oppreſſing others to enrich his poſterity, which yet ſhall never enjoy it. But God will give it to better men.

as the clay] In abundance, as there is ſtore of clay. Or, though he have ſo much, that he make no more account of it, then of the dirt under his feet. For the word, ſee on on chap. 15. 12.

V. 17. He may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the ſilver.] I grant indeed he may get and provide theſe things, but neither he nor any of his ſhall enjoy them, but ſome other man of a more honeſt and upright converſation. the ſilver] See on chap. 22. 25.

V. 18. He buildeth his houſe as a moth, and as a booth, that the keeper maketh] As he ſhall loſe his treaſure, and apparell, ſo likewiſe his houſe ſhall ſuddenly come to utter ruine.

He ſhall build his houſe as a moth] As a moth prepares himſelfe a lodging in ſome ſtately garment thinking to abide there for ever, but either eates himſelfe out of houſe and home, or is bruſht out of it: ſo the oppreſſour builds him a ſtately palace, thinking to live in it all his dayes, and leave it to his poſterity after him, but either he works himſelf out of it, or is put out of it by others. Deodate reads it thus, He ſhall build, but his houſe ſhall be as a moth. Not having relation to the moths building her houſe, but to the ſudden deſtruction of the moth which is quickly cruſhed with a finger, Pſal. 39. 11. The ſame thing is ſet out by the ſimilitude of a ſpiders web, Job 8. 14. and by many other ſimilitudes, Pſal. 58. 7, 8, 9. Others read it thus, He ſhall build his houſe as Arcturus. So this word is tranſlated, chapter 9. 9. And their meaning is, that he ſhould build him a ſtately palace, as if he were in heaven among the ſtarres, but it ſhall quickly fall. For the word, Build, chap. 20. 19. For Houſe, ſee on chap. 15. 28.

and as a booth which the keeper maketh] He ſets out the ſudden and irrecoverable ruine or loſs of the oppreſſours houſe by another ſimilitude taken from a booth made by a watchman in the orchard or field, of a ſlight building to laſt for a while till the fruit which he watcheth be ripe, and then it drops down, when winter comes. V. 19. The rich man ſhall lie down, but he ſhall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.] The Tranſlators ſeem to underſtand it, of lying down in death, and their meaning to be, that when the rich man dies he ſhall not be buried; and that he dies ſuddenly in the opening of an eye, like the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor. 15. 52. Others that interpret it of death, read the latter part of the verſe thus, when a man opens his eyes, he ſhall not be.

That is, when another man looks to find him alive, he ſhall find him dead and gone. As chap. 7. 8. 10. and 20. 9. Pſal. 37. 10. 36. Others that favour this interpretation read the whole verſe thus, The rich man ſhall lie down, and it ſhall not be gathered, he openeth his eyes, and it is not. That is, when he dies, his wealth ſpoken of verſ. 16. ſhall not be gathered to himſelf, he cannot carry it away with him, and if he could look for any comfort in it, he would be deceived. See the like ſpoken of a dead man, chap. 14. 21. 22. Or, it ſhall not be gathered to his children; if he could open his eyes, he would ſee them poor enough for all his riches. Others conceive theſe words to be meant of falling into poverty, altering onely the end of the verſe thus, and there ſhall be none. And thus they interpret it, He ſhall be ſo poor, that he ſhall lye in the ſtreets, and no man ſhall pity him ſo as to receive him into his houſe: but all men ſhall abhorre him for his former cruelty. Yea he ſhall look round about him in this extremity for help, but ſhall find none to relieve him. Others interpret the words of his lying down to ſleep, tranſlating them thus, When the rich man lieth down, it is not taken away, when he openeth his eyes, it is not. That is to ſay, when he goes to bed he hath all his wealth about him, but when he wakes it is all gone. Like that, Ruth 1. 21. His goods would unexpectedly be taken away by fire or theeves, or like evils before the morning.

The rich man ſhall lye down] For the world Lying down, ſee on chap. 14. 12.

but he ſhall not be gathered] To his fathers. He ſhall not have the honour of burial, 2 King. 22. 20. Jer. 8. 2. Or, it ſhall not be taken away. That is, his wealth. So this word is tranſlated, Gen. 30. 23. The reaſon of this double ſignification is, becauſe things gathered to ſome are taken away from others.

he openeth his eyes] If he could open his eyes after death; Or, lying in the ſtreets he looks about him for help. Or, when he wakes from his ſleep in the morning. For the word, Eyes, ſee on chap. 15. 15. upon the word, Sight.

and he is not] He is not alive. Dead men, who converſe not with others are accounted as having no being. Or, it is not. That is, his wealth. All is gone within the compaſſe of one ſhort night.

V. 20. Terrours take hold on him as waters, a tempeſt ſtealeth him away in the night.] Thoſe troubles which now follow, ſome conceive to befall the wicked man the father of the children mentioned, verſ. 14. in his life. Others, at his death. They are ſet out by ſimilitudes taken from a deluge of waters, or ſtorm of wind, verſ. 20. 21. Which come ſuddenly, prevaile irreſiſtibly, overturn all in their way. 2. He ſhewes the vanity of all wayes of eſcape plotted by this rich oppreſſour, verſ. 22. 3. His infamous departure, verſ. 23.

terrours] Fears of want, or of a violent death, as chap. 18. 11. 14. & 15. 21.

take hold on him] It is ſingular to note out, that every thing would terrifie him, or affright him. They take ſuch hold on him, that they will not let him go, but accompany him to his grave.

as waters] Abundantly, ſo that they overflow him, as waters falling from an high hill, or rain waters cauſing a deluge, and drowing townes. Sore afflictions are compared to waters, chap. 22. 11. V. 21. The eaſt wind carryeth him away, and he departeth: and as a ſtorm, hurleth him out of his place] The former verſe may fitly be a ſimilitude taken from a ſtorm at ſea, which makes the water rage: this from a whirlewind at land, which carryes all away before it.

God] This is added to ſupply the ſenſe, and therefore written in ſmaller letters to ſhew from whom theſe afflictions come. Others underſtand it of the ſtorm or Eaſt wind ſpoken of before, which will bring many miſeries upon him.

ſhall caſt upon him] He ſhall ſend afflictions upon him before mentioned, or ſuch like, as it were darts from heaven, which no man could do, chap. 20. 23.

and not ſpare] He in his cruel oppreſſions ſpared none, and now God will not ſpare him, but ſend one ſtorm of affliction after another, till he be deſtroyed, as he oppreſſed others, till he ruined them. Like for Like. See on chap. 16. 13.

hee would fain flee] He hath a great deſire and uſeth all means to eſcape the ſtorm, but cannot. Or, he flees apace. Heb. in fleeing he flees. He makes haſt to eſcape Gods hand, as men do that run apace from one place to another to eſcape an enemy, and ſtay in none, but are ſtill purſued, till they be taken and ſlain. He made others flee for fear of him before (ſee on chap. 24. 4.) now God makes him flee. For the word, ſee on Job 14. 2.

out of his hand] Or becauſe of his hand. He would eſcape the plague, that Gods hand inflicts upon him, if he could, but he is ſtill purſued by Gods hand, till he periſh. So the word is uſed, Exod. 9. 3. & 24. 11. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 23. others read it, he flees clean away from his place. To eſcape Gods judgements, if he might. He is driven out of houſe and home. So יד is tranſlated, Deut. 23. 12. Iſa. 56. 5.

V. 23. Men ſhall clap their hand at him, and ſhall hiſſe him out of his place.] And this is yet a great deal the more miſerable, that he being thus caſt down from his former happy and flouriſhing eſtate, all men ſhall be ſo far from taking pity of him, that on the contrary part they ſhall laugh and rejoyce at his downfall, hiſſing and clapping their hands at him.

Men ſhall] Every one that ſees his ruine ſhall do it. Heb. He ſhall clap. That is, hands ſhall be clapped at him, to wit, by all that ſee his downfall. Or, thoſe men that clap their hands ſhall clap them at him. See for both theſe wayes on chap. 3. 3. upon the word, It was ſaid. This argues great infamy and diſgrace. For no men are thus uſed by all ſorts of people, but ſuch as are odious to all (as wolves to the flock) and thought unfit to converſe with any man. Others read it, God ſhall, &c. That is, God ſhall ſhew himſelf glad of their ruine, as men do by clapping of hands. But the former being more literall, and arguing a publick diſgrace, is better. Others read, It ſhall. That is, the ſtorm or Eaſt wind ſpoken of before ſhall proſecute him, till it have driven him clean out of his place.

clap their hands] For joy that they are delivered from his oppreſſions, which they teſtifie by that outward geſture, Lam. 2. 15. Ezek. 25. 6.

at him] At the ungodly oppreſſour ſpoken of before. They ſhall be glad of his deſtruction.

and ſhall hiſſe him] In ſign of deteſtation of him for his former cruelties, 1 King 9. 8. Lam. 2. 15. Zeph. 2. 15. Jer. 25. 9. Mic. 6. 16.

out of his place] Out of his town, country, or city, where he dwels. Or out of the world. They ſhall never leave hiſſing at him, till they be quite rid of him. Others underſtand it of the hiſſers. They ſhall every man out of his place or ſeverall habitation, where he dwells, hiſſe at him. The former ſenſe argues a deadly, this a general deteſtation. The former agrees beſt with verſ. 20. &c. For the word, ſee on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 9.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verſe 1. S*Urely, there is a veine for the ſilver, and a place for gold, where they fine it.*] Job having in the former chapter ſhewed, that God doth ſometimes in this world puniſh ungodly men to ſhew his juſtice, and terrifie others, now leſt his friends ſhould object, why doth he not do ſo alwayes, or why doth he afflict godly men as much, to make the world believe, that they are as bad? he ſets out Gods wonderfull wiſdom, which carries things far above the reach of the wiſeſt men. Herein, 1. he demonſtrates, what admirable things God had given men wiſedom to find out, to verſ. 12. 2. How that part of wiſedom, whereby a reaſon of Gods various dealing with men of one ſort, either good or bad, in proſpering or afflicting them ſhould be given, is too high for any creature to conceive or reveal, to verſ. 28. 3. that man therefore muſt not cenſure others to be good or bad according to their proſperity or afflictions, but rather labour to keep himſelf cloſe to the rule of Gods word, and to be content with what is there revealed to him, and to judge of others according to their lives not according to their outward eſtates. verſ. 28. For the firſt he lets paſſe worldly things abroad, which may be thought to argue no great wiſedom, becauſe they are obvious to every eye, and inſtances in corn and minerals, which are formed under the earth, and brought forth by that wiſedom God hath given to man. And 1. he ſets out the principall metals to be digged out of the earth, verſ. 1, 2. which are ſilver, and gold, verſ. 1. iron and braſſe, verſ. 2. And 2. hee ſhewes the hardneſſe of the work, verſ. 3. &c. to verſ. 12.

Surely] The word commonly ſignifies, For. But here being no reaſon given of what was ſpoken before, but a new matter handled, it is well tranſlated, Surely. So it is tranſlated chap. 8. 6.

there is a vein] Or, a mine. Heb. a comming forth. That is, either a place where it puts forth it ſelf into veins, or a way to bring it out of the earth. Mans wit can find a way to bring hidden things out of the earth, but not to know a reaſon of Gods judgements. He inſtances ſtances in this mining buſineſſe rather then in Aſtronomy, or navigation, becauſe a mans eyes may guide him in theſe latter, but not in the former. He can ſee the ſtars at firſt to guide him in thoſe, but may dig long ere he ſee a gold or ſilver mine. Alſo it is harder to deal with earth, and rocks to dig up metals, then to look on ſtars, or ſail in ſeas.

for the ſilver] See on chap. 22. 25.

and a place] See on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 9.

for the gold] Which is of greater price then ſilver.

where they fine it] This tranſlation ſeems to look to the gold finers ſhop. But all Jobs diſcourſe ſpeaks of things under ground. Others read it, from whence they fine it. That is, from whence they take it to refine. One verbe included in another. See on chap. 15. 18. & 16. 11. & 18. 8. But it may beſt be read, which they fine. Intimating that gold and ſilver, which now gliſter ſo much, did not ſo at firſt, but were buried low in the earth, and there lay buryed in rubbiſh, till by the wiſdom given to man by God they were taken out from thence and refined.

V. 2. Iron is taken out of the earth, and braſſe is molten out of the ſtone] Having ſpoken before of the two nobler metals ſilver and gold, now he ſpeaks of the production of the two meaner, iron and braſſe.

Iron] See on chap. 19. 24.

is taken] See on chap. 15. 12. upon the word, Carry away.

out of the earth] Heb. out of the duſt. It is by miners digged out of the earth, as other metals are. See on chap. 14. 8. upon the word, Ground.

and braſſe] A metal finer then iron, yet not ſo fine as ſilver.

is molten] The droſſe in it muſt be got out by fire. Or, which is molten. It is taken out of the earth, and then refined by fire; as was ſaid of gold, verſ. 1.

out of the ſtone] That is, out of the oare, which is like a ſtone. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 19. It may be read, and the ſtone which is melted into braſſe.

V. 3. He ſetteth an end to darkneſſe, and ſearcheth out all perfection: the ſtones of darkneſſe, and the ſhadow of death.] The difficulty of the work requiring much art and labour, to bring forth theſe metals out of the earth, is ſet out in this verſe, and many verſes following. 1. The workmen muſt ſtrive with darkneſſe, in this verſe. 2. With Water, verſe 4. 3. With fire, verſ. 5. 4. With ſtones and duſt, verſ. 6. 5. With ſtrange and uncouth wayes in the earth, verſ. 7, 8. 6. With rocks and mountains, verſ. 9. 7. The fruit of his labour is ſet out, verſ. 10, 11. In this verſe is ſet out the art of man in digging holes in the earth, and bringing light into them to diſcern the metals for which he digs.

He ſetteth an end to darkneſſe] The earth being dark in the bowels of it, when the miners have digged deep, they bring lights down into it to find out thoſe metals, that elſe would lie hid there for ever. Others underſtand it not of the lights carried down by the workman, but of the metals brought forth to light. They lay in darkneſſe before: but now there is an end of that darkneſſe, and the workman brings them forth into the light to be ſeen by men, who elſe ſhould never have beheld them. Some underſtand this He to be God: but it appears by the oppoſition, ver. 12. that it is meant of the miner, who doth all theſe things, as ſhall be ſhewed in the notes. And it ſets out Gods glory the more, that the moſt curious Artiſt, that can do ſuch great matters, yet is not able to give an account of Gods judgements. For the word End, ſee on chap. 16. 3. For the word Darkneſſe, on chap. 15. 23.

and ſearcheth out all perfection] He never leaves digging and ſearching till he have found out the moſt excellent and perfect metals.

the ſtones of darkneſſe, and the ſhadow of death] Or, and of the ſhadow of death. That is, he reſts not till he find out not onely the metals ſpoken of before, but alſo pretious ſtones, which lie low in the earth hid in darkneſſe, where is nothing but a deadly ſhade. Places under the earth, are as it were conſecrated to darkneſſe, left to devour dead mens carkaſſes, and are pictures of Hell the Kingdom of darkneſſe. The darkneſſe there is ſo terrible, that it may fright men to death, and to ſome workmen the dark dampes under the earth have proved deadly. For the word Stones ſee on chap. 14. 19. For the Shadow of death, on chap. 3. 5. All intimates the hardneſſe of coming by them overcome by mans art, and induſtry.

V. 4. The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant; even the waters forgotten of the foot: they are dried up, they are gone away from men] When men are digging for metals, waters ariſe out of ſprings below in the ground, where there was no ſuſpition of them, as of the ſwelling of rivers on earth. Yet they come in ſo faſt as the workmen are forced to leave the place, till they have got the water out again. Theſe waters drown the mines, and hinder the work. Yet ſuch Art hath God given to man, and courage withall, that they leave not off the work, but empty the waters by Buckets, Pumps, Wheeles, and ſuch like devices, and then go on afreſh, till they have finiſhed their work.

The flood] See on chap. 20. 17.

breaketh out] The word ſignifies a violent breaking forth of the water ready to drown all the workmen. See on chap. 16. 14.

from the inhabitant] Some underſtand it of the channell where it ran before, but the water rather dwelt in it, then the channell in the water. Alſo Job ſpeaks of water under ground, where no channel appeares. Broughton reads it, from the ſpring. Perhaps hee brings גר from נגר looſing נ. From the place whence it flowes. Others read it, ſo that there is no abider. That is, there is no workman that dare abide there to go on with his work, till the water be drawn out. Thus this particle is uſed, verſ. 11. Jer. 48. 2. Ezek. 16. 41. And this ſeemeth to be the beſt ſenſe, and to agree beſt with the ſcope of the place.

even the waters] Theſe words are added, becauſe the adjective following is plurall. And ſo much is underſtood in the word Floud, which conſiſts of many waters.

forgotten of the foot] Never trod in by any man, as being under ground, and as far remote from the knowledge of men, as things clean forgotten by them. Broughton reads it, unkenned of any foot.

they are dried up] Heb. they are drawn up, or diminiſhed. To wit, by ſuch meanes, as the workmen uſe for that purpoſe.

they are gone away] Or, they are removed. By the Art, and labour of the workmen.

from men] From thoſe workmen. The pits are cleered, ſo that they may go to work again. Or, by men. That is, by the workmens paines. So מ is tranſlated, Jer. 10. 14. For the word Man ſee on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

V. 5. As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up, as it were fire.] Sometime it cometh to paſſe, that the upper part of the ground is fruitfull, and brings forth corn to feed men, yet underneath, where the workmen look not for it, may be brimſtone or coale mines, which may eaſily of it own accord, or by the ſtroakes of their iron inſtruments, or falling of their lights take fire, and hinder the miners work. Which yet they can quench or empty, and go on with their work. Broughton reads it thus. A ground out of which groweth food, is underneath changed as fire. It may be underſtood barely of digging up brimſtone or coals out of the earth, though not fired, nor hindering the workmen.

As for the earth] See on chap. 9. 24.

out of it cometh bread] Corn of which men make bread cometh out of the earth. Bread-corn as we call it; and as it is tranſlated, Iſa. 28. 28. For coming out ſee on chap. 20. 25. For Bread on chap. 15. 23.

and under it is turned up] Brimſtone or other fiery matter brought to light by the miners. Or, and under it is changed. There is other matter underneath, far different from corn. So the word is uſed, chap. 20. 14 Or, it takes fire underneath, as was hinted before.

as it were fire] Some underſtand it of gold, or pretious ſtones like fire in colour. Others of the lamps of the workmen, which makes the earth ſeem to be on fire. Others of brimſtone or coals, which have fire in them. Others of the firing of the mines, which ſometimes happens. For the word ſee on chap. 18. 5.

V. 6. The ſtones of it are the place of ſaphires: and it hath duſt of gold.] Some conceive that as water and fire were ſet out before as impediments of the miners labour, ſo ſtones and duſt here. If he will get Saphires, he muſt cut through ſtones for it, and if he will have gold, he muſt digge up great ſtore of rubbiſh, which may endanger to choake him. Others conceive that the goodneſſe of the ground is commended, which in ſtead of common ſtones brings forth Saphires, and other pretious ſtones, and gold in ſtead of duſt, and that in abundance, chap. 22. 24.

The ſtones of it] See on chap. 14. 19.

are the place] See on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 29.

of ſaphires] Of pretious ſtones. The Saphire an excellent ſtone is put for the reſt. This ſtone is mentioned, verſ. 16. Alſo Exod. 24. 10. & 28. 18. Cant. 5. 14. ſee on thoſe places.

and it hath duſt of Gold] Or, oare of gold. See for Duſt, on chap. 14. 8. upon the word Ground.

V. 7. There is a path which no ſoul knoweth, and which the vultures eye hath not ſeen.] The difficulty of this mining work is here ſet out by the inacceſſibleneſſe of the place to thoſe birds of prey, that flye high to ſeek food on the tops of rocks and mountaines, where men uſe not to come: and that in this verſe. And of wild beaſts which range through deſerts and woods for prey, where men dwell not, verſ. 8. Yet art leads men to theſe underground places to find gold, where no quick-ſighted bird nor beaſt can come.

There is a path] The way that leads down to the gold mines. This ſhews the uncertainty of the way, hardneſſe to effect the work, and labour of men to overcome both. For the word ſee on chap. 18. 10.

which no fowl] The word properly ſignifieth a ravening fowle, which ſearches all places for food, even the moſt inacceſſible, and which God hath furniſhed with moſt piercing eyes to ſpy out their prey afar off: yet can they not ſee metals under ground.

and which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen] The Vultures eye is uſed proverbially for a ſharp and quik ſight. Whether the word ſignifie a Vulture or no, is doubtfull, and therefore ſome render it a Kite, others a Pye. It is thought the Jewes themſelves now underſtand not aright thoſe ancient names of fowls. However, the ſenſe is, that this path to the mines is not ſeen by the moſt quick ſighted fowles. For the word eye, ſee on chap. 15. 15. upon the word Sight.

V. 8. The lions whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion paſſed by it.] As in the former verſe he had ſhewed, that no birds of prey, ſo here, that no beaſts of prey can find out theſe hidden metals.

the lions whelps] Heb. The ſons of the lion. For Sons ſee on chap. 14. 21. Or, The ſons or children of pride, as it is tranſlated, chap. 41. 34.

But it ſeems by what followes to be meant here of proud beaſts, ſuch ſuch as young lions are.

have not troden it] Have not found out that way. They uſe not to travell under ground where theſe metals are, although they travell in many deſert and uncouth places.

nor the fierce lion] See on chap. 4. 10.

paſſed by it] He may go over it, but not come near it, ſo as to take notice of it.

V. 9. He putteth forth his hand upon the rock, he overturneth the mountains by the roots.] In theſe unknown wayes as before our miner met with water and fire to hinder his work, ſo here the hard rocks offer themſelves as bulwarks to defend the Gold and ſilver mines. A man would think that this ſhould diſcourage him. Alſo hils cover them, but he ſets upon rocks, and by undefatigable pains digs to the bottom of hils, and fetches out the oar from thence.

he putteth forth] He puts his hand forth to ſmite on the rocks, and to dig through them. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 20.

his hand] See on chap. 15. 25.

upon the rock] Or, flint. The word ſignifies the hardeſt kind of rocks. Nothing can diſcourage him. He can find out a way to work on hardeſt rocks.

he overturneth the mountains by the roots] Or rather, he turneth it up at the roots of the mountains. That is, he digs to the bottom of the mountains, if the vein go ſo deep, and fetcheth out gold and ſilver from thence. So the ſame word is tranſlated turning up, verſ. 5. By the root of the mountains here is meant the bottom of them, which lies low within the earth, as the root of a tree doth.

V. 10. He cutteth out rivers among the rocks, and his eye ſeeth every precious thing.] In this verſe and the next he ſets out the profit, which our miner gets by his great art, and labour. As he works in the rocks, ſtreams unlooked for break out, which he cunningly turns another way, and ſo gets the precious ſtones that are under them.

he cutteth out rivers] He cutteth the rocks, not the rivers. But by cutting the rocks he makes way for ſtore of water to paſſe like rivers. So we ſay, to grinde meal, that is, to grind corn, and turn it into meal. See the like on chap. 22. 6. on ſtripping the naked. Some underſtand it of bringing water from rivers through rocks to move his engines, or waſh his metals: but it is beſt to underſtand it of waters breaking out of thoſe rocks, in which he digs for gold, verſ. 9.

among the rocks] Where men would leaſt of all look for waters.

ſeeth] He ſeeth, and obtaineth thoſe precious things, which no man ſaw before. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 27. upon the word, Behold.

every precious thing] All rare minerals and metals of great price, and the choiceſt ſtones, whereof are made the fineſt Jewels. Prov. 1. 13.

V. 11. He bindeth the flouds from overflowing, and the thing that is hid, bringeth he to light.] As in the former verſe, he turneth away ſome ſtreams, that would have hindred his work, ſo here he hinders others from coming into his mines, and ſo he gets the precious things hidden in the earth.

He bindeth] Water cannot be bound, but the meaning is that he reſtraines it from coming into the mines, as a man bound cannot go whither he would.

the flouds] The waters under the ground, that would hinder him in his work, and deprive him of the fruit of it.

from overflowing] So that they may not overflow his pits. He keeps them back by dams, and other artificial devices. So מן is uſed to expreſſe a negation, verſ. 4. Heb. from weeping. For in thoſe under-ground waters, the ſpring ſends them out by drops for want of a free channel, they ſoke out of the earth, as tears drop from the eye, or water from a ſtill.

and] Having thus kept his mine clear he gets ſuch precious things, as lye hid there.

the thing that is hid] The metals, which before lay as it were buryed in the earth, and concealed from the ſight of men.

bringeth he to light] He bringeth it forth to be ſeen by the light of the Sun. For the word, Bringeth, ſee on chap. 14. 2. and 20. 25. upon the word, Commeth forth, or out. For the word, Light, ſee on chap. 24. 13. 16.

V. 12. But where ſhall wiſedom be found? and where is the place of underſtanding?] In the former verſe he had ſhewed how far mans wiſedom could reach, namely ſo far, that it could fetch out gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, out of the bowels of the earth, and make them as uſefull to man, as if the earth had brought them forth like corn. In this verſe he puts a period to humane wiſedom, and applyes all to his preſent purpoſe, ſhewing that mans wit, that is ſo pregnant in other things, is not able to find a reaſon of Gods proceedings in his various diſpenſations, proſpering ſome good and bad, and croſſing others of both ſorts. And therefore his friends had no reaſon to condemn him for a wicked man becauſe of his afflictions, unleſſe they would take upon them to be Gods; for to know Gods intent in his various dealings with men of the ſame condition, is too great a work for the wiſeſt man in the world.

But] So this particle is tranſlated, chap. 26. 1. As if he had ſaid, many very hidden things had mans wit found out, ſo that one would think nothing were too hard for him, yet he cannot find out the true reaſon of all Gods proceedings, 1. becauſe there is no place, in which man may find it, to verſ. 15. 2. he hath no price to buy it, to verſ. 20. 3. no power in any creature to attain it, to verſ. 23. 4. God only knows it, to verſ. 28.

where] Heb. from whence. Where is that vein out of which yee may dig this wiſedom? it is farther off, and harder to find, then minerals in the bottom of hils, or pearls in the bottom of the ſea.

ſhall wiſedom be found] Some read it, that wiſedom. That is, wiſedom to diſcern the reaſon of Gods proceedings with the ſons of men. Others, wiſedom it ſelf. For all mans wiſedom in ſearching the moſt ſecret corners of the earth is but folly in compariſon of Gods wiſe proceedings in his diſpenſations towards men. That wit which can reach the former, fals far ſhort of attaining the grounds of the latter. For the word, Found, ſee on chap. 17. 10.

and where is the place] See on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 21.

of underſtanding] Where this underſtanding of the grounds of Gods proceedings may be found.

V. 13. Man knoweth not the price thereof, neither is it found in the land of the living.] It is a vain thing for man to think he hath attained to it, for God only hath ſet it in order, and no man on earth can reach it.

Man] See on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

knoweth not] Among all his rare inventions he cannot find out this.

the price thereof] It is invaluable. Mercer, by the price underſtands the place of it, for thoſe things which we know not whence they come, we can ſet no price upon, becauſe we know not the uſe, excellency, or value of them. The word is tranſlated, Order Exod. 40. 4. 23. And ſo it may here. God hath ſo diſpoſed it, that no man knows the order of his proceedings. And this agrees well with the verſe before, and after, which ſpeak of the hardneſſe of finding it out. But the price and value of it is diſtinctly handled, verſ. 15, &c.

neither is it found] See on chap. 17. 10.

in the land] See on chap. 9. 24. on the word, Earth.

of the living] Of ſuch as live here on earth, much leſſe among thoſe that lye dead in the grave. By the living is meant men living in the world, for no man would look for it among the beaſts. So Eve is called the mother of all living, Gen. 3. 20. yet was ſhe not the mother of beaſts. Thus the land of the living is taken, Pſal. 27. 13. & 116. 9. & 142. 5. Iſa. 38. 11. & 53. 8. Jer. 11. 19. The grave is the the land of the dead, or of forgetfulneſſe, Pſal. 88. 11. 12.

V. 14. The depth ſaith, It is not in me: and the ſea ſaith, It is not with me.] As he had ſhewed before, that this wiſedom is not to be found among men upon earth, ſo now he intimates unto us, that if a man could ſafely travell into the depths of ſea or land, and converſe with them or the creatures in them, if they could ſpeak they would, tell him, that his labour were loſt, if he ſought there to underſtand the cauſe and manner of Gods adminiſtrations.

The depth] The word ſignifies any deep gulf of earth or water, where men cannot find the bottom, Gen. 1. 2.

ſaith] If it could ſpeak it would ſay ſo. It is as ſure, as if it did tell the ſearcher, that he ſought in vain. For living actions attributed to liveleſſe creatures, ſee on chap. 1. 19. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1, it is not in me] I cannot reſolve you of the reaſons of Gods doing and the ſea ſaith] That bulk of waters diſtinct from rivers, commonly ſo called. See on chap. 14. 11. Some take it for the travellers by ſea, or fiſhes in the ſea, which can no more inform us in this point, then men upon earth.

it is not with me] Neither can I reſolve you.

V. 15. It cannot be gotten for gold, neither ſhall ſilver be weighted for the price thereof.] If any ſhould object, If this wiſedom cannot be found any where, yet it may be gotten for money. What cannot money do? The anſwer is ready. That this wiſedom is of ſo great price, that all the treaſures in the world cannot purchaſe it. This he doth illuſtrate by an enumeration of thoſe things which are of greateſt account in the world, yet not of ſufficient value for this purchaſe: as gold, ſilver, pretious ſtones, and jewels.

It cannot be gotten for gold] Heb. Fine gold ſhall not be given for it. Man may offer it, but it will not be taken, and therefore it is in vain to think of giving it. See the like Act. 8. 18, 19, 20. The meaning is, it cannot be bought, or gotten: for the pureſt gold in the world. For the word Gotten, ſee on chap. 14. 4. upon the word Bring. The word Gold in Heb. is only ſhut up: But it ſignifies gold here, becauſe ſilver follows, and it is commonly joined with gold in other places, as 1 King. 6. 20. 21. where it is tranſlated Pure gold, for men uſe to ſtore up the pureſt gold, and ſo it is meant here, that no gold though never ſo pure, can be compared with this wiſedom, Prov. 3. 15. & 8. 10. 19. & 16. 16.

nor ſilver] If gold cannot purchaſe it, much leſſe ſilver being of leſſer value. For the word ſee on chap. 22. 25.

be weighed] In the ballance. For they were wont in thoſe dayes to weigh their ſilver. See on chap. 6. 2.

for the price thereof] It cannot be gotten for any price.

V. 16. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the pretious Onyx, or the Saphire.] It is of more value then all the wealth of the Indies. None of the things here named are worthy to be compared with it.

It cannot be valued] Heb. laid on the ground. As goods were wont, to be, when men lived by exchange, and are yet in ſome parts where they lay an heap of ſalt, againſt an heap of other things to bee changed for it, that buyer and ſeller may ſee they be of equall worth, Lam. 4. 2.

with the gold] Some take it for a chain of gold, or ſome other precious thing made of Gold. Others for choice gold. Broughton conceives it to be the name of gold in Ophir, and not an Heb. word.

V. 17. The gold and the cryſtall cannot equall it, and the exchange of it ſhall not be for jewels of fine gold] To ſhew the worth of this high wiſedom he goes on to inſtance in other precious things of great account in ſome countries, yet ſuch as cannot purchaſe this wiſedom.

The gold] Which is counted the chiefeſt of metals.

and the cryſtal] The word is no where uſed but here. It hath his name from purity and cleerneſſe, in the originall. Some therefore gueſſe it to be Cryſtall, others to be a Diamond. But in theſe names of metals and jewels, or at leaſt in many of them the Jewiſh writers are as much to ſeek, as in the names of many fowles, ſee on verſ. 7.

cannot equall it] Heb. cannot be ſet in order againſt it. See on verſ. 13. 16.

and the exchange of it] It will not be changed for theſe things. They would not be a ſufficient recompence or reſtitution for it. So the word is uſed, chap. 15. 31. & 20. 18.

ſhall not be for jewels of fine gold] Or, veſſels of fine gold] Of the moſt ſolid gold, which hath been moſt throughly purged by the fire, and ſo is become harder then other gold leſſe purified. Others take it to be the name of a place, whence pure gold came, as Ophir was: and they think this Phaz in the Originall to be the ſame with Uphaz, a place famous for gold, and mentioned Jer. 10. 9. Dan. 10. 5. Broughton tranſlates it Phez-gold, and would have it to come from Feſſe in Barbary. The names differ not much: and it is likely, that Jewiſh writers are to ſeek in theſe ſeverall names of gold, as well as of fowles and precious ſtones.

V. 18. No mention ſhall be made of corall, or of pearls: for the price of wiſedom is above rubies.] If wee ſhould ſpeak what might be ſaid of this wiſedom, if men underſtood it throughly, theſe precious things here mentioned ſhould not once be named, they are ſo vile in compariſon of it.

No mention ſhall be made] Theſe things though excellent in themſelves, yet deſerve never to be mentioned, but clean forgotten, when wee talk of this high wiſedome. For the word ſee on chap. 24. 20.

of Corall] Or, Ramoth. This and the following word are not well underſtood now. This word comes from a word, that ſignifies to bee high, and it may bee the Tranſlators render it Corall, becauſe that is ſaid to grow on rocks.

or of pearls] The word is uſed no where elſe, and therefore tranſlated pearls in generall.

for the price] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to draw out, as the price of a thing drawes it out from the ſhop or market to the buyer. Others read it a little wiſedom, becauſe they ſay the word ſignifies a little ſled, without wheeles, ſuch an one as huſbandmen draw their ſeed-corn in, which will not hold much. So ſome read Pſal. 126. 6. Bearing a draught of ſeed.

of wiſdom] See on verſ. 12.

is above rubies] A precious ſtone of a red colour, as appears, Lam. 4. 7.

V. 19. The Topaz of Ethiopia ſhall not equall it, neither ſhall it be valued with pure gold.] The Topaz a precious ſtone which men travell as farre as Ethiopia to fetch (and therefore muſt needs be of great price) and the gold that is ofteneſt purified (and therefore moſt pure) are not comparable to this wiſedom.

The Topaz] See on Exod. 28. 17.

of Ethiopia] So it is likely to be meant here, though Interpreters acknowledge another Cuſh neerer to the land of Canaan.

ſhall not equall it] See on ver. 13. 17.

neither ſhall it be valued] See on ver. 16.

with pure gold] With the pureſt gold, which is moſt free from droſſe. For Pure ſee on chap. 14. 4. For Gold, ſee on ver. 16. of this chapter.

V. 20. Whence then cometh wiſedom? and where is the place of underſtanding?] The queſtion is propounded in this verſe and reſolved. 1. Negatively, where it is not, v. 21. 22. 2. Affirmatively, where it is, ver. 23. For the queſtion in this verſe, it is as if he had ſaid, Be it therefore, that men, who are ſo painfull and diligent in ſeeking and ſearching after the things before rehearſed, be it I ſay, that they are deſirous, and that they apply their whole ſtudy, and labour to attain unto this wiſedom, yet whence will they fetch it? or in what place or countrey will they come to the knowledge of it? The verſe is the ſame with ver. 12. all ſave one word. See the interpretation there.

cometh] See on chap. 15. 21. & 1. 19.

V. 21. Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the fowles of the aire.] It is hard to find the place of it, becauſe none now alive can find it, neither men, nor other creatures, in this verſe, nor thoſe that did live before, and are now dead, have attained to the full knowledge of it, verſe 22. As if Job had ſaid, If they look for it beneath among men, who can dig deepeſt, no man that liveth, hath ever ſeen it: if on high, no bird, that can fly higheſt, ever ſet eyes on it.

Seeing] It hath been ſhewed before, verſe 13. that no men could attain to it, nor birds attain to things eaſier to be had, verſe 7. where is it then to be found?

it is hid] It cannot be found out by any man, being beyond the reach of the quickeſt ſight, and ſo concealed, that none can attain it.

from the eyes] See on chap. 15. 15. upon the word Sight.

of all living] See on verſ. 13.

and kept cloſe] Another word of the ſame ſignification to ſhew, that it is ſo ſure hidden, that no man can poſſibly find it. So much may be ſeen on chap. 14. 10, 11.

from the fowles of the ayre] Heb. of heaven. See on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

V. 22. Deſtruction, and death ſay, We have heard the fame thereof with our ears.] Laſtly, if we ſhall go down into the bowels of the earth or to hell, and there enquire for this wiſdom, and demand whether they can tell us any tidings of it, they will not deny that the fame and bruit of it, which ſoundeth in all places, hath alſo pierced thither: but farther information can they not give us.

Deſtruction] See on chap. 26. 6.

and death ſay] Either he means it of hell and the grave, attributing ſpeech to them, as to other like things, verſ. 14. Or elſe ſuch as did live on earth before, but now were in hell, and the grave.

We have heard the fame thereof with our ears] This argues a great fame of Gods wiſdom in his various dealings with the ſons of men. We have heard it, and heard the fame of it, and that with our ears. See the like, Pſal. 44. 1. Obad. 1. 1. But yet a bare fame without knowing the particular reaſons of Gods proceedings. For the word Heard, ſee on chap. 13. 17. For the word Fame. in Heb. it is an hearing. For things that are famous are every where talked of, and heard. For the word Ears, ſee on chap. 15. 21.

V. 23. God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof. Some conceive theſe words to be the words of hell and death, as if they ſhould anſwer to him, that ſhould enquire of them concerning this wiſdome, that they had heard of it indeed, but God only had the perfect knowledge of it. But they may well be Jobs own words, as if he had ſaid to his friends, Doubtleſſe which way ſo ever men ſhall turn themſelves, be they never ſo witty and laborious, thed muſt needs confeſſe this (which if ye had throughly conſidered, ye would not ſo raſhly and unadviſedly becauſe of the greatneſſe of my miſery have condemned the whole courſe of my life] to wit, that God hath reſerved to himſelf the deep reaſons of his various proceedings with men. That God only knows this, he affirms in this verſe, and proves it from his powerfull providence 1. ſet out, verſ. 24. 2. enlarged by effects in ordering wind aad water, rain and thunder, verſ. 25, 26. 3. he concludes it more particularly, verſ. 27.

God] See on chap. 49. & 11. 5. He means, God alone knowes it, as appears by the oppoſition to what went before. None knows it but God.

underſtandeth] Perfectly knows.

the way thereof] Not the way how to attain to it, but the way of Gods wiſe acting and diſpoſing of the eſtates and conditions of men in the world. For Job went not about to teach his friends how to find out this myſtery, but blamed them, that they took upon them the knowledge of that which God only knew, and as if they had been of Gods privie counſell, condemned him for a wicked man, becauſe of his afflictions, whereas God ſometimes afflicts good men extraordinarily for reaſons known to himſelf only, and which mans wiſdom cannot reach. For the word ſee on chap. 17. 9.

and he knoweth the place thereof] Not where men may find it, but where is it. To wit, in himſelf only, where no creature can reach to the height of it. For the word, Place, ſee on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 26.

V. 24. For he looketh to the ends of the earth, and ſeeth under the whole heaven.] For God is not ſo narrow-ſighted, as men are; but though he be higher then the higheſt heavens, yet he not only knows all that is in heaven, but alſo all things on earth, yea thoſe things that are done in the remoteſt parts of the world, and fartheſt off from the view of men, or any where under the whole cope of heaven.

For he looketh] He knoweth them as well, as men do things, which they ſee with their eyes.

to the ends of the earth] There is nothing in the whole courſe of Nature, which he doth not underſtand, Prov. 15. 3. Zech. 4. 10. For the word, Ends, ſee on chap. 26. 14. upon the word, Parts. For the word, Earth, ſee on chap. 9. 24.

and ſeeth] See on chap. 19. 27. upon the word, Behold.

under the whole heaven] Whatſoever is or is done under the whole heaven. Or, under all the heavens. That is, under all the climates of heaven, or all the world over.

V. 25. To make the weight for the wind, and he weigheth the waters by meaſure.] Theſe words are rather to be underſtood of the works of Gods daily providence, then of the ſetling things at the firſt, becauſe he ſaith, God looks over all the world to do it. God keeps the winds and waters in order, ſo that they cannot encreaſe or be diminiſhed, as they will themſelves, but muſt blow and flow when and as he pleaſe, and no otherwiſe.

To make] See on chap. 14. 9. upon the word, Bring forth.

the weight] To keep the wind ſo in order, as if it were weighed, that it may blow juſt ſo much as God will, and no more: ſo long as he will, and no longer: where he will, and no where elſe.

for the wind] Which is very light, yet God can weigh it: For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 2. upon, Vain knowledge.

and he weigheth] Or, ordereth. He keepeth them ſo in order, as if they were weighed out.

the waters] Of the ſea and rivers, ſo that they keep within their channel, or overflow, as, when, and where he pleaſe. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 9.

by meaſure] So that they keep a juſt decorum with his will. Or, by weight. For we do not uſe to weigh by meaſure.

V. 26. When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder.] It appears that God by his providence looks over all the world alſo by ſending rain, and thunder, when, and where, as much, and as little as he pleaſe.

When he made] Or when he maketh. As on verſ. 25. For Job ſpeaks not of Gods works of creation, but of providence. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 9. upon the word, Bring forth.

a decree] Or, a ſtatute. When he guides it as exactly, as if it were ordered by a ſtatute law: So that it rains no more, nor leſſe then hee will. He numbers the ſhowers, and drops of rain. Or, a bound. For the word ſee on chap. 26. 10.

for the rain] So that it ſhould rain upon one city, and not upon another. Am. 4. 7.

and a way] A certain courſe appointed by God, when, how long, how terribly it ſhould lighten and thunder. For the word, ſee on chap. 17. 9.

for the lightning] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to ſee, becauſe lightning is very bright and may be ſeen far, Mat. 24. 27. And alſo it is ſeen before the thunder be heard.

of the thunder] Heb. of the voices. The word ſignifies a ſound or voice in generall, but here it is put for the thunder, which is the loudeſt ſound of all, and therefore called the voice of God, Pſal. 29. 3. And it is called voices in the plurall number, becauſe for the moſt part many thunder claps come after one another. It is called the lightning of the thunder, becauſe it is cauſed by the thunder, as ſparkes by knocking flints together. The lightning indeed appears firſt, becauſe the ſight is quicker then the hearing, and the eye can ſee ſooner and farther then the ear can hear. Yet the thunder goes before it in nature and time, as the cauſe before the effect. Others read, the lightning and the thunder. Extending Gods providence immediately to both.

V. 27. Then did he ſee it, and declare it, he prepared it, yea and ſearched it out.] Or, Then doth he ſee it, and number it, and prepare it, and ſearch it out. For as it was obſerved before, Job ſpeaks not of the uſe of Gods wiſedom in the works of creation, but of providence. And this heap of words ſhewes how well known, familiar, intimate, and proper this wiſedom is to God: even as things are to men, which they have alwayes in their ſight, and count daily, and prepare, or order, and ſearch into to know the depth of them.

Then] In the courſe of his daily providence, when he orders wind, and water, rain, and thunder.

doth he ſee it] He hath it preſent with him, and imployes it in doing things above humane reaſon. And therefore no wonder that ye cannot tell the cauſe of my afflictions, who are to ſeek in theſe things. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 27. upon the word, Behold.

and number it] He comprehends it, and poſſeſſeth it all, as may appear by theſe wiſe, and mighty actions of his, the reaſon whereof we cannot comprehend. So the word is tranſlated, chap. 14. 16.

and prepare it] He hath it as ready to uſe in thoſe daily wonderfull works of his providence, as men have arms or mony prepared and laid up for war.

and ſearch it out] He underſtands it, as perfectly, yea more perfectly, then men do thoſe things, into which they have throughly ſearched. And that this is the true meaning of the text, and that it is not to be interpreted of wiſedom which God makes known to men, but of that wiſedom, which he keeps unto himſelf containing the reaſons of his actions, which he would not have men to know, appears, by that which went before. For Job would never have blamed his friends for taking upon them to know Gods revealed will, which they ought to know. But he blames them for diving into Gods ſecrets, and preſuming to know the ſecret cauſes of his afflictions, which God had not revealed to them. It appears alſo by the oppoſition in the verſe following, whereas God doth in a manner forbid men to ſeek after the ſecret cauſes of his proceedings, and in all their wayes to follow the rule of his will revealed in his word.

V. 28. And unto man he ſaid, Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wiſedom, and to depart from evill is underſtanding.] Now Job accommodates what he had ſaid before to his preſent purpoſe, and anſwers a tacit objection. What is there no wiſdom then communicated to man by God? Doth God keep it all to himſelf? Not ſo, ſaith Job. But he hath forbidden man to enquire after the ſecret cauſes of the works of his providence towards all creatures, eſpecially towards men, and commanded him to ſeek after, and be content with, and count it wiſedom enough for him to know Gods revealed will, and to guide his life according to it. Thus Job concluded his ſpeech, as Solomon doth his Eccleſiaſtes, Eccl. 12. 13. and ſets out a wiſe man, as God ſets him out, chap. 1. 1. See like places, Deut. 4. 6. & 29. 29. Pſal. 111. 10. Prov. 1. 7. & 9. 10.

And] Or rather, But. As it is tranſlated to the ſame purpoſe, Deut. 29. 29. Let not man be diſcontented, that he knowes not the wayes of my ſecret providence; let him be content with that knowledge, which I am pleaſed to reveal to him.

unto man] Broughton reads it, to Adam, to wit, at the beginning: but we have ſhewed before, that Job ſpeaks not here of things done in the beginning, but in the courſe of Gods ordinary providence. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 1.

He] God, ſpoken of in the former verſes. Job delivers not the golden ſentence in his own words, but in Gods, that his friends might the more be affected with it.

ſaid] In divers ages he revealed this to his ſervants.

behold] Take notice of it as of a thing of great excellency, and my ſpeciall will, that ye let my ſecret judgements alone, and ſtudy to live according to my law. For the word, ſee on chap. 1. 12.

the fear] See on chap. 15. 4. & 1. 1.

of the Lord] Of God, who is the foundation or pillar, that upholds all things, according to the derivation of the word in the originall: and therefore is worthy to be feared of all men.

that is wiſedom] That is the wiſedom that God requires of man, and wherewithall hee muſt bee content, and not dive into Gods ſecrets.

and to depart from evill] See on chap. 1. 1.

is underſtanding] It is the beſt and moſt fit underſtanding of man. If he can get but ſo much knowledge, as to learn to worſhip God aright, and depart from ſin, hee is an happy man. But here is more intended. So to depart from evill, that he do good, for both are required, and he that truly fears God, will be ſo wiſe, as to ſhew his care of both theſe duties, and not buſie himſelf to dive into Gods ſecrets.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verſ. 1. MOreover Iob continued his parable and ſaid,] Job having now the ſecond time made ſome intermiſſion in his ſpeech to ſee if his friends would give any anſwer, and finding them altogether ſilent, now goes on, and in this his laſt ſpeech fully ſets out his integrity, which he had but glanced at in his former diſcourſes, and excuſes his impatience by his great fall from ſo great proſperity to ſo great miſery without any groſſe wickedneſſe committed by him. And 1. he ſets out his former proſperity in this chap. 2. his preſent miſery, chap. 30. 3. his conſtant piety, chap. 31. For the words of this verſe they are all the ſame, that were in the beginning of his former ſpeech, chap. 27. 1. See the expoſition of them there.

V. 2. O that I were as in moneths paſt, as in the dayes, when God preſerved me.] In this verſe Job wiſheth for the recovery of his former proſperity, the greatneſſe whereof he ſets out in the following verſes to the end of the chapter.

O that I were] Heb. Who will give me. The Heb. form of wiſhing. See on chap. 6. 8. & 11. 5.

as in moneths paſt] As in the former time of my life, when I lived in proſperity, and greatneſſe. Mans time in ſcripture is ſometime meaſured by years, ſometime by moneths, and ſometimes by dayes. The word moneths in the originall comes from the moon, as it doth in Engliſh, becauſe moneths are meaſured by the courſe of the moon. The other word ſignifies either time paſt, which was before us, or that which is before us in place, or in our ſight. Here Job ſpeaks of his times of proſperity formerly.

as in the dayes] The ſame thing intended, which was meant by moneths before, and it ſhewes Jobs great deſire of his former proſperity by this reduplication of the thing, though in other words. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 14. & 15. 23.

preſerved me] Kept me from all evil, and all mine alſo. This the devil obſerved, chap. 1. 10. For the word, ſee on chap. 7. 12. 20. & 10. 14.

V. 3. When his candle ſhined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkneſſe] Gods preſervation of him, he ſets out, 1. by his bleſſing on his domeſticall affairs, to verſ. 7. 2. politicall, to the end of the chap. On his domeſticall affairs, 1. in generall, verſ. 3. 4. 2. in particular, verſ. 5. 6. In generall in this verſe by a ſimilitude. In the next verſe literally. The ſimilitude in this verſe is taken from Gods care of the world in generall. He proſpered me in all my affairs, and directed me, as he doth the world by the Sun in the day, and by the moon in the night. Others take it for an alluſion to the cloud and pillar of fire, that guided the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe, the one by day, and the other by night. But it is doubtfull, whether Job knew that or no. He is thought to be more ancient. See on chap. 1. 1. & 22. 15.

When his candle] Or, lampe, Pſal. 132. 17. & 18. 28. By Gods candle he means his favour and bleſſing, which proſpered him in all he went about. For the word, ſee on chap. 18. 6.

ſhined] Gave me light and direction, how to proceed in all my affaires, and gave me good ſucceſſe. Others read it, When he made his candle to ſhine. That is, when God himſelf directed and proſpered me by his favour.

upon my head] Or, over my head. An alluſion to the Sun and Moon, which God hath placed above us to give us light. Or, as ſome think, to the carrying of a lamp or torch, which is lifted up, that they which follow may ſee the better. For the word, ſee on chap. 19 9.

and when by his light] By his favour and direction. Heb. at his light. That is, by the benefit of it. For the word, ſee on Chapter 18.5. Others read, and when by the light of it. That is, of Gods candle.

I walked] I went on in a conſtant courſe of proſperity. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word Paſſeth.

through darkneſſe] Not through troubles, for Job had none in thoſe dayes, chap.1. 10. but through dangers on all ſides, into which other men fell, but he eſcaped them. Or, through doubtfull buſineſſes and difficult, which he could never have waded through by his own reaſon, and underſtanding. For the word, ſee on Chapter 15. 22, 23.

V. 4. As I was in the dayes of my youth, when the ſecret of God was upon my Tabernacle.) Here he particularly ſets out his former proſperity in regard of his domeſticall affaires in plain terms, I would I were, as I was in the prime and flower of my youth, when God did ſo friendly and familiarly intermeddle with mine affaires.

as I was in the dayes] That is, in the time. Here mans time is ſet out by dayes, as verſe 2. by moneths. For dayes ſee on Chapter 14.14.

of my youth] Some read it, of my winter, that is, that I were at reſt again from theſe paines, as a ſouldier in his winter quarters. Others, of my Autumne: that is, of my former proſperity, for in Autumne many fruits of trees and of the earth are ripe, and in their prime. Others, as in the tranſlation, of my youth. And ſome underſtand it, as I was in the prime, and ſtrength of my dayes. And others, of the youth or prime of his eſtate and proſperity. And this muſt needs be the ſenſe, how ere the word be brought to it, directly, or by conſequence. This agrees well with the words foregoing, and following, wherein it appears, that Job wiſhed for more then reſt and quietneſſe.

when the ſecret] When God in a familiar and ſecret manger guided me and my family, and made all my affaires to proſper. For the word ſee on chap. 15.8.

of God] See on chap. 4 9. & 11. 5.

was upon my tabernacle] See on chap. 5. 24. & 11. 14.

V. 5. When the Almighty was yet with me, when my children were about me.] Here begins the deſcription of Gods bleſſing in particular on Jobs family, 1. in regard of his children and ſervants, in this verſe; 2. of his wealth, verſ. 6. When God ſhewed himſelf conſtantly favourable to me, and gave me ſtore of children and ſervants to attend on me.

When the Almighty] See on chap. 8. 3. 5.

was yet] Continued conſtantly to bleſſe me, and had not given over to proſper me, and my family.

with me] To help me, and keep me from troubles. In ſuch a caſe Gods people think him preſent with them: but when he croſſeth them, then they look upon him as abſent by reaſon of the weakneſſe of their faith. Rom. 8. 31. Pſal. 10. 1.

when my children] Or, when my ſervants. Heb. when my young men. The word ſignifies either children, who live with their parents, while they are young, or ſervants, who for the moſt part are young alſo.

were about me] When I had abundance of children, and ſervants tending on me every one in his place ready to ſerve me. This was indeed a great temporall bleſſing, Pſal. 128. 3.

V. 6. VVhen I waſhed my ſteps with butter, and the rocks poured me out rivers of oyle.] An hyperbolical expreſſion of that ſtore of proviſions, which Job had. As if butter had flowed in ſtreams, and the rocks had poured out ſtore of oyle to him. See the like expreſſions, Deut. 32. 13. & 33. 24. Gen. 49. 11. Pſal. 81. 16. Job 20. 17. By theſe two is meant all manner of riches. He had ſuch ſtore of cattell, that he had abundance of milk and butter like rivers: and ſuch ſtore of Olive-trees, and other trees, that he had oyle, and other liquors made of fruits as plentifull, as if the rocks had poured it out to him in ſtreams.

when I waſhed] When I had ſuch plenty of butter, that if I would or needed, I could have uſed it as water to waſh my feet withall. Not that Job uſed to do ſo, for he was never ſo dainty, proud, nor prodigall. This he mentions, becauſe the riches of the ancients conſiſted moſt in cattell. Thence came pecunia money in Latine of pecus cattell. and money was ſtamped with a Lamb on it, and called קשיטה a Lamb. See Gen. 33. 19. in the Margin. Now butter was the beſt profit of cattell, and therefore Job ſets out his riches by the abundance he had of it.

My ſteps] Heb. my goings, That is, his feet the inſtruments of going. He had ſtore enough to have waſhed his feet; or in every place where he went, his cattell were ſo plentifull, that he might have waſhed every ſtep in butter.

with butter] Heb. in butter. Which increaſeth the ſignification. A little butter will ſerve to waſh ones feet withall, but much is needfull to waſh them in. For the word ſee on chap. 20. 17.

and the rock poured me out rivers of oyle] Olive trees grew in ſtony places in Syria and Arabia: and Job had ſuch plenty of oyle, as if every ſtone had afforded him oyle. It may be read, and there was with me a rock melted into rivers of oyle. See on Chapter 28. 2. The laſt word ſignifies both oyle and fatneſſe, for oyle is of a fatty nature.

V. 7. VVhen I went out to the gate, through the city, when I prepared my ſeat in the ſtreet.] In this verſe, and ſo forward to the end of the Chapter Job ſets out Gods bleſſing upon him in his politicall affaires. And 1. he ſhewes how much honour he had in his paſſage to the Judgement ſeat, verſe 7, 8. 2. What reſpect he had there, verſe 9, 10, 11. 3. The cauſe of it, verſe 12. &c. to verſe 18. 4. His confident perſwaſion of the continuance of his proſperity. verſe 18, 19, 20. 5. The grounds of it from thence to the end of the chapter. In the firſt part, 1. he ſhewes when and where this honour was done unto him: in his paſſage to the gate, in this verſe. 2. By whom, By young and old. verſe 8. For the firſt, It is as if Job had ſaid, As I was happy at home, ſo likewiſe abroad; I had much honour whenſoever I went along the ſtreets toward the publick place of Judicature, where I had a ſeat in the common place provided for me. So that I was not only happy in my ſtock in the fields abroad, (verſe 7.) but alſo I had great reſpect in the city.

VVhen I went out] Out of my houſe toward the Judgement Seat. For the word ſee on chap. 20. 25. upon the word, Cometh out. to the gate] To the place of Judicature to ſit as a judge. See on chap. 5. 4. Druſius reads it, when I went out of the gate. Or, from the gate. To wit, to go home. I had done juſtice there, and the people honoured me all the way homeward. Broughton reeds it, when I went out of door to the city. That is, out of the door of my houſe about my buſineſſe. But שער ſignifies rather the gate of a city then the door of an houſe, as it is often uſed. Neh. 3. For, went out, ſee on chap. 20. 25. on the word, Cometh out.

through the city] It ſeems his houſe was within the City, and his paſſage from thence to the place of judgement, as it was ordinary, ſo obſervable.

when I prepared] When I had it made ready for me.

my ſeat] He means not an ordinary place, but a ſeat of Judgement, whereon he uſed to ſit to judge the cauſes of the city. Hereby it appears that Job was a publick Magiſtrate.

in the ſtreet] Near the gate of the City, in an open place, where all comers in, and goers out might ſee and hear.

V. 8. The young men ſaw me, and hid themſelves: and the aged aroſe, and ſtood up.] In this verſe he ſets out the great reverence that was ſhewed to him by all ſorts of perſons, although in a different way, according to their differing ages.

The young men] He means not thoſe of his family, as verſe 5. but ſuch as met him in the ſtreets.

ſaw me] Going toward the judgement ſeat. For the word ſee on chap. 19. 27. upon the word Behold.

and hid themſelves] Either for reverence of my perſon, or for fear I ſhould eſpy ſomething amiſſe in them.

and the aged] See on chap. 12. 12.

aroſe] In token of honour, and to ſhew reverence unto me. Lev. 19. 32. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 12.

and ſtood up] They would not ſit down again, till I was gone by, ſo much they did honour me.

V. 9. The Princes refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth.] The honour that Job had in his way to the Judgement ſeat was ſet out in the two former verſes, his honour there is ſet out verſe 9, 10, 11, And that 1. from the principall men called Princes, verſe 9. 2. From the middle ſort of the City called Nobles, verſe 10. 3. From the meaner ſort, as well as the higher, verſe 11. In this verſe he ſhews how the principall men of the City brake off their communication, as ſoon as he came in preſence, and voluntarily kept ſilence, till he had done ſpeaking.

The Princes] The chief of their companies or ſocieties in the cities, or they that had moſt authority in the city.

refrained talking] Heb. reſtrained themſelves in words. They would not ſpeak at all, while Job was ſpeaking, nor interrupt him, that they might hear all he had to ſay, out of reſpect to his wiſdom or dignity. And this was not done by mean men onely, but by perſonages of principall quality, ſo much reſpect had they to Job. See on Job 4. 2.

and laid their hand on their mouth] See on chap. 21. 5. The word for hand ſignifies the palm of the hand, not the finger or the fiſt. And it imports a full ſtopping of the mouth with the hand open, that no words may come out of it.

V. 10. The Nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.] The Nobles following the examples of the Princes were ſilent, while Job ſpake, and would by no means interrupt him. Such a generall reverence was given to Job by all that heard him, verſe 21, 22.

The Nobles] It comes from a word that ſignifies, Before, becauſe held their peace] Heb. The voice of the nobles was hid. That is, ſuppreſt, not heard. They were aſhamed to ſpeak in my preſence, and hid their voice, as men aſhamed hide themſelves. For the word Voice, ſee on chap. 15. 21. upon the word Sound.

Nobles are eyed and looked upon by all men. Here is meant the lower officers of the city, as by Princes are meant the higher in the former verſe.

and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth] That is, they were as ſtill as if they could not ſpeak. For if the tongue be not at liberty, it cannot utter words. So this phraſe is uſed to ſet out an extream ſilence, Pſal. 137. 6. Ezek. 3. 26. as it is uſed to ſet out extream thirſt. Lam. 4. 4. For the word Tongue, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

V. 11. When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me, and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſſe to me.] All people were glad when I was on the bench to do juſtice. They that heard my ſentence praiſed me, and they that ſaw my juſt proceedings gave an ample teſtimony of my upright dealing.

When the ear] See on chap. 13. 17.

heard me] See on chap. 13. 17.

then it bleſſed me] It commended my juſt proceedingss and wiſhed me well. That is, the man that heard my ſentence, for the ear cannot bleſſe. See the like of the eyes, Luk. 10. 23. Not the eyes only, but the men were bleſſed, who ſaw thoſe things, Chriſt ſpake of there.

and when the eye] See on chap. 15. 15. upon the word Sight.

ſaw me] See on chap. 19. 27. upon the word Behold.

it gave witneſſe to me] The man that ſaw me (as before in this verſe, upon the Eare) either upon the bench, who though he could not come to hear me, yet was confident, I would do right: or ſuch as met me in the ſtreets did teſtifie as much of me.

V. 12. Becauſe I delivered the poore, that cryed, and the fatherleſſe, and him that had none to help him.] Now Job layes down the grounds of that great good opinion the people generally had of him, to wit, not for his wealth and greatneſſe, but his ſincere adminiſtration of juſtice, which was ſeen, 1. In relieving the poore, that were wronged; to verſ. 17. 2. In pulling down proud oppreſſours, verſ. 17. The firſt is ſet out in elegant words, with a particular deciphering of the needy perſons relieved by him. As 1. the afflicted and fatherleſſe, in this verſe. 2. Such as were ready to periſh, and widows, verſ. 13. 3. The cauſe of his ſo doing, verſ. 14. 4. His helping the blinde and lame, verſ. 15. 5. The poore, and that with a carefull enquiry into their cauſe, verſ. 16. that hee might right them, not for any gain, that could be looked for from them, but out of conſcience; all which teſtifies, that Job by many witneſſes might be cleered from the unjuſt imputations laid upon him by his friends.

Becauſe] For this reaſon others ſpake well of me. Or, That. They bare witneſſe, that I did carry my ſelf thus uprightly, and would do it ſtill, if they were called thereunto.

I delivered] I freed the poor from thoſe, who by their wealth and might would have oppreſſed them.

the poor] The word ſignifies a man afflicted or oppreſſed, I delivered him out of the hand of him, that would oppreſſe him, Pſal. 72. 12.

that cryed] Who being oppreſſed by an enemy too ſtrong for him, cryed unto me to do him juſtice. For the word ſee on chap. 19. 7.

and the fatherleſſe] See on chap. 22. 9.

and him] And any man that complained to me of wrong done him, who had none elſe that would adventure to right him. Or, even him That is, ſuch an one as not only had loſt his parents, but alſo had no friends in the world, that would take his part, Eccleſ. 4. 1.

that had none to help him] I did paſſe ſentence on his ſide according to right, when others would not, and ſtood to him, when none durſt be ſeen to aſſiſt him.

V. 13. The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh, came upon me: and I cauſed the widowes heart to ſing for joy.] Whereas others were ſo farre from aſſiſting people ready to periſh for want of their help, that they rather inſulted over them ſo much the more, and were therefore hated by thoſe miſerable creatures, I took pity of them, and freed them from the danger of death approaching, and therefore had many good prayers, and well wiſhes from them.

The bleſſing] See on verſe 11.

of him that was ready to periſh] By their wants, and mens unmercifulneſſe. Prov. 31. 6. They muſt have periſhed, if I had not relieved them. It may be underſtood of ſuch as were unjuſtly accuſed of great crimes, which might endanger their whole eſtate or lives, and muſt needs periſh, if Job had not by a juſt ſentence relieved them againſt the will, and power of others. For the word ſee on chap. 4. 7.

came upon me] I relieved them, and carried my ſelf ſo, that they had juſt cauſe to commend me, and wiſh me well. Or, I was praiſed, and prayed for by them. Or, I had the benefit of their prayers, and God bleſſed me extraordinarily for relieving them. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 21.

and I cauſed the widowes heart to ſing for joy] I delivered her from her enemy, and relieved her in her neceſſity, and gave her great cauſe of hearty joy. For the Widow ſee on chapter 22. 9. Such are more ſad, as wanting husbands to aſſiſt, and comfort them. But Job gave them cauſe of joy. For Heart, ſee on chap. 17. 11. He ſets the widowes ſo free, and out of danger of their oppreſſours, that their hearts were ſo full of joy, that they could not keep it in, but it burſt out in ſinging.

V. 14. I put on righteouſneſſe, and it clothed me: my judgement was as a robe and a Diademe] Leſt any ſhould object, that Job was a popular man, and ſought the applauſe of the people by ſiding with the weakeſt, were their cauſe right or wrong, and ſo got credit by unlawfull means, now he layes down the fountain of thoſe good offices which he did to others, even to the pooreſt which was an high account, which he had of juſtice, and upright dealing. It may be other men thought it an honour to them to wear robes and Diadems, tokens of publick Magiſtracy: but he accounted doing of juſtice his greateſt ornament.

I put on] I covered me all over with it as with a garment. I favoured no unjuſt way. For the word ſee on chap. 8. 22.

righteouſneſſe] Juſtice and upright dealing in all my ſentences. For the word ſee on chap. 8. 3.

and it clothed me] It covered me all over; ſo that no man could ſee any injuſtice in me in any of my publick affairs. The ſame word in the originall with the former. Heb, I put on righteouſneſſe, and it put on me. I was never parted from it, nor it from me in all my ſentences of judgement.

my judgement] My juſt proceeding in judgement in carefull ſearching out the right, and faithfull pronouncing ſentence accordingly, ſee on chap 8. 3. & 22. 4.

was a robe] Or, a coat. It is tranſlated a mantle, chap. 1. 20. & 2. 12. which was an ordinary garment. And then Jobs meaning is, that his juſtice was publickly taken notice of by all, his righteous proceedings being as viſible as the coat on his back. They who tranſlate it Robe, mean that it was an ornament to him, as the robe was to the King or Prieſt. But that it is rather ſet out in the next word. This word comes from a root, that in the originall ſignifies to deale perfidiouſly, as alſo doth בגד a garment. See on chap. 6. 15. upon the word, Dealt deceitfully. So God by our garments puts us in mind of our falling from him. Before man fell, he needed no garments.

and a diadem] Not only a covering of the head, but an ornament to it, ſurrounding the temples, as the world imports. Such did Kings and Prieſts wear. His meaning is, that his juſt proceedings were a great honour to him.

V. 15. I was eyes to the blinde, and feet was I to the lame.] Having in the former verſe cleered himſelf from ambitious popularity, and ſhewed his integrity in judging cauſes, now he returns to ſhew how he was many wayes helpfull to ſuch as were oppreſſed.

I was] Hee did not take ſtate on him, and put off poore ſuiters to his ſervants for direction, but he himſelfe directed them.

eyes] He doth not ſay, an eye, but eyes, in the plurall, to intimate, that he gave them ſufficient, and full directions, how to manage their cauſes for the beſt advantage of their right. For the word ſee on chap. 15. 15. on the word Sight.

to the blind] To ſuch as knew not how to manage their own Law-buſineſſe; for ſuch he ſpeaks of here.

and feet was I to the lame.] If they wanted means or countenance to follow their juſt cauſe I ſupplyed it. So that no man wanted an advocate to direct him, or plead for him in Jobs Court in a juſt cauſe. He would do it himſelf.

V. 16. I was a Father to the poor: and the cauſe, which I knew not, I ſearched out.] In this verſe, he ſhews his great affection to the poor, and his great care they might have no wrong.

I was a Father to the poor] I was a Father carefull to protect them from all injuries. See the word of ſimilitude left out, chap. 7. 7. The word for father and for poor come both from one root in the Hebrew, אבה which ſignifies to wiſh well to, or deſire, for parents wiſh well to their children, and deſire their good, and poor men deſire to enjoy thoſe things they want. For the word Father, ſee on chap. 15. 10. For the word Poor ſee on chap. 24. 4. upon the word Needy.

and the cauſe] The matter of contention, eſpecially between rich men oppreſſing, and poor men oppreſſed.

which I knew not] This may be underſtood two wayes. Ei- that he was carefull to enquire into difficult cauſes, which he could not eaſily underſtand the right, that ſo he might paſſe a juſt ſentence: or that he was not only ready to receive cauſes that were brought to him, but alſo enquired abroad, what poor men were oppreſſed by thoſe that were mighty, who either were aſhamed or durſt not complain, and theſe he animated to proſecute their right, and helped them to it, who otherwiſe would have been undone. Others read it, Of him whom I knew not. Intimating that he was ready to right ſuch men, as he had no acquaintance withall, out of pure love to juſtice.

I ſought out] I endeavoured to know who were wronged, or how I might right them. Deut. 13. 14. Prov. 25. 2. & 29. 7.

V. 17. And I brake the jawes of the wicked, and plucke the ſpoyle out of his teeth.] Here hee ſhewes that though wicked men by their wealth and might ſought to to oppreſſe and ruine other

others, like wilde beaſts taking the prey in their teeth ready to devoure it, yet hee did ſo keep them under, that they could not oppreſſe others, and forced them to make reſtitution to thoſe whom they had formerly oppreſſed.

And I brake the jaws of the wicked] Heb. the jaw teeth or the grinders. A phraſe often uſed in ſcripture to ſhew the cruelty of wicked oppreſſours diſappointed, Pſal. 3. 7. & 58. 6. For the word Wicked, ſee on chap. 13. 7. on the word, Wickedly.

And pluckt the ſpoile out of his teeth] I made him reſtore thoſe things he had wrongfully taken from others. There are but two wayes to keep wild beaſts from devouring, to break their jawes, or to take the prey out of their teeth, 1 Sam. 17. 35. Am. 3. 12. Iob did hinder ſome from wronging others, and made other wicked men to make reſtitution. The Hebrew word, for, Pluckt, is caſt. For the word, Spoile, ſee on chap. 24. 5. For the word, Teeth, ſee on chap. 16. 9.

V. 18. Then I ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and ſhall multiply my dayes, as the ſand] Iob having had ſo much authority, and proſperity, and ſo many good wiſhes from others by reaſon of his upright carriage, and the good he had done to them, perſwades himſelf, that he ſhould ſtill enjoy a comfortable life, and in the end find a quiet and comfortable death. Which he profeſſeth in this verſe. And ſets it out by the ſimilitude of a tree, verſ. 19. and of a bow, verſ. 20. But he now finds it far otherwiſe, and that troubles him.

Then] See on chap. 4. 1. It not only intimates the time, when Iob ſpake it, to wit, in his proſperity, but alſo the reaſon why. Becauſe of his upright carriage, and generall good opinion, that all men had of him. So this particle is uſed to infer a reaſon of what follows, chap. 21.34.

I ſaid] I thought ſo, I was fully perſwaded in my mind, that my condition would not alter. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 30. 6. & 39. 1. For the word it ſelf, ſee on chap. 16. 1.

I ſhall dye] Heb. I ſhall breath out. Or, give up the Ghoſt. That is, I ſhall not periſh for want, or be ſlain by enemies, but ſhall quietly in peace give up my ſpirit to God. So did Abraham, Gen. 25. 8. For the word, ſee on chap. 13.19.

in my neſt] In my houſe in a proſperous eſtate, among my children, in the midſt of my family, as a bird dies in his neſt through old age, and is not devoured before by the hawk or kites. As mans houſe is here called a neſt, ſo the birds neſt is called an houſe, Pſal. 84. 3.

and ſhall multiply] I ſhall live many years.

my dayes] The dayes of my life here on earth. For the word, ſee on chap. 14.14.

as the ſand] I ſhall live as many comfortable years; as there ſhall be ſands on the ſea ſhore. That is, I ſhall live long in a plentifull condition. An hyperbolicall expreſſion in ſcripture to ſet out a great multitude, Gen. 22.17.& 32.12.& 41.49.

V. 19. My root was ſpread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.] I conceived my proſperity would laſt, becauſe I found my ſelf like a tree watered from the earth below, and from the heaven above, and daily flouriſhing more, and more.

My root] For the ſimilitude from a root, and the word it ſelf, ſee on chap. 18. 16.

was ſpread out by the waters] Heb. opened to the waters.] A tree planted near a river ſide, where the water in time of drought may continually refreſh it, brings forth abundance of fruit, Pſal. 1. 3. Jer. 17. 7. ſo Iobs honour and riches encreaſed daily. The word פתח is uſed ſometimes for opening the mouth, or beginning to ſpeak, as chap. 1. ſometimes for opening a ſcabbard by pulling the ſword out of it, Pſal. 37. 14. 3. of opening ſacks by untying them, as Gen. 44. 11. 4. for the earth opening it ſelf to devour men, as Num. 16. 32. or to bring forth corne. Iſa. 45. 8. or for opening it by plowing, as Iſa. 28. 24. 5. for engraving on braſſe or ſtones, which is a kind of opening of them, Exod. 28. 9. 6. for budding or bloſſoming of trees, whereby they ſeem to open themſelves, Cant. 7. 12. 7. of opening a gate or door, as Iſa. 26. 2. Here it may be taken in the fourth ſenſe for the earth giving way to the water of the river to paſſe to the root of the tree to make it fruitfull. For the word, Waters, ſee on chap. 14. 9.

and the dew] As the water gives ſtrength to the root to enable the tree to bring forth much fruit, ſo the dew falling from heaven, and lying on the branches makes the fruit ſwell, and helps to ripen it, Hoſ. 14. 5. So Job by Gods bleſſing got ſtore of wealth, and enjoyed the comfort of it. The word in the originall hath his name from covering, becauſe the dew covers the branches of trees, and the earth alſo.

lay all night] The dew uſeth to ariſe in the night, and abide till the heat of the Sunne dry it up. Hereby is intended the continuance of Jobs proſperity in all his wayes.

upon my branch] Or, upon my harveſt. See on chap. 18.16.

V. 20. My glory was freſh in me, and my bow was renewed in my hand.] Some read the words thus, My glory ſhall be freſh in me, and my bow ſhall be renewed in my hand. And they take it for a confident perſwaſion, that Job had of the continuance of his proſperity, like that verſ. 18. But the former tranſlation is better, which makes it a reaſon of that confidence, verſ. 18. Becauſe not only his honour, and ſtrength did not decreaſe, but alſo increaſe daily: and therefore was likely to continue. So he goes on with the ſimilitude of the tree, which being watered from earth and heaven, continues green, and flouriſhing. As chap. 14. 7,8,9. Iſa. 40. 31.

My glory] The honour and reſpect which I have from others. It comes from a word that ſignifies to be heavy or weighty, for honour addes weight to mens perſons, and makes them of greater account then others. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 9.

was freſh] Heb. new. I had every day more reſpect from men then other.

in me] Heb. with me. It was from others, not within himſelf.

and my bow] My ſtrength by acceſſe of a multitude of friends continually to uphold me, Gen. 49. 24. 1 Sam. 2. 4.

was renewed] Heb. did change. To wit, it ſelf, or its ſtrength. See on chap. 14. 7. As an archer in the wars, when his bow breaks, takes a new one, and goes on ſtoutly in the battell, ſo Jobs proſperous condition grew every day ſtronger then other.

in my hand] So that I could uſe it as a means to preſerve me from mine enemies, as an archer doth his bow in his hand. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 23.

V. 21. Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſell.] Job goes on to the end of the chapter to ſhew the grounds of his perſwaſion of the continuance of his proſperity. Theſe are taken from that great reſpect, that men gave to his words, expreſſed in divers particulars. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if Job ſhould have ſaid. I did not without cauſe judge, that my proſperity would continue, becauſe whenſoever I ſpake, every one heard me with great attention: every one waited to ſee the iſſue of my ſpeech, and agreed to me, when I had ſpoken.

Unto me men gave ear] They kept ſilence, when I ſpake, and no man interrupted me but all hearkned to me, as conceiving great weight to be in all my words. See the verſ. 9, 10, 11. For the word, ſee on chap. 13. 17. upon the word, Hear.

and waited] Attended expecting what would be my reſolution in counſell or judgement, as if they had all depended upon my words.

and kept ſilence] Replyed not again, but conſented to what I ſaid. As followes verſ. 22.

at my counſell] As ſoon as they heard, what I had concluded, they were ſatisfied.

V. 22. After my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them.] As they hearkned to my ſpeech with patience, and waited to know my reſolution, and conſented to it, when they heard it, ſo no man was ſo bold as to reply, but all were pleaſed with my words, as hearbs and flowers with the dew of heaven.

after my words] After I had done ſpeaking.

they ſpake not again] Either becauſe they had a perſwaſion, that I ſpake oracles, or elſe, that I ſpake ſo fully, that nothing needed to be added to perſwade men to beleeve it, or ſo truly, that they had nothing to object againſt it. This word is uſed for not doing a thing again, 1 Sam. 26. 8. 2 Sam. 20. 10.

and my ſpeech dropped upon them] Or, When. Or, thus my ſpeech dropped upon them. He ſhewes the cauſe, why they were thus ſilent and attentive, becauſe his ſpeech was as pleaſing to them, as dew to the graſſe, Deut. 32. 2.

V. 23. And they waited for me, as for the rain, and they opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain.] The content men took in my counſels and ſentences, was the cauſe, that they longed in doubtfull matters to hear my reſolution, as the dry earth or husbandman longs for rain.

And they waited for me] See on verſ. 21.

as for the rain] That is, for the former rain, when men have ſowed their grounds, which they long for to bring up their ſeed, Pſal. 72. 6. It is oppoſed to the latter rain in this verſ. See Joel, 2. 23.

and they opened their mouth wide] Not to ſpeak, for they kept ſilence to hear Job: but as the earth chaps, and for drought opens as it were the mouth of it wide, that the rain may fully ſatisfie it, ſo were they as deſirous to hear Iobs reſolution of their doubts, Pſal. 63. 1. & 65. 9,10.& 119.131. Prov. 30. 16. Or, as men, that open their mouths wide to fill them with deſireable food, Pſal. 81. 10. For the word, Mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

as for the latter rain] Some take it for the rain before the harveſt to make the corn ſwell. Others for the rain after harveſt to bring up graſſe again for the cattell, which dryes away in the heat of harveſt, Deut. 11. 14. Jer. 5. 24. Iam. 5. 7. Prov. 26. 1. Zech. 10. 1.

V. 24. If I laughed on them, they believed it not, and the light of my countenance they caſt not down.] It often comes to paſſe, that when men in authority carry themſelves familiarly with their inferiours, they are contemned, but it was not ſo with me, but if it happened that in my pleaſure I uttered any thing merrily, and ſomewhat more freely then I was accuſtomed, yet no man thereat took offence, neither needed I therefore to caſt down my countenance, as if I had forgot my ſelf.

If I laughed on them] The word שחק in ſcripture language, ſignifies, 1. ſlighting a perſon or thing, chap. 39. 7. 2. it is put for ſmiling upon one in good will as men doe at feaſts upon one another, Eccl. 10. 9. 3. for jeſting or being in ſport, Prov. 29. 9. 4. for deriding or laughing to ſcorn, Pſal. 2. 4. Here it is taken in the third ſenſe for jeſting with them, for Job did not uſe to ſlight or deride men.

they beleeved it not] My countenance, and carriage was ſo grave at other times, that when I ſmiled on them, or jeſted with them, they could not beleeve, that I was in jeſt, but thought ſome ſerious matter was hid under my ſmiling countenance, and cheerfull words: or they would not beleeve that I would be ſo familiar with them, and were overjoyed at it, Luk. 24. 41. See on Job 39. 14. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 22.

and the light of my countenance they caſt not down] They did not ſhew any diſlike of my cheerfulneſſe, as not becoming my place and gravity. Or, yet the light of my countenance they caſt not down. That is, they did not contemne me becauſe of this familiar carriage, which often breeds contempt of ſuperiours in inferiours. Though they thought there was more in it then jeſt, yet they durſt not think I diſſembled, or wronged my place by light carriage: ſo great an opinion had they of my wiſdome and goodneſſe, that they durſt not cenſure mee, though they underſtood not the reaſon of my actions. So ו is tranſlated, Pſal. 119. 110. For the word, Light, ſee on chap. 18. 5. For, Countenance, chap. 14. 20.

caſt not down] In Heb. is, made not to fall. They made me not hang down my countenance for ſhame or grief, Gen. 4. 5. For men aſhamed or grieved let their countenance fall, whereas men pleaſed or cheared lift up their heads, Pſal. 3. 3.

V. 25. I choſe out their way, and ſat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army, as one that comforteth the mourners.] Here he concludes with ſhewing what great reſpect he had from all ſorts of men being accounted as an Emperour among them, and yet that he uſed this authority to the good of the people, and ſo was both feared, and loved of them. As if he had ſaid, If there were any weighty buſineſſe in hand, I taught them what way and courſe was beſt for them to take, ſitting among them in the chiefeſt, and moſt honourable place, as a king in the midſt of his army: and look what counſell, and advice ſo ever I gave them, it was as acceptable unto them, as the ſpeech of him, that comforteth thoſe, who are in any diſtreſſe and miſery.

I choſe out their way] I directed them how to bring their lawfull affairs to paſſe. For, Wayes, ſee on chap. 16. 22.

and ſat chief] And had the uppermoſt place, and chief command in all their weighty actions. For the word Sat, ſee on chap. 22. 8. on the word, Dwelt. For, Chief, ſee on chap. 19. 9. upon the word, Head. Some read the beginning of the verſe thus.

If I choſe their way, I ſat chief] That is, whenſoever I went to them, they ſet me above all others, and ſhewed greateſt ſignes of reverence to me.

and dwelt as a King in the army] I was as much feared and honoured, as if a king had come among them with a great army, though I came without any force: This ſhewes the reverent account they had of Job, and that conſtantly, and continually.

as one that comforteth the mourners] Though I was thus reverenced by them, yet they loved me alſo as men in trouble love thoſe, that come to viſit them. An alluſion to the charitable manner of thoſe countryes, where they uſed to come to comfort their friends in heavineſſe, chap. 2. 11. & 42. 11. or to a king, who ſpeaks comfortably to his ſouldiers after a loſſe in batteil, or ought elſe that may grieve them: and therefore is worthily beloved of them, 2 Sam. 19. 7. For, mourning, ſee on chap. 14. 22.

CHAP. XXX.

Verſ. 1. BUt now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion, whoſe fathers I have diſdained to have ſet with the dogs of my flock.] As in the former chapter Iob had ſhewed the great height to which he had attained in his proſperity, ſo here he pathetically ſets out the extream miſery to which he was now brought, which doubtleſſe was ſo much the heavier to him, as a fall from an hill hurts a man more then lying on the ground. Hee ſets out this depth of his miſery, 1. by the verball injuries he received from others, to verſ. 10. 2. by reall ones, to verſ. 16. 3. by deſcribing his own grief and pain by reaſon of his ſores, to verſ. 19. 4. By Gods rough handling of him, to verſ. 25. 5. He concludes all with a lamentation of his undeſerved miſery, as he conceives, and that to the end of the chapter. For the 1. he aggravates the ſorrow conceived at their ſcorne and ſcoffes by the vileneſſe of the perſons. A generous ſpirit cannot endure to be ſcoffed at by any, but leaſt of all by baſe perſons. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if Iob had ſaid, Such an one was I within theſe few dayes as I have told you. But good God, how are all things changed with me, and what a great and ſudden alteration hath followed? For loe I am become a laughing ſtock to thoſe, who in years come very farre behind me, and whoſe fathers I would not have once vouchſafed to have in the ſame eſtimation, that I had my dogs, which were ſet to keep my flocks.

But] So it is tranſlated, chap. 26. 1. And very fitly here, for in the whole chap, he oppoſeth his preſent miſery to his former proſperity.

now] This he could not utter without much grief of heart, and dejection of ſpirit finding ſo great an alteration in his condition.

they that are younger then I] Heb. they that are ſmaller of dayes then I. That is, who have not lived ſo long as I. No doubt it was a great grief to Job that had been honoured ſo much by the ancient, now to be contemned by his youngers, eſpecially himſelf in likelihood being grown in years. It is not likely that Job meant any of his three friends, that now reaſoned with him, as ſome learned interpreters conceive, for doubtleſſe Job had not ſo mean an opinion of any of their pedigree as to think their parents worthy to be ſet below his dogs. It is more likely that theſe affronts were offered by others, either before his friends came to comfort him, or while they ſate ſtill by him, chap. 2. 13. Or it may be theſe ſeverall conferences might be on ſeverall dayes, and theſe ſcoffes by others might come between. The word צעיר ſometimes ſignifies ſmall in condition, low or vile, as chap. 14. 21. ſometimes in number, that is few; ſo here, Fewer of dayes. Sometimes alone without mention of dayes it ſignifies younger, as Gen. 19. 31. & 48. 14. As on the contrary great is put for old, Job. 32. 9. And tranſlated, eldeſt, 1 Sam. 17. 28. For, Dayes, ſee on chap. 14. 14. & 15. 23.

have me in deriſion] See on chap. 29. 24. upon the word, Laughed.

I would have diſdained to have ſet with the dogs of my flock] Whoſe fathers lived ſo poorly, that my dogs that kept my ſheep fared better, and therefore I might well have a very low account of them. This ſuites well with their hard fare, verſ. 3. 4. It was the harder for Job, who had lived ſo plentifully to ſuffer ſuch ſcorne from perſons of ſo beggerly a breed. Job did not deſpiſe any for their poverty, but ſhewes their very low condition, that now derided him. To take the words ſeverally. Contemning or diſdaining here may be taken for counting them utterly unfit for the meaneſt office in Iobs many imployments. For Fathers, ſee on chap. 15. 10.

to have ſet with the dogs] To have truſted as my dogs that kept my flocks from the wolves. Or to hade made my dog keepers, or feeders of my dogs, which was a very mean office.

of my flock] The word properly ſignifies a flock of ſheep or goats, not of greater cattel, which they were more unworthy to be truſted withall as being of greater price. See on chap. 21. 11.

V. 2. Yea, whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was periſhed?] Leſt any man ſhould think Iob proud, or that out of an inhumane contempt he had ſlighted or loathed their fathers, here he gives a reaſon of it, their very old age, which made them more fit to bee releeved, then imployed by him.

Yea] See on chap. 16. 4. upon the word, Alſo.

whereto might the ſtrength of their hand profit me] Some underſtand theſe words of thoſe young ones that derided Job, and interpret the words thus, They were young indeed, and ſtrong and luſty, but ſo idle, that I could have gotten no good by imploying them, but rather loſſe. Others underſtand them of their fathers mentioned before, who were now ſo old, that they had no ſtrength to do Iob any ſervice, if he ſhould imploy them. For the word, Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23.

in whom old age was periſhed] Some underſtand this alſo of the young men. They were ſo idle and beggerly, that they could not live to old age. Others of the fathers, that they got no experience in their life, but were fooles in their old age. Or, rather they lived ſo long till they were children again, and had neither ſtrength nor wit to do me any ſervice. They had loſt the ſtrength of young men, and the wiſdom of old men.

V. 3. For want and famine they were ſolitary: fleeing into the wilderneſſe in former time deſolate and waſte.] The baſeneſſe of thoſe men is ſet out in this verſe and the next, by their flying from the company of other men to dwell in wilderneſſes, and by their poor food.

For want] They had no proviſions neceſſary for their bodies, but wanted all things.

and famine] Want of food: not ariſing out of ſcarcity, but out of their own idleneſſe, or Gods judgement upon them, in a time, when Iob and others had enough.

They were ſolitary] Not without children, as the word is uſed, Iſa. 49. 21. But flying the company of men being aſhamed to live among them for want of apparell and other neceſſaries, leſt they ſhould be derided. This agrees with what followes, and argues extream poverty. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 34. Or, they were dark as the night, as the word ſeemes to import, chap. 3. 7. fleeing into the wilderneſſe] Seeking waſt places to dwell in as hated of all men, verſ. 5. and counted unworthy to live among them. Or, of their own accord for ſhame or fear avoiding the ſight of other men. The word ſignifies a dry place, where no man would dwell for want of water, that could dwell elſewhere. Broughton tranſlates it, The unwatery land. So it is expounded, Pſal. 63. 1.

in former time] Heb. yeſternight. As it is tranſlated, Gen. 19. 34. or yeſterday, as 2 King.9.26. That is, lately. If they be rich, or in any better condition now, it is not long ſince they were thus beggerly, or ſince the places were laid waſte.

deſolate] Having no inhabitants there, and fitter for beaſts to dwell in, then for men, chap.38.26.

and waſte] Like a land utterly ruined by the enemy that hath no proviſion left in it, Zeph. 1. 15. This word, and the former come both from one root in the originall, and ſignifie an utter devaſtation.

V.4. Who cut up mallowes by the buſhes, and juniper roots for their meat.] As in the former verſe he had ſet out their beggerly condition by their habitation, ſo here by their miſerable life feeding on bitter and unſavory, yea and unwholeſome meats, which no man would eat, if he were not ready to ſtarve for hunger.

who cut up] To wit, to eat, and for their daily food, as follows in the verſe. For the word, ſee on chap.8.12.

mallowes] Salt herbs of an unſavory taſte growing in ſalt places and barren, chap.39.6. Jer.17 6. for it comes from a word, that ſignifies ſalt in the originall. A food, that poor people were forced to eat having not means to provide better.

by the buſhes] Or, by the ſhrubs. It ſeems they uſe to grow in ſuch deſert places.

and juniper roots] For Root, ſee on chap. 5. 3. & 14. 8. Rithmah, Numb.33. 18. had its name from רתם a juniper. It ſeemes many grew there. So we read of the city of palme-trees, Deuteron. 34. 3.

for their meat] They were forced to make meat of hard roots of juniper in thoſe deſart places. Othes read it, to warm them. As the ſame word is uſed, Iſa.47.14. And it is manifeſt that coales of juniper give a great heat, Pſal.120.4. But what need they ſuch firing living in woods, and having plenty of the trees themſelves to burn? For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 23; upon the word, Bread.

V. 5. They were driven forth from among men, (they cryed after them, as after a thief.) Here is laid down the reaſon, why theſe people fled into the wilderneſſe. Either they were baniſhed for their miſdeeds, or aſhamed to tarry there becauſe of the generall clamour of men againſt them.

They were driven forth from among men] Heb. From the midſt. To wit, of the city or of men gathered together in it. They could not abide there with any ſafety. They were beggerly or unfaithfull, unfit to live among other men, that were laborious. See on verſ. 4. For the word, ſee on chap.20. 25. upon the word, Body.

they cryed after them, as after a thief] Thieves are hatefull to all men, and houted and ſhouted at in all places. So were theſe baſe people: which made him fly from the company of men.

V. 6. To dwell in the cliſts of the vallies, in caves of the earth, and of the rocks.] He had before ſet out their courſe fare, now in this and the next he ſets out their courſe lodging, and ſorry abiding or dwelling, proportionable to their fare.

To dwell] This depends upon the beginning of the former verſe. They were drawn out from the company of men, and ſo forced to dwell in ſolitary places.

in the cliſts of the vallies] Or, of the rivers. They durſt not abide in townes or cities, but ſought out cities to hide themſelves in, which either were made by earthquakes, or by inundation of water in rocks, or low vallies. The word cliſt, comes from a word that ſignifies, to break. See on chap.13.25. And it may import holes made by flouds or winds, or their own labour in digging. For the word, Vallies, ſee on chap.20.17. on the word, Rivers.

in caves of the earth] Heb. in holes of duſt. As if they had been made by digging. So חורים is tranſlated holes, Iſa. 42. 22. And net-works, Iſa.19.9. becauſe they are full of holes, And baskets made like net-work, Gen.40.16. And dung or excrements, which go out of the draught, 2 King. 18.27. For the word, Earth, or Duſt, ſee on chap.14.8. on the word, Ground.

and of the rocks] Some rocks are hollow, and might afford ſhelter for ſuch miſerable creatures, chap. 24. 8.

V. 7. Among the buſhes they brayed, under the nettles they were gathered together.] Here he ſhewes what great wants, and inconveniences theſe contemptible people endured here in their cold lodgings.

among the buſhes] See on verſ.4.

they brayed] They made a noyſe like a wild aſſe for hunger, cold, or other inconveniencies: for the wild aſſe doth not bray when he is full, and nothing troubles him, Chapter 6. 5. & 24. 12.

under the nettles they were gathered together] They were all in the ſame miſerable condition, and had no better place to meet in, then where nettles, and ſtinking weeds grew. So the word is uſed for Abiding, 1 Sam.26.19. Or, They were all joyned to the nettles ſeeking ſhelter there. So it is Putting in, 1 Sam. 2. 36. Others read it, They were ſcabbed or ſtung. To wit, with nettles, which made them roar ſo; in the beginning of the verſe.

V. 8. They were children of fools, yea children of baſe men, they were viler then the earth.] They come of contemptible parents, men of no note for any knowledge or goodneſſe, but more abject, then the very earth upon which they tread.

They were children] See on chap. 14.21.

of fooles] Of men that had no underſtanding in them. Hence Naball had his name. 1 Sam. 25. 25.

yea] See on chap.19.4. on the word Alſo.

children of baſe men] Heb. of men without name. That is, of obſcure and mean men; for ſuch mens names uſe not to be taken notice of, whereas names of men famous for high birth and parts are noted while they they live, and chronicled, when they die. So Gen.6.4. men of name in the originall, are called men of renown in the tranſlation.

they were viler then the earth] The earth is low in place, and vile in mens account, trodden upon by the foot of every beaſt. This ſhews what a baſe account men had formerly of thoſe that now ſtand up to deride Job. For the earth ſee on chap.9. 24. Others read it, They were ſmitten out of the earth. That is, beaten out of it, and and driven out of the land by violence, ſee on verſe 5.

V. 9. And now I am their ſong, yea I am their by-word] How vile they were that derided him, Job had ſhewed at large in the former verſes; now he ſhewes how baſely they uſed him. If they make themſelves merry by art, they make ſongs of my miſeries; if they talk pleaſantly, they make ſport of them. A thing too common in the world for mean men to make ſport of great mens ruine.

And now] In this time of my miſery. They durſt not carry themſelves ſo to me in my proſperity.

I am their ſong] I am the matter of their ſong. They make themſelves muſick with my miſeries. See the like complaint. Pſal.69. 12. Lam.3.14. 63. Ezek.33. 32. The word properly ſignifies playing on a ſtringed inſtrument. It ſeems to vex Job the more in his miſery, they not only made ſongs of him, but alſo plaid them upon inſtruments.

yea I am their by-word] Heb. I am to them for a word. That is, I am commonly in their mouths; they talk of little elſe, but of my fall. They ſpeak of it with diſgrace, and make of me a contemptuous proverb, chap. 17. 6.

V. 10. They abhorre me, they flee far from me, and ſpare not to ſpit in my face.] He now complains that he was unto theſe mockers, as a loathſome thing, which they could not endure to look upon, but thought worthy of the greateſt contempt and deſpite.

They abhorre me] See on chap.5. 16. & 19. 19.

They flee far from me] They will not come nigh me, my ſores are ſo loathſome. See on chap.21.16.

and ſpare not to ſpit in my face] Heb. and withhold not ſpittle from my face. This was a ſign of the greateſt diſgrace that could be put upon a man, Numb.12.14. Iſa. 50. 6. Deut. 25. 9. Some think it is meant figuratively, that they did greatly contemn Job. But why might not theſe ſcoffers actually ſpit in Jobs face, as well as the Jews in Chriſts? Mat. 26. 67. This muſt needs be very bitter to Job, that he who was wont to be honoured by Princes, ſhould now be contemned by beggers. For Face ſee on chap. 14.20. upon the word Countenance.

V. 11. Becauſe he hath looſed my cord, and afflicted me, they have alſo let looſe the bridle before me.] Job here looks higher then at thoſe who deſpiſe him, and ſets down the cauſe why theſe young beggerly perſons contemned him, to wit, Gods afflicting him, and ſo taking away that awe, and reverence they had of him before. Which they perceiving, take a licentious boldneſſe to diſgrace him in the vileſt manner, and run riot, and are carried againſt him without all reaſon, God having looſed the bands of his authority over them.

becauſe he hath looſed my cord] Becauſe God hath done it. God is often underſtood in this Book of Job, taking it for granted, that his friends knew whom he meant, ſo verſe 19. By looſing the cord, is meant, taking away that reverence they formerly had to him, which bound them to reſpect him. See on chap.12.18. Others underſtand of taking away his riches, whereby he kept others in awe; and could ſhoot arrowes of diſpleaſure againſt them, if they offended him, chap.29. verſe 20. But now his ſtring was looſed, and though they abuſed him, he could not ſhoot at them. For the word Looſed, ſee on chap.12.18. and on chap.29. 19. on the word Spread.

and afflicted me] He ſhews how God had made him contemptible, to wit, by laying more afflictions on him, then on other men, by reaſon whereof they thought, God hated him, and they might contemn him. For the various ſignifications of the word ſee on chapter 16. 1.

they have alſo] Or, therefore they have. For the cauſe of their contempt is here let down. So the particle is tranſlated, chap.35. 16. They, that is, thoſe, who ſcoffed at Job.

let looſe] Or, caſt out. To wit, the bridle out of their mouths. For the word ſee on chap. 14.20. upon the word Sendeſt him away.

the bridle] That authority whereby I kept them in awe, as an horſe is kept in by a bridle, Pſal.32. 9. Others underſtand it of the bridle of their mouths or tongues, as Pſal. 39. 1. & 141. 3. So that they now durſt ſpeak any evill of me, or to me, who before being kept in by my authority, as with a bridle durſt not do it.

before me] Heb. from my face. They did deride me to my face, ſo that I could not ſee any authority I had over them, or any reſpect they had to me. For the word Face ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word Countenance.

V. 12. Upon my right hand riſe the youth, they puſh away my feet, and they raiſe up againſt me the wayes of their deſtruction.] The reins being now let looſe he ſhewes how theſe people carried themſelves toward him. Thoſe youths that hid themſelves before, and could not endure the gravitie of my countenance, now come boldly into my preſence, offer violence to me, and lay ſiege to me as enemies to a Citie.

Upon my right hand] Where I uſed to have moſt ſtrength. They ſee, that I have no ſtrength in me left to reſiſt them, and therefore inſult over me. For the word ſee on chap. 23. 9.

riſe] Up againſt me to ſcoffe at me, and abuſe me. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 12.

the youth] Heb. the bloſſome. Children in youth are like bloſſomes in the trees. Hence alſo the young birds in the neſt have their name in the originall. He intimates that not only young men did abuſe him, as verſe 1. but alſo boyes. Broughton fitly calls them Springgalls.

they puſh away my feet] As wreſtlers uſe to trip up mens heels to lay them on the ground, ſo they ſeek to ruine me. Or, It may be meant literally of affronts offered to his ſore and weak body. For the word ſee of chap. 14. 20. upon Sendeſt him away.

and they raiſe up againſt me the wayes of their deſtruction] As enemies that beſiege a City, raiſe banks and heaps before it, that they may ſcale the walls and enter to deſtroy it, ſo do they ſeek all means of my diſgrace, and ruine, ſee on chap. 19. 12. For deſtruction, ſee on chap. 18. 12. Broughton reads the end of the verſe thus, and they caſt upon me the cauſes of their woe. That is, they do me abundance of miſchief, or, They think and ſay that all their miſeries were brought upon them by my means, and now they will be revenged on me.

V. 13. They marre my path, they ſet forward my calamity, they have no helper.] Here he ſhewes how they did altogether hinder him of all ways of comforts and eſcaping, and proſpered in all their evill courſes againſt him, being ſtrong enough of themſelves to do him miſchief.

They marre my path] They diſturb all ways and courſes that I can think of either to get any comfort or delivery. They have cut off all way of ſuccour from me. I know not what to ſpeak, nor what to do with any freedom. For Path, ſee on chap. 18. 10. upon the Word Way.

they ſet forward my calamity] I am miſerable enough in regard of my loſſes and ſores: but they make me more miſerable by their taunts, and unkind uſage of me. Or, All their plots againſt me prevail to increaſe my miſerie, whereas none of mine can prevail to eaſe me. Or, They count it profitable to them to vexe me, ſo great is their malice againſt me.

they have no helper] They are grown ſo immodeſt, that though no man of any faſhion give them countenance, yet they vex me. Or, Such as have none to help them in their wants, yet ſcoffe at me in my miſerie, Or, they need no man to egge them on to abuſe me, they are forward enough to do it of themſelves.

V. 14. They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters: in the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.] Some conceive that Job goes on with the ſimilitude of an Army beſieging a City, who when they have made a great breach go in, in abundance, and lay all deſolate. Others take it for a ſimilitude taken from the Sea, or ſome great river, which having found a breach in the banks over-runs the country, and dronws all that comes in the way.

The came upon me] They ſet upon me all together with great violence.

as a wide breaking in of waters] As the water when it hath made a great breach runs in a maine, ſo as no man can ſtop it. Hence Pharez had his name in the originall, Gen. 38. 29.

in the deſolatitn] Heb. under the deſolation. Or, inſtead of deſolation. God having broken the banks of my health, and eſtate, they take occaſion thereby to abuſe me, and to ruine me. See verſ. 3.

they rolled themſelves upon me] They took full liberty to abuſe me and ſpoyle me as they pleaſed. And I had no more power to reſiſt them, then men have to reſiſt a floud, or an Armie breaking in upon them. A man that rolls himſelf over the graſſe, preſſeth it all down. So did they labour wholly to ſuppreſſe Job. Gen. 43. 18. Pſal. 37. 5. in the margin.

V. 15. Terrours are turned upon me: they purſue my ſoul as the wind, and my welfare paſſeth away as a cloud.] The frights and terrours that thoſe adverſaries brought upon him, and the ruine of his former proſperitie he ſets out by two ſimilitudes. The one from a violent wind, that blowes down all before it; the other from a cloud that vaniſheth quite away, and affords no rain at all to refreſh the earth.

Terrours are turned upon me] Heb. is turned, That is, every kind of terrour is come upon men. I want nothing to affright me; for heaven and earth ſeemed to conſpire againſt him to ruine him, chap. 1. & 15. 21. & 18. 11. 14.

they purſue] They follow me cloſely with all eagerneſſe, as perſecutors do good men, and give me no reſt.

my ſoule] Heb. my principall one. Or, my princeſſe. Becauſe the ſoul is the principall part of man, and rules all the parts and members of the body, and is more eminent then the body, as Princes are more eminent then common men. So the maſculine is tranſlated a Prince, chap. 21. 28. Others read it my nobility, or, my honour, or my bounty. For all theſe the word will bear. And they mean, that they had deprived him of his credit and wealth, and all means of exerciſing bountie to others as formerly, chap. 29.

as the wind] Some underſtand it of the ſuddenneſſe of Jobs miſery coming on him, as the winds blow ſwiftly. But is better underſtood of the violent and irreſiſtible manner of Jobs troubles ſeizing upon him, as the wind blowes down all that is in the way. For the word Wind, ſee on chap. 15. 2. upon the word Vain knowledge. Terrours made his ſoul unfit to do her office, and endangered his life by reaſon of thoſe terrible things which befell him.

and my welfare] My health, wealth, and ſafetie.

paſſeth away] Is clean gone. See on chap. 15. 19.

as a cloud] Not as ſwiftly as a cloud, as ſome would have it, but totally as a cloud vaniſhing quite away, and affording no rain at all. Job was exalted in wealth and honour, but no more footſteps of it appearing now, then of a cloud that is vaniſhed, chap. 7. 9. Hoſ. 6. 4. & 13. 3.

V. 16. And now my ſoul is poured out upon me, the dayes of affliction have taken hold upon me.] In this verſe, Job ſets out the troubles of his mind. In the 17. verſe, the pain of his body, and in the 18. the defiling of his garments. As his mind was troubled in the day time, ſo his body was pained in the night ſeaſon, and his clothes made filthie and troubleſome to him. He might have better born the reproaches of others, if his own ſoul and body had not been troubled, but this addition made his burden exceeding heavie.

my ſoul] Some underſtand it of the ſoul it ſelf: but that was yet in his body. It is therefore better interpreted of the courage and ſtrength of his ſoul, which was much weakened by his afflictions. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 22.

is poured out] The word in Scripture ſometimes imports plenty, as Joel 2. 28. But here it imports emptying, for when the wine is poured out, the veſſell is emptie. So when mans courage, and ſtrength is gone, he hath an emptie ſoul. Pſal. 42. 4. His ſoul did as it were melt away for grief.

upon me] Or, within me. That is, within my body. Men cannot ſee how much I am weakened by my troubles, and other mens ſcoffes: but I feel it. So it is tranſlated, In me. Pſal. 42. 5.

the dayes] See on chap. 14. 14.

of affliction] Of trouble or calamitie.

have taken hold upon me] Whatſoever ſtrength was left within me, is decayed, and gone out of my ſoul, ſo that nothing is left within me to ſuſtain me in my troubles. And withall, affliction hath laid ſo faſt hold on me, and continued ſo many daies, to keep me under, that I can by no means get rid of it.

V. 17. My bones are pierced in me in the night ſeaſon, and my ſinews take no reſt.] Not only my ſoul is troubled within me, but alſo my body is ſo full of pain, that in the night time, when other miſerable men take reſt, and all creatures are wont to be at quiet, then the marrow of my bones rageth through intollerable pains, as if one had pierced them through with a dart, and my heart is ſo overheated with grief, that my pulſes beat all night long ſo ſtrongly, that they keep me from all reſt.

my bones] So great is my trouble, that it not only hath ſeized upon all my fleſh, but alſo entred within my bones. Theſe uphold the weight of the body, and are the firmeſt part of it. Every one of them is pierced. For in the originall it is a noun plurall with a verb ſingular. For the word ſee on chap. 20. 11.

are pierced] This phraſe in Scripture language intimates a great grief, and ſuch a pain as penetrates through the moſt inward and ſolid parts of the body. His pain pierced his fleſh, and went into the very bones. Some read it, he hath pierced my bones. Meaning God, who had laid this ſore affliction upon him, and is oftner mentioned in this book, then named. Others thus, the night pierceth my bones. I feel more pain in the night, then in the day, as moſt ſick people do.

in me] Heb. from above me. As attributing all his pains to God, who had afflicted him from heaven. Or, from within me. By reaſon of thoſe ſores and parts I feel in my body.

in the night ſeaſon] He aggravates his ſorrowes from the circumſtances of time, intimating that he had no reſt at all day nor night, as chap. 7. 3. 14. & 17. 12.

and my ſinewes] Or, my pulſes.

take no reſt] Heb. lie not down. Or, ſleep not, That is to ſay, my pulſes, which uſe to move more ſlowly in the night time, when the heat is drawn into the internall parts, now by reaſon of inflammation beat as faſt in the day, and will not let me ſleep. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 12.

V. 18 By the great force of my diſeaſe is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat] He that before wore gorgeous apparell as an Enſign of Magiſtracie, now hath ſo much filth, and corruption running out of his ſores, that it foules and pollutes all his garments, and makes them noiſome to others, and hurtfull to himſelf.

By the great force of my diſeaſe] My diſeaſe is ſo ſtrong, and hath ſo far prevailed againſt me, that it hath ſpoiled my apparell. Others underſtand it of Gods great force, for thoſe words, Of my diſeaſe, are not in the originall. But the firſt reading is beſt, becauſe the immediate cauſe of polluting his garments, was the filth that ran from his ſores. For Great ſee on chap. 22. 25.

is my garment changed] The colour of it is changed, and it is made filthie. My garment hath as it were put on another garment. Others underſtand it not of change of the colour of his garment, but of often putting on other clothes, as they that have running ſores, uſe to do. But the former ſenſe is better, for it is not likely that Job had either ſuch ſtore of clothes, or good attendance.

it bindeth me about] It compaſſeth me round about, and ſticks cloſe unto me. Others read it, He bindeth me about, that is, God compaſſeth me about with ſores.

as the collar of my coat] It wrings me as an uneaſie collar of a coat wrings a mans neck. They uſed in thoſe dayes to wear coats open onely at top and bottom. And ſuch an one full of and ſtiffe with filthy matter muſt needs hurt him, that puts it on, or pulls it off. Broughton reads it elegantly, as the edge of my coat it girds me. For Collar, ſee on chap. 15. 5. on the word, Mouth.

V. 19. He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes.] I lie wallowing and tumbling in this moſt loathſome dirt: and being covered all over with the ſcales, and ſcrapings, that fall from my ſcabs, I am become more like unto the unprofitable duſt and aſhes then unto a man.

He hath caſt me into the mire] He hath cauſed mee to bee polluted all over by my ſores. Or, he hath put the greateſt diſgrace upon me that can be. For what greater diſgrace, then to throw a man into the kennell? For the word Caſt, ſee on Chap. 6. 24. & 8. 10. For Mire ſee on Chap. 13. 12, upon the word Clay.

and I am become like duſt and aſhes] Foul with the filth of my ſores, or contemptible like duſt and aſhes, which every foot treads on. By theſe two words, Abraham ſets out his own vileneſſe. Gen. 18. 27. For Duſt ſee on chap. 14. 8. on the word Ground.

V. 20. I cry unto thee, and thou doſt not heare me: I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not.] Here Job expreſſeth that, which troubled him more then his ſores or contempt, to wit, that God would not heare his prayers, nor look with favour upon his perſon.

I cry] I pray earneſtly, as a man ready to be drowned, cries aloud for help. For the word ſee on chap. 19. 7.

unto thee] To thee O God, to whom men uſe to pray in their adverſity. Before he ſpake of God to his friends, now he ſpeaks to God before them.

and thou doſt not hear me.] Or, but thou doſt not hear me. For hee oppoſeth his ſpeech to Gods ſilence. So that particle is tranſlated, verſe 1. Hearing is here put for anſwering, ſee on chap. 16. 1. upon the word, Anſwered. See the like complaint, Pſal. 22. 2.

I ſtand up] To pray unto thee. For ſtanding was an uſuall geſture in prayer. Jer. 15. 1. This argues conſtancie in prayer, as the former word did vehemencie: and waiting upon God for an anſwer.

and thou regardeſt me not] Thou wilt not give a comfortable anſwer, or ſhew any countenance to me. Others read it, and thou markeſt me. Thou doſt as it were mark me out, not to help me, but to puniſh me more grievouſlie, as if thou didſt delight in my miſerie. This ſuits well with the words following, as the former with the words foregoing.

V. 21. Thou art become cruell to me: with thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.] Job here in his impatience ſpeaks irreverently of God, accuſing him, that contrary to his nature, and former courſe of gentle proceeding with him in his proſperity, now he was grown ſo harſh to him, as that he thought no miſery too great for him, that his hand could lay upon him.

thou art become] Hebr. thou art changed, or, turned, as Iſa. 63. 10.

cruell to me] See the like like complaint, Pſal. 77. 9. Jerem. 30. 14.

with thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me] Thou doſt like a capitall enemy practiſe all thy might upon me to afflict me. Heb. with the ſtrength of thy hand. For Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23. Thus Job often complains of God, as of an enemy. As chap. 13. 24. & 16. 9.

V. 22. Thou lifteſt me up to the wind: thou cauſeſt me to ride upon it, and diſſolveſt my ſubſtance.] Some underſtand this verſe thus, Thou giveſt affliction ſuch power over me, that like a wind it may take me up, and blow me clean away; others thus, Thou didſt lift me up in my former proſperitie, and madeſt me to ride on proſperouſly for a long time, and at length didſt ruine all my wealth. Which way ſoever it be, it is ſet out as an effect of that cruelty, wherewith he charged God in the former verſe.

Thou lifteſt me up] See on Chapter 21. 3. upon the word, Suffer.

to the wind] See on chap. 15. 2. upon the words, Vain knowledge. Thou doſt ſo hurry me with one affliction after another, that I can find no reſt.

thou cauſeſt me to ride upon it] Thou doſt as it were lock me into the ſaddle. Thou giveſt the wind ſuch power over me, that I cannot get off the wings of it, till it break my neck: as in the next verſe. And chap. 27. 20, 21.

and diſſolveſt my ſubſtance] Thou cauſeſt my body to melt away like wax, by the heat of my affliction. For the word, Subſtance, ſee on chap. 26. 3. upon the words, The thing as it is. Some read it, and diſſolveſt my wiſdom. Thou bringeſt me to my wits end, like a mariner in a grievous ſtorm, ſo that I ſee no way to eſcape, Pſal. 107. 27.

V. 23. For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living.] I ſee now and perceive by thy rough dealing, that thou art reſolved to bring me to the grave: and no wonder (though I come to it in a ſadder way, then many others) for it is that which all muſt come to in the end one way or another.

For] Here he ſhewes what iſſue he looks for from theſe calamities. It appears by thy giving me over to this tempeſt of afflictions, and giving me no eaſe, that thou purpoſeſt by them to end my life, for no man can long endure ſuch a condition and live. Some read it Surely, and ſo make it the beginning of a new ſentence having no dependance on the former words, but uſhering in what follows. So כי is tranſlated, chap. 28. 1.

I know] I am fully ſo perſwaded, See on chap. 19. 25.

that thou wilt bring me] Heb. that thou wilt make me return. To duſt, from whence man was taken at the firſt, Geneſ. 3. 19. Or, that thou wilt turne me. Thou wilt convert this fleſh into duſt, Pſal. 90. 3. Thou wilt put me into a liveleſſe condition.

to death] To a bodily death by theſe afflictions.

and to the houſe] See on chap. 15. 28.

appointed] By God, for a place for all men to meet in, when they die, and to abide in, as in a houſe, till the reſurrection, chap. 17. 13. That commonly is the grave. The Hebrew word is מועד is uſed 1. for a ſet time to do any buſineſſe, as for the ſolemn feſtivall times in the old Teſtament, Lam. 1. 4. 2. for a place appointed for a publick or common meeting. Iſa. 14. 13. 3. for the act of meeting in ſuch an appointed place, Exod. 33. 7. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſenſe for a place of meeting.

for all living] For all men, which are the beſt living creatures on earth. For he ſpeaks not here of beaſts, Heb. 9. 27. See on chap. 28. 13.

V. 24. Howbeit he will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave though they cry in his deſtruction.] The interpreters ſeem to underſtand theſe words as if Job did thus comfort himſelf, Although I thus complain, now God is deſtroying me by theſe ſore afflictions, and make no queſtion, but that by them he will end my dayes, yet this comfort I have, that my ſorrow will end with my life, for God uſeth not to afflict dead bodies in the grave. Others give this ſenſe of the words, though I cry never ſo much to him, yet he will not ſtretch out his hand to keep me from the grave, but will certainly deſtroy me. Both theſe interpretations make the words depend on the fomer. But Broughton carries them on to the following words to ſet out Jobs compaſſion to others in miſery, that others might now pity him. He reads the words thus. And prayed I not when plague was ſent? when hurt came to any, thereupon cryed I not.

Howbeit he will not ſtretch out his hand] For Stretching, ſee on chap. 14. 20. upon the word, Sendeſt him away: for Hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23.

to the grave] Heb. to the heap. For graves uſe to be covered with an heap of earth, that it may be known where people are buried. By the grave is underſtood the perſons in the grave. God afflicts living bodies, but not dead, chap. 3. 12, 13.

though they cry] Though ſick and dying men cry out for pain. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 7.

in his deſtruction] When God deſtroyes them. Such as die with great pain, complain not in the grave. Some read the end of the verſe thus, is the any cry in his deſtruction? Do men complain of any pain in the grave, after that God hath taken away their lives? never any yet did.

V. 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? was not my ſoul grieved for the poor?] Here begins the ſad concluſion of this chapter, wherein Job ſhewes, 1. what pity he ſhewed to men in miſerie; in this verſe, 2. that though he might hope therefore to eſcape trouble, yet he was deceived, verſe 26. 3. the ſad effects of this unexpected calamity: to the end of the chapter. In this verſe Job ſeems to complain in this wiſe. If I had been hard-hearted to others their miſeries, it had been no wonder, that neither God nor man pity me now in mine. But God knowes that I expreſſed my compaſſion to otherrs by weeping for them, that ſuffered hard things, and that without hypocriſie, for I inwardly lamented the wants of other men.

Did not I weep] Certainly I did. Or in manner of an oath, If I did not do ſo, let God puniſh me. See on chap. 1. 11.

for him that was in trouble] Heb. for him that was hard of day. That ſaw many troubleſome daies. Such affections of ſympathizing with others in their miſery becomes good men, Pſal. 35. 13, 14. Rom. 12. 15.

was not my ſoul] I was heartily grieved for them, and did not diſſemble in my tears. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 22.

grieved for the poor] Though I were rich, others wants went to my heart, yet no man pities me now. For Poor ſee on chap. 24. 4. on the word, Needy.

V. 26. When I looked for good, then evill came unto me: and when I wayted for light, there came darkneſſe.] Having carried my ſelfe ſo tenderly towards men in miſeries, I expected according to Gods uſuall proceedings to have enjoyed happy, and ſun-ſhiny dayes: but evill and cloudy ones have overtaken me.

VVhen I looked for] When I hoped for, and expected good days.

good] See on chap.21.13. upon the word, Wealth.

then evill came unto me] He means no evill of ſin, but of ſorrow and trouble. For, came, ſee on chap.1.19.

and when I waited for light] When I attended for the continuance of my comfortable condition. For, Light, ſee on chap. 24. 13.16. & 18.5.

then came darkneſſe] Then contrary to my expectation came abundance of trouble upon me.

V.27. My bowells boyled, and reſted not: the dayes of affliction prevented me.] My bowels being inflamed do make a great noyſe: and this moſt bitter time ſtole upon me ſuddenly, before I had ſo much as once thought of it.

My bowels] It ſignifies the inward parts, for as he was clad all over with ſores without, ſo was he all on fire within. For the word, ſee on chap.20.14.

boyled] Workt up, and grew hot within me like a ſeething pot over a great fire. So ſtrong was his diſeaſe upon him.

and reſted not] Heb. and were not ſilent. For trouble and pain is compared to a noyſe; and freedome from it, and allaying of it to ſilence, Pſal.107.29 Jon.1. 11,12.

the dayes of affliction] Times of trouble. For, Dayes, ſee on chap.14.1.

prevented me] Came ſuddenly and unexpectedly upon me. I thought my proſperity would have continued ſtill, but it proved far otherwiſe. Others read it, met me. That is, came upon me unawares, and took me unprovided. So the word is tranſlated, Deut. 23. 4. Neh.13.2.

V.28. I went mourning without the ſun: I ſtood up, and I cryed in the congregation.] I ſhewed forth all manner of ſignes of a man in a ſad and mournfull condition, my ſkinne is become black, yet not through the heat of the ſun: yea of ſuch force is this my affliction, that it driveth me even openly in the great meetings, and aſſemblies of the people, when any ſuch come about me, to utter ſorrowfull voyces not intelligible. This my pain forced from me.

I went] I continued in ſuch a poſture, as a man goes on in a journey. For the word ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word, Periſheth.

mourning] Some underſtand it of inward ſorrow of heart, others of outward expreſſions of ſorrow in black apparell. See on chap. 5.11. Pſal.35.13. & 38.6. & 42.9. & 43.2.

without the ſun] Some read it, out of the ſun. I was ſo ſad, that I took no pleaſure to walk where the Sun ſhined, but ſought dark melancholy places, in which I might hide my ſelf & vent my ſorrows. Others take בלא חמה for בחמה לא. As chap.16,17, לא חמס על for לא על חמם not for the ſun. Or, not by the ſun. My great ſorrows came not from an externall, but from an internall principle. I was not ſun-burnt, but heart-burnt by reaſon of my loſſes, ſores, and ſtrong pains. The ſun hath three names in Hebrew, חמה here to ſet out the heat of it, Pſal.19.6. 2. חרס to intimate the drought, which the ſun-ſhine brings upon the earth. 3. שמש To ſhew that it is the publick ſervant of God and of the world, as ſetting out Gods glory in the brightneſſe of it, and giving light to the world.

I ſtood up] It may be he could not ſit, or lye down for pain. Or, He had ſudden fits of pain coming on him, that made him riſe up and roar. The word ſignifies both riſing up and ſtanding. See on chap.14.12.

and I cryed in the congregation] It is not likely that Job came into the congregation in publick in this ſad condition, as formerly, becauſe he had not that reſpect, nor ability of body, which he had before. But it is very likely that many came to ſee Job thus ſtrangely altered, and that he thought it did not become a man of his gravity, who had ſpoken ſo temperately in the publick congregation now to roar out before ſo many, but to bite in his grief, till they were gone: yet ſo great was his pain, that he could not abſtain from ſcreeking out in their preſence. For the word Cryed, ſee on chapter 19.7.

V.29. I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owles.] Some make this verſe an expoſition of the beginning of former. Job ſought ſolitary and ſhady places to be alone, and deſired to ſhunne company, that he might mourn in ſecret, as dragons and owles do in deſert places. Others make it an expoſition of the latter part of that verſe. As dragons and owles make an hideous and not intelligible noiſe, when any thing troubles them, ſo did Job cry out more like a beaſt, then a man in this his pain and miſery, as if it were ſo great, that it were inexpreſſible in words. See the like ſimilitudes, Pſal.102.6.7. Iſa.38.14. Mich.1.8.

I am a brother] I am like them. I ſit alone, as they do, and howle as they do. So this word is uſed to ſet out a likeneſſe, Gen.49.5. Prov.18.9. For the word, ſee on chap.19.13.

to dragons] For the word, ſee on chap.7.12. upon the word, Whale.

and a companion] I do as they do, Prov.13.20. & 28.7.24.

to owles] Heb. to the daughters of the owle. Some underſtand it of young owles, that make a great noiſe, when the old ones are gone from them. But it may well be underſtood of owles in generall, as the ſons of men are put for men, and the daughters of Zion for the inhabitants thereof. Some read it, oſtriges.

V.30. My ſkinne is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.] His forementioned paine, and ſorrowfull complaints had ſo wrought upon him, that not onely his skin was deformed without, but alſo his bones dried up within for want of moiſture.

My skin is black upon me] So ſtrong is my pain, and my ſores ſend out ſo much filth, that my skin gathers together in black ſwellings, Pſal.119.83. Lam.4.8. & 5.10.

and my bones are burnt with heat] They are withered, and all moiſture gone out of them, as out of things burnt with the fire, Pſal.32.3,4. & 102.3. Ezek.24.10. For, Bones, ſee on chap.20.11.

V.31. My harp alſo is turned to mourning, and my organ into the voyce of them that weep.] Here is the moſt ſad concluſion of the whole chapter, wherein Job ſets out that great change of his eſtate, from high proſperity to deep miſery by a neglect or contrary uſe of thoſe muſicall inſtruments, which formerly he uſed to expreſſe or increaſe his joy, but now were either neglected, or uſed to play ſad and dolefull tunes to ſtirre up or increaſe ſorrow. So that now he minded nothing but heavineſſe. It is not likely that Job did uſe any muſick now, but rather give it quite over to ſpend his time in ſorrow. As the Jewes did in Babylon. Pſal.137.2.

My harp alſo] See on chap.21.12.

is turned to mourning] Heb. is for mourning. Whereas before I uſed to ſolace my ſelf with playing on the harp, now I weep altogether. The word ſignifies ſadneſſe of heart for ſome loſſe or croſſe ſhewed forth by the countenance, apparell, voyce or tears.

and my organ] See on chap.21.12.

into the voyce] See on chap. 15.21. upon the word Sound.

of them that weep] My mirth is turned all into lamentation, ſuch as is made by them that weep for dead friends, or under ſome great judgement, Judg.2.4,5.

CHAP. XXXI.

Verſe 1. I Made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a maid?] In this chap. Job ſets out the uprightneſſe of his former life in the time of his proſperity, that he might convince his adverſaries, that theſe extraordinary troubles came not upon him for extraordinary ſinnes, as they ſaid, and that he might draw them off from ſpeaking harſhly to him, and move them to pity him for time to come. He inſtances in many particular duties of Gods lawes which he was carefull to perform. He ſets them not down in the ſame order they are written in the Law, but according as they came to his mind, or he had had occaſion to practiſe them. Thus he ſhewes himſelf to be ſuch a man as he is deſcribed, chap.1.1. Fearing God and eſchewing evill. And 1. he cleares himſelf from fornication, in the four firſt verſes, 2. from injuſtice in trading, to verſe 9. 3. from adultery, to verſe 13. 4. from ill dealing with his ſervants, to verſe 16. 5. from unmercifulneſſe to the poor, to verſe 21. 6. from wronging orphans, to verſe 24. 7. from truſting in riches, to verſe 26. 8. from idolatry, to verſe 29. 9. from deſire of revenge, to verſe 32. 10. from denying relief to ſtrangers, verſe 32. 11. from hiding his ſinnes, verſe 33. 12. from juſtly provoking others, to verſe 38. 13. from detaining other mens lands, or hirelings wages, to the end of the Chapter. Moſt of theſe things were objected to him by his friends; ſo that here he wipes off all the dirt they caſt upon him in all their diſcourſes. For the firſt part. 1. He profeſſeth his care to avoid occaſions of fornication in this verſe. 2. He ſets down the reaſons of this his care and reſolution. 1. loſſe of good he expected from God, verſe 2. 2. Fear of puniſhment, verſe 3. 3. Gods omniſcience who would ſoon take him tripping, verſe 4. For the firſt in this verſe wherein he ſhewes the great care he had to keep himſelf from fornication by reſolving to keep his eyes and heart in order from looking ſo upon beautifull virgins, that his heart ſhould run after them.

I made a covenant] Heb. I cut a covenant. For it was a faſhion in making covenants to cut a calf or ſome other beaſt in pieces, and to walk between the pieces; intimating, that they deſired God ſo to deſtroy them, that ſhould break the covenant, Jer.34.18. Job did reſolve with himſelf, as firmly, as if he had entered into covenant with his eyes, that they ſhould not let in any object of uncleane thoughts into his heart. The word in the originall for Covenant comes from a word that ſignifies to chuſe, becauſe men chuſe the parties whom, and the conditions whereupon they enter into Covenant.

with mine eyes] All the ſenſes may afford matter of danger to the ſoul in the caſe of uncleanneſſe, but eſpecially the eyes beholding beautie, till the ſoul be ſet on fire with it, Math.5.28. 2 Pet.2.14. Therefore Job charms them eſpecially.

why then] Why ſhould I break this covenant? what good ſhould I get by it? Sure nothing but loſſe. As verſe 2. &c. It is tranſlated, And why, chap.7.21. Or, How then. How is it lawfull for me to break this covenant?

ſhould I think] Entertain wanton and laſcivious thoughts, conſidering of her beauty, till my heart luſt after her, Mat. 5. 28.

upon a maid] A virgin. Not that he gave liberty to his thoughts to luſt after married wives, for that he diſclaims alſo, uerſe 9. but he thus ſpeaks, becauſe maidens in their youth are moſt beautifull, and therefore the minds of wanton men are carried moſt after them, and as women grow in years, ſo their beauty deaves. And ſure if Job were ſo carefull to ſhut Virgins out of his mind, much more to exclude wives.

V. 2. For what portion of God is there from above? and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?] Some underſtand theſe words, as if Job ſhould have ſaid thus, I did forbear all uncleanneſſe, and yet ye ſee that God hath laid as heavie judgements upon me, as if I were an adulterer. Others thus, by way of queſtion, What could I have looked for from God, if I had been a fornicator? And they pick the anſwer out of the next verſe. Nothing but deſtruction and ſtrange puniſhment. And theſe take the words, Portion, and Inheritance, catachreſtically for evill befalling him, as it is uſed chap. 20. 29. whereas ordinarily they ſignify good things that befall us. But the right is, What good could I have expected from God, if I had been ſuch a perſon? Nay might I not rather have expected much evill from him? verſe 3.

For] This particle ordinarily ſignifies And. But here it infers a reaſon, and therefore is well tranſlated, For, as alſo chap. 11. 4. As if Job had ſaid, I conſidered with my ſelf, that I could never look for any good from God here or hereafter, if I ſhould have luſted after virgins.

what portion] None at all, that good is. For Portion, ſee on chapter 20. 29.

of God] See on chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5.

is there from above] From God, whoſe throne is on high in heaven: as followes in this verſe. Others might think all well, if they could eſcape the eyes of men? but Job takes notice of Gods majeſty, whoſe eye was always upon him, and this kept him from ſin.

and what inheritance] See on chap. 20. 29.

of the Almighty] See on chap. 8. 3. 5.

from on high] From God in heaven, as before in this verſe. See chap. 16. 19.

V. 3. Is not deſtruction to the wicked? and a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity?] Not only the hopeleſneſſe of good, but alſo the certein expectation of ſtrange puniſhments kept Job from wayes of wantonneſſe.

is not deſtruction] See on chap. 18. 12.

to the wicked] To all ungodlymen, but eſpeciallyto unclean perſons.

and a ſtrange puniſhment] Such as God doth uot uſually inflict. Iſa. 28. 21. Or as men uſe to inflict upon thoſe whom they count ſtrangers, Obad v. 12. Or, ſuch as they were not uſed to, nor did not expect, and therefore it would be ſtrange to them, when it came. Every way it imports extraordinary puniſhments to be inflicted upon fornicators by God. Others read it, and alination. To wit, from God; he counts them ſtrangers, and bears no good affection to them. Or, from their country and habitation. They ſhall be baniſhed.

to the workers) To thoſe that make a trade of ſin.

of iniquity] Of any ſin, but eſpecially of wantonneſſe. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 35. upon the word Vanity.

V. 4. Doth not he ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps?] This verſe agrees well with what went before. Wicked adulterers think themſelves ſafe in their dark places, where no man can ſee their abominations. But Job took notice of Gods all-ſeeing eye, and therefore durſt no where commit any ſuch folly.

doth not he ſee] Sure he doth. Or, would he not ſee? If I were ſuch an one, would not God take of it, and puniſh me ſeverely for it? Doubtleſs he would. For the word See, ſee on chap. 19. 27. upon the word, Behold.

my ways] For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 22. & 17. 9. For God ſeeing our ways, ſee 2 Chro 16. 9. Job 34. 21. Pro 5. 21. & 15. 3. Jer. 32. 19.

and count all my ſteps] See on chap. 14 16.

V. 5. If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit] This v. the tranſlators joyn to that which follows, and it ſeems to be a contradiction. For if Job did walk deceitfully, how couldGod find his integrity? For the ſalving whereof ſome joyn, this ver to the former, and read it thus, would not he ſee my ways, and count all my my ſteps if I had walked with vanity, or if my foot had haſted to deceit? That is, I did not ſo walk, becauſe I knew God would take notice of it and puniſh me for it. Others make it an abſolute ſentencewithout dependence on what goes before, or follows: but they conteive it to be defective, and ſupply it thus, If I have walked with vanity &c. then let God puniſh me for it. An uſual form of imprecation. See on ch. 1. 11. Others make it both abſolute & perfect, but read it by way of queſtion, Have I walked with vanity, or hath my foot haſted to deceit? That is, ſurely I have not done ſo. Aud this is tbe beſt reading.

If I have walked] Or rather have I walked? So אם is tranſlated by way of queſtion chap 6. 30. & 8. 3. & 17. 2. & 27. 11. & 30. 25. Walking argues a courſe of life. For the word ſee on chad. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth.

with vanity] That is, vainly, unprofitably, ſo as I have not been profitable to others. See on chap 15. 31.

or if my hope] If I have gone up and down to deceive men.

hath haſted] As walking intimates practice, and conſtancy, ſo haſting argues delight and ſwiftneſs in deceiving.

to deceit) To defraud men of their goods, and peſſeſſions. It appears that he ſpeaks of getting other mens means fraudulently, by the reddition, verſe 8. wherein he wiſhes the loſs of his own, if he had wronged others, See on chap 15. 35.

V. 6. Let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know mine integrity] Let the integrity of my life before, and my heavie ſorrows now be weighed in an equall ballance, and I doubt not but my ſorrows will be found heavier then my miſcarriages, and God will pronounce me a godly man, and free me from theſe ſufferings.

Let me be weighed] Heb. Let him weigh me. To wit, God, as followes in this verſe. A metaphor from Merchants, that uſed then to weigh their monies, to ſee that they had their full weight, Jer. 32. 10. And Job doubts not, but his integrity will hold weight in Gods ballance, See on chap. 6. 2.

in an even ballance] Heb. in ballances of juſtice. That is, juſt ones So that my integrity may be laid in the one ballance, and my ſufferings in the other, and the beame may be kept even. See on chap 6. 2. Juſt ballances are required, Lev. 19. 36. Prov 16. 11. unjuſt blamed, Prov. 11. 1. & 20. 23. Hoſ 12. 7. Mic. 6. 11 Am. 8. 5. See on Chap 8 3 for juſtice.

that God may know] That he may make it appear to you, who think me an hypocrite, that I am none; and that by taking away theſe plagues, which make you judge ſo hardly of me. Then ye would perceive that God takes notice of my integrity Or, and God ſhall know. I am confident then, that God will right me. For God, ſee on Chap. 4 9. & 11. 5. For know, ſee on Chap. 19. 25.

mine integrity] Mine upright dealing with all men, for he ſpeaks here of commerce with others in matters of gain, as was obſerved on verſe 5. See on Chap 27. 5.

V. 7. If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to my hands] Job in this verſe intimates unto us what conſcience he made of upright dealing with all men, inſomuch as he would not take one ſtep out of the way of juſtice, for any object of gain, though never ſo great, which his eyes preſented to him; neither would he ſuffer any ill-gotten goods like dirt to cleave to his hands to defile them.

If my ſtep hath turned out of the way] If at any time I have gone out of the juſt way of trading to get gain unrighteouſly; For, way, ſee on chap. 17. 9.

And mine heart walked after mine eyes.] If I did covet other mens goods when I ſaw them, Joſh. 7. 21. Job ſpeaks not here of looking after beauty for wantonneſſe, for that he had ſpoken of verſe 1. and doth again verſe 9. But of looking on mens goods to covet them, which is called the luſt of the eyes, 1 Joh. 2. 26. For heart ſee on chap. 15. 12. For walking ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word, paſſeth. For eyes ſee on chap. 15. 15. on the word, ſight.

And if any blot] Any thing belonging to another man taken away unjuſtly from him, which were a ſin, and ſo a blemiſh to me before God. See chap. 11. 15. Or, And if any thing] To wit, which is none of mine, but unlawfully gotten. Hath cleaved to my hands] If I have kept ſuch unlawfull goods from the right owners, and ſo ſtand ſtill polluted in Gods ſight. For Hand ſee on Chapter 29. 9.

V. 8. Then let me ſow, and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out.

A fit recompence for ſuch a wickedneſs. If I have unjuſtly taken away other mens goods, then let God give my goods to another, and deſtroy all the fruit of my labours.

Then let me ſow, and let another eat] Let that curſe fall upon me, which God in his Law threatens to ungodly men, that other men enjoy the fruit of my labours, Lev. 26. 16. Deut. 28. 30. &c. For Eat ſee on chap. 21. 25.

Yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out] Some underſtand it of Jobs children, as chap. 31. 8. & 27. 14. But that agrees not with Jobs preſent condition, who had no children left, nor hope of having, for he ſtill expected death. Others therefore interpret it of trees, which he had planted before, and might yet be left, though his childrens houſes were blown down, and ſo the end of the verſe ſuits well with the beginning, and the word rooted out will be literally taken for plucking quite up all that he had planted with ſo much paines.

V. 9. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbours doore.]

As Job had before cleared himſelfe from fornication and covetouſneſs, ſo now he cleares himſelfe from adultery. 1. Denying that he was guilty of it, in this verſe. 2. Wiſhing like meaſure to himſelfe, if he were guilty, virſe 10. 3. Shewing what deterred him from it, feare of humane puniſhment, verſe 11. of divine, verſe 12. In this verſe he ſhewes, 1. That he kept a ſure guard over his heart, ſo that the beauty of his neighbours wife could not pierca it. 2. That he did not as adulterers uſe to do, watch for a fit opportnnity to obtain his deſire of his neighbours wife.

If my heart have been deceived by a woman] If I have ſo gazed on my neighbours wife, that I have been enamoured of her, and ſo my heart hath been beguiled of chaſtity, Prov 7. 7. 21. &c. For heart ſee on chap. 15 12. Deceived or Allured. For Strumpets deceive by allurement, Prov. 7. 13, 14.

By a woman] By her perſwaſions: Or, Concerning a woman. That is, in way of adultery by luſtfull thoughts ariſing out of mine own heart. So על is uſed for concerning, Eccl. 1. 13. By a woman here is meant the wife of another man, for he had ſpoken of Virgins, verſe 1. and his own wife could not deceive him in this kind. For the word ſee on chap. 2. 9. & 14. 1.

Or if I have laid wait at my neighbours door] If I have watched when his wife came to the door, that I might allure her to folly, or when her husband goes forth, that I might be let in to abuſe his wife. See ſuch waitings of adulterers, chap. 24. 15, 16. He had not in a ſecret place watched for an occaſion to ſpoyle a neighbours wife of her chaſtity. So much the word imports, Pſal. 10. 8, 9. Proverbs 1. 11.

V. 10. Then let my wife grind unto another; and let others bow down upon her.]

A ſore imprecation, yet ſuch an one as ſhewes, how God oftentimes puniſheth men for adultery, by giving over their wives to be ſtrumpets. Let my wife, as I have juſtly deſerved, be ſubject to the luſt of another man. Thus God puniſhed Davids adultery, 2 Sam. 12. 11.

Then let my wife] For the word ſee on chap. 2. 9. Grinde unto another.] A clean expreſſion of an unclean act, with alluſion to the two mill-ſtones one covering the other, as ſome conceive. So Lam. 5. 13. where our Tranſlation reads it, They took the young men to grinde.] The vulgar reads it, They did unchaſtly abuſe the young men.] This ſenſe agrees beſt with the words before and after; yet ſome interpret it of ſlavery: Let my wife be a ſlave to another man, and be imployed in the meaneſt act of ſlavery, grinde his corn for him in his mill, Exod. 11. 5. Mat. 24. 41. Judg. 16. 21. Lam. 5. 13.

and let others bow down upon her] Another modeſt expreſſion of the unclean act of adultery. So the Scripture often doth in things not fit to be named. As covering the feet for ſending forth the excrements, Judg. 3. 24. And going in to a woman for the act of adultery, Pſal. 51. in the Title, and many others. Teaching us to think of groſſe ſinfull acts, as of things that ſhould not be named, Eph. 5. 3. 12. much leſſe done.

V. 11. For this is an heinous crime; yea it is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges.]

He ſets out one cauſe in this verſe, that kept him from adultery. He was loath to come to publick ſhame. And he conſidered that this was a grievous ſinne, fit to be openly puniſhed by the civill Magiſtrate.

For this is] Or, For this were. It would have been a foul fault in me, if I ſhould have done it.

an heinous crime] The word ſignifies a plotted ſin, ſuch an one as naturall corruption doth not ordinarily ſuggeſt, but men muſt beat their wits to invent, and execute it. And ſuch ſins carry much miſchief with them. It is uſed in Scripture to expreſſe horrible ſins, as inceſt, Levit. 18. 17. & 20. 14. Proſtitution of ones children to whoredome, Levit. 19. 29. Killing of the Levites Concubine by filthineſſe, Judg. 20. 6.

yea it is an iniquity] See on Chap. 7. 21.

to be puniſhed by the Judges] To wit, to take notice of, and puniſh; for adultery is puniſhed with ſhame among the heathen, and with death by Gods Law, Gen. 38. 24. Lev. 20. 10. Deut. 22. 22. This word is tranſlated Judge, Exod. 21. 22. Some ſins there are, that mens lawes take no notice of, but adultery is a ſin, that wrongs husbands ſo much, and the publick that it deſerves puniſhment of men.

V. 12. For it is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction, and would root out all mine increaſe] Magiſtrates are oftentimes very favourable in matters of adultery, but when they faile, God will by his ſecret Judgement like fire conſume adulterers, and all they have.

For it is a fire] Or, For it would be a fire. As the end of the verſe is tranſlated, I forbare adultery, for I knew, if men did not puniſh me, God would deſtroy me for it. Here may be ſome alluſion towards burning luſts, Rom. 1. 27. Or toward the deſtruction of Sodom for their burning luſts; Gen. 1. 19. Or to the firſt puniſhment of whoredome, Gen. 38. 24. Or to that lake of fire, into which all adulterers ſhall be caſt at laſt, Rev. 21. 8. However Gods wrath againſt adulterers is compared to devouring fire, which burns men, cattell, houſes, corn, trees, and leaves the adulterer nothing, Prov. 6. 27. See on chap. 15. 34. & 20. 26.

that conſumeth] That devoureth all he hath, as a man doth his meat. See on chap. 21. 25. upon the word, Eat.

to deſtruction] To the deſtruction of the adulterer in this world, by ſome great judgement. This agrees beſt with the words following, yet ſome interpret it of Hell.

and would root out] See on verſe 8.

all mine increaſe] All my corn, and fruits.

V. 13. If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my Man-ſervant, or of my Maid-ſervant, when they contended with me]

He proceeds to ſhew, that as he dealt faithfully with others abroad, ſo he did not like ungodly Maſters, domineer over his poor ſervants at home; but laying aſide the perſon and ſtate of a Maſter for a time, he heard all their complaints with patience, and did them right. If I did deſpiſe; or if I had deſpiſed. And ſo it may well be knit to the verſe following, what then ſhall I do, &c. Whereas others make it an oath, with the imprecation underſtood, as Chap. 1. 11. If I have oppreſſed my ſervants, let God plague me for it. The word deſpiſe, ſignifies an utter abhorring a perſon, or thing, ſo that one would not come near it, as Chap. 19. 18. But Job here by a Meioſis intends, that he was ſo farre from abhorring them, that he heard them favourably, and did them right.

The cauſe] Heb. the judgement. See on chap. 22. 4. of my Man ſervant] Of any man-ſervant of mine. It is commonly tranſlated ſervant, but here man-ſervant, becauſe of the oppoſition to the maid-ſervants in the following words.

or of my Maid-ſervant] Heb. And. But put for or, as Exod. 21. 15. 17. Job was ſo farre from deſpiſing both, that he would deſpiſe neither, no not them of the weaker ſex, which were leaſt able to right themſelves.

when they contended with me.] Some underſtand this of ſuits between him and his ſervants before other Judges. Job durſt referre his cauſe between him and his ſervants to any man. But it is not likely that Job being ſo godly and juſt would not, or could not ſatisfie his ſervants himſelf. Others underſtand it of contentions between ſervant and ſervant brought before him to judge. But it is moſt likely to be meant of complaints from diſcontented ſervants, as if he did not order things aright in his family, which complaints he heard with patience, which many maſters would not, and ſtop their mouthes with juſt anſwers, which many other maſters could not. See on Chap. 13. 3. 6. & 23. 6.

V. 14. What then ſhall I do, when God riſeth up? And when he viſiteth what ſhall I anſwer him?] Leſt any man ſhould attribute Jobs kind dealing with his ſervants to humane affection, and the facility of his nature, and not to piety, he mentions two excellent motives that ſtirred him up to be ſo courteous to his ſervants: The one from Gods Judgement in this verſe, wherein there is no reſpect of perſons: And ſervants having the ſame common maſter, may be heard before God as well as maſters. Col. 4. 1. The other in the next verſe from the common condition of birth both in maſters and ſervants, verſe 15. He intimates in this verſe that the feare of God did keep him from abuſing his authority to the injury of the meaneſt ſervant.

What then ſhall I do?] Or, what then ſhould I do? To wit, if I had been guilty in this kind, I ſhould not then have known which way to turn my ſelf, when GOD ſhould call me to account. It is likely this was not Jobs thought now only, when he ſpake theſe words, but was in his heart long before, and kept him from oppreſſing his ſervants. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 9. upon the word, bring forth.

riſeth up] When God being as it were awaked with the complaints of my ſervants againſt me, ſhall riſe up as it were, that is, ſet himſelf to revenge the injuries done to my ſervants. Pſal. 68. 1. Zech. 2. 13. Others underſtand it of the day of Judgement. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 12.

and when he riſeth] When he ſhall enquire into my carriage towards my ſervants, See on Chap. 5. 24. 7. 18.

what ſhall I anſwer him?] I ſhall be no way able to defend my ſelf. My guilt would ſtop my mouth. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 15. Did not he that made me in the wombe, make him? and did not one faſhion us in the wombe?] I durſt not oppreſſe my ſervant, becauſe though our outward condition in the world differ, yet I conſidered, that he by nature was as good as I, being made in a womans wombe of the like ſubſtance of ſoul and body, wrought in the ſame manner, and by the ſame God.

Did not he] God, mentioned verſe 14.

in the womb] For the word ſee on chap. 24. 20. Some read the end of the verſe thus; Did he not faſhion us in one wombe? To which interpretation it is hard to give a good ſenſe, and therefore the former is better.

V. 16. If I have withheld the poor from their deſire, or have cauſed the eyes of the widdow to faile] From hence to verſe 21. is ſet out his ſingular care to relieve the poor. 1. In not fruſtrating their deſires in this verſe. 2. In feeding them, verſe 17, 18. 3. In cloathing them, verſe 19, 20. The ſumme of this verſe is, That he had not diſappointed the needy of their deſire, nor ſuffered the poor widdows to look for ſomewhat at his hand, even till their eyes aked, and yet go without it.

If I have withheld] If I have denied them thoſe things which in their need they did deſire of me. For the word ſee on chap. 22. 7. and on chap. 20. 13. on the word, Keep.

the poor] See on Chap. 5. 16.

from their deſire] From the thing deſired by them. So Faith is put for the doctrine believed, Jude verſ. 3. and hope for the thing hoped for. Col. 1. 5. Now the thing the poor deſire is, how to be relieved by the counſell, wealth, power, and patronage of rich and great men. Job did not object enmitie, or multitude, or importunitie, or ungratefulneſſe of the poor, but readilie condeſcended to their requeſts. He did not deny to ſatisfie their deſire in thoſe things, that need made them to crave. For the word ſee on Chap. 22. 3.

or have cauſed the eyes of the widdow to faile] If I have made them to wait long, and conſume their eyes in expectation of ſome good from me in vain. Or, till they were weary with looking, and then let them go without it. Conſuming of the eyes, in Scripture language ſignifies earneſt expectation of a thing with eyes fixed on him, that ſhould grant, till one be quite out of hope. Pſal. 69. 3. & 119. 82. 123. Jer. 14. 6. Lam. 4. 17. Yet there may be a Meioſis. He was ſo farre from fruſtrating their deſires, that he ſoon relieved them, when he was once acquainted with their wants. So Pſal. 51. 17. Not deſpiſing, is highly eſteeming. For cauſing to faile, ſee on Job 9. 22. Where it is tranſlated, Deſtroying. For eyes, ſee on Chap. 15. 15. on the word, Sight. For the widdow, ſee on Chap. 22. 9. God often commends widdows to our charitable conſideration, becauſe being deſtitute of husbands they are expoſed to many injuries, and if any thing amiſſe befall them, they beare it more heavily then others, bewailing their condition, and the loſſe of their husbands, under whom they lived ſafely before. Every light wrong puts them in minde of their former comfort, and renewes their griefe. Job therefore was extraordinary carefull to comfort and relieve ſuch, when he knew their griefes and wants.

V. 17. Or have eaten my morſell my ſelf alone, and the Fatherleſſe hath not eaten thereof.] In this verſe he ſets out his charity in feeding the poor, negatively: In the next affirmatively. The ſumme of this verſe is, that he had not according to the manner of covetous and churliſh perſons eaten his meat alone without giving part thereof to the hungry orphans.

Or] See on verſe 13.

have eaten] See on Chap. 21. 25.

my ſelf alone] Without giving part to the poor.

and the fatherleſſe] See on Chap. 22. 9.

hath not eaten thereof] See on Chap. 21. 25.

V. 18. (For from my youth he was brought up with me as with a Father, and I have guided her from my mothers wombe)] In this verſe he proves what he had ſaid in the former words, that the fatherleſſe and the widdow fared the better for him, and with him. For hee was ſo tender of them, that he fed them at his table, and guided them in their affaires as if they had been his own children.

For] See on Chap. 19. 25.

and I have guided] Helped with counſell, and all things needfull, as guides direct in the right way.

her] The widdow, ſpoken of verſe 16. Others underſtand it of ſhee-orphans, which are for the moſt part more helpleſſe then boyes.

from my mothers wombe] An hyberbolical expreſſion, varying from the former in the beginning of the verſe, intimating, that Job had ſuch an in-bred deſire of doing good to the poor, that it ſhewed it ſelf betimes, as if it had come into the world with him, and waited onely for a fitting time to expreſſe it ſelf in action. For wombe ſee on Chapter 15. 2. For Mother, ſee on Chapter 17. 14.

V. 19. If I have ſeen any periſh for want of clothing, or any poor without covering] In this verſe, and the next is ſet out Jobs care of clothing the poor, who was ready upon the very ſight of their nakedneſſe to furniſh them with apparell.

If I have ſeen] See on Chapter 19. 27. upon the word, Behold.

any periſh] Any one ready to dye for cold and nakedneſſe, whom I did not readily relieve. See on Chapter 4. 7. & 29. 13.

for want of clothing] Heb. Becauſe he had no clothing. Was deſtitute of apparell, See on Chap. 24. 7. 10.

or any poore] See on Chap. 24. 4.

without covering] Without apparell to hide his nakedneſſe, and ſhelter him from the ſhowers of heaven. See on Chapter 24. 7. Some read it, and have not given clothing to the poore, Though he had none before, yet I beſtowed it on him.

V. 20. If his loynes have not bleſſed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my ſheep] Job did not ſtand and look on, and pity them only, but out of his own ſtore provided warm apparell for them, as themſelves have thankfully acknowledged.

If his loynes have not bleſſed me] Some take it to be an attribution of ſpeech to ſpeechleſſe things, intimating, what his loynes ſhould have done, if they could have ſpoken. Others, for a verball acknowledgement of the poore, who thanked him becauſe their loines were clothed, and warmed by him. Others, for a ſtrong and hearty prayer to God to requite Jobs kindneſſe; for a great part of mans mans ſtrength is in his loynes; as the ſtrength of Behemoth is, chap. 40. 16. For Bleſſing, ſee Deut. 24. 13. 2 Sam. 8. 10.

and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my ſheep] This expreſſeth the cauſe why the poor bleſſed Job. They felt cold till he clothed them, now they joy that they are freed from it. Iſa. 44. 16. The fleece is put for woollen garments made of the fleece of Jobs ſheep, which kept the poor warm.

V. 21. If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſſe, when I ſaw my help in the gate.] Here Job cleares himſelf from wronging Orphans and ſuch as were helpleſſe, which yet he might have done without danger or blame, having by reaſon of his authority and reſpect from others, riches, power, and friends, all men ready to aſſiſt him, and no man daring to oppoſe or cenſure him.

If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſſe] To kill him, or ſtrike him, or ſet my ſelf againſt him in judgement, to bring him to ſome unjuſt loſſe, or undeſerved puniſhment, as the words following ſeem to import, Iſa. 10. 32. Zech. 2. 9. 1 Kings 13. 4. Others underſtand it of threatning men, or denying them juſtice when they came to demand it. For hand, ſee on chap. 15. 23. For fatherleſſe, ſee on chap. 22. 9.

when I ſaw my help in the gate] When I knew I had enough in the Publick place of Judicature, which was exerciſed in the gates, Ruth 4. 1. to aſſiſt me in unjuſtly ruining others. For See look on Chap. 19. 27. on the word, Behold.

V. 22. Then let mine arme fall from my ſhoulder blade, and mine armes be broken from the bone.] This imprecation may well be referred to all the former paſſages, from the the 13. verſe, but it anſwers very proportionably to the laſt in the former verſe, He wiſheth a puniſhment anſwerable to the ſin mentioned, that if his arm have lifted up his hand to do violence to the poor, it may never more be uſefull to him. See the like, Pſal. 137. 5, 6. Where forgetting Jeruſalem, is to be puniſhed with forgetting skill in Muſick, and not mentioning of her, with never ſpeaking more. Job by this imprecation ſeeks to clear himſelf from thoſe falſe imputations of cruelty to the poor, which Eliphaz had faſtened on him, Chap. 22. 6, 7.

Then let mine arme] Or rather, my ſhoulder, as it is tranſlated 1 Chron. 15. 15.

fall from my ſhoulder blade] Let the fleſh of my ſhoulder rot, and fall off from the ſhoulder bone. This anſwers well to what follows in this verſe.

and mine arme] See on chap. 22. 8.

be broken] From the word שבר comes our Engliſh word breaking to ſhivers.

from the bone] Or, from the channell-bone. The word קנה ſignifies, 1. A Reed. 2 Kings 18. 21. 2. A ſweet ſpice called Calamus. Exod. 30. 23. 3 A ſpeare, which is long like a reed. Pſal. 68. 30. 4. A ſtalk of corn, for the ſame reaſon, Gen. 41. 5. 5. A long bone in the arme for length ſomewhat like a reed reaching from the ſhoulder to the elbow, or rather to the hand, for then it is longer, and more like a reed, and hath a joynt in the way, as canes have. And it doth more fully ſet out Jobs meaning here, who wiſhes the whole ſhoulder and arm to rot, if he had been cruell to the poor. 6. An artificiall or meaſuring reed, which had a certain length and breadth. Ezek. 40. 5, 6. 7. A Balance, the beame whereof is long and narrow like a reed. Iſa. 46. 6. 8. A branch of a Candleſtick, for the ſame reaſon. Exod. 25. 32. Here it is taken in the fift ſence, for the bone in the arme, and the ſence is as before, let the fleſh of my arme rot, and fall from the bone. A grievous thing to ſee, for a man to have a ſhoulder bone, and the bones of his arme whole without any fleſh on them.

V. 23. For deſtruction from God was a terrour to me, and by reaſon of his highneſſe I could not endure.] Two reaſons are ſet down why Job did abſtain from hurting the poor and fatherleſſe. The one was a feare of puniſhment from God: The other was an awfull reverence of Gods Majeſty.

For] See on chap. 19. 25.

deſtruction] I was afraid, that God would ſend ſuch a judgement upon me, as I mentioned in the former verſe, renting my fleſh from my bones, which would prove my deſtruction. Iſa. 13. 6. Joel 1. 15. For the word ſee on chap. 18. 12.

from God] Such an heavie deſtruction as God uſeth to ſend on oppreſſours. For the word ſee on Chap. 8. 3. 5.

was a terrour to me] Though I needed not to fear men, who could have many to aſſiſt me, if I had a mind to wrong others, verſe 21. Yet I was always afraid of Gods judgements. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 21, on the word, Dreadfull.

and by reaſon of his highneſſe] By reaſon of his great Majeſty, Others read it, by reaſon of his weight; or, the weight of it, That is, the weight of Gods anger, or of the deſtruction mentioned before. The reaſon of the different tranſlation is, becauſe the verb from whence this word comes, ſignifies both to lift up, and to bear a burden. See on chap. 21. 33. on the word, ſuffer.

I could not endure] Heb. I could not. If God ſhould ſet upon me in an hoſtile way, for forſaking or oppreſſing thoſe that were in miſery, I could not have endured the puniſhment he might juſtly have inflicted upon me. Others read it, I could not ſtand. I were not able to endure his preſence, nor uphold my own ſafety. Others thus, I could not prevaile. He would be too hard for me and utterly overthrow me.

V. 24. If I have made gold my hope, or have ſaid to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence.] In this verſe, and the next, Job frees himſelfe from covetouſneſſe, and ſhewes how innocent he was of it, by removing from him two effects of it. 1. Confidence in riches, in this verſe. And 2. Placing his joy and delight in them, in the next verſe.

If I made gold my hope] If I have not truſted in God alone, but have made an Idoll of my riches, and truſted in them. So covetouſneſs is called Idolatry, Col. 3. 5. Gold the chiefeſt of mettalls, and coin, is put here for all riches.

or have ſaid] See on Chap. 16. 1. to the fine gold] See on Chap. 28. 16.

Thou art my confidence] See on Chap. 8. 13, 14. & 11. 20.

V. 25. If I rejoyced, becauſe my wealth was great, and becauſe mine hand had gotten much] If I have after the manner of thoſe, who wholly bend their minds to heap up riches, leaped for joy to ſee my ſubſtance increaſed, and have thought them to have been gotten both by mine own induſtry, and for my ſelf alone.

If I rejoyced] In a carnall way, ſetting all my contentment in temporall riches, and uſing them only for my own delight and pleaſure, Luke 12. 19. & 16. 19. Jam. 5. 5.

becauſe my wealth was great] Becauſe I grew very rich. For wealth ſee on Chap. 15. 29. For great ſee on Chap. 22. 5.

and becauſe mine hand had gotten much] This is the language of ungodly men, attributing their wealth to their own induſtry, not to Gods bleſſing, as Job doth, Chap. 1. 21. Job was not overjoyed becauſe he had gotten much wealth by his labour, or otherwiſe, Deut. 8. 17, 18. Iſa. 10. 10. For Hand ſee on Chap. 15. 23. Gotten. Heb. found. For finde ſee on Chap. 17. 10. Much. Rather very much, for the word ſignifies more then great. See on Chap. 8. 2. upon the word, Strong.

V. 26. If I beheld the Sunne when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſſe.] In this verſe, and thoſe two that follow, the holy man expreſſeth his deteſtation of idolatry. And that 1. by avoiding the occaſion of it, in this verſe. 2. The cauſes and ſignes of it, in the next. 3. He ſets down the reaſon of his carefull avoiding of it, verſe 28. Some underſtand it of covetouſneſſe, that Job was carefull not to be corrupted by the Sun-ſhine of proſperity, or deceitfulneſſe of riches: But the more received interpretation is the former.

If I beheld] If I ſtood to gaze upon it, as men do attentively look upon things in which they do delight. For the word, ſee on Chapter 19. 27.

the Sun] Heb. the Light. Which though it may be attributed to any ſtarre, yet moſt properly to the Sun, the Fountain of Light, which gives light to the ſtarres. And the rather is it ſo to be underſtood, becauſe it is ſet before, and oppoſed to the Moon; and it is alſo called a great Light, Pſal. 136. 7, And the greater Light, Gen. 1. 16. For the word ſee on Chap. 17. 12.

when it ſhined] When it appeared in his full glory, and was moſt like to take up my thoughts.

or the Moon] See on Chap. 25. 5. walking] Moving and keeping on her conſtant courſe. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth.

in brightneſſe] Heb. Bright, or Precious. For light is a precious thing; and ſo is the Moon in our account, when it ſhines bright, and when it is at the full, and moſt adorned with light from the Sun, then She walkes in her ſtate and glory: And then ſhe looks moſt beautifull, like ſhining gold or ſilver. For the word ſee on Chap. 28. 10. And the ſame word is applyed to the light, Zech. 14. 6. Piſcator joyns this verſe with the next thus; If when I beheld the Sun when is ſhined, or the Moon when it went clear, my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, ſo that my hand hath kiſſed my mouth. It is likely he did it, becauſe he could ſee no fault in looking upon the brightneſſe of the Sun and Moon. No more is there any fault in rejoycing when wealth increaſeth, verſe 25. But to rejoyce in it, ſo as wicked men do, who place their greateſt happineſſe in it, is a great fault. So here to look upon the Sun and Moon, as having a divine power in them, as the heathen did, is queſtionleſſe a great ſin. This is thought to be the ancienteſt Idolatry in the World. The Heathen not knowing God, and ſeeing ſo great light, comfort, influence, on theſe lower bodies, in the Sun and Moon, did gaze upon them as upon Gods, and worſhip them accordingly, as if there were no higher light. But Job kept himſelf clear from this Idolatry, Deut. 17. 3. Jer. 43. 13. 2 King. 21. 3. & 23. 4, 5. 11. Ezek. 8. 16.

V. 27. And my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand] If I have been deceived ſo much as privily in my heart, much leſſe openly conſented unto Idolaters, and after the manner of their ſuperſtitious cuſtome, by moving, and putting my hand to my mouth, yielded any worſhip unto thoſe heavenly bodies.

And] Or, Or, As this particle is uſed, Exod. 21. 15, 17.

my heart] See on Chap. 15. 12.

hath been enticed] If by the ſight of the great beauty and brightneſſe of them I have been drawne to attribute a divine power to them in my heart. For the word ſee on verſe 9. on the word, Deceived.

ſecretly] Heb. in ſecret. If I have thought ſo in my ſoul, though not expreſſed it by word or geſture, ſo as any man might take notice of it. For the word ſee on Chap. 22. 14. upon the word, Covering: And on Chap. 24. 15. on the word, Diſguiſeth.

or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand] As I have not committed this Idolatry inwardly by cogitation, ſo neither outwardly by adoration. Whereof putting the hand to the mouth ſeems to be a ſign in thoſe dayes. So kiſſing the Sonne, Pſal. 2. 12, is a ſigne of giving divine honour to him. Kiſſing the Calves was the like, Hoſ. 13. 2. So alſo kiſſing Baal, 1 King. 19. 18. Becauſe they could not reach the Sunne and Moon, the heathen uſed, when they ſaw them ſhine bright, and as it were ſhew themſelves in their glory, to lift up their hands to them, and then put them to their mouthes, by this ſigne adoring them as Gods. If the things they worſhipped were nigh them, they kiſſed them. If out of reach, they put their hands to their mouthes, as acknowleding they had their breath and life from them. In the Hebrew it is, if my hand hath kiſſed my mouth. That is, if I put my hand to my mouth. For Hand ſee on Chap. 15. 23. For mouth ſee on Chap 15. 5.

V. 28. This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge, for I ſhould have denied the God that is above.] Moſt men think idolatry to be a light ſin, eſpecially growing, and being confirmed by length of time, multitude of Idolaters, ſhew of profit, and other ſpecious reaſons. But Job counted this a moſt heinous ſin, as by which he ſhould have denied God, and deſerved moſt horrible and fearfull puniſhments.

This] This kind of Idolatry.

alſo] As well as fornication, adultery, cruelty to the poor, mentioned before. For the word ſee Chap. 16. 4.

were an iniquity] See on Chap. 7. 21.

to be puniſhed by the Judge] See on verſe 11.

for I ſhould have denied] By giving divine honour to the Sun and Moon, I ſhould have denied it to belong unto God.

the God] See on Chap. 8. 3. 5.

that is above] That is above the Earth, and is in Heaven. Or rather, that is above the Sun and Moon, and gives light to them, and life or vigour to all the creatures.

V. 29. If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or lift up my ſelf, when evill found him.] In this verſe, and the two next, he cleares himſelf from malice and deſire of revenge. Either entertained within, in this verſe; or ſhewed forth in words, verſe 30. though he had grievous provocations, verſe 31.

If I rejoyced] If I took contentment at the ruine of mine adverſary, and fed my thoughts with his fall. Some men that are not ſo bad as to work miſchief to their enemies, yet entertain thoughts of joy when they hear they are ruined by others. Job did not ſo much, Prov. 24. 17, 18.

at the deſtruction of him that hated me] At the overthrow of mine enemy.

or lift up my ſelf] Some take it to be the ſame with the former. I have not lifted up my ſpirit to joy. But it is rather a further degree of malice: I have not in the pride of my ſpirit inſulted over my ruined enemy. Broughton renders it, If I have beſtirred me. And that elegantly, and ſutably to the Originall. I would not ſuffer my cholar to awake upon occaſion of his ruine to inſult over him.

when evill found him] When he fell into trouble and calamity. An uſuall phraſe in Scripture. So the ſame word ſhould be tranſlated, Deut. 31. 17. Pſal. 116. 3. And it may be underſtood barely of lighting upon him, as Deut. 19. 5. Or intimates a kind of purſuit of ſin to bring wicked men to puniſhment, as Chap. 3. 22. Like evills hunting the wicked man to deſtruction, Pſal. 140. 11. By evill is meant evill not of ſin, but of puniſhment, as Amos 3. 6. Find ſee on Chap. 17. 10.

V. 30. Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin by wiſhing a curſe to his ſoule.] Much leſſe would I wiſh his ruine, or deſtruction my ſelf, who durſt not rejoyce in it when it was wrought by others without my procuring.

Neither have I ſuffered] The word in the Originall is given, that is, given way to, or ſuffered. So it is often uſed, as Chap. 9. 18. Pſal. 16. 10. Gen. 20. 6. His naturall corruption might preſſe him to pray againſt his enemy, but it could not prevaile with him. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 4. upon the word, Bring.

my mouth] I have not ſpoken ſinfull words. Sometimes the mouth is put for the words, as Chap. 15. 4. Sometimes the tongue, Pſal. 72. 2. Sometimes the palat, as it is here in the Originall: For all theſe are inſtruments of ſpeaking.

to ſin] See on Chap. 5. 24.

by wiſhing a curſe to his ſoule] Heb. by asking his life by a curſe. That is, by praying God to lay his curſe upon him, which might take away his life. For ſoule ſee on Chap. 14. 22.

V. 31. If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not, O that we had of his fleſh! we cannot be ſatisfied] Some underſtand this verſe of the deſire of Jobs ſervants to eat of the fleſh of Jobs cattell ſtill, and live alwayes with him who provided ſo plentifully for them. But this is nothing to the coherence. Others underſtand it of a deſire of revenge in Jobs ſervants, who, becauſe he puts them to ſo much trouble in entertaining ſtrangers, and gave their meat to them, and made them ſtay for more, wiſhed they might eat Jobs own fleſh, and ſo be rid of that tedious ſervice. But there is no likelihood, that Job, who was ſo kind to ſtrangers, was ſo unkind to his own ſervants. But the beſt way is to referre the word, His, to Jobs enemy mentioned verſe 29, 30. As if Job had ſaid, yet I proteſt, that I wanted not ſetters on even among my own houſhold-ſervants, who ſtill perſwaded me to requite thoſe injuries which I received, with moſt bitter revenge: nay, their minds were ſo incenſed, that they cryed out, that they ſhould never be ſatisfied on them, no not though they had eaten them up quick. Thus Davids men ſtirre him to revenge againſt Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 4. So doth Abiſhai, 1 Sam.26.8. 2 Sam.16. 9. This Interpretation ſuits well with the coherence, and ſets off Jobs patience the more, that would not be provoked to be revenged on his adverſary, no not by them of his own houſhold.

If the men] Heb. mortals. See on Chap. 19.19.

of my tabernacle] Servants, men and women, that dwelt with me, for then they dwelt in Tabernacles, as now in houſes. Or if Job and other great men had houſes (for elſe it is not likely that the fall of a Tent could kill Jobs children, Chap.1. 19. And it ſeems he had a Princely houſe, Chap, 21. 28,) They were ſtill called Tabernacles, becauſe men firſt dwelt in ſuch before they had art to build houſes, and the meaner ſort (very likely) dwelt in ſuch at that time. For the word, Tabernacle, ſee on Chap. 5. 24. & 11. 14.

ſaid not] See on Chap. 16.1.

Oh that we had of his fleſh] For this kind of wiſhing ſee on Chap.6.8. & 11.5. For Fleſh, ſee on Chap. 14.22.

we cannot be ſatisfied] Without his death, or ſwallowing him quick. Pſal.123.4. Job 19. 22.

V. 32. The ſtranger did not lodge in the ſtreet, but I opened my doors to the travailer] This verſe ſets out Jobs great hoſpitality, who kept open houſe for all paſſengers, and ſtood at his door to obſerve who paſſed by, to invite them to his houſe. There were not Innes then to entertain ſtrangers, as there are few now in the Eaſterne countries: And therefore ſtrangers muſt have layen out of doors, expoſed to winde and weather, if ſome good men did not entertain them. This Job uſed to do like Abraham, Gen. 18. Lot, Gen. 19. and the good old man of Gibeah, Judg.19.19,20. This duty is commended, Rom.12.13. Heb.13. 2. 1 Pet.4.9.

The ſtranger] He that dwelt not there but travailed from home and was deſtitute of lodging and other neceſſaries.

did not lodge] Did not abide without in the night; for I entertained him in my own houſe; as followes in this verſe.

in the ſtreet] Out of doores, which would have been very troubleſome, Gen.19. 2, 3. For the word ſee on Chap. 18. 17.

but I opened my doors] I cauſed them to ſtand open, that ſtrangers might come if they pleaſed, or I might the better ſee them to invite them. For opening, ſee on Chap. 29. 19. upon the word, Spread out.

to the travailer] Ready for him to enter in at, without knocking or opening. So ready was Job to entertain ſtrangers. Or to the way. The door of his houſe was made, and ſet open toward the high way, where moſt travailers come.

V. 33. If I covered my tranſgreſſion as Adam; by hiding mine iniquity in my boſome] Leſt his friends ſhould object, you have highly commended your ſelf for many vertues, but have you no faults? Yes, ſaith Job, but I have not, as men uſually do, laboured to conceal them, but freely acknowledged them to God, and heartily craved pardon for them.

If I covered] Or, have I covered?] Sure I have not. See on verſ. 5. I have not covered my ſinne, by concealing, denying, excuſing, extenuating, or any other way, but acknowledged it with ſorrow of heart.

my tranſgreſſion] See on Chap. 7. 21.

as Adam] Who did what he could to hide his ſinne from God. Gen. 3. 7, 8, 12. Others read it, after the manner of men. For men in their naturall eſtate do what they can to hide their ſins, Hoſ 6.7. The reaſon of the difference is, becauſe in the Hebrew tongue Adam is the proper name of the firſt man and is alſo a common name to all men.

by hiding] Heb. to hide: For things are therefore covered, that they may be hidden, and not ſeen.

mine iniquity] See on Chap. 7. 21.

in my boſome] Kept it cloſe, as things hidden in the boſome: Broughton reads it of Self-love. Piſcator, becauſe I loved it. As if Job ſhould aſſigne two cauſes, that might have moved him to conceal his ſinne, if he had not feared God. 1. The uſual cuſtome of naturall men. 2. Love of ſinne.

V. 34. Did I feare a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrifie me, that I kept ſilence, and went out of the door?] Some knit this verſe to the former, as if Job had ſaid, I did acknowledge my fault, when I did wrong, and did not conceale it for feare the multitude ſhould riſe up againſt me, and the baſeſt perſons ſhould deride me. This could not make me keep ſilence, nor hide my head for ſhame. Others read it thus, Though I could have terrified a great multitude, yet the moſt contemptible of the family terrified me, ſo that I kept ſilence and went out of door. And their meaning is, Though in my proſperity I could by my great power have kept many in awe, yet I durſt not wrong the meaneſt perſon in any family; nor would not ſpeak unjuſtly againſt any man, nor go out of door to hurt him.

Did I fear?] Or, Though I could have terrified. As before. Or, broken, as it is tranſlated Chap. 3. 25.

a great multitude] A great company of men, that ſhould have ſet themſelves againſt me. For Great, ſee on Chap. 22. 5.

or did the contempt of families] The baſeſt perſon that is moſt contemned in any family. For Contempt ſee on Chap. 12. 5. 21. Or yet did the contempt of families. As before.

terrifie me] Though there were nothing in them to make me afraid to uſe my power to oppreſſe them, yet becauſe I feared God, I durſt not do it.

that I kept ſilence] I durſt not ſpeak againſt them to wrong them.

and went not out of the door] I would not ſet one foot over the threſhold to do the meaneſt man wrong. For went out, ſee on Chap. 20. 25. on cometh out.

V. 35. O that one would hear me! behold my deſire is, that the Almighty would anſwer me, and that mine adverſary had written a book] Job having propounded ſo many teſtimonies of his innocency with imprecation of ſo many evills to himſelf, if he had not ſpoken truth, now in this verſe deſires a faire triall: and in the two next verſes ſhewes how he would carry himſelf in it. In this verſe he deſires 1. an equall Judge. Secondly that God would give a reaſon, why he dealt ſo harſhly with him. 3. that any one of his friends who had pleaded vehemently againſt him, would write down all their charge. And doubts not, but he ſhould come off well. verſe 36, 37.

O that one would hear me.] O that any indifferent perſon had the hearing of the cauſe between God and me, and my friends and me. Others underſtand it of God, and read it, O that he would hear me.] That is, the Almighty; as follows. So the Antecedent is gathered out of the words following, chap. 16. 9. & 18. 13. For ſuch manner of wiſhing ſee on chapter 6. 8. & 11. 5. For Heare ſee on chapter 13. 17.

my deſire is] I am ſo aſſured of clearing my ſelf, that I deſire nothing more, then to come to triall, whereof guilty men are afraid; others read it, my ſigne is] Meaning the mark or ſcope, that I aime at, which comes all to one.

that the Amighty] See on chap.8.3. 5. would anſwer me] He meaneth not, that God would anſwer his prayers, but anſwer him in his cauſe, as chap. 9. 32. & 13. 22, 23. For the word, ſee on chapter 16. 1.

and that mine adverſary] Heb. the man of my contention. That is, He that contends with me, be it one of my friends here, or any other. For man, ſee on chap. 1. 1. For contention, ſee on chap. 29. 16. Had written a book] Had ſet down his charge againſt me in writing, as the cuſtome was then, and is ſtill in law ſuits. See on chapter 19. 23.

V. 36. Surely I would take it on my ſhoulder, and bind it as a crown to me] Here he ſhewes how he would carry himſelf in the judgment. 1. He would pick matter of commendation out of his enemies accuſation by confuting his falſhoods, as being ſure he could not object any groſſe wickedneſſe truly againſt him. And that he doth in this verſe. 2. That he might be ſure to be cleared he would lay open all the courſe of his life before the Judge, even ſuch paſſages, as his adverſary knew not. And that he doth in verſe 37.

Surely I would] Heb. If I did not, as in many verſes before.

take it] or Beare it. See on Chapter 21. 3. upon the word ſuffer.

upon my ſhoulder] Not as a burthen, but as an honour, as a ſtandard-bearer carrieth an enſigne that all men ſee it. *Iſa.*5.26. & 13.2.

and bind it as a crowne to me] Account it as a great honour, as a crown is to a King, becauſe I ſhall have occaſion thereby fully to clear my ſelf. The word is crownes. That is, a glorious crown with many golden circles and jewels in it. For crown ſee on Chapter 19. 9.

V. 37. I would declare unto him the number of my ſteps, as a prince would I go near unto him.] That mine enemy may know, that I am not aſhamed to ſhew my face in ſuch a triall, I am ready to give an account of all my life paſt. Neither will I ſtay, till I am cited thither by my adverſary, but will come boldly of my own accord. A great teſtimony of innocency in Job to come uncalled, when guilty perſons warned are loth to appear.

I would declare] I would ſet before him, make a free and a full confeſſion. See on chap. 15. 18. upon the word, Told.

unto him] To mine adverſary. I would help him make up his book, and tell him many ſecret paſſages of my life, which he knowes not. Or, To the judge when my adverſary can ſay no more againſt me, I will recite all the courſe of my life before the Judge to ſee what he can pick againſt me, either way argues great confidence of innocency.

the number of my ſteps] All my words and deeds one by one, as far as I can remember, to ſee, at which he can take advantage.

as a Prince] I would come before him with an heroical ſpirit, and an undaunted courage, as a Prince that comes to judge rather then to be judged. An argument that he was not guilty of any wicked way. See on chap. 29. 10. on the word, Nobles.

would I go near unto him] I would not keep aloofe off from the judgement ſeat, as one guilty, but come near to it in confidence as expecting abſolution.

V. 38. If my land cry againſt me, or that the furrows likewiſe thereof complain] Job having heretofore cleared himſelf from many faults objected by his friends, now proceeds to purge himſelf of thoſe faults that concern his own poſſeſſions, and 1. Of unjuſt getting of his land, in this verſe. 2. Of unrighteous gain of it in the next verſe. 3. He addes a ſutable imprecation verſe 40. 4. The writer addes his teſtimony of the concluſion of Jobs words, verſe 40. alſo.

If my land] The land, which I now poſſeſs.

cry againſt me] An elegant attribution of a cry to a dead thing, to ſhew the ſinne to be ſo great, that dead things would complain of it, if they had tongues, though the men oppreſſed dare not. See the like Gen. 4. 10. Job 16. 18. The ſinne here condemned is taking away another mans land unjuſtly by fraud or force: and the land is brought in, as complaining, that it is by violence kept from the right owner, and crying to God for a juſt revenge on the uſurping poſſeſſour of it. See the like Hab. 2. 11,12. If the earth may complain of ſinne wrought upon it, much more of violence offered to it ſelfe in detaining it from the right owner.

or that the furrows thereof] That are made in it by the plow, chap. 39. 10. Pſal. 65. 10. Hoſ. 10. 4.

likewiſe] or Together with the reſt of the land.

complain] Heb. weep. If they complain, that an uſurper makes furrows in the ground, who hath no power over it, as Gods people do, Pſal. 129. 3. others interpret this verſe of detaining the labourers wages, and make the next an expoſition of it.

V. 39. If I have eaten the fruits thereof without money, or have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life.] Some underſtand this verſe as the former of taking away of the land, ſo all the fruits and benefits of it without ſatisfaction to the right owner. Others of depriving the labourers of their wages, ſo that they periſhed for want of food, while he went away with all the profit of the land without ſatisfying them for tilling it.

If I have eaten] See on chap. 21. 25.

the fruits thereof] Heb. the ſtrength thereof. That is ſuch fruits, as the naturall force of the earth put forth. Gen. 4. 12.

without money] Heb. without ſilver. For that was the ordinary coine. Gold was more rare even in Solomons time. 1 Kings 10. 21. Some underſtand it of denying the former owners the price of the ground. Others of denying the labourers their wages. For ſilver ſee on chap. 22. 25.

or have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life.] Heb. or have cauſed the ſoule of the owners thereof to expire, or breath out, or grieve. For all theſe the word ſignifies in the originall. If I have wronged the former owners, or preſent labourers in it, ſo as that for want of their due from me they have periſhed. Though the land was his, yet the labourers had a right to be paid for their works out of the fruits of it, and were as it were owners in part. Jer. 22. 13. Mal. 3. 5. Jam. 5. 4. For life ſee on chap. 14. 22. upon the word ſoule.

V. 40. Let thiſtles grow inſtead of wheat, and cockle inſtead of barley. The words of Job are ended.] He concludes with an imprecation, which may be applyed to many verſes before; but it is very ſuitable to the laſt. For what is more juſt then that he who by defrauding others expects great croppes of corne, ſhould reape thiſtles and cockle.

let thiſtles grow] Heb. come forth. For that word ſee on chap. 20. 25. He meaneth, in his own ground, elſe it had been no puniſhment to him at all.

inſtead of wheat] The worſt crop inſtead of the beſt kinde of corne.

and cockle] A ſtinking weed, as the originall of the word in the Hebrew intimates.

inſtead of barley] It hath its name in the originall from a verb that ſignifies to fright one, ſo as his haire ſtand an end for fear. So the ſpikes of the barly ſtand bolt upright.

the words of Job are ended] Here is an end of Jobs words ſpoken in conference with his friends. For he ſpake afterwards to God, though not much. chap. 40. 3. & 42. 1. And theſe words are fitly added by the writer, becauſe Job had largely ſpoken without interruption, and had ſaid all he had to ſay in his own defence, and ſeeing none of his friends replied here, he makes an end of the conference. For words ſee on chap. 19. 28. on the word, Matter. For Job ſee on chap. 1. 1.

CHAP. XXXII.

Verſe 1. SO theſe three men ceaſed to anſwer Job, becauſe he was righteous in his own eyes.] The diſputation between Job and his friends being now ended, the judgement of it followes. Firſt by Elihu in 6. chapters, and that in four ſeverall ſpeeches. The firſt in Chap. 32. and 33. The ſecond, in chap. 34. The third in chap. 35. The fourth in chap. 36, 37. Secondly by God, who doth more fully convince both Job, and his friends. In this chapter he turns his ſpeech to Jobs friends: in the next to Job himſelf. In this chapter is firſt an hiſtoricall tranſition from the former diſputation to Elihus, ſpeech. To verſe 6. Secondly Elihus, preface to Jobs friends, to make them attentive to his following oration. To the end of the chapter. In the former is laid down firſt the cauſe why Jobs friends left ſpeaking. verſe 1, 2. why Elihu did ſpeak. And that firſt his anger againſt Job, verſe 2. 2. Againſt his friends. And that firſt for condemning Job, whom they could not convince, verſe 3. For giving over ſpeaking before they had convinced him. verſe 4, 5. Elihu ſpake more uprightly, and wiſely in this cauſe, then Jobs three friends had done, which appears 1. In that he ſtopt Jobs mouth ſo that though he gave him liberty three or four times to ſpeak, yet he had nothing to ſay for himſelf. 2. In that God blames him not at all, as he doth Jobs other friends. For the words. So. Heb. And. But thus it is tranſlated alſo Chap. 2. 13.

theſe three men] Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, Job had ſtopped all their mouthes, ſo that they had no more to ſay againſt him. For the word men ſee on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

ceaſed] They were very hot, and diſputed eagerly before, as worldly men follow their buſineſſe in the week dayes: but now they were as quiet, as men are on a Sabbath. From this word the Sabbath hath his name in the originall. They would have no more to do with Job, but leave him to abound in his owne ſenſe, who would not be admoniſhed by his friends.

to anſwer] Heb. From anſwering. See on chap. 16. 1.

becauſe] They ſaw their arguments could doe no good on him, and deſpaired of making him ſee his ſinne, and therefore ceaſed: As they ſpake unfitly before, ſo they gave over now, before they had convinced Job of his evill opinion of Gods proceedings with him.

he was righteous in his own eyes] Although they conceived they had ſaid enough to prove him to be a wicked man, yet he ſtill thought himſelf to be in a good condition. They therefore having no further proof againſt his ſolemn proteſtations, leave him to himſelf; as a man deſperate. He ſeemed confident that his friends had not confuted him, and that God uſed him too ſeverely, as an enemy. For the phraſe ſee on chap. 18. 3.

V. 2. Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the ſonne of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred, of Ram: againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God] Elihus, anger was kindled, becauſe both Job and his friends had offended againſt the right order of diſputing in this weighty buſineſſe. For whereas Job ſhould have only defended his own integrity againſt his friends, he in paſſion flew out oftentimes to ſpeak unadviſedly of Gods proceeding with him, as if it were too harſh. And his friends condemned him for a wicked man becauſe of his extraordinary troubles, although they were not able to prove him to be ſo.

then was kindled the wrath] Anger is compared unto fire, which is blown up by outward diſpleaſing occaſions, as bellows. For wrath ſee on chap. 4. 9. & 9. 5. 13, & 14. 13.

of Elihu] The name ſignifies, My God is Jehovah, or My God is the ſame, Pſal. 102. 27. It intimates to us, that his parents, who gave him this name were worſhippers of the true God.

of Barachel] This name ſignifies one whom God hath bleſſed.

the Buzite] Coming from Buz. The name of ſome one of his predeceſſours, or an inhabitant of the City of Buz, which being joyned with Dedan and Tema. Jer. 25. 23. ſeems to be a city of Idumea.

of the kindred] Or, of the family. That is, of the poſterity of Ram in a direct line, for the ſcripture uſeth to mention mens parents in this caſe, not their kindred in a collaterall line, unleſſe they be famous, or ſomething be ſpoken that concerns them: neither of which is here.

of Ram] This cannot be that Ram, that came of Pharez. Ruth. 4. 19. for it is likely he was not ſo ancient as Job. Or if he were, he would not leave the Iſraelites to live among the Edomites. Nor that Aram mentioned, Gen. 22. 21. For then could not Elihu be a Buzite, but muſt needs come of Kemuel the brother of Buz. Nor is it likely to be Abraham, as the Chalde paraphraſe tranſlates it, who (they ſay, but without book) was firſt called Ram, high. Secondly Abram an high father. Thirdly Abraham a father of a great multitude. But it is likely to be the name of ſome great man well known in thoſe countries then, though not mentioned elſewhere in Scripture. And Elihus, pedigree is more fully ſet out, then Jobs or his three friends, partly to gain more full credit to the ſtory, but principally becauſe he was a young man not ſo well known, as Job and his friends, and therefore had need to get credit from his anceſtours.

rather then God] Elihu was not angry, that Job juſtified himſelf againſt his friends, but that he did it againſt God in maintaining his own innocency, too much complaining of Gods dealing too harſhly with him, and deſiring to plead with God, as if he did rather afflict him with his power, then in a courſe of juſtice. Job had not directly ſaid ſo much againſt God, but Elihu gathers it out of the former paſſages, See the like charge, Chapter 34. 5, 6.

V. 3 Alſo againſt his three friends was his wrath kindled, becauſe they had found no anſwer, and yet had condemned Job] Elihu's anger againſt Jobs friends ariſeth from this ground, that like wilfull men they did without reaſon condemn Job for an ungodly man, becauſe of his great afflictions, but could not prove any ſuch thing againſt him out of the whole courſe of his life.

and yet had condemned Job] Though they could not convince him, yet they did condemne him for a wicked man. So much the word ſignifies. See on chapter 9. 20. & 15. 6. For Job ſee on chap. 1. 1.

V. 4. Now Elihu had waited, till Job had ſpoken, becauſe they were elder then he] The reaſon why Elihu forbare to ſpeak ſo long is ſet down in this verſe, becauſe of his youth. The reaſon why he ſpeaks now, is ſet down in the next verſe becauſe his elders would ſpeak no more in the cauſe. So Elihu's modeſty is commended, who held his peace, as long as Job or any of his friends had any thing to ſay: yet ſpeaks at length, and that not out of any proud perſwaſion of his own learning and knowledge, but compelled to ſpeak by neceſſity.

had waited till Job had ſpoken] Heb. Had expected Job in words. Had kept ſilence, till Job had ſpoken, and ſome ſpace of time after, to ſee, if Job or his friends would ſpeak any more. Piſcator reads it, had with Job expected their word, Job had made an end, chap. 31. 40. and waited to ſee what his friends would reply. So did Elihu alſo. Broughton reads it thus, waited to ſpeak to Job. Seeing how ill his friends managed the cauſe he had a great deſire to ſpeak, but out of reverence to their years forbare, till they had quite done. For Job ſee on chapter 1. 1. For words ſee on chap. 19. 28. upon the word Matter.

becauſe they were elder then he] Heb. Becauſe they were elder for dayes then he. Both Job, and his three friends were ancienter then Elihu, and therefore he kept ſilence, as long as he had any hope that either of them would ſpeak. V. 5. When Elihu ſaw that there was no anſwer in the mouth of theſe three men, then his wrath was kindled] When he perceived that theſe ancient men had nothing more to anſwer Job, nor to defend God, but were as men deſtitute of any arguments to convince Job, he was greatly offended with them.

V. 6. And Elihu the ſonne of Barachel the Buzite anſwered, and ſaid, I am young, and ye are very old, wherefore I was afraid, and durſt not ſhew you mine opinion] Here begins Elihus preface to Jobs three friends which laſts to the end of the chapter. Wherein ye have 1 The entrance to verſe. 15. 2 the ſcope to verſe 17. 3 the further proceeding of it to the end of the chapter. In the firſt part note 1. mine opinion] What I think of the matter you have diſputed of with Job all this while: For he ſpeaks not yet to Job but to his friends, as appears verſe 12. Chap. 33. 1.

V. 7. I ſaid, dayes ſhould ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdome] I was in hope truly, that ye would have brought forth ſomething worthy of theſe your yeares, and that I ſhould have received from your mouth wiſdom, which you had learned of old age it ſelf. But I ſaw at length, that I was deceived.

I ſaid] In my heart. I thought ſo. See on Chap. 16. 1. A common proverb ranne in his mind, that wiſdome uſed to attend old age.

dayes] That is, many dayes. Not young men, that have lived but awhile, but old men, who have lived long as it followes, ſuch as have lived many years, ſuch can beſt teach. Chap. 8. 9. For Dayes, ſee on Chap. 14. 14. & 15. 23.

ſhould ſpeak] Old men ſhould ſpeak to purpoſe. Or, Let dayes ſpeake. I will not interrupt theſe old men, but hear them quietly, that I may learn of them.

and multitude of years] Such men as were very old, as ye are, verſe 6.

ſhould teach wiſdome] Should inſtruct younger men, ſuch as I am. I thought wiſdome was entailed upon old age. Heb. Should make known wiſdom. For wiſdome, ſee on Chap. 28. 12.

V. 8. But there is a ſpirit in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding] Now he proceeds to ſhew the cauſe of his ſpeaking. As firſt, Gods giving wiſdome to young men ſometimes, verſe 8. 2. Denying it ſometimes to old men, verſe 9. 3. The fruſtrating of his expectation by them, from verſe 10. to verſe 15. The ſcope of this verſe is, that true wiſdome is not gotten with years, but given by Gods ſpirit. Not that wiſdome is not ordinarily increaſed with yeares (for old men are freeer from paſſions, learn much by uſe and experience, and by continuance in ſtudy adde daily to their knowledge) but to ſhew that knowledge is not ſo tied to age, but that Gods ſpirit gives that meaſure of it to a young man ſometimes, that he gives not to an old man.

but there is a ſpirit] See on Chapter 15. 2. upon, Vaine-knowledge.

giveth them underſtanding] Heb. Maketh them to underſtand. Others read the whole verſe thus, Surely the ſpirit, that is in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty.

maketh them to underſtand] That is, Gods ſpirit inſpiring man giveth him underſtanding. Others thus, Surely there is a ſpirit in man; but the inſpiration of the almighty maketh them to underſtand. This laſt is the beſt, and the meaning is, that though Arts and Tongues be good helps to knowledge, and man have a reaſonable ſoul in him, that can reaſon of things to and fro, yet he cannot attain true wiſdome, unleſſe Gods ſpirit enlighten him. Chap. 38. 36. Prov. 1. 6. Eccl. 2. 26. Dan. 1. 17. 2. 21.

V. 9. Great men are not alwayes wiſe: neither do the aged underſtand judgement] He doth not object doting to old men, but ſhews, that age is not the cauſe of wiſdom, neither is it the old mens priviledge to be wiſe onely, but ſometimes young men may be wiſe as well as they: Or old age doth not of its own nature bring wiſdome with it.

great men] Men in authority, Officers, as it is tranſlated, Eſth. 1. 8. But here it ſhould rather be men of many years, oppoſed to young men, or men of few years or days, as verſe 8, and Chapter 30. 1. And that agrees well with the end of this verſe, where they are called Aged.

are not alwayes wiſe] Alwayes, is not in the originall, but is added by the Interpreters to expreſſe the ſenſe of the text the better; for ſome old men are wiſe, though all be not.

neither doe the aged] See on Chap. 12. 12.

underſtand judgement] Know alwayes what is right. For judgement, ſee on Chap. 22. 4. Broughton reads the verſe thus, Men of not great time may be wiſe; as the old underſtand the right. But the former ſeems more ſutable to what went before. verſe 6, 7.

V. 10. Therefore I ſaid hearken to me, I alſo will ſhew my opinion] In this verſe ye have Elihu's full reſolution to ſpeak. 1. Becauſe he had waited as long as any of them had any thing to ſay, and therefore now might ſpeak without immodeſty, though he were younger then they, verſe 11. 2. Becauſe they had not done the work they undertook to convince Job, and therefore might well give way to another to do it, verſe 12. 3. He ſhewes the reaſon why they could not do it, to wit, leſt they ſhould be proud, verſe 13. 4. He promiſeth a new way of convincing Job, verſe 14. The ſumme of this verſe is; I think fit to entreat you all, and eſpecially thee O Job, to heare me patiently. For I think it needfull to deliver my opinion, ſeeing ye have ſpoken nothing to the purpoſe all this while, nor as becomes men of your years, and experience to ſpeak.

Therefore I ſaid] See on chap. 16. 1.

hearken to me] Heb. Hear thou me. Thou O Job: or every one of you his friends. So God ſpeaks in the ſingular number in every Commandment, though he ſpake to thouſands, that every one might apply it to himſelf in particular, Exod. 20. 3, 4, &c. Elihu would have every one of them to hearken to him, as if he had ſpoken to him only. For the word ſee on chap. 13. 17.

I alſo will ſhew mine opinion] See on verſe 6.

V. 11. Behold I waited for your words; I gave eare to your reaſons, whileſt you ſearched out what to ſay] Here is an anſwer to an objection. There is no need that you ſhould ſpeak, when ſo many wiſe men have abundantly anſwered all that Job hath objected: And he might be ſatisfied with what they have ſaid, unleſſe he were obſtinate in his opinion. Elihu anſwers, that he had carefully weighed all they had ſaid for themſelves, and for Gods glory, and againſt Job, and found that a further anſwer was needfull; for they had not given ſatisfaction in the former controverſie. It is as if Elihu had ſaid, Surely ye cannot rightly any way charge me with misbehaviour for dealing with you in this ſort, foraſmuch as I never went about to interrupt you in your talke; Nay, I did not onely liſten to your words, but I did alſo moſt diligenrly conſider what they might import, ſtill looking when ſomething ſhould come from you, wherewith Jobs words might ſoundly have been anſwered.

Behold] See on Chap. 1. 12.

I waited for your words] He turnes his ſpeech again to Jobs friends: I ſtaied to ſee what anſwer you would give to Jobs laſt ſpeech. For Words, ſea on Chap. 19. 28. on the word Matter.

to your reaſons] Heb. to your underſtandings. To the arguments you brought, to ſee whether they were ſound or no: I ſought to underſtand not onely what you ſaid, but alſo what you meant.

what to ſay] What further arguments you might uſe againſt Job. Heb. Words.

V. 12. Yea I attended unto you; and behold there was none of you that convinced Job, or that anſwered his words] But I ſee, I was deceived in my expectation: For when I had weighed all things which ye brought, I found nothing to be ſpoken of you ſufficient to prove Job to be an ungodly man, as you charge him, neither have ye well anſwered his arguments to the contrary, nor convinced him of his unbeſeeming ſpeeches of Gods carriage toward him.

Yea I attended unto you] I throughly weighed your words, as if I had looked into you.

there was none of you] Every one of you might think himſelfe able to confute Job, but the beſt of you could not do it.

that convinced Job] That ſpake againſt him to purpoſe, ſo as that he might find no juſt anſwer for himſelf. For convince, ſee on Chap. 15. 3. on the word reaſon. For Job ſee on Chap. 1. 1.

or that anſwered his words] That gave a ſatisfactory anſwer to his reaſons brought to cleer himſelf. He could not deny, but they anſwered largely; but he counts anſwers to no purpoſe, to be no anſwers. For anſwer, ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 13. Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom: God thruſteth him down, not man] This I ſay, leſt you ſhould flatter your ſelves, as if you had ſufficiently convinced Job and he remained obſtinate, ſo that none but God can put him out of his good conceit of himſelf, and therefore we leave him to God to convince him. Or, leſt you ſhould think, that you have now hit the naile on the head, and brought an unanſwerable argument to prove Job an ungodly man, becauſe his afflictions are ſuch as no mortal man could inflict upon him, and therefore God, who is moſt juſt, and cannot be deceived, hath in afflicting him thus heavily paſſed ſentence on our ſide, that he is a wicked man. This argument ſeems to be taken out of Jobs own confeſſion, Chap. 19. 5, 6.

thruſteth him down] Drives him from one affliction to another, as the winde doth the leafe.

and not man] See on Chap. 1. 1.

V. 14. Now he hath not directed his word againſt me; neither will I anſwer him with your ſpeeches] In theſe words Elihu ſeekes to get Jobs good will, that he might the more willingly attend to what he had to ſay. He intimates therefore to Jobs friends, that he would not deale with him as they had done, neither in the manner, nor matter of his ſpeeches. Would not be ſo harſh in words againſt him, as they were: For Job had not ſpoken any thing to provoke him, as they conceived he had done againſt them: Neither would he bring ſuch weak reaſons as they had done againſt Job; for that would do no good; but he would bring milder words, and better arguments; and ſo it ſeems he did; for he ſtopt Jobs mouth, and prepared him to ſubmit to Gods following diſcourſe.

Now he hath not directed] Not ſet his words in order, as ſouldiers in battel array to fight againſt me. Heb. ordered. See on Chap. 13. 18.

his words againſt me] Or, his words to me. He hath not diſputed againſt me, but againſt you; yet ſeeing ye cannot anſwer him, I will endeavour to do it.

neither will I anſwer him] See on Chap. 15. 13. & 20. 10. on the words, Turneſt, and Reſtore. Here it is put for returning words, that is, anſwering.

with your ſpeeches] With your arguments, or rather with other as weak as they. I will bring ſtronger arguments againſt him, and come better prepared for the combat. It is true, that Elihu had better arguments, yet ſometimes he uſed ſuch as they did, but in milder words, and to better purpoſe; not to prove Job a wicked man, but to ſhew that he had carried himſelf irreverently in his ſpeeches toward God.

V. 15. They were amazed, they anſwered no more, they left off ſpeaking] Theſe words are not the Writers, but Elihu's own, turning away his ſpeech from Jobs three friends to the auditors (whereof there might be ſome ſtore at ſo great a diſpute) that he might gird them the more for their ignorance.

They were amazed] They were ſo confounded with Jobs arguments, that though Elihu had rubbed them up, and ſtayed awhile, to ſee what they would do, yet durſt they not enter into the liſts with Job any more. They were ſo amazed, that they were even broken in their underſtanding, as it were, and utterly unfit to diſpute with Job any more.

they anſwered no more] They were as mute as fiſhes. See on Ch. 16. 1.

they left off ſpeaking] Heb. They removed ſpeeches from themſelves. That is, ſpeech was removed from them. They were as ſilent as if they had loſt their natural faculty of ſpeaking. See the like phraſe Chap. 3. 3. It was ſaid, Heb. one ſaid.

V. 16. When I had waited (for they ſpake not, but ſtood ſtill and anſwered no more)] This verſe, and the former may both be read in the preſent Tenſe, They are amazed, they anſwer no more, they leave off ſpeaking. Seeing I have waited, but they have not ſpoken, but ſtood ſtill, and anſwered no more, I will anſwer, &c. So the preter Tenſe is put for the preſent, Pſal. 1. 1. And ו is tranſlated, Seeing, Chap. 28. 21. כי But Chap, 23. 6. Ye ſee that they will not be provoked to ſpeak, therefore I will.

and anſwered no more] See on Chap. 16. 1. He uſeth many words to the ſame purpoſe to ſhew their great ſilence, which he much marvelled at.

V. 17. I ſaid I will anſwer alſo my part, I alſo will ſhew mine opinion] Here is Elihu's progreſſe in his ſpeech after ſome ſilence. In which ye have, 1. His reſolution to ſpeak again in this verſe. 2. His ability, verſe 18. 3. His inſtigation, verſe 19, 20. 4. His caution in ſpeaking, verſe 21, 22. The ſumme of this verſe is, that Elihu conceives it was now come to his turne to ſpeak, and neceſſity called him to it, ſeeing all the reſt held their peace.

I ſaid] This is not in the Original, and may better be left out, as was ſhewed in ths various reading of the former verſe.

V. 18. For I am full of matter, the ſpirit within me conſtraineth me] Though your ſtore be done, yet I come well prepared. I have ſuch ſtore of ſolid and convincing arguments, that though I would never ſo faigne contain my ſelf, my ſpirit will not ſuffer me.

For I am full] I have abundance, I am like a woman with childe: I cannot keep it in.

of matter] Heb. of words. Of good arguments to convince Job, which ye cannot do.

the ſpirit] It may be underſtood of Gods Spirit, or his own. For ſpirit, ſee on Chap. 15. 2. upon Vaine knowledge.

within me] Heb. of my belly. By the belly is meant the internal parts, where the ſoul hath his manſion, Prov. 20. 27, 30. & 22. 18. Hab. 3. 16. Joh. 7. 38. See more on Chap. 15. 2. conſtraineth me] The thoughts of my heart are like winde in my belly. They do ſo pinch me, that I cannot keep them in. They want roome, and preſſe to come out, Pſal. 39. 3. Jer. 20. 9.

V. 19. Behold my belly is as wine, which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles] In this verſe he ſets out the trouble that he had to keep in his thoughts. They were too many to be encloſed in ſo little room as his breaſt. In the next he ſhews the way of eaſing himſelf. His trouble he ſets out in this verſe by a ſimilitude from wine ſhut up in new bottles, which if it finde not a way out, will make a way. He elegantly compares words ſhut up in the minde deſirous to utter them, to wine, the ſoul to bottles, ſilence to the ſtopple, which keeps in the wine, the grief of the minde hereupon to the breaking of the bottles, ſpeech to the opening of them, by taking away the ſtopple of ſilence. The ſumme is, he ſhould be much troubled if he might not have free licenſe to vent his minde fully in this buſineſſe.

my belly] See on Chap. 15. 2.

is as wine] As new wine, which being not througly purged, cannot be ſhut up in bottles without danger of breaking, Mat. 9. 17.

which hath no vent] Heb. which is not opened. Therefore ſome read it, my belly is as a bottle of wine, which is not opened: Fetching the word bottle out of the end of the verſe: Others make it two ſimilitudes: one in the beginning of the verſe, taken from great veſſels of new wine, ſtopt up before they have done working, which makes the veſſels break: The other in the end of the verſe, from bottles that are ſtopt too cloſe, which are burſt by the force of the wine ſhut up in them, and ſeeking to break priſon. Elihu's intent, by one, or both ſimilitudes, was to ſhew what a trouble it was to him to refraine from ſpeaking. For the word ſee on Chap. 29. 19. upon the word, Spread out.

it is ready to burſt] Heb. it will be cleft aſunder. See on Chap. 26. 8. on the word, Rent. He ſhewes the peril of not ſpeaking. It would make his minde as uſeleſſe as a broken bottle. Or, he ſets out the neceſſity of ſpeaking by fulneſſe of thoughts working in his minde, which will break out, do he what he can.

like new bottles] Though new bottles be ſtronger then old to keep in wine, yet the wine may be ſo ſtrong that it may break them. So Elihu's deſire of ſpeaking was ſo great, that though he ſhonld do all he could to keep in his words, yet they would burſt out. Piſcator conceives by new bottles to be meant bottles of new wine, becauſe elſe it ſeems to croſſe our Saviours ſpeech, Matth. 9. 17. Who makes old bottles more ſubject to be broken by the wine, and new ones to hold ſtrongeſt. As ſome in the beginning of the verſe take wine for bottles, ſo in the end bottles may be taken for bottles of new wine.

V. 20. I will ſpeak that I may be refreſhed: I will open my lips, and anſwer] Therefore will I ſpeak, that I may take breath, and that I may at length freely pour out that I have ſo long time conceived and concealed in my breaſt.

I will ſpeak] See on Chap. 13. 22.

that I may be refreſhed] Heb. that I may breath. That I may not be ſo ſtraitned as before (in verſe 18, 19.) but may have more ſpace to put forth my thoughts, and enlarge my ſelf.

I will open my lips] I will begin to ſpeak. For as a man cannot ſpeak ordinarily without opening his lips, ſo a dumb man may open his lips, that cannot ſpeak at all. And they that can, may open their lips for other ends, as to eat, drink, or breath. For open, ſee on Chap. 29. 19. on the words, ſpread out. For lips, ſee on Chap. 15. 6.

and anſwer] Anſwer Job better then ye have done. Or ſpeak my minde; for ſo the word is uſed for ſpeaking firſt, and tranſlated ſo, Chap. 3. 2. See more on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 21. Let me not I pray you accept any mans perſon, neither let me give flattering titles unto man] In this verſe he ſets down the manner how he purpoſeth to carry himſelf in his enſuing diſcourſe, and gives the reaſon of his warineſſe in the next verſe. Elihu deſires in this verſe, that they would not be offended, if without regarding any mans favour or authority, ſo as to prejudice the truth, he ſpeak his mind freely, and forbeare pleaſing titles, and flattering proems.

Let me not] Do not expect it of me, nor be offended if I do not. Or I will not. So אל is uſed, Pſal. 121. 3, 4.

I pray you] Or, now, as that particle is tranſlated, Chap. 5. 1.

accept any mans perſon] Heb. accept the face of man. I will not regard any man in this diſpute out of favour, but deal fairly according to the truth of the cauſe. Many judge amiſſe, becauſe they look on mens faces, or have reſpect to kindred, friendſhip, might, more then to the right, I will not ſo do. I will neither look upon you as opponents, nor upon Job as an anſwerer, but indifferently upon the thing in queſtion, and determine alſo accordingly. This fault of accepting perſons Job had taxed his friends for, Chap. 13. 7. Elihu will not offend him in that kind, nor his friends neither. For the phraſe, ſee on Chap. 13. 8. For accepting, ſee on Chap. 21. 3. upon the word, ſuffer. For perſon, or face, ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word countenance. For man, ſee on Chap. 1. 1.

neither let me give flattering titles] The word is uſed onely here, and in the next verſe, and Iſa. 44. 5. & 45. 4. and there it ſignifies no more then to name. Neither can it be as Mercer, and others, to uſe hidden titles, intimating that he would not talke at rovers, as they did, telling Job that wicked men were confounded by God, but not calling him ſo; but would directly accuſe him, for this is contrary to Elihu's ſcope, who deſired to juſtifie Job, and to the uſe of the word in Iſaiah, where no ſuch thing is intended. But ſeeing the word is plainly uſed in an ill ſenſe here, as appears verſe 22. it muſt needs be taken for giviug flattering titles as Semper Auguſtus to the German Emperours. He would not flatter Job nor them with high titles, though they were ancienter then he, but would carry the buſineſſe by meer ſtrength of argument, not by oratorical and rhetorical inſinuations.

V. 22. For I know not to give flattering tittles, in ſo doing my maker would ſoone take me away] Here he gives two reaſons why he would not flatter. The one, becauſe he had not been ſo bred, but in a plaine down-right way, not uſing to flatter great men. The other, becauſe he feared God would inflict ſome great judgement upon him, if he ſhould ſo do. I know not how to go about ſuch an unuſual work; and if I had a will to go about it, I ſhould look upon God, as on one having ſome great judgement ready to deſtroy me.

For I know not] I am not acquainted with ſuch courſes, Or, I allow not of ſuch wayes: As this word is uſed, Pſal. 1. 6. to give flattering titles] See on verſe 21. where the ſame word is uſed. Heb. I know not how I ſhould give flattering titles.

in ſo doing] This is not in the Original, but well added, to ſhew the true meaning of the Text.

my Maker] He that created me. Or, he that formed me in the womb. See on Chap. 10. 8. And on Chap. 14. 9. upon the word, Bringeth forth.

ſhould take me away] From among men by ſome violent death, Pſal. 28. 3. Job 27. 21. For the word, ſee on Chap. 21. 3. upon the word, Suffer.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Verſ. 1. W*Herefore Job I pray thee, hear my ſpeeches, and hearken to all my words*] Now Elihu turns his ſpeech from Jobs friends unto Job himſelf and falls cloſe to his work. In the 33, 34, and 35. Chapters, he repeates divers of Jobs ſpeeches, and anſwers them. In the 36. and 37. Chapters, he confutes thoſe complaints which Job had raſhly poured out againſt God. And ſometimes he calls upon Job to anſwer for himſelf, that he might not ſay, he had no liberty to clear himſelf. In this Chapter, there is. 1. His Preface to Job, to perſwade him to attend, and to be willing to be convinced, and that unto verſe 8. 2. The confutation of ſome of Jobs ſpeeches, to v. 31. 3. The concluſion, to the end of the Chapter. In the Preface. 1. He calls upon Job for audience, verſe 1, 2. 2. He uſeth arguments to perſwade him, and that 1. From the matter he had to ſpeak, verſe 3, 4. 2. From the manner of pleading, verſe 5, 6, 7. In his invitation. 1. He exhorts Job to hear him, verſe 1. 2. He ſhews his willingneſſe to informe him, verſe 2. In this verſe he intimates thus much, that though Jobs friends were much to blame in condemning him, yet he had rather ſpend time in ſetting Job right, then in quarrelling with them, and therefore principally deſires audience of him whom it moſt concerned.

Wherefore] Heb. And truly.

Job] See on Chap. 1. 1.

I pray thee] He turns his ſpeech to Job, and ſpeakes by way of intreaty, wiſhing him not to think hardly of him becauſe his friends dealt ſo hardly with him, nor to deſpiſe him becauſe of his youth, but to give good eare to him.

my ſpeeches] Which I ſhall utter for thy good.

and hearken] Give eare to them: ſo much the word imports in the Original.

to all] I will be very careful of my words, not to ſpeak one word but what ſhall be profitable unto thee; and therefore I would have thee attend ſo diligently, that not one of my words be loſt.

my words] See on Chap. 19. 28. upon the word, Matter.

V. 2. Behold now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth] I have begun to ſpeak (in the former Chapter) and I am willing to proceed; be careful therefore to attend.

Behold] See on Chap. 1. 12.

now] See on Chap. 32. 21. on, I pray you, in my mouth] Heb. in my palat. A figure of the part for the whole. Or, with my palat; for both tongue and palat are inſtruments of ſpeaking. So ב is traſlated, with Chap. 16. 10.

I have opened] See on Chap. 32. 20. & 29. 19. upon the word, ſpread out.

V. 3. My words ſhall be of the uprightneſſe of my heart, and my lips ſhall utter knowledge clearly] He perſwades Job to hear him. 1. Becauſe of his upright dealing with him, in this verſe. And 2. Becauſe of the ſame nature. He was a man like to Job, verſe 4. In this verſe he diſſwades Job from being angry, if he ſhould ſpeak ſome things that might diſpleaſe him; for if Job as a man might erre, another man might ſee to ſet him right better then himſelf, we all favour our ſelves too much. Job had found his friends too harſh, and Elihu might well fear that therefore he would not hear him patiently, but might fear that he would deal ſo with him alſo. He aſſures him therefore, that he would not be like his other friends, but would deal very candidly with him.

My words] Which I ſhall now utter to ſhew thy errour. O! Job.

ſhall be of the uprightneſſe of my heart] Rather, ſhall be out of; or, according to the uprightneſſe of my heart. I will ſpeak as I think. A ſecret reproof to Jobs friends, who, as Elihu conceives, ſpake worſe of him then they could think in their hearts. However Elihu did not intend to make the uprightneſſe of his heart the ſubject of his ſpeech, as the tranſlation ſeems to carry it (ſee the like phraſe, Pſal. 45. 1.) but to intimate to Job that he would not diſſemble with him. Heb. My words ſhall be the uprightneſſe of my heart. That is, I will ſpeak moſt uprightly. Or, ſhall utter the uprightneſſe of my heart. So the beginning of the verſe is ſupplied out of the end, Pſal. 70. 1. For heart, ſee on Chap. 15. 12.

and my lips] See on Chap. 15. 6.

ſhall utter knowledge] Heb. ſhall ſpeak knowledge. I will ſpeak what I know to be true.

clearly] I will as it were fan or ſcoure my words from all chaffe and droſſe, Zeph. 3. 9. Iſa. 49. 2. He would not ſpeak falſe or deceitful words. See on Chap. 22. 30. on the word, Pureneſſe.

V. 4. The ſpirit of God hath made me, and and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life] Some knit this verſe to the former, and make this to be the ſenſe of it. Thou mayſt hearken to me, though I be younger then thou art, for I am a man as well as thou, and have a ſoul and body as thou haſt, and therefore as well know what is right. Others knit it to the verſes following, as if Elihu had ſaid, I am not God, to terrifie thee, but a man altogether like thy ſelfe, and therefore thou mayſt boldly reaſon with me, and haſt a fair oppertunity to clear thy ſelf, if thou canſt.

The ſpirit] See on chap. 15. 2, upon vaine knowledge.

of God] See on chap. 8. 3, 5.

hath made me] See on chap. 14. 9. upon the word, Bringeth forth.

and the breath] An alluſion to Gen. 2. 7. To mans creation at firſt, where the body came by formation, and the ſoul by inſpiration. So do both alſo in the wombe. The one is made, the other inſpired by Gods Spirit.

hath given me life] By breathing a living ſoul into me, chap. 10. 9, 12.

V. 5. If thou canſt anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me ſtand up] Now he perſwades Job to audience from the manner of his ſpeaking, wherein. 1. He gives him leave to ſpeak freely for himſelf, in this v. 2. He gives him a ground of free ſpech, in that he ſpeaks not to God, but to a man like himſelf, v. 6. 3. He ſhewes the effect of this ground, he neither can, nor will terrifie or trouble him, as God might if he ſhould reaſon with him, v. 7. The ſum of this is, as if Elihu ſhould have ſaid, I intend not to take advantage of thine afflictions to inſult over thee as thy friends have done; but give thee free leave, when I have ſpoken to uſe all thy ſtrength to anſwer for thy ſelf.

If thou canſt anſwer me] I purpoſe to uſe undeniable arguments, yet if thou thinkeſt thou canſt overthrow them, come into the liſts. Others read it with a comma between, thus, If thou canſt, do thou anſwer me. I give thee free leave to do it, and to give anſwer to every one of my arguments, I will hear, as well as ſpeak, v. 32. For Anſwer, ſee on chap. 20. 10. & 15. 13. on the words, Reſtore, Turneſt.

ſet thy words in order before me] Muſter up thy anſwers like ſo many ſouldiers to oppoſe me. A metaphor from military affairs, wherein ſouldiers are ſet in rankes to reſiſt the enemy ſetting upon them. See on chap. 32. 14. & 13. 18.

ſtand up] Broughton reads it, Stand to it; Deodat, preſent thy ſelfe to the combat. Heb. Set thy ſelfe. Or, Settle thy ſelf. He continuing in his military metaphor. Either he meanes that Job ſhould like a ſouldier take his ground to ſhew his readineſſe to defend himſelf, or ſtand his ground and not give way to his arguments againſt him, if he be able to confute them. Thus valiant ſouldiers chuſe and maintaine their ground.

V. 6. Behold I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead, I alſo am formed out of the clay] I have heard thee wiſh, O Job, that thou mighteſt diſpute with God, provided, that he would not daunt thee with his Majeſty. Lo, thon haſt thy wiſh; I that am a man every way like thy ſelf, will plead Gods cauſe againſt thee. Set then upon the work.

I am according to thy wiſh] Heb. I am according to thy mouth. Thou didſt wiſh for a free and equall handling of thy cauſe, now thou maiſt have it. chap. 9. 34, 35. & 13. 18. & 31. 35. & 23. 3, 4. For mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 2. This agrees well with Jobs deſire in the places quoted. Others read it thus, I am as thou Heb. According to thy meaſure. So this word is uſed onely to ſet out a likeneſſe of two things. Numb. 6. 21. & 7. 5. And this anſwers well to the words following of an equall formation.

in Gods ſtead.] Heb. For God, as chap. 13. 7. I will be his deputy, and plead his cauſe for him, and ſhew, how thou haſt wronged him. Thou ſhalt not need ſo earneſtly to ſeek him to diſpute with him, I will undertake the buſineſſe for him. Others read it, I am Gods, or, I belong to God, as thou doſt, For I alſo am made by him; as follows. For God, ſee on chap. 8. 3, 5.

I alſo] See on chap. 16. 4.

Am formed] Heb. Am cut out. An alluſion to the potters, who when they purpoſe to make an earthen veſſel, cut out a lumpe of clay to make it oft: So did God form Adams body, Gen. 2. 7. To which Elihu now alludes, inſtancing rather in Jobs and his joint Original, then ſeveral framing in the womb. For conjunction works ſtronger on mens affections, then diviſion. Neither was Elihu ſo formed in the womb, but in Adam his firſt parent, as Job alſo was.

out of the clay] See on chap. 13. 12.

V. 7. Behold, my terrour ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee] I cannot fright thee with my glory, nor lay ſuch diſeaſes upon thee, as God can, and therefore thou needeſt not be afraid to reaſon freely with me. Theſe were the two things that Job deſired of God, chap. 9. 34. & 13. 21. And Elihu grants both, ſo that now Job was much to blame, if he could not cleare himſelf upon his own termes. He hath now a man, as he was, to reaſon the caſe with him, as he did deſire, chap. 9. 32. And therefore muſt make his cauſe good, or be without excuſe. Thus Elihu like a cunning diſputant takes advantage of all Jobs words.

be heavy upon thee] Lay load on thee, or puniſh thee ſorely, as God hath now done, and thou feareſt he will do more, though thou unjuſtly conceiveſt he hath no cauſe ſo to do. See the phraſe, Pſal. 32. 4.

V. 8. Surely thou haſt ſpoken in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying] Here begins Elihus charge againſt Job, wherein having finiſhed his preface, he begins to confute thoſe things, which he did diſlike in Jobs former ſpeeches. The charge is laid down, in general in this v. In particular, v. 9. 10, 11. The anſwer holds to the end of the Chapter: and conſiſts of two heads. 1. That God is not tied to give an account of his actions, v. 12, 13. 2. That though his actions may be diſpleaſing to fleſh and blood; yet he makes men underſtand by the iſſue, that if they ſtoope to his proceedings, all is for their good. The ſum of this v. is, as if he had ſaid, I meddle not with thoſe things, which thou haſt ſpoken well, not with thy life, I deny not, but thy afflictions are heavie. I confeſſe, thou haſt ſpoken many things very truly, and wiſely concerning God. But yet I muſt needs taxe thee for ſome things indiſcretely ſpoken, and ſuch as thou canſt not deny; I will not charge thee with odious conſequences to take advantage againſt thee, but with ſuch things, as I have heard with mine own eares.

of thy words] Of things indiſcreetly ſpoken by thee, whereof now I muſt charge thee.

ſaying] This is added to uſher in the following accuſations.

V. 9. I am cleane without tranſgreſſion; I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me] Three things are here laid to Jobs charge by Elihu. 1. That he ſhould deny himſelf to be ſinful, in this v. 2. That he accuſed God of picking quarrels with him, v. 10. 3. Of afflicting him over-heavily, v. 11. True it is, that Job in his eager maintaining his innocency, and fence of his paines caſt out ſuch raſh ſpeeches againſt God, and was therefore worthy to be blamed, yet did he many times recollect himſelf, & ſpeak meanly of himſelf, and reverently of God, acknowledging his own ſin, and Gods juſtice. The accuſation in this v. ſeems to be gathered out of theſe places, Chap. 10. 7. & 16. 17. & 23. 10, 11. & 27. 5.

I am cleane without tranſgreſſion] Elihu underſtands Job, as if he did not acknowledge himſelf guilty of any ſin. For tranſgreſſion, ſee on Chap. 7. 21.

I am innocent] It comes from a word, that ſignifies to protect: thence alſo comes another word, that ſignifies an haven, as if Job had ſaid, I am ſafe, my innocency will be a protection and haven to me. The Rabbins uſe the word for kembing, as if he had ſaid, I am as neat, as a man that hath kem'd his head, and had not an haire amiſſe.

neither is there iniquity in me] See on Chap. 7. 21.

V. 10. Behold, he findeth occaſions againſt me, he counteth me for his enemy] This accuſation is picked out of Chap. 9. 17. & 13. 24, & 14. 17. & 16. 9. & 19. 11.

Behold] See on Chap. 1. 12.

he findeth] See on Chap. 17. 10. God findeth.

occaſions] Picks out ſomewhat to quarrel againſt my actions. Or, Breaches. That is, occaſions to break off his favour from me, and to deſtroy me. So the word is uſed, Numb. 14. 34.

againſt me] To accuſe me, as giving cauſe of mine own deſtruction.

he counteth me for his enemy] Theſe words are expounded on Chap. 13. 24. & 19. 11.

V. 11. He putteth my feet in the ſtocks; he marketh all my paths] Here Elihu quotes Jobs very words, Chap. 13. 27. where all theſe words were expounded. Let the Reader ſee there. And the latter part alſo is charged upon God by Job, Chap. 14. 16.

V. 12. Behold, in this thou art not juſt: I will anſwer thee that God is greater then man] Elihu's firſt anſwer is contained in this v. and the next. The ground is this, to wit, Gods greatneſſe. The concluſion from hence v. 13. An impoſſibility for any creature to bring God to an account for his actions. The ſum of this v. is, as if he had ſaid, I will not call in queſtion thy life or converſation. I believe thou haſt carried thy ſelf well formerly toward God and man, as thou haſt profeſſed, and many can bear witneſſe. But I muſt needs blame thee for thy late irreverent expreſſions againſt God, as if thou hadſt forgotten the diſtance between God and thee: Jobs friends had touched upon this ſtring before, of Gods greatneſſe: but it was to a different end. Their ſcope was to prove Job to be a wicked man, becauſe the great God had ſo greatly afflicted him. But Elihu's intent is, to ſhew Job his errour in that he had in unſavory expreſſions through infirmity and out of the greatneſſe of his paine carried himſelf irreverently toward God, which he had need to repent of, though he were a godly man. They ſought to bring Job to diſpaire; Elihu endeavours to bring him to repentance, which God effects afterwards.

in this] That thou braggeſt of thine own innocency, complaineſt of Gods dealing too hardly with thee, and deſireſt to contend with him in judgement about it.

thou art not juſt] Thou haſt offended, and canſt not be juſtified. See on Chap. 9. 20.

I will anſwer thee] See on Chap. 16. 1.

that God is greater then man] Or, that God is more then man.

More in Majeſty and Power, in Wiſdome and Juſtice. And therefore thou haſt much forgotten thy ſelfe, and haſt not carried thy ſelf ſo humbly and reverently toward him as thou oughteſt, but overboldly, in ſeeking to contend with him, as if thou wert his equall. For God, ſee on Chap. 4. 9. & 11. 5. For greater, on Chap. 32. 9 For man, on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

V. 13. Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? for he giveth not account of any of his matters] What preſumption is this, that thou dareſt plead with God, who is Supream over all, and neither uſeth, nor is bound to give a reaſon to any man of his actions, as an inferiour.

Why doſt thou ſtrive] Contend with him in judgement, or plead with him. See on Chap. 13. 6. on the word, Pleadings.

againſt him] Againſt God. Which is alſo underſtood in verſe 10. See there.

for] Thou haſt no reaſon ſo to do, but deſireſt it in vaine, for God will not be brought to a reckoning, Or, that. Why doſt thou ſo often complain, that God will not give thee a reaſon why he layes ſo many afflictions upon thee. As Chap. 10. 2. & 13. 23, 24. & 19. 7. & 23. 4, 5.

he giveth not account] Heb. he anſwereth not. If thou demand a reaſon, he is not tied to give it. For anſwering, ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

of any of his matters] Heb. of all his matters. But it is well tranſlated, any, as alſo, Pſal. 147. 20. For though God pleaſe ſometimes to condiſcend ſo low, as to give a reaſon of ſome of his actions, yet it ſets out his Majeſty more to ſay, that he is not tied to give account of any one of them. For matters, ſee on chap. 19. 28.

V. 14. For God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not] Though God be not tied to give an account of his actions, nor will not admit man to contend with him in judgement, yet doth he ſometimes finde out gracious wayes, or meanes, to acquaint man with his will, who yet is ſo ſenſeleſſe, that he apprehends not what God aimes at in his proceedings with him. So that if thou O Job underſtandſt it not, the cauſe is not Gods ſilence, but thy dulneſſe. Here begins Elihu's ſecond anſwer to Jobs former ſpeeches, which is ſet downe. 1. In general in this verſe. 2. In particular, from verſe 15. to verſe 29. 3. He ſummes up altogether, ver. 29. 30.

For] Rather, When. As it is tranſlated, Chap. 7 13. So it makes way for Then, in ver. 16. And here is no reaſon given, as this Tranſlation ſeems to intimate, nor no oppoſition to what went before, as they think, who tranſlate it, But.

God] See on Chap. 8, 3, 5.

ſpeaketh] Maketh his minde known, as men do theirs by words. See on Chap. 13. 22.

once] To ſome men, but once: to others, oftner.

yea twice] A certain number for an uncertain, as appears by ver. 29. See the like phraſe, Pſal. 62. 11.

Yet man perceiveth it not] He is ſo dull by nature, that he cannot perceive Gods meaning. Others read it thus, or twice, if a man perceive it not. Or. To him that perceives it not. If a man regards not Gods ſpeech at firſt, he will ſpeak again to him, till he do take notice of it, verſe 16. 1 Sam. 3. 4, 6, 8, 10.

V. 15. In a dream, in a viſion of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men, in ſlumbrings upon the bed] Now he ſets out the ſeveral wayes God uſed to make his will known to his people by, before the Scriptures were written. 1. By dreams and viſions, to verſe 19. 2. By ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, to ver. 23. 3. By Prophets, to verſe 29. In the firſt part, 1. The way of Gods revealing himſelf is ſet down in this verſe. 2. The benefit of it, from ver. 16 to v. 19. In this verſe he informes them that which Eliphaz had done before, Chap. 4. 12, 13. That God did uſe to teach men by dreams, and night viſions.

in a dream] God hath taught men, not onely things that concerne the publick, but alſo ſuch things as make for their own ſouls, in dreams, Gen. 41. 1, 28. & 20. 6.

it a viſion of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men] See all theſe words expounded on Chap 4. 13. Some read it, in a dream of a viſion of the night. And that is beſt, for in dreames in the night men often ſee viſions in their ſleep, ſeldome when they lie awake. Neither doth the ſpeaker intend two wayes of revelation here, but one.

in ſlumberings upon the bed] Some make this all one with the former, and conceive that the word ſignifies any kind of ſleep. Others, that it ſignifies onely a light kind of ſleep, which we call ſlumbering, and ſo it is commonly tranſlated. And they make the ſenſe to be this; that God doth not onely make his will known to men when they are ſound on ſleep, but alſo when they are between ſleeping and waking.

V. 16. Then he openeth the eares of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction] Now follow three fruits of Gods ſpeaking to men in viſions. 1. Inſtruction in this verſe. 2. Humiliation, verſe 17. 3. Salvation, verſe 18. For the firſt. Gods word being not then written, when he pleaſed to make men to know his will, he would not loſe his labour, but made them ready to hearken to it, and ready to retaine it. Others underſtand it of threatning them with afflictions, for neglecting him in dreames. But the former ſenſe runs ſmoother with the words aforegoing and following.

Then] When God hath ſpoken to a man in a dreame verſe 14, 15.

he openeth the eares of men] Hereby is ſignified making men to heare; for when mens eares are ſtopt, they cannot heare till the obſtacle be removed. God will make them to regard what he ſaith, both with their eares, and heart. The ſame phraſe is uſed, Chap. 36. 10, 15. Heb. He revealeth, or uncovereth. That men may hear the better. For eares, ſee on Chap. 15. 21. For men, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

and ſealeth their inſtruction] Leaveth ſuch an impreſſion upon their ſpirits, by this extraordinary way of revealing himſelf to them, that they never forget it all their life after, Deut. 32. 34.

V. 17. That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe, and hide pride from man] God, by making himſelfe known to man by dreames and viſions, brings him to repentance, and keeps him from pride.

That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe] That he may keep him from doing miſchief to others, as he did intend. So God withdrew Abimelech, Gen. 20. 6. And Laban, Gen. 31. 24, 29. Or that he may draw him away from his former ſinful courſes by repentance. For withdraw, ſee on Chap. 12. 20. on the word, Removeth. For man, ſee on Chap. 14. 1. From, is added out of the end of the verſe, to make up the ſenſe. His purpoſe. Heb. His work. See on Chap. 14. 15. By work, is meant evil work, as by a wife, a good wife, Prov. 18. 22. By wool, white wool, Iſa. 1. 18.

and hide pride from man] And drive all pride out of him; that which is not, is as it were hid, for no man can ſee it, Chap. 3. 10. Or, take away all occaſions of pride from him, by revealing to him his own vileneſſe. For pride, ſee on Chap. 20. 25. on the word, Body. For man, ſee on Chap. 14. 10. It may be Elihu might think that Job had bragged too much of his good deeds and honours, chap. 29. & 31. And therefore he puts him in minde of humbling himſelf.

V. 18. He keepeth back his ſoule from the pit, and his life from periſhing by the ſword] God, by his former admonition of him in dreames, gives him wiſdom to prevent deſtruction, that was ready to lay hold on him.

He keepeth back] Or, That he may keep back. And then it runs parallel with the former verſe. He preſerves it, as men preſerve choiſe things from loſſe, or hurt, Gen. 22. 12, 16.

his ſoul] That is, the man himſelf: Or rather, his body. See on chap. 14. 22.

from the pit] From the grave. It comes from a word that ſignifies corruption, for in the grave mens carkaſſes putrifie, and moulder away. The ſame word is uſed, verſe 24. It intimates death and deſtruction; for beſide, that none but dead men are put in the grave; if a living man be caſt into a pit where he cannot get out, he will die for want of food. Some go further, and think it ſets out the manner of death. He will deliver him from the plots of enemies, who do as it were make pit-falls for him, as men do to catch birds and beaſts: And ſo they oppoſe it to the end of the verſe; intimating, that God will deliver him, both from plots of enemies, and from open hoſtility. See on chap. 7. 9.

and his life] This ſhewes what was meant by the ſoul before.

from periſhing by the ſword] Heb. from paſſing through, or, by the ſword: Or, from paſſing over into the ſword. From deſtruction by war; God will not give him over into the power of the ſword no more then of ſecret plots, or he ſhall not be deſtroyed by the ſword no more then by diſeaſes, not by Gods hand nor mans. Ch. 36. 12. So we read of paſſing through the fire, not for eſcaping it, but for being burned by it, 2 Kin. 16. 3. Through the brick-kilne, 2 Sam. 12. 31. For men by ſword or fire paſſe out of this world to another. For paſſing through, ſee on Chap. 15. 19. For the word, ſword, ſome tranſlate it, dart; for as a ſword is taken out of the ſheath, and thruſt into the body, ſo a dart is caſt forth to kill men. Their ſenſe is, that he ſhall paſſe through a company of darters, or pikemen, as a deere through a company of Archers, when every one ſhoots an arrow at it, and no man can hit it; ſo ſhall he eſcape all dangers.

V. 19. He is chaſtened alſo with paine upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong paine] He comes now to the ſecond meanes, by which God made his will known to men before the Scriptures were written; intimating, that ſuch as will not be taught by viſions, ſhall be informed by ſickneſſe, which ſickneſſe is ſet out by the effects of it. 1. Pain, verſe 19. 2. Loſſe of appetite, verſe 20. 3. Conſumption of fleſh, verſe 21. 4. Danger of death, verſe 22. All theſe (ſave that we finde not, that he kept his bed) Job had now experience of.

He is chaſtened] The word ſignifies both verbally to reprove, and actually to correct; for when God corrects a man for ſin, laying ſore diſeaſes upon him, he doth, as it were from heaven, chide him for his fault. See on Chap. 15. 3. on the word, Reaſon.

alſo] This is another way, whereby God makes men to know their ſins, and his will.

with paine] Ariſing from his diſeaſe which God inflicts on him. The word ſignifies both the diſeaſe of body, and the grief of minde ariſing thereupon.

upon his bed] Not with an ordinary diſeaſe, or paine, but ſuch an one as makes him keep his bed, Pſal. 41. 3.

and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong paine] All his bones, which are many, are full of great paine by reaſon of the ſtrength of his diſeaſe. So the ſame phraſe is tranſlated, Chap. 4. 14. Others read it, though the multitude of his bones be ſtrong, yet his paine is ſo great, that he cannot bear it. Others thus, and the contention of his bones is ſtrong: That is, the paine which God contending with him for his ſin, inflicts upon him, Pſal. 38. 3, 6. For multitude, ſee on Chap. 12. 5. on the word, great. For bones, ſee on Chap. 20. 11.

V. 20. So that his life abhorreth bread, and his ſoul dainty meat] Loathing of meat follows ſickneſſe, and conſuming of the ſubſtance of the body follows that, verſe 21. and danger of life enſues, verſe 22. See the like, Pſal. 107. 18. All diſeaſes weaken the appetite, but ſome are ſo ſharp that they take it cleane away, ſo that no meat pleaſes, though never ſo delicate; nay nothing is ſo much diſpleaſing as meat, they cannot endure the ſight of it.

So that his life]. His life is ſo full of paine that he cannot eate.

abhorreth] As filth, which mans nature cannot endure. The word is no where elſe read, and this ſignification the Hebrew Doctors put upon it.

bread] See on Chap. 15. 23.

and his ſoul]. See on Chap. 14. 22.

dainty meats] Heb. meat of deſire. That is, ſuch as men uſe to deſire for the pleaſant taſte of it, and ſuch as himſelf would have been glad of in his health. See the like phraſe, Dan. 10. 3. 2 Chron. 32. 27. Pſal. 107. 30. Amos 5. 11.

V. 21. His fleſh is conſumed away that it cannot be ſeen, and his bones that were not ſeen, ſtick out] All his limbs being brought low, and made leane by reaſon of his diſeaſe, ſtand ſtaring out in ſuch a ſort, that except his bones, there is no one thing to be ſeen in him that repreſenteth the ſhape of a man, nothing but leanneſſe and deformity appears, he is become an Anatomy.

His fleſh] It was full, fat, and beautiful before, but now nothing remains but skin and bone; the fleſh is all gone, no footſteps remaine to ſhew what it was. For fleſh, ſee on Chap. 14. 22.

is conſumed away] Is quite gone, ſo that nothing is left but skin and bones, Pſal. 102. 5.

that it cannot be ſeen] It is not there to be ſeen, no man can perceive it.

and his bones] See on Chap. 20. 11.

that were not ſeen] That could not be diſcerned before, becauſe they were all covered over with fleſh and fat, now the fleſh being gone, they ſtick out. For the word, ſee on Chap. 16. 27. on the word, Behold.

ſtick out] Are not kept in by the fleſh as formerly. Some read it, are diminiſhed. Gods hand is ſo heavy upon him, that not onely it conſumes his fleſh, but alſo grindes his bones to powder. Pſal. 31. 10. & 102. 3. & 51. 8.

V. 22. Yea his ſoul draweth neer unto the grave, and his life to the deſtroyer] The failing of his appetite maketh his fleſh to conſume, and his life to be in danger.

Yea his ſoul] See on Chap. 14. 22.

draweth neer] Is in great danger of death. As appears by his wonderful recovery, ver. 26.

unto the grave] See on verſe 18. on the word pit.

and his life] Which is the ground of all comfort. Life it ſelfe is departing from him.

to the deſtroyers] Heb. to thoſe that kill men. Which may be underſtood either of enemies, or diſeaſes.

V. 23. If there be a meſſenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thouſand to ſhew unto man his uprightneſſe.] This is the third way, whereby God uſed to make his will known to men in thoſe dayes. Some he taught by dreames, others by ſickneſſe, others by men more skilfull than themſelves, others take all theſe meanes to have reſpect to one man. Firſt God acquaints him with his will by a dreame. If he will not take notice thereby, he inflicts ſickneſſe on him, to make him look about what is amiſſe in him, for which God ſhould correct him. If that worke not on him, he ſends another choice man to informe him. In this third way of revealing himſelfe to men, Firſt, he lets out mans taking notice of it, from ver. 23. to ver. 27. 2. Gods taking notice of mans repentance, ver. 27, 28. In the firſt ye have. 1. The ſucceſſe of the interpreters meſſage, in this verſe. 2. The benefits which come thereby. From ver. 24. to ver. 27.

If there be a meſſenger] A man ſent of God to make known his will. Some underſtand it of an Angel from heaven, but that is not likely, that God ſent ſuch ordinarily. Either he ſent ſome Prophet, or ſome Teacher, which are called Meſſengers, and Angels. Malac. 3. 1. Rev. 1. 20.

with him] With the ſick man to tell him why God afflicts him. Or, with any other man. For ſo the antecedent is pickt out of the words following Pſal. 87. 1, 2. & 116. 1.

an interpreter] As a Prophet, or a Miniſter, is Gods Meſſenger, becauſe ſent by him; So he is an Interpreter, becauſe he is ſent to declare to man what God would have him to do. Or, to the ſick man why God afflicts him. For the word, ſee on Chap. 16. 20.

one among a thouſand] A rare man for gifts and parts pickt out of a thouſand men. See the like phraſe, Eccl. 7. 28. He ſeemes to intimate, that himſelf is ſuch an one, and therefore Job may do well to hearken to him.

to ſhew] To make plainly known unto him. See on Chap. 15. 18. upon the word, Told.

unto man] See on Chap. 14. 1.

his uprightneſſe] Gods upright dealing with him, that he doth not afflict him without juſt cauſe, and therefore he ought to repent. Or, mans uprightneſſe. That is, what is his duty to God, and how he ought to walk uprightly with him.

V. 24. Then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith; Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ranſome] The benefits of the good ſucceſs of the interpreters meſſage follow. Which are 1. Preſervation of his life, in this verſe, 2. Reſtauration of his health and ſtrength, verſe 25. 3. Reſtitution of the ſenſe of Gods favour, verſe 26. How deſperate ſoever the ſick mans, or any other mans caſe be, yet God will find a way to ſave his life, when his Meſſenger hath brought him to repentance.

Then] When he hath hearkened to the voice of Gods Meſſenger, and given glory to God.

he is gracious unto him] God will ſhew him mercy. By healing him, and being reconciled to him, as verſ. 25. 26.

and ſaith] To that meſſenger. He gives him commiſſion upon the mans penitency to promiſe him recovery. Or, God doth make known ſome way to him, that he will deliver him. For the word, ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

Deliver him] Acquaint him with my will. Tell him that I will deliver him. Or, he ſhall be as certainly delivered, as if God had ſent one from heaven to tell him ſo. So works of Gods grace are ſometimes attributed to his Miniſters, and inſtruments, Obad. ver. 21, 1 Cor. 9. 22. 1 Tim. 4. 16. Jam. 5. 20.

from going down] See on Chap. 21. 13.

to the grave] See on verſe 18. on the word, Pit.

I have found] I have received, and accepted. For the word, ſee on Chap. 17. 10.

a ranſome] Or, an attonment. He hath humbled himſelf and I am as well ſatisfied, as if he had paid a great ranſome, Or, I have received ſatisfaction by Chriſt for him. That Job had ſome knowledge of this, appears in the notes on Chap. 16. 21. & 17. 3. & 19. 25. The word ſignifies literally, to plaiſter over a thing, to cover it. So doth a ranſome cover ſin, Pſal. 32. 1.

V. 25. His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a childs: he ſhall returne to the dayes of his youth] Immediately after God hath thus ſpoken, even the very rotten fleſh of that miſerable creature ſhall appear tender and ſmooth, like unto the fleſh of a young childe, ſo that a man would think him to be reſtored again unto the freſh flower of his youth.

His fleſh] His body. See on Chap. 14. 22.

ſhall be freſher then a childs] It was conſumed, verſe 21. But now it is returned, and full, and ſoft, and tender, full of moiſture like a childs. Heb. then childhood, 2 King. 5. 14. Or, then in his childhood. He ſhall not onely be as ſtrong and luſty, as in his childhood, but more lively then ever he was. For the word, ſee on Chap. 13. 26.

He ſhall returne to the dayes of his youth] He ſhall not onely recover his health, and ſtrength, but as it were grow young again, Pſal. 103. 5. For returne, ſee on Chap. 14. 13. on the word, paſt. For dayes, ſee on Chap. 14. 14. & 15. 23. For youth, ſee on Chap. 20. 11.

V. 26. He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render unto man his righteouſneſſe] He had before ſet down one meanes of the ſick or ſinful mans recovery: the meſſengers information; now he ſets down another, which is his own ſupplication, without which another mans information can do no good. When he ſees his errour, even before he be recovered, or in another conflict he may pray boldly to God, and God being reconciled to him will hear him.

He] The ſick man, or the man whom God inſtructs by his meſſenger. Some underſtand it of the meſſenger praying for him, but that agrees not ſo well with what follows.

ſhall pray] See on Chap. 22. 27.

unto God] See on Chap. 5. 17. & 11. 5.

and he will be favourable unto him] God will be pleaſed with him, and look cheerfully on him in his conſcience, as a man doth on his friend, when he is reconciled.

and he ſhall ſee his face with joy] When a man is offended he looks angerly, but when he is pleaſed he looks cheerfully. So he ſhall ſee God to look cheerfully on him, when he hath humbled himſelfe before him. Numb. 6. 25. Pſal. 67. 1, & 10. 1. Or, God will make him to ſee his face with joy. The words will bear either. For See, look on Chap. 19. 27. on the word Behold. The word Joy ſignifies joyfull acclamation, ſuch as men uſe after benefits received. Such ſhould this man have cauſe to expreſſe, when God looks cheerfully on him again. For Face ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word, Countenance.

for he will render unto man his righteouſneſſe] As he dealt with him before, as if he were an ungodly man, laying heavie plagues upon him, ſo he will deal with him now kindly, in taking away thoſe plagues, and proſper him, as he uſed to do to righteous men, eſpecially in thoſe dayes. He will deale with him according to his preſent righteouſneſſe, and not according to his former wickedneſſe. Or, he will give him the reward of his righteouſneſs. So ſin is taken often for the puniſhment of ſin. For Render, ſee on Chap. 15. 13. on the word, Turneſt. And on Chap. 20. 10. on the word, Reſtore. For Man, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

V. 27. He looketh upon men, and if any ſay I have ſinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not]Now followes Gods taking notice of mans repentance in this verſe, and the next; wherein ye have, 1. The notice it ſelf in this verſe. 2. The effect of it, verſe 28. This may be a fourth way whereby God brings man to repentance, beſides dreams, ſickneſſe, meſſengers, to wit, to move mens hearts to a voluntary confeſſion of their ſins by his ſpirit, without the former helps.

He] Some underſtand it of the ſick man recovered, and confeſſing he was juſtly puniſhed. And they read it, He looketh upon other men, and ſaith. Others underſtand it of the Interpreter. But it is beſt underſtood of God taking notice of mans humiliation, and delivering him out of his troubles.

looketh upon] Conſidereth and obſerveth mens wayes.

upon men] See on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2. and if any ſay] See on Chap. 16. 1.

I have ſinned] This is the confeſſion of the penitent ſinner. See the like, 2 Sam. 12. 13. For the word ſee on Chap. 7. 20.

and perverted] For the ſenſe of this word, ſee on Chap. 7. 21. on the word, Iniquity, which comes from this root.

that which was right] I have left the right way, to go in crooked wayes. For the word, ſee on Chap. 1. 1. upon the word, Upright.

and it profited me not] So this word is uſed, Eſt. 3. 8. & 5. 13. It agrees with Rom. 6. 21. And there may be more intended. It was the cauſe of my former ſickneſſe, or trouble, and ſo was very hurtfull and prejudiciall to me.

V. 28. He will deliver his ſoul from going into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light] Here is the benefit of true repentance, when man humbles himſelf unfeignedly before God, he brings him out of trouble, and prolongs his life.

The words run in the third perſon, as Elihu's words expreſſing the hope of the penitent ſinner, while Gods hand is yet upon him. But they may be read in the firſt perſon, as the words of the penitent ſinner praiſing God for his deliverance, thus. He hath delivered my ſoul from going into the pit, and my life ſees the light. See the like, Iſa. 38. 17.

He will deliver] The word ſignifies deliverance out of ſlavery, danger, trouble, or captivity.

his ſoule], See on Chap. 14. 22. Himſelf is meant here, for the ſoul goes not into the grave.

from going into] Heb. From going through. See on verſe 18. and on Chap. 15. 19.

the pit] See for this word alſo on verſe 18.

and his life] See for this alſo on verſe 18.

ſhall ſee] See on Chap. 19. 27. on the word, Behold.

the light] He ſhall recover of his ſickneſſe, or eſcape his danger, and live longer to behold the light of the Sun. A periphraſis of life, verſe 30. Chap. 3. 20. Or of proſperity, which is often in Scripture compared to light, which is full of comfort, as trouble is of ſorrow, which diſcomforts men. For the word, ſee on Chap. 17. 12.

V. 29. Loe all theſe things God worketh oftentimes with man] In this verſe and that which followes, is ſummed up what was ſpoken of Gods wayes of diſcovering himſelf to man before. Note, 1. The manner, in this verſe. 2. The end, verſe 30.

Loe] See on Chap. 1. 12. on the word, Behold; for it is the ſame in the originall.

all theſe things] God uſeth all theſe wayes of acquainting men with his will.

worketh], He bringeth them ſtrangely to paſſe.

God] See on Chap. 8. 3. 5.

oftentimes] Heb. twice, thrice. Some take it to be meant of Gods three ſeverall wayes of dealing with men mentioned before. But it is rather a certain number for an uncertain (which is frequent in Scripture) intimating, that God doth often ſpeak to men by each of theſe wayes, if they do not quickly regard him. If one dreame, or affliction, or meſſenger move not a man, he ſends more, ſo that no man could excuſe himſelf by ignorance of Gods proceedings, no not Job himſelf. And therefore he had beſt now to hearken to Elihu Gods meſſenger, leſt God ſend greater afflictions on him.

with man] With one and the ſame man, if he repent not upon the firſt admonition. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14. 10. & 22. 2.

V. 30. To bring back his ſoule from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living] It is likely that Elihu ſpake theſe words, as to bring Job to repent of his raſh ſpeeches againſt God; ſo to put him in hope thereupon of proſperity again.

To bring back his ſoule from the pit] He was as it were buried alive before in his ſickneſſe or troubles, and of no account among men (Pſal. 88. 5.) now God in reſtoring him again, doth as it were bring him out of the grave again. Some underſtand it of reſurrection to eternall life. But that is not ſo likely, for the whole diſpute is about the troubles of the wicked, and proſperity of the godly. For bringing back, ſee on Chap. 15. 13. on the word, Turneſt, and on Chap. 20. 10. on the word, Reſtore. For Soule, ſee on Chap. 14. 22. For the Pit, ſee on verſe 18. of this Chap. It may be read, To turn away his ſoule from the pit. That is, to keep him from death. So this word is uſed, Mal. 2. 6.

to be enlightened] That he may ſee it. Where to walk.

with the light of the living] Pſal. 56. 13. In the light the living is to enjoy this life; and children are ſaid to ſee the light, when they come out of the womb, and begin viſibly to live in the world. Others take it of proſperity. See on verſe 28. For light, ſee on Chap. 17. 12.

V. 31. Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me, hold thy peace, and I will ſpeake] Here is the concluſion of Elihu's oration. Wherein, 1. He exhorts him to attention, in this verſe. 2. He gives him fair leave to reply, verſe 32. 3 He intimates his deſire to proceed, if Job had nothing to reply, verſe 33 Leſt Job ſhould ſay, he was not ſatisfied, Elihu intimates, that he hath more to ſay of this argument, and permits him to reply, or elſe requires audience. So he makes way for his next ſpeech.

Mark well] Give good heed unto my words.

O Job] See on Chap. 1. 1.

hearken unto me] See on chap. 13. 17. on the word hear.

hold thy peace]Do not interrupt me, but anſwer when I have done.

and I will ſpeak] Then I will declare my opinion further in this cauſe, V. 32. If thou haſt any thing to ſay, anſwer me, ſpeak: for I deſire to juſtifie thee] When I have done ſpeaking, if there be any thing thou canſt except againſt, ſpeak boldly, and without fear; for I deſire nothing more then to hear ſuch fair anſwers and weighty reaſons from thee, that I might juſtly clear thee. Thus he ſhews, that although he could not approve of all that Job had ſaid, yet he was more enclined to clear, than to condemn him, and therefore kinder then his other friends, and more worthy to be heard.

If thou haſt any thing to ſay] Heb. If thou haſt words. If thou haſt words to defend thy ſelf, or that make for thee, or for thy cauſe, bring them forth. For words, ſee on Chap. 15. 3. anſwer me] See on Chap. 15. 13. on the word, Turneth, and on Chap. 20. 10. on the word, Reſtore.

ſpeak] I am not afraid to hear, what thou canſt object againſt what I ſay. Speak freely, and defend thy ſelf.

for I deſire to juſtifie thee] What I have ſpoken, is not out of hatred, but love. My deſire is to ſee the buſineſſe ſo carried, that I may pronounce thee juſt.

V. 33. If not, hearken unto me; hold thy peace, and I ſhall teach thee wiſdome] If thou haſt no more to ſay, then hearken to me; neither ſhall thy ſilence and quiet attention repent thee, when thou ſhalt perceive, what wiſdom thou haſt learned by hearkening to me.

If not] If thou haſt no words to anſwer to what I have objected againſt thee.

hearken unto me] See on Chap. 13. 17. on the word, Hear.

hold thy peace] See on verſe 31.

and I ſhall teach thee wiſdom] I ſhall acquaint thee with Gods wiſe proceedings, which thou ſeemeſt hitherto to be ignorant of.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Verſe 1. FUrthermore Elihu anſwered, and ſaid] It is likely that Elihu had now held his peace awhile, to ſee, if Job would give any anſwer, as he had given him leave to do. But ſeeing Job anſwered nothing at all, as ſuppoſing himſelf in part convinced, and wonne, it may be by Elihu's milder dealing with him then his friends had done, he goes on in his ſpeech, in hope to do more good on him. In this ſecond oration of Elihu note, 1. The preface, from verſe 1. to verſe 5. 2. The charge againſt Job, from verſe 5. to verſe 10. 3. The proſecution of it, to verſe 36. 4. The concluſion to the end. In the preface note, 1. A tranſition from Elihu's laſt diſcourſe to this, verſe 1. 2. A petition to Jobs friends for audience, verſe 2, 3. 3. A deſire of a judicious proceeding, verſe 4.

Furthermore] Heb. And.

anſwered] Some conceive it not well tranſlated, because Job had not replyed on him, and therefore Elihu could not anſwer him, but it may well be rendered ſo, for it appears by what followes, that Elihu receiving no anſwer from Job, goes on to anſwer other things out of Jobs former ſpeeches. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

and ſaid] See on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Hear my words, O ye wiſe men, and give ear unto me ye that have knowledge,] Here is Elihu's petition to Jobs friends for audience. He had granted it to them before, and now he deſires the like of them. His deſire is ſet down in this verſe. The reaſon of it, the knowledge of the truth ariſing from thence, verſe 3.

Hear] See on chap. 13. 17.

my words] Which I ſhall further ſpeak in this cauſe.

O ye wiſe men] Some think he ſpeaks to all that were preſent, deſiring that as they had heard Job with patience, ſo they would hear his anſwer, But if many hearers were preſent, it is not likely

Elih

Elihu could call them all wiſe men. But it is moſt probable, that he means Jobs three friends that diſputed before, excluding Job, whom he accuſes before them, verſe 5. He bids them hearken to him, intimating, that though they could not convince Job, yet he would, and themſelves ſhould be Judges. He was angry with them before, but now he gives them good words, to get audience. Or, the words may be taken ironically; Ye thought your ſelves wiſe enough to convince Job; but could not do it, and ſhould have been better able than I by your age and years; now ye have ſhewed your own folly and inability, hearken unto me. See on Chap. 17. 10.

And give ear] See on Chap. 33. 1.

unto me] Do not deſpiſe my words for my youth. 1 Tim. 4. 12.

ye that have knowledge] Ye that are men of experience.

V. 3. For the ear trieth words, as the mouth taſteth meat] Therefore I expect audience from you, becauſe God hath given you ears, whoſe office is to convey words to the ſoul, that it may judge of the truth or falſhood of them. You will be ſure to uſe your palates, to try the taſte of your meat, before ye let it down, why not your ears as well for the uſe which God hath appointed them? They are not given you only to hear the ſound of words, but alſo to help you to the right underſtanding of them. Job ſpake to the ſame purpoſe, and uſed the ſame words, Chap. 12. 11. See for the expoſition of them there. Onely ye may obſerve, that ו which is tranſlated And, might have been tranſlated As, as well as here. So it is rendred, Chap. 5. 7. And often in the book of the Proverbs. And the word trying is a metaphor taken from the Goldſmith, who tries his Gold and Silver by the fire, Something like this verſe is to be found alſo, Job 6. 30. See there.

V. 4. Let us chuſe to us judgement; let us know among our ſelves, what is good] Here is Elihu's ſecond requeſt to Jobs friends, to wit, a deſire of a judicious proceeding in the cauſe. As if he had ſaid, It was Jobs wiſh, that he might have ſome man, with whom he might try the matter in judgement. Go to then, let us take his offer, and having debated the matter to and fro according to equity and juſtice, let us prove and ſee what right it ſelf will afford.

Let us chuſe to us judgement] Let us lay aſide all animoſities and prejudice, and try out the right in thoſe things, which ſhall come in controverſies before us. For judgement, ſee on Chap. 22. 4.

let us know among our ſelves what is good] Let us by mutuall diſcourſe help one another to know whether Jobs opinion or mine be better. For Good, ſee on Chap. 21. 13. upon the word wealth.

V. 5. For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous; and God hath taken away my judgement] The charge againſt Job follows, which is double. The firſt, in verſe 5, 6. The ſecond in verſe 7, 8, 9. In the firſt, are four accuſations, two in this verſe, and two in the next. In this verſe, that he maintained his own righteouſneſs, and accuſed God of unrighteouſneſſe.

For] We had need to weigh the matter well, becauſe Job hath ſpoken dangerous ſpeeches.

Job] See on Chap. 1. 1.

hath ſaid] See on Chap. 16. 1. Where he ſpake theſe words ſhall be required in the particulars.

I am righteous] Job had not ſaid ſo in thoſe words, but his manifold proclaiming of his own righteouſneſſe made Elihu to think that he meant ſo. To this purpoſe ſpeaks Job. chap. 13. 18. & 13. 10. & 27. 6. & 31. 1, &c.

and] Or, But as it is tranſlated, chap. 3. 1.

God hath taken away my judgement] Theſe words Job had ſpoken indeed. Chap. 27. 2. See the interpretation of them there. The Commentators for the moſt part conceive that Elihu miſconſtrues Jobs words, as if he had denied himſelf to be a ſinner; but by Elihu's anſwer he ſeems rather to underſtand aright, what Job had indiſcreetly uttered in ſeverall paſſions, and paſſages, that God had handled him like an ungodly man, and would not let him clear himſelf.

V. 6. Should I lie againſt my right? my wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion.] In this verſe is the third branch of this firſt accuſation, a further maintainance of his own right; and the fourth a further charging of God with unrighteouſneſs.

Should I lie againſt my right] Should I being innocent, or a godly man, confeſs my ſelf to be a wicked man, and ſo betray my right? I will never do it. Job had not ſaid ſo in theſe words, but had ſpoken to this purpoſe, Chap. 27. 4, 5, 6, Which place it is like Elihu intends here. For the word Lie, ſee on chap. 24. 25. For Right, ſee on Chap. 22. 4. on the word Judgement.

my wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion] Neither are theſe words found together any where in Scripture, but ſeem to be gathered together out of ſeverall places. The former part of them out of Chap. 6. 4. & 16. 13. The latter, out of Chap. 9. 17. & 16. 17. For Wound, which in Hebrew is Arrow, ſee on Chap. 6. 4. The wound made in me by Gods arrow is incurable. Pſal. 38. 2, 3. Deut. 32. 23. Jer. 15. 18. For Tranſgreſſion, ſee on Chap. 7. 21.

V. 7. What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning like water?] Now follows Elihu's ſecond charge againſt Job. He makes way to it by vilifying Jobs perſon, verſe 7, 8. Propounds it verſe 9. He diſgraces him, 1. From his practice in this verſe. 2. From his aſſociates, verſe 8. He ſpeaks out of admiration, and indignation, to make Jobs friends the more out of love with him. As if he had ſaid, I wonder that Job is not aſhamed to ſhew himſelf more impudent then any man, in ſcoffing againſt God and men, and giving them juſt occaſion by his falſe and blaſphemous ſpeeches to load him with ſcornes. The one he doth, the other he beareth, as willingly and plentifully as a thirſty man drinks up water.

What man] No man is ſo impudent. An high expreſſion of indignation. For Man, ſee on Chap. 14. 10. & 22. 2.

is like] Durſt ſpeak ſo ſtrangely as he hath done? Hath any of you heard the like?

who drinketh up ſcorning like water?] Who leaves no ſcorns againſt God, unuttered, nor refuſes to bear any from men juſtly provoked againſt him for his evill ſpeeches; as a thirſty man drinks up all the water before him, and never thinks he hath enough. For the words ſee on Chap. 15. 16. Others read the whole verſe thus, What man like Job would drink up ſcorning like water? That is, what man of Jobs parts and wiſdom would do it? It may be fooles may. But the Athnah on the word Job in the originall, ſhews the firſt reading to be beſt. Drinking up ſcorning, is like drinking damage Prov. 26. 6. Drinking wine of violence. Prov. 4. 17. And drinking it like water argues plenty and abundance, as chap. 3. 24.

V. 8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men] Elihu's intent here was not to charge Job with keeping bad company in his proſperity, but with thinking hardly of God in adverſity, as ungodly men uſe to do, when they are plagued for their ſinfull courſes.

Which goeth in company] Keepeth the ſame way as it were with them, and delights in ſpeaking evill of God, as if he were one joyned in a league with them, That is, he thinks as they do, Chap. 21. 14. & 22. 17. Mal. 3. 14. That it is in vain to ſerve God, as appears by the charge in the next verſe, with the workers of iniquity. See on Chap. 16. 3. & 15. 35. upon the word, vanity. Yet here it is better tranſlated iniquity, for the charge is the heavier, and it is more ſuitable to the end of the verſe.

and walketh] See on Chap. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth.

with wicked men] Heb. with men of wickedneſſe. That is, the worſer ſort of them that make a trade of ſin. For men, ſee on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

V. 9. For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God] Here it is a freſh charge upon Job, that he had affirmed that he was never the better for his former delight in the ſervice of God, but as roughly handled as if he had been a moſt ungodly man.

For he] Job.

hath ſaid] For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1. Job had not ſaid thoſe words any where, but ſuch as might eaſily bear ſuch a ſenſe, without a very favourable conſtruction. And the rather, becauſe they came from a diſcontented ſpirit. Elihu now accuſeth him of diſcouraging men from the ſervice of God, and gathers it out of Jobs ſpeeches, Chap. 9. 22. & 21. 7, 8. & 30. 26. Wherein he had affirmed that God deſtroyed good men as well as bad, and proſpered evill men, and afflicted him. From whence Elihu collects, that he thought it an unprofitable thing to ſerve God.

it profiteth a man nothing] He gets nothing at all by it, and therefore as good not do it. For a man, ſee on Chap. 14. 10. & 22. 2.

that he ſhould delight himſelf with God] That he ſhould take pleaſure in worſhipping God, and walking with him. For God, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 11. 5.

V. 70. Therefore hearken unto me ye men of underſtanding: far be it from God, that he ſhould do wicdkedneſſe, and from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit iniquity] Now begins Elihu's confutation of thoſe evill opinions which he had faſtned on Job before. Wherein 1. Elihu ſpeaks to Jobs friends, to verſe 16. 2. To Iob himſelf directly, to verſe 34. 3. To his friends again, verſe 35, 35. In the firſt part, he diſproves Iobs opinion that God had done him wrong, regarded not thoſe that ſerved him, more then others. 1. By an argument taken from Gods juſtice, verſe 10, 11, 12. 2. From his authority and power, verſe 13, 14, 15. From Gods juſtice. 1. From the inconſiſtencie of injuſtice with Gods nature, in this verſe. 2. With his actions, verſe 11. 3. With his will, verſe 12. So that though in regard of his power he could, yet certainly he will not wrong Job, nor any man elſe, but will regard his ſervants more then others. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if Elihu had ſaid, ye who are men of diſcretion and wiſdom, hearken unto me while I confute Iobs wicked opinion. God forbid that any of us ſhould think ſo ill of God, as that he who is indeed Almighty, and in whom no good thing is wanting, ſhould abuſe his might and power, to do any thing unjuſt, or unbeſeeming him.

Therefore hearken unto me] Seeing Iob hath uttered ſuch ſtrange things againſt God, give audience to me with quietneſſe, that ſpeak for God. Thus Elihu, like a cunning Oratour in a weighty cauſe, often ſtirres up others to attention. For the word hearken, ſee on Chap. 13. 17. on the word hear.

ye men of underſtanding] Heb. ye men of heart. The Philoſophers ſay, that men laugh with the ſpleen, are angry with the gall, love with the liver, are wiſe with the heart, brag with the lungs. See on Chap. 11. 12. And for men, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2. For heart, on Chap. 15. 12.

that he ſhould commit iniquity] That he ſhould deny juſtice to any, or puniſh any without a cauſe, or deal alike with good men and bad For iniquity, ſee on Chap. 13. 7. on the word, wickedly.

V. 11. For the work of a man ſhall he render unto him, and cauſe every man to find according to his wayes] For God is ſo far from dealing unjuſtly, or doing any man wrong, that he rewardeth every man accordng to his work. As they ſow, ſo they ſhall reap.

For the work] Or, For according to the work, as in the end of the verſe. Elſe the work muſt be put for the reward of the work, as Rev.14.13.

according to his wayes] According to the courſe of his life, and not according to ſome one particular action.

V. 12. Yea ſurely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgement] But take this for an undoubted truth, that God is ſo exact in giving every man his due, that he will never turn aſide from that way in all his dealings with men, neither ſhall any man have any juſt cauſe to complain of him, how hardly ſoever he deal with him.

Yea ſurely] There is no queſtion to be made of it. He that ſhall deny this truth, he deſerves not to be diſputed withall. And this truth confeſſed, will quickly end the buſineſs in queſtion.

will not do wickedly] Will not do unjuſtly. Or, will not condemn. To wit, a good man, that is, not to be condemned So Exod. 34. 7. God will by no means clear. To wit, the guilty, that ought not to be cleared.

neither will the Almighty pervert judgement] All theſe words are expounded on Chap.8. 3. See there.

V. 13. Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath diſpoſed the whole world?] Here begins Elihu's ſecond argument, to prove, that God would not do Job nor any other man wrong; taken from his ſoveraigne authority over all men, which is ſet out, 1. By the ſupremacy and abſoluteneſſe of it in this World, in this verſe. 2 By the irreſiſtableneſſe of it, verſe 14. 15. The ſumme of this verſe is, that God cannot deale unjuſtly with any, becauſe he is abſolute, and may do what he will with the creatures; neither is there any above him, who gave him this charge over men, and may call him to account for not dealing well in his office. Therefore either God muſt be juſt, or all the world will be in a confuſion without redreſſe.

VVho hath given him a charge over the earth?] Who hath committed the earth, and the inhabitants of it to God, to be ordered by him, or who hath commanded him to take care thereof? Surely no body. It is his right by Creation, and there being none above him, none can expoſtulate with him about injuſtice. See the like phraſe, Chap.36.23. 2 Chron. 36. 23. Ezr. 1. 2. Heb. VVho hath laid the charge of the earth upon him. For Earth, ſee on Chapter 9. 24.

who hath diſpoſed the whole world] Heb. all of it. Or, who hath placed him over the whole world? Who hath laid the charge of the whole world upon him? Repeating upon him out of the former part of the verſe. For World, ſee on Chap.18 18.

V. 14. If he ſet his heart upon man, if he gather unto him his ſpirit, and his breath] There is no power in any man to reſiſt God. Every man had his life from him, and he can do no man wrong in taking it away again. And therefore Job hath no juſt cauſe to complain of God for afflicting, who may kill him how and when he pleaſe, without rendring any reaſon to him.

If he ſet his heart upon man] If he have a purpoſe to deſtroy him. See on Chap. 7. 17. For heart, ſee on Chap. 15. 12. Heb. upon him. That is, upon man, as appears by verſe 11. & 15.

if he gather unto himſelf] God gives life and breath unto a man, and when he takes it away again, he is ſaid to gather it to himſelfe. The meaning is, when he takes away his life, Pſal. 104. 29. Eccl. 12.7. See the like phraſe, Pſal.26.9. For the word, gather, ſee on Chap. 27 19.

his ſpirit] If he take away his ſoul out of his body. For the word, ſee on Chap.15 2. upon vain knowledge.

and his breath] See on Chap.33.4. Others read the whole verſe thus. If he ſet his heart againſt man, he will gather unto himſelf his ſpirit and his breath. That is, if God ſhould ſet himſelf to enquire into the faults of any mans life, or reſolve to proceed againſt him as an enemy, he would ſoon make an end of him the ſtouteſt man could not reſiſt him. Others underſtand it of ſetting Gods heart upon himſelf. If he ſhould not be mercifull to man, but look only at his own glory, he might ſoon deſtroy all mankind.

V. 15. All fleſh ſhall periſh together, and man ſhall turn again unto duſt] When God takes away the ſoul and breath, then all men without exception muſt needs die, and the ſoul-leſſe body fall to the earth out of which it was taken, Gen. 3.19. Eccl. 12. 7.

V. 16. If now thou haſt underſtanding, hear this: hearken to the voyce of my words] Now Elihu turns his ſpeech from Jobs friends to Job himſelf, and comes cloſer to him to grapple with him, from hence to verſe 34. And 1. He calls anew for audience in this verſe. 2. He proceeds to new arguments, verſe 17, &c. to verſe 34. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if he had ſaid. Now O Job I come nearer to thee. If therefore thou haſt any wit or right underſtanding left in thee, hearken and give ear unto thoſe things, which thou ſhalt hear me ſpeak.

If now thou haſt underſtanding] See on Chap. 28. 28.

hearken to the voyce of my words] See on Chap.33.8. And for, hearken, on Chap.33.1.

V. 17. Shall even he that hateth right govern, and wilt thou condemn him, that is moſt juſt?] Elihu now ſeeks. 1. To convince Job of injury done to God, from this verſe to verſe 31. 2. He teacheth him how to carry himſelf better from verſe 31. to verſe 34. In the firſt part. 1. He argues from Gods juſt government, in this verſe and verſe 18. 2. From the effects of it, from verſe 19. to verſe 31 In theſe two verſes. 1. He propounds Gods government in this verſe. 2. He illuſtrates it by princes rule, verſe 18. In this verſe 1. He ſhewes the unfitneſſe of injuſtice in a ruler. 2. He aſſerts the contrary in God. As if he had ſaid, Tell me I pray thee, doſt thou think him worthy of the name of a ruler or judge, who deteſteth juſtice; by which all lawfull authority is maintained? And what wickedneſſe, yea what madneſſe is it, that thou ſhouldeſt dare to charge him with any unjuſt, or wrongfull dealing, who only is moſt juſt and moſt mighty?

that is moſt juſt] Or, That is ſtrong and juſt. And therefore ſhould by no means be condemned. For Moſt, ſee on Chap. 8. 2. on the word ſtrong And on Chap.31,25 on the word, Much.

V. 18. Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked? and to Princes, ye are ungodly.] Kings and Princes expect ſuch great reſpect from their ſubjects, that no man ſhould dare to cenſure them, though they deal unjuſtly with them. How much more unfit is it then to taxe God of injuſtice (as thon O Job haſt done) who is greater then they, and alwayes proceeds juſtly.

Is it fit?] This is not in the originall, but added by the interpreters to make up the ſence. How unfit it is, appears by Gods law to the contrary. Exod.22. 28.

thou art wicked] Heb. Belial. A name given to the devill in the new Teſtament. 2 Cor.6,15. Some derive it from a word that ſignifies, without yoke; others, without profit. It ſignifies a very wicked man, that will be ruled by no law, nor is good for nothing. Some read it thus, who ſaith to a King thou art wicked. And make it depend thus on the former words. Wilt thou condemn him of injuſtice, that is ſo juſt, that he ſpares not to tell Kings and Princes of their wickedneſſe?

and to Princes] Inferiour rulers under Kings, or of lower ranke See on Chap.21.28.

V. 19. How much leſſe to him, that accepteth not the perſon of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor? For they all are the work of his hands.] He now ſhewes Gods juſtice by the effects of it from this verſe, and to verſe 31, And that 1, Upon Princes in this verſe,

The ſumme of this verſe is, if it be not fit to ſay ſo to an earthly King, who may deſerve ſuch language by his injuſtice, how much leſſe to an heavenly King, who as he is the maker of all, ſo need he not nor doth he prefer great ones before meaner men in judgement?

V. 20. In a moment ſhall they die, and the people ſhall be troubled at midnight, and paſſe away: and the mighty ſhall be taken away without hand] In this verſe is ſet out Gods judgement upon a nation, and the equity of it, in the two verſes following. This verſe ſets out the ſudden time, and ſtrange manner of the deſtruction of the people. The time, ſudden in a moment; unexpected at midnight. The manner various, by death, trouble, paſſing away, taking away ſtrangely. As if Elihu had ſaid, we ſee wonderfull, ſudden, and generall alterations, not onely in one man or family, but in whole towns and Cities, ſometimes one people, ſometimes another falling to decay even in a moment, and being driven out of their own country utterly to periſh: yea and the mightieſt Princes, without any humane violence offered unto them, to be cut off, and to come to nothing.

In a moment ſhall they die] They ſhall die ſuddenly, and that both great and mean ones, not only particular perſons, but whole nations alſo, when God will, who doth what he will, and no man can hinder him. Gen. 19. 23, 24. For a moment ſee on Chap. 21 13.

and the people of a town ſhall be troubled at midnight] All the people of a town or City, notwithſtanding their combination, when they are in a deep ſleep in the midſt of the night, and ſecure not fearing nor ſuſpecting any harm ſhall come into trouble: and ſhake as leaves in a great wind. Chap. 27. 20. See there Exod. 12. 29. & 2 King. 19. 35.

V. 21. For his eyes are upon the wayes of man, and he ſeeth all his goings] The equity of this judgement appears, in that God knowing all their ways moſt exactly, as in this verſe and ſo as he cannot be deceived, verſe 22, no doubt ſees a juſt cauſe to inflict ſuch an heavie judgement on them.

V. 22. There is no darkneſſe, nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves.] Wicked men after they have ſinned, will like Adam leave no corner unſearched to hide themſelves for ſhame and fear; but all in vain; for there is no darkneſs, not the moſt deadly, that can hinder God from beholding them, to bring them out to judgement, no not the grave it ſelfe. Much leſs then can they find any place ſo ſecret to ſin in, where God cannot ſee them in the act of evill.

V. 23. For he will not lay upon man more than right; that he ſhould enter into judgement with God.] Now he proceeds to the effects of Gods juſtice upon ſome particular great men. And firſt he takes away the exception that the party afflicted might take against Gods proceeding with him in this verſe. 2. He layes down the judgement it ſelf. verſe 24. 3. The juſt ground of it, verſe 25. The ſumme of this verſe is. O! Job thou thinkeſt thou haſt juſt cauſe to contend with God for afflicting thee ſo heavily, but thou art deceived; for God never gives any man juſt cauſe to commence a ſuit againſt him.

For he will not lay upon any man more than right] God will not afflict any man above his deſert (or above his ſtrength to beare, as others interpret it) that ſo man might have juſt cauſe to conplain of him, Ezr. 9. 13. Or, God will not let man (or, man muſt not) ſet his heart any more, to wit, to contend with God in judgement, as thou, O Job, haſt often deſired to do. as Chap. 13. 3. & 23. 3, 4. V. 24. He ſhall break in pieces mighty men without number, and ſet others in their ſtead] God need not regard how ſtrong ungodly men be, nor how many, for he can eaſily ruine them, and preferre others.

he ſhall break in pieces] Like a Potters veſſel. Pſal. 2. 9. Jerem. 15 12.

without number] He will give iunumerable examples of his great power, in deſtroying the greateſt ungodly perſons. Heb. without ſearching out. So that no man is able to tell the number of them. Others underſtand it of the incomprehenſibleneſs of the way of Gods doing, ſo that man ſees it done. but knowes not how it is done, or why Others that God needs not enquire into the matter, as Judges do, for he knows cauſe enough to ruine them. Others take it for without end, ſo that their ruine is endleſs. The firſt is the beſt, becauſe this phraſe is often joyned with number, as chap. 5. 9. & 9 10. & 36 26.

others] Men of low degree and rank.

in their ſtead] In their room, or place, or dignity. Pſal. 113. 7, 8. Dan. 2. 21.

V. 25. Therefore he knoweth their works and he overturneth them in the night, ſo that they are deſtroyed] God takes notice of their ungodly actions, that he may have juſt occaſion to deſtroy them.

therefore he knoweth] Some underſtand it of Gods making other men to take notice of their ſins by his great judgements on them. But the word rather ſignifies taking notice of a thing, as chap. 21. 29 & 24. 13. Theſe great men thought before, that God took no notice of their wayes, but now they may ſee he doth when he deſtroyes them moſt juſtly for their wicked works.

their works] Their ſinfull actions, for which he overthrowes them.

and he overturneth them in the night] That is, ſuddenly, and unexpectedly. See on verſe 20. Others read it, And he turneth into night. That is, he turneth their proſperity into adverſity. Others, and he turneth the night, to wit, into day he takes away the dark covers of their ſins, and makes them known to all men. See on verſe 22. Others, And when the night is turned, then they are deſtroyed. That is, they periſh as ſoon and as eaſily as the day gives place to the night.

ſo that they are deſtroyed] Heb. cruſhed. As it is tranſlated chapter 4. 19.

V. 26. He ſtriketh them as wicked men in the open ſight of others.] Now he comes to Gods ends in theſe proceedings againſt ungodly men. 1. For the terrour of others, in this verſe 2. To puniſh them for their impiety, verſe 27. 3. For their cruelty, verſe 28. 4. To give reſt to others, verſe 29. 5. To keep the people from further ſnares, verſe 30. The ſenſe of this verſe is, that God handles wicked men as their ſins deſerve; and that not privily, but openly making them a ſpectacle to the whole world.

he ſtriketh them] The word imports ſuch a grievous ſtroak, as that men ſhall admire it, and clap their hands at it in deteſtation. Chap 27. 23.

So executions were wont to be done, and are ſtill in publick places, where all may ſee, that others may tremble, and acknowledge the acts of juſtice. Others underſtand it of that delight, which others ſhould take in the deſtruction of theſe ungodly men; as the words may be taken, Obad ver. 12 For Place, ſee on Chap. 18. 21. & 20 9. For Beholding, ſee on Chap. 19. 27.

V, 27. Becauſe they have turned back from him, and would not conſider any of his wayes] Here is one cauſe of Gods ruining them, to wit, their groſſe and affected ignorance and impiety, When men turn their backs to Gods lawes, and their faces to their own luſts, then they grow extreamly wicked.

Becauſe] That for ſo. That is, for that they were ſo wicked. So For not, for Not for Chap. 16. 17. See there.

they turned back] Or, departed See on chap. 1. 1.

from him] Heb from after him. That is, from following after him. They would not be guided by Gods word, as they ſhould have been.

and would not conſider any of his wayes] They had no deſire at all to know thoſe good wayes in which God commanded them to walk. See on chap. 21. 14. See the like Pſal. 28. 5. Iſa. 5. 12.

V. 28. So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted] They are ſo extream wicked, that they not only neglect Gods worſhip, but alſo do ſo grievouſly oppreſſe the poor, that they cry unto God for vengeance, which he accordingly executes on theſe ungodly ones. Exod. 2. 23, 24. & 3. 7. 9.

ſo that they] the ungudly men ſpoken of verſe 27.

and he heareth] See on chap. 13. 17.

the cry] See before in this verſe.

of the afflicted] See on chap. 22. 6 & 24. 9.

V. 29. When he giveth quietneſſ, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done againſt a nation, or againſt a man onely?] It appears that God rejects not the cry of the poor, becauſe he gives them reſt, and ſuch reſt, as no man can diſturb. As on the contrary, if he ſend trouble, no man can find comfort, no not whole nations any more than one particular man.

When he giveth quietneſſe] Heb. VVhen he maketh quiet. When he ſets men that were oppreſſed before, in ſuch a condition, that they may be free from fear or ſadneſs.

who then can make trouble] Who can diſeaſe thoſe to whom God gives eaſe, or who can move them out of their quiet eſtate? Iſa. 14. 3, 4. & 32. 15. So this word הרשיע is uſed, 1 Sam. 14 47. and tranſlated vexing. Sometimes it is tranſlated condemning, as ver. 17. of this chapter. Sometimes doing wickedly, as ver. 12. All theſe ſignifications depend one on another. Becauſe men do wickedly, therefore the Judges condemn them; and becauſe they condemn them, therefore the executioners puniſh them It muſt be troubling here, becauſe it is oppoſed to quieting, not to clearing, or wel-doing.

and when he hideth his face] when in his anger, he doth as it were turn his face away from a man, or nation, and leaves them in their miſeries refuſing to help them, or to deliver them. Pſal. 10. 1. & 13. 1 See on Chap. 13. 24.

who then can behold him] who can look upon him, as on a friend ſmiling on him, or look for help from him? Pſal. 34. 5. others underſtand it of the man in trouble. No man will look kindly on him, on whom God frowns. And that by way of oppoſition anſwers well to the beginning of the verſe.

whether it be done againſt a nation] God is not like man, who cannot ſometimes execute juſtice becauſe of the multitude of offenders. He can as eaſily puniſh a whole nation, as a particular man. verſe 20. Chap. 12. 23. or, for a nation. So this particle is uſed, Gen. 37. 8 Pſal. 32. 6. and in this Chap. verſe 36.

againſt a man] See on Chap. 14. 1.

onely] So this word יחד may be tranſlated. Ezra 4. 3. Pſal. 33. 15. And ſo it muſt here in regard of the oppoſition of one man to a whole nation. Yet commonly it is tranſlated together, as Chap. 24. 4. See more on Chap. 21. 26 on the word, Alike.

V. 30. That the hypocrite reigne not leſt the people be enſnared]. Leſt any man ſhould think, that God may pull down the people and common men of no great power, but hardly Kings and great ones this is added to ſhew, that God ſometimes pulls them down alſo for the eaſe of the people, over whom they have tyrannized.

That the hypocrite] or, the profane man. See on Chap. 8. 13.

reigne not] Reign no longer: for he ſpeaks not of keeping them from the crown, but of taking it away from ſuch.

leſt the people be enſnared] Not by their bad life and example as ſome would have it, but leſt the people by their tyrannous courſes loſe their liberties. Or becauſe of the ſnares of the people. That is, God revengeth the peoples wrongs, and pulls Kings down for oppreſſing ſubjects. The word Snares properly ſignifies ſuch as hunters lay, or fowlers to catch beaſts, or birds. So have tyrants crafty inventions to undoe the people.

V. 31. Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God I have borne chaſtiſment, I will not offend any more] Elihu having as he conceived, convinced Job of injury done to God, now gives him counſell how to carry himſelf more humbly toward him for time to come. verſe 31, 32. And 1. To acknowledge his errour to God in this verſe. 2. To ſeek for further information from God. verſe 32. 3. To confeſs the raſhneſs of his judgement in Gods proceedings. verſe 33. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if Elihu had ſaid to Job. Thou ſhouldeſt not in this manner have ſtrived with God, or accuſed him of unjuſt dealing with thee (as v. 5.) but rather ſhouldſt have ſaid, thou haſt afflicted me, and I take it patiently, and not ſo onely, but will amend by thy corrections, and not corrupt my wayes, as formerly I have done. Piſcator reads it thus, Hath Job ſaid to God I have borne. As if he had ſaid, ye all are witneſſes, that Job hath not humbled himſelfe under Gods correcting hand, but rather accuſed God of injuſtice. Deodate, Surely thou ſhouldeſt addreſſe thy ſelf unto God, who ſaith, I pardon, I will not deſtyoy. Saying, as verſe 32.

V. 23. That which I ſee not, teach thou me; if I have done iniquity, I will do no more] He teacheth Job, what he ſhould further ſay to God, to wit, that he ſhould pray for a diſcovery of his ſecret ſins, and promiſe amendment.

V. 33. Should it be according to thy mind? he will recompence it whether thou refuſe or whether thou chooſe, and not I, therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt] This verſe may be read many other wayes, as thus, ſhould he reward it according to thy mind? though thou haſt deſpiſed the one, and choſen the other, yet will not I; therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt. That is, why ſhould God reward ſin, as thou wouldeſt have him do it? though thou haſt refuſed to ſubmit to Gods mercy, and calleſt for juſtice, yet I dare not do ſo: If thou know better teach me. Or thus, Should it come from thee, how he ſhould recompence it, when thou haſt refuſed his correction? but thou ſhalt chooſe, and not I: therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt. Shouldſt thou that haſt ſinned, and refuſeſt to be corrected, teach God how he ſhould correct thee? Thou mayeſt think ſo, but I do not. Shew me better if thou canſt. Or thus. Should that come from thee, which he will puniſh? I ſpeak it, becauſe thou haſt refuſed Gods correction, becauſe thou haſt choſen that which I would not; now ſpeak what thou knoweſt. Why ſhouldeſt thou ſpeak againſt Gods proceedings, to bring further trouble upon thee? My deſire of eaſing thee is the cauſe why I ſpeak thus. I ſhould never have accuſed God, as thou haſt done, if I had been ſo handled by him. But if thou haſt any thing to except againſt what I ſay, ſpeak freely. The like leave he had given him, Chap. 33 5. Or thus; Did ſuch a ſpeech come from thee? he will recompence it, that thou haſt rejected him; but thou chooſeſt this way, and not I: now ſpeak what thou knoweſt. I never heard thee ſpeak ſo humbly as I have taught thee (ver. 31, 32. Surely God will puniſh thee; becauſe thou haſt ſpoken proudly againſt his proceedings with thee. But this is nothing to me, who like not of ſuch courſes. If thou canſt defend thy ſelf, ſo do. The reaſon of ſo many various interpretations, is the conciſeneſſe of the Hebrew tongue, which leaves many words to be added by the Interpreters, who not knowing the manner of ſpeech in thoſe remoter times, muſt needs differ in their Tranſlations. The ſenſe of the words, as they ſtand in our Tranſlations, ſhall now be ſhewed in the particulars.

Should it be?] Should Gods correction be?

according to thy minde] Heb. from with thee. As thou wouldeſt have it. See the like phraſe, Hoſ. 8. 4. He will recompence it, whether thou refuſe, or whether thou chooſe, and not I. He will puniſh thee for thy ſins, whether thou be willing, or unwilling. It is not my doing, but his, and therefore thou muſt not be angry with me for ſaying ſo.

therefore] So this particle is tranſlated, Chap. 35. 16.

ſpeak what thou knoweſt] Say what thou canſt for thy ſelf, yet it will be to little purpoſe, God will have his will.

V. 34. Let men of underſtanding tell me, and let a wiſe man hearken unto me] Here Elihu turns his ſpeech to Jobs friends again, deſiring their conſent to what he ſaid, not doubting but they would give it, becauſe he was confident that he ſaid right, and they were wiſe enough to apprehend it. He ſpeaks as one perſwaded that all wiſe men will be of his mind, and therefore Job muſt be fooliſh, if he yield not to him. The thing wherein he ſuppoſes all wiſe men will agree with him, is expreſſed verſe 35. That Job had ſpoken fooliſhly.

Let men of underſtanding] Heb. of heart. See on verſe 10. And on Chap. 9.4. & 11. 12. Or, men of underſtanding will. I am confident wiſe men men will ſay as I do.

tell me] Or, ſay with me. That is, ſay as I do. So this particle ל is uſed for, with, Gen. 46. 26. Exod. 34. 12. Numb. 18. 11.

hearken unto me] Broughton reads, it, and the wiſe perſon that hears me. For the word, hearken] See on Chap. 13. 17. on the word, heare.

V. 35. Job hath ſpoken without knowledge, and his words were without wiſdom] Here he ſhewes wherein he expected the conſent of all wiſe men, that had heard Jobs ſpeeches, and his anſwers, and that he doubts not but that they will confeſſe that he hath done that which Jobs three friends could not, to wit, that he had convinced Job of fooliſh ſpeeches uttered againſt God. See the like charge, Chap. 35. 16.

Job Or, That Job. For that particle is often underſtood, as verſe 36. For Job, ſee on Chap. 1. 1.

hath ſpoken without knowledge] Heb. not in knowledge. That is, fooliſhly.

and his words were without wiſdom] Heb. not in wiſdom. That is, unwiſely. He hath uttered many things unwiſely concerning God in his former ſpeeches, as I have proved.

V. 36. My deſire is, that Job may be tried unto the end, becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men] In this verſe and the next is, the concluſion of the Chapter, and of this ſpeech of Elihu. His deſire is ſet down in this verſe. The reaſons in the laſt verſe. It is likely he thought that Job was not yet fully ſatisfied, he deſires therefore that he may be further tryed, eſpecially about thoſe anſwers which he gave concerning, or like unto wicked men in the point of Gods providence. Others conceive that Elihu ſaw ſome diſcontented ſignes in Jobs countenance, and therefore deſires God to continue afflicting of him, till he ſubmit, and ſpeak better of God. But it is not likely that Elihu would wiſh the continuance of Jobs ſorrows, who ſtill declared his deſire, that Job might clear himſelf, and be eaſed.

My deſire is] So this word is uſed, Chap. 9. 26. The ſwift ſhips, Heb. The ſhips of deſire. From אבה with the affix ה being loſt according to the cuſtome of the language, is made אבי. Others read it, My Father let Job be tried. But that title was not then ſo ordinarily given to God by particular men. Neither doth he deſire triall from God by afflicting Job, but by men by diſputing with him.

may be tried] That his anſwers about ungodly men may be further ſcanned. So the word is uſed for ſearching out the true ſenſe of words ver. 3. and Chap. 12. 11. See there.

unto the end] Throughly, or to the utmoſt. Or, unto victory Till he be overcome, and forced to confeſſe his folly. Let him ſpeak as much as he can, that we may anſwer him fully, and ſo ſtop the mouthes of all wicked men, that ſpeak as he doth, to Gods diſhonour.

becauſe of] Or, concerning. For his intent is to call Job to further account for his former ſpeeches. So this word is uſed, Chap. 36. 33.

his anſwers] Thoſe anſwers which he gave to his friends before. It comes from a word that ſignifies to return, for anſwers are returned to former objections or arguments.

for wicked men] In defence of them, to encourage them in their ſins, by blazing out their proſperity. Or, in the buſineſſe of wicked men. Which he hath given in that point. So this particle is uſed for of, or concerning, chap. 26. 14. Pſal. 90. 13. Or, among wicked men. Such anſwers as he agrees in with wicked men. This was by Elihu charged on Job, verſe 8. ſee there. So is this word uſed, 1 King. 9. 7. Heb. men of wickedneſſe. For men, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2. For wickedneſſe, ſee on chap. 16. 3. & 15. 35. on the word, vanity.

V. 37. For he addeth rebellion unto his ſin, he clappeth his hands amongſt us, and multiplyeth his words againſt God] Three cauſes are here given why Job ſhould be throughly ſifted. 1. His great impatience in himſelf. 2. His proud inſulting over men. 3. His high words againſt God.

For he addeth rebellion unto his ſinne He ſinned more lightly, and out of ignorance before, but now he growes moſt impatient and outragious. Or, For elſe he will adde. If he be not convinced, he will grow worſe and worſe. Or, as the Dutch hath it. For ſhould he adde rebellion to his ſinne, he would clap, &c. Should he grow worſe, as it is likely he will, if he be not throughly dealt withall, it is likely he will triumph more over us, and inſult more againſt God. No ground will hold him.

rebellion] Sinning with an high hand. See on Chap. 7. 21.

unto his ſinne] To his former ſinnes of errour, as that word primarily ſignifies, though uſed ſometimes more largely. See on chap. 7. 20 & 14. 16.

he clappeth his hands amongſt us] He would inſult over us if we ſhould thus leave him, as if he had been too hard for us all in diſputing. See on chap. 27. 23.

and multiplyeth his words againſt God] He would ſpeak more, or greater words againſt God than ever yet he did. For the word may ſignifie either. See on Chap. 32. 9. & 33. 12. The particle ל is tranſlated againſt Chap 8. 4. For God, ſee on Chap. 8. 3. 5.

CHAP. XXXV.

Verſe 1. Elihu ſpake moreover and ſaid) This is the third and ſhorteſt oration of Elihu. 1. In this verſe is the writers Preface. 2. A confutation 1. of one ſpeech of Jobs, from verſe 2. to verſe 9. 2. Of another, from verſe 10. to verſe 14. 3. Of a third, verſe 14. to the end.

Moreover] Heb. and. When Elihu had ceaſed a while, and expected what Job would anſwer to his former ſpeech and perceived that he did not offer to ſpeak, he begins to charge him afreſh.

Elihu] See on chap. 32. 2.

ſpake and ſaid] See on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Thinkeſt thou this to be right, that thou ſayedſt, my righteouſneſſe is more then Gods?] The charge is firſt produced, verſe 2, 3. 2. Anſwered from verſe 4. to verſe 9. In the producing of it, 1. It is laid down, verſe 2. 2. Proved, verſe 3.

Thinkeſt thou this to be right?] Canſt thou in thine own conſcience think thou haſt ſaid well in this? Sure thou canſt not. For right, ſee on chap. 22. 4. on the word, judgement.

my righteouſneſſe is more then Gods] This Job had not directly ſaid, but he gathers it by conſequence out of other words of Job, which he cites, verſe 3. By his righteouſneſſe he means the righteouſneſſe of his cauſe, not of his perſon, which he durſt not compare with Gods; and it was too much to compare with God in his cauſe too. Elihu gathers, that he did ſo, becauſe he had ſo often commended his own righteouſneſs, and complained of Gods hard dealing with him, and therefore by conſequence he preferred the juſtice of his cauſe before Gods. Heb. My righteouſneſſe is before Gods] For God ſee on chap. 8. 3. 5.

V. 3. For thou ſayeaſt, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſinne?] Thou haſt declared, that thou art of that opinion, that there is no good to be gotten by leaving ſinfull courſes.

for thou ſayeaſt] Job had not ſaid ſo in direct termes, but he gathered it out of divers ſpeeches, of his, as Chap. 9. 22. & 10. 15. Wherein he puts no difference between good men and courſes, and bad men and courſes. Upon which it followed, that no good was to be gotten by leaving ill wayes. And upon that it followed, that Job was more righteous than God, verſe 2. Becauſe he ſtudied to pleaſe God, as became a good man to do, and God inſtead of rewarding him, as he did other good men, afflicted him, as he uſed to do to wicked men. For Saying, look on Chap. 16. 1.

what advantage will it be to thee] He brings in Job asking himſelf, what good he could get by piety? As if he had ſaid, No good was to be gotten by it. See on Chap. 34. 9.

and what profit ſhall I have] See on chap. 21. 15.

If I be cleanſed from my ſin] Theſe words, if I be cleanſed, are not in the originall, but neceſſary to be added. Elſe Job ſhould ask, what good he ſhould get by his ſins; which were a ſtrange queſtion for him to ask, and nothing at all to the preſent diſpute. Others read, what profit ſhall I have by it, more then by my ſin? That is, what good can I get by well-doing more then by ill-doing? For ſin ſee on chap. 34. 37.

V. 4. I will anſwer thee, and thy companions with thee] Here begins the anſwer to the wicked opinion object to Job, ver. 3. Wherein is, firſt, a promiſe of an anſwer in this verſe. 2. The anſwer it ſelf, from ver. 5. to ver. 9. In this verſe he ſignifies to Job, that he had matter enough to anſwer him, & all his partners in ſuch abſurdities.

I will anſwer thee] In thoſe queſtions, which thou haſt propounded. For to thoſe only he anſwers, and not to the charge, verſe 2. of Jobs being more righteous than God in his own opinion, becauſe that leaned upon no other ground, but theſe queſtions, verſe 3. So that to overthrow theſe was to overthrow the whole foundation. Heb. I will return thee words. For anſwer, ſee on chap. 15. 13. on the word, Turneſt, and on chap. 20. 10. on the word, Reſtore.

and thy companions with thee] Some underſtand it of his three friends., who had diſputed with him, & having ſaid little to this particular, had as it were betrayed the cauſe, and by their ſilence might ſeem to conſent to Job, and think as he did. But this ſeems not right; for Eliphaz had ſpoken to the ſame purpoſe, chap. 22. 2, 3 that Elihu doth here in the verſes following. Others underſtand it of ſome other preſent, who by geſtures or otherwiſe, declared themſelves to be of Jobs opinion, and encouraged him in it. See on chap. 18. 2. Elihu would ſtop two gaps with one buſh, and not only anſwer Job, but the reſt alſo, if they had any thing to object. But it may be underſtood of all others that were of Jobs opinion though abſent. If theſe were preſent, Elihu is confident, he would anſwer them all in this particular. Such are counted Jobs companions, becauſe they were of his opinion See on chap 34. 8. 36. For companions, ſee on chap. 16. 20. on the word Friends.

V. 5. Look unto the heavens and ſee, and behold the cloudes, which are higher than thou] In this anſwer, Elihu firſt ſhews, that God could get no good by Jobs righteouſneſs, nor hurt by his ſins, ver. 5, 6, 7. 2. That himſelf might, ver. 8. In the firſt, he 1. proves it by a compariſon between Job and the heavens in this v. 2. By applying ing it, verſe 6,7. The ſumme of this verſe is, that there is a great difference between the heavens and Job, ſo that his power cannot help, nor hurt them.Much leſſe God, who is above the higheſt heavens, chap.22. 12.

look unto the heavens and ſee] He wiſhes him to conſider the diſtance between God, and him, by the diſtance between heaven and him, which is great, yet not ſo great. For Heavens, ſee on Chap.9.8. & 11.8. For See, look on Chap.19. 27. on the word, Behold. Two words of one ſignification are uſed to ſhew, that he required an earneſt obſervation. Others conceive, that by the firſt is meant obſerving of the truth of the thing, and by the other, looking on it with admiration, which agrees well with Iſa. 42. 18. Look that ye may ſee, underſtand the thing, that ye may admire. However, theſe two words are often joyned in Scripture, as 1 Sam. 17. 42. 2 King.3.14. Pſal.22.17. Lam.1.12.

and behold the clouds] Some take this to be the ſame in other words. Others by the heaven mean the cloudy heaven; for that it is viſible, and tranſlate this laſt part, Behold the thin heavens, that is, the ſtarry heavens, which is alſo viſible, and higher than the other, And this anſwers wel to the original of the word, which comes from a word that ſignifies to beat or wear a thing till it be thin.

Which are higher than thou] Or, that they are, or, how they are, &c. Conſider that they are high above thee, and too high for thee to reach, to do good, or hurt to them, much more God, and therefore you cannot help him with your piety, nor hurt him with your impiety, as you think you may, and therefore expect immunity from troubles.

V. 6. If thou ſinneſt, what doeſt thou againſt him, or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplyed, what doeſt thou unto him?] It may be thou haſt ſome conceit, that thou canſt do ſome hurt to God by thy ſins, but thou art wonderfully deceived; for if thou heap ſin upon ſin, he is never the worſe, and therefore need not to fear to puniſh thee for thy ſins.

If thou ſinneſt] See on chap.7.20.

what doeſt thou againſt him?] Or, what workeſt thou againſt him? Thou mayeſt toyle thy ſelf, but thou canſt do no hurt to him; he is far above thy reach.

What doſt thou unto him?] Wherein canſt thou do him any harm? For Doing, ſee on chap. 14 9. upon the word, Bring forth.

V. 7. If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?] Thou thinkeſt God is much beholding to thee for thy righteouſneſſe, but what good comes to him by it? As thou canſt not take any thing from him, nor hurt him by thy wickedneſſe, ſo thou canſt not adde any thing to him nor help him by thy goodneſſe.

If thou be righteous,] If thou do righteous actions; for it is oppoſed to ſinful actions, verſe 6.

what giveſt thou him?] What doeſt thou beſtow on him, that may be beneficiall to him? For it is oppoſed to doing againſt him, or hurting him, ver.6. See on chap. 14. 4. upon the word, Bring.

of thine hand] Of thee, or of that which is in thy power to give, which he hath not, and may be helpfull to him. Sure, nothing at all can his wide hand that feedeth all living creatures receive from thy ſcanty hand, that cannot make food for thy ſelf, Pſal. 50. 9. &c. He names the hand, becauſe it is the inſtrument of giving. For the word, ſee on Chap 15.23.

V. 8. Thy wickedneſſe may hurt a man, as thou art, and thy righteouſneſſe may profit the ſon of man] Seeing thou canſt not hurt God by thy wickedneſſe, nor help him by thy goodneſſe, it muſt needs follow, that the one may hurt, the other help thy ſelf, and ſuch as thou art, or elſe there would be no difference indeed between well and ill doing in regard of ſucceſſe.

V. 9. By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions they make the oppreſſed to cry: they cry out by reaſon of the arme of the mighty] Here begins the confutation of a ſecond ſpeech of Job, which is found, Chap. 24. 12. And 1. He acknowledgth the truth of the thing in this verſe. 2. He cleares God from unrighteouſneſſe in not hearing the prayers of theſe oppreſſed ones, laying the fault upon themſelves. 1. Becauſe they were unthankfull to God. 1. For former deliverances. verſe 10. 2. For gifts given to them more then to other creatures. verſe 11. 2. Becauſe of the evill that is in them, as 1. pride, wherewith they are charged. verſe 12. 2. Vanity. verſe 13. This verſe runs, as if Elihu ſhould have ſaid. It is true O Job that thou ſayeſt, that God ſuffers many men to be unjuſtly oppreſſed by others, and rights them not, as ſoon as they complain. But the fault is in themſelves, as I ſhall ſhew by and by.

By reaſon of the multitude] Or of the magnitude. For great oppreſſions make men cry out as well as many, and the word ſignifies both. See on chap.32.9. Others read, Out of the multitude of the oppreſſed, whom they make to cry, &c. yet none ſaith, verſe 10. No marvell if God hear them not: he hath delivered them before, and they regarded it not to praiſe him for it.

of oppreſſions] Or of the oppreſſed, them they make to cry.

they make the oppreſſed to cry] They lay ſuch heavie load upon them, that they being not able to bear it, cry to God to right them. They, that is the oppreſſours, the nominative included in the verb, as Gen.50. 26. They embalmed Joſeph, that is, the embalmers did it. Or, it may be read imperſonally, The oppreſſed were made to cry. See the like on Chap 33.

they cry out] See on Chap. 19.7. & 29 12.

by reaſon of the arme] Becauſe of the ſtrength of great men uſed to oppreſſe them, as armed men beat others with a ſtrong arm. For the word ſee on Chap.22. 8.

of the mighty] Of great men, that can do much wrong to others. See on Chap,32.9.

V. 10. But none ſaith, where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night] He now ſets out the cauſes, why theſe oppreſsed ones were not delivered. They were ready more to complain of wrong-done by men, then to praiſe God for good done to them, and there fore God would not hear them. It may be alſo a cloſe blow upon Iob, as if he had not been thankfull to God in his proſperity, and therefore God would not hear him in his adverſity.

But] Heb. And. Yet it is often ſo tranſlated to ſet out an oppoſition; as Chap. 30 1.

none] No one of theſe oppreſsed ones. Some take it of the oppreſſors, but that ſuits not well with the coherence Heb. And he ſaith not.

where is God] Some take it to be the voyce of one praying for help. But it is rather a voyce of praiſe None looks up to God in a way of thankfulneſs for former benefits. For God, ſee on chap. 9. 17. & 11. 5.

who giveth] See on chap 14. 4. upon the word. Bring.

ſongs] Matter of ſongs. Cauſe to praiſe him.

in the night] Gives cauſe in the night to praiſe him the day following for preſerving us aud ours in our ſleep, when we could not ſo much as think of ovr ſafety, or, who gives us much comfort in the night putting into us many comfortable thoughts of his favour to us, that we may praiſe him, when we cannot ſleep. Others interpret it of the ſtars ſhining in the night, and giving the beholders cauſe to praiſe God, Pſal. 19. 1,2. others of the melody of the birds, as the nightingale, which may ſtirre us up to praiſe God. Others of comforting us in, or delivering us out of the night of our afflictions. But the two firſt are moſt naturall. Pſal. 42. 8. 149. 5.

V. 11. Who teacheth us more then the beaſts of the earth, and maketh us wiſer then the fowles of heaven] God giveth us reaſonable ſoules, which are capable of wiſdome, and which he hath not given to beaſts nor birds. Now thoſe that conſider not well of theſe favours to praiſe him for them, he ſuffers to be oppreſſed by ungodly men, and delivers them not, though they cry to him. Which yet he would do were they thankfull for former mercies.

who teacheth us] Who gives us a mind capable of all arts, and ſciences. and preſerves men before all other creatures.

more than the beaſts of the earth] Either wild or tame, though ſometimes the word he uſed for wild beaſts. They are called beaſts of the earth in oppoſition to fowles of the ayre. Thoſe go on earth, theſe flye in the ayre. For Beaſts ſee on Chap.18.3. For Earth, on Chap.14. 8.

and maketh us wiſer] Giveth us more underſtanding.

than the fowles of heaven] They may have ſome natural fore-caſt, but want reaſon which God giveth to man. See on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

V. 12. There they cry (but none giveth anſwer) becauſe of the pride of evill men] The parentheſis were better left out, that the latter end might depend upon Gods not giving anſwer, not upon their crying. And the ſence is, not that they cryed out for the pride of the oppreſſours, for this is a part of Elihu's anſwer, not out of Jobs objection verſe 1. 9. but the oppreſsed were ſo proud, that though they complained of their oppreſsours, yet would they not humbly pray to God for deliverance, as they ought in their preſent miſeries, nor praiſe him heartily as they ſhould, for former deliverances. verſe 10. Therefore their complaint is ſaid to be vain or empty, which would not be ſo, if they ſought aright to God.

There] In that condition, when they are afflicted verſe 9.

they cry] They pray to God for deliverance. See on chap. 19. 7.

but none giveth anſwer] Heb. But he anſwereth not. To wit God, to whom they cry, doth not deliver them. Chap. 27. 9. Prov. 1. 28. & 15. 29. Iſa 1 15. Jer. 11. 11. Joh. 9. 31. For But, ſee on Chap. 30. 1. For anſwering ſee on chap. 16. 1.

becauſe of the pride of evill men] Becauſe they bee proud, though they be poor, and do not humble themſelves before God, as they ſhould. So the firſt word is tranſlated becauſe Heb. From the face) Gen. 36. 7. Exod. 9. 11.

V. 13. Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it) Here another reaſon is rendered, why God will not relieve theſe oppreſsed ones, not only for their pride verſe 12. but alſo for the emptineſs of their prayers. They pray not heartily.

Surely] A note of aſseveration. There is no queſtion to be made of it. So this word is uſed Gen. 26. 9. & 29. 14.

regard it] Look upon vain men with a gracious eye, or Regard that which their oppreſsours do to them to deliver them upon their prayers.

V. 14. Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him, yet judgement is before him, therefore truſt thou in him] Here begins a confutation of a third ſpeech of Jobs taken out of chap. 23. verſe 9. where he complaines, that he could not come to the ſight of God to reaſon the caſe with him. And Elihu 1. anſwers the objection in this verſe ſhewing, that though God would not come to an account, when Job calls him, yet he might be confident, he would do him right however he judged of him. 2. He ſhewes the reaſon, why God afflicted him ſo heavily, becauſe he truſted not in him. verſe 15. 3. That for the not taking notice hereof God would not hear him to eaſe his pain, verſe 16. This verſe is variouſly read; Deodate thus, How much leſſe will he hear thee who ſayeſt that thou regardeſt him not? Judge thy ſelf before him and then attend] That is, If God will not hear vain men, much leſs will he hear thee, who haſt profeſsed that thou wilt not humble thy ſelf before him, but wilt maintain thine innocencie againſt him? See therefore thine errour, humble thy ſelf before God, and wait on him for deliverance. Piſcator thus, In this alſo haſt thou ſinned, that thou ſayedſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him. Judge thy ſelf before him, and look for him.] That is, I charge thee now with another evill ſpeech, that thou haſt ſaid in effect, that God will never appear to do thee right. Condemn thy ſelf for this evill ſpeech, and then thou mayeſt with comfort look for relief from him.

yet judgement is before him] He will certainly do right in his own time. See on chap. 19. 29.

therefore truſt thou in him] Wait for him, as a woman in travaile waits for delivery.

V. 15. But now, becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger, yet he knoweth it not in great extremity] This Is the truth of Jobs condition (ſaith Elihu) he doth not put his truſt in God, but often complains he hath no further hope of good from him, therefore God proceeds in anger againſt him juſtly, and he is ſo obſtinate in defending his own righteouſneſs, that he will not acknowledge Gods juſtice, nor ſubmit to him, though he be in great extremity. As if he would be broken before he would bow. Beza reads it thus, But know now that his anger hath viſited thee but a little (Heb. nothing) neither hath he made any great inquiſition.] But Job, &c. That is, take notice, that God hath dealt far better with Job then Job with him, God hath not puniſhed him, as he deſerves, yet he complains of too much ſeverity in Gods proceedings, who hath not enquired into the multitude of his ſins, elſe would he have puniſhed him much more. Job is too well uſed to complain thus of God. The ſame thing is objected to Job, Chap. 11. 6.

But now] See on chap. 30. 1.

yet he knoweth it not] Yet Job takes no notice of it.

in great extremity] Heb. In great abundance. To wit, of afflictions.

V. 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain; he multiplyeth words without knowledge] It appears by that which I have ſaid, that Job hath hitherto ſpoken to little purpoſe, and that his words are ſuch, that argue no ſound knowledge in him; he hath unjuſtly lift up his innocency above Gods.

therefore] So this word is tranſlated, chap. 11. 6.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Verſe 1. E*lihu alſo proceeded, and ſaid*] Elihu's laſt ſpeech takes up this Chapter and the next, wherein having confuted divers particular ſpeeches of Job in the former Chapters, now he ſeeks to allay his complaints, with ſetting out Gods juſtice, mercy, and omnipotency, which Job ſeemed to obſcure by his bitter complaining of Gods harſh proceeding with him, that ſo he might bring Job to ſubmit to God, that he might be ſet free from his pain and trouble. In this laſt oration of his, there is, firſt a Preface to it, to ver. 5 of this Chapter. 2. The body of it, to ver 23 of the 37. Chapter. 3. The concluſion of it, in the two laſt verſes of Chap. 37.

V. 2. Suffer me a little, and I will ſhew thee, that I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalfe] The former verſe contained the writers preface, this, with the two next, Elihu's. And herein he labours to draw Job to attention. 1. Becauſe he would ſpeak for God, in this verſe. 2. From God, verſe 3. 3. He would ſpeak nothing but truth, verſe 4. Either Job offered to interrupt him, or ſhewed ſome ſigne of non-ſatisfaction, which makes Elihu ask further leave to ſpeak, and promiſe to give further ſatisfaction, if he might have quiet audience.

V. 3. I will fetch my knowledge from afarre, and will aſcribe righteouſneſs to my maker] My argument ſhall be drawn from thoſe things which are not near to us, but farre diſtant, by which the praiſe of juſtice, due to God our Maker, may be aſcribed and given unto him. righteouſneſſe] I will acknowledge, publiſh, and maintain, that God is moſt juſt. I will give him his due, the praiſe of his own juſtice,

V. 4. For truly my words ſhall not be falſe; he that is perfect in knowledge, is with thee.] Aſſure thy ſelf that I will utter nothing but what is undoubtedly true, and that thou haſt one to diſcourſe with thee, who rightly underſtands the whole matter.

For truly my words ſhall not be falſe] That is, they ſhall be moſt true, Build upon it.

he that is perfect in knowlege is with thee] He ſpeaks of himſelf in the third perſon, for modeſty ſake. As if he had ſaid, I would have thee to know, that I throughly underſtand this buſineſſe, and therefore will ſpeak nothing but the truth in it. Others underſtand it of God. Thou haſt need to hearken diligently, for thou haſt to do with God, who ſpeaks to thee by me.

V. 5. Behold, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any, he is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom] Here begins the body or ſubſtance of the ſpeech, wherein note a deſcription of Gods wiſe, powerfull, and juſt proceedings. 1. In things politicall to verſe 26. 2. In things naturall, to verſe 23. of the next Chapter. Both parts begin with an Ecce, Behold, as treating of notable matters. In the firſt part, 1. he layes down Gods excellency in this verſe. 2. Proves it to ver. 16. 3. Applyes it to Job in particular, to verſe 26. It is wonderfull to conſider what power there is in God, yet it is accompanied with ſo much juſtice, that he will not contemn the meaneſt man, although he have wiſdom anſwerable to his ſtrength to bear him out againſt all the world.

God] See on Chap 8. 3. 5.

and deſpiſeth not any] Or, yet deſpiſeth not any. So that particle is rendred. Pſal. 119. 109, 110. Job had accuſed God before, that he regarded not mens wrongs, nor would right them when they complained, Chap. 19. 7. & 23. 13. & 30. 21. But God doth not deſpiſe any man to deny to do him right for the lowneſſe of his condition, which Job had charged him withall, Chap. 10. 3. He doth not deſpiſe any man without a cauſe, as the verſes following declare.

he is mighty] See before in this verſe.

in ſtrength and wiſdome] Heb. heart. Chap 9. 4. & 12. 13, 16. & 37. 23. Or, in ſtrength of heart] That is, in wiſdom, he is full of it. For heart, ſee on chap. 34. 10. and on chap. 9. 4. & 11. 12.

V. 6. He preſerveth not the life of the wicked, but giveth right to the poor] What he had ſaid before of Gods excellent ſtrength and wiſdom, that he now proves by many particular paſſages of Gods providence, both toward good men and bad, one enterweaved within another.

He preſerveth not the life of the wicked] Heb. He maketh not (or, ſuffereth not) the wicked to live. He doth not withdraw them from the hand of juſtice, yea oftentimes he ſlayes them himſelf; he favours not the enterpriſes of wicked men, but doth juſtice to ſuch as are afflicted: he hates the works of wicked men, and at length deſtroyes their perſons. Contrary to what Job had ſaid, chap. 21. See Pſal. 55. 23. & 104. 35. So this word is taken not for making alive, but for keeping alive, Gen. 6. 19. Exod. 1. 17. And for wicked, ſee on chap. 3. 17.

but giveth right to the poor] Or, afflicted. As he deſtroyes wicked men that do wrong; ſo he upholds ſuch as are wronged. For but, ſee on chap. 30. 1. For giving, ſee on chap. 14. 4 on the word, bring. For right, ſee on chap. 22. 4, on the word, judgement. For poor, ſee on chap. 29. 12.

V. 7. He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, but with Kings are they on the Throne, yea he doth eſtabliſh them for ever, and they are exalted] Though the righteous be never ſo poor, yet are they ſtill the objects of Gods ſpecial providence: he not onely delivers them from oppreſſors, but ſometimes alſo prefers them to Royal dignity, and eſtabliſheth them in it to their dying day againſt all oppoſitions, when he hath once ſetled them in it.

He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous] His eyes are alwayes upon them, how low ſoever their condition be, he never failes them, Pſal. 33. 18. & 34. 15. For eyes, ſee on chap. 15. 15. on the word, ſight but with Kings are they in the Throne] God raiſes up good men that are poor to ſit with Kings, Pſal. 113. 7, 8. 1 Sam. 2. 8.

yea he doth eſtabliſh them for ever] He doth not onely ſet them up, but alſo ſettle them in their Thrones. For ever, is put for a long time in Scripture language, Pſal. 132. 14. See for the word on chap. 34. 36. upon the word, End.

and they are exalted] Or, when they are on high. When they are once raiſed, he ſuffers them to come down no more, but upholds them in their high ſtate as long as they live. So ו is tranſlated when, Pſal. 139. 16.

V. 8. And if they be bound in fetters, and be holden in cords of affliction] But if it ſo come to paſſe, that ſome of theſe righteous perſons, or ſuch as ſeem ſo, for ſome of theſe periſh, verſe 12. thus preferred fall into ſin, and are hampered with their tranſgreſſions, as with chaines and fetters, then God uſeth meanes of recovering them, as verſe 9. &c.

be bound in fetters] Kept in and ſtraitned by their ſins. Or, it may be underſtood literally, if they be carried from a Throne to a priſon for their ſins, and change golden chaines into iron fetters, verſe 13. chap. 13. 27. Pſal. 107. 10.

and be holden] Heb. caught. Be taken, as a bird, or beaſt in a net, or ſnare, ſo as they cannot get themſelves out.

in cords of affliction] Or, poverty. In trouble, or want, afflicting them, and ſtraitning them, as cords do the body. For cords, ſee on Chap. 18. 10. on the word, ſnare.

V. 9. Then he ſheweth them their work, and their tranſgreſſions, that they have exceeded] Though God ſuffer them to be bound in chaines, yet he doth not utterly reject them, but rather opens the eyes of their minde, that they may throughly conſider what they have done, and to ſee that they have done amiſſe, and may repent, and amend for time to come. So that the end of theſe inſtructions is not their deſtruction, but correction.

Then] Heb. And. Yet well tranſlated Then here, as alſo chap. 13. 22.

he ſhewed them] Sets their work before them, and makes them to ſee it. So much the words import. They were blind before, now correction, or the work of Gods ſpirit upon it in their ſoules, clears their ſpiritual eye-ſight. See on chap. 15. 18. upon the word, told.

their work] The quality of their workes, that they are evil, and diſpleaſing to God. For they knew what they had done before, but did not conſider that they had done ill, till Gods rods were upon them. Now he ſhewes them what ſins of theirs were the cauſe of this affliction, as the words following in this verſe do declare.

and their tranſgreſſions] See on chap. 7. 21.

that they have exceeded] That they have been many and great, ſo as juſtly to provoke God thus to ſcourge them.

V. 10. He openeth alſo their ears to diſcipline: and commandeth that they return from iniquity] As God by his Spirit inwardly, and by afflictions outwardly, ſometimes opens mens eyes to ſee their own ſins; ſo ſometimes he opens their ears, that they may hearken to the words of ſuch Miniſters as he ſends to them in their ſorrows, whoſe words before in their proſperity they regarded not, Chap. 33. 23.

He openeth alſo their eare to diſcipline] See on Chap. 33. 16. where all theſe words are. The eare ſtopt cannot hear till it be unſtopt, nor the eare of the minde, till cleared by God.

that they return] See on Chap. 14. 13. on the word, paſt.

from iniquity] See on Chap. 15. 35. & 16. 3. on the word, vanity.

V. 11. If they obey and ſerve him, they ſhall ſpend their dayes in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures] If men thus taught of God by and in their afflictions hearken to him, and ſerve him better upon recovery, they ſhall paſſe the reſt of their life in abundance of all good things, and ſhall end their dayes with joy. Here is an hint for Job to repent of his unkinde ſpeeches againſt God, and then to expect a laſting proſperity, and herein Elihu was no falſe Prophet. For (though not upon his) yet upon Gods ſpeech Job did humble himſelf, Chap. 40. 4, 5. & 42. 3, 6. and had a laſting proſperity, Chap. 42. 10. &c.

If they obey] See on Chap. 13. 17. on the word hear.

they ſhall ſpend] Heb. they ſhall finiſh. The word כלה ſignifies. 1. To compleat or finiſh a work according to a mans deſire, Gen. 2. 2. 2. To make an end of a thing to the deſtruction of it, Pſal. 90. 9. 3. To deſire or expect a thing, as all expect complement and perfection. To long for a thing, 2 Sam. 23. 15. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe for ſpending and ending mens dayes happily.

their dayes] See on Chap. 14. 14.

in proſperity] See on Chap. 21. 13. on the word, wealth.

and their years] They ſhall enjoy proſperity a long time, not onely for dayes, which may be many, and yet end in a year: but for many years.

in pleaſures] They ſhall have abundance of pleaſure all their life long. From this word Naomi had her name, Ruth 1. 20.

V. 12. But if they obey not, they ſhall periſh by the ſword, and they ſhall die without knowledge] But if they will not hearken unto God, in their affliction, when he declares the cauſe of it to them that they may amend, then they ſhall die a violent death, becauſe they would not be taught how to prevent it.

But] See on Chap. 30. 1.

if they] Thoſe righteous men ſpoken of before; verſe 7. For ſuch may loſe their lives for diſobedience, if they amend not, when God viſits them for ſin, 1 Cor. 11. 30. or ſuch as ſeem ſo, who may be taken away by the ſword and ſent to hell.

obey not] See on Chap. 13. 17. on the word, Hear.

they ſhall periſh by the ſword] See on Chap. 33. 18. Heb. They ſhall paſſe away by the ſword.

and they ſhall die] See on Chap. 13. 19.

without knowledge] Heb. Becauſe they were without knowledge. Becauſe they would not be wiſe, and take notice wherefore God afflicted them, though he gave them ſecret hints of it, therefore God gave them over to the ſword.

V. 13. But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath, they cry not, when he bindeth them] But men that ſin not out of humane frailty, but out of a miſchievous mind and moſt impure affections of heart, they take no warning, neither do they ſeek to God for helpe, but by continuance in ſin make God more angry with them ſtill, till he do conſume them.

But] See on Chap. 30. 1. Or, yet, as is tranſlated, Pſal. 119. 109, 110. Though they ſee ſome good men repent, when God corrects them, and others cut off for not returning to God, yet they amend not by Gods ſtroak.

the hypocrites] Or, profane men. See on chap. 8. 13.

in heart] See on chap. 15. 12.

heap up wrath] Heb. Put wrath. Adde more to that which was before. Provoke God daily more and more, Rom. 2. 5. 2 Chron. 28. 13, 22. For wrath, ſee on chap. 4. 9. & 9. 5, 13. & 14. 13.

they cry not] They pray not to God for help, and deliverance. This may be an hint to Job to try, whether he be an hypocrite or no, who did complain of God in his trials, but did not humbly pray to him to deliver him, or, They are ſuddenly deſtroyed, and have no time to pray for deliverance. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 7.

when he bindeth them] When he correcteth them. See on verſe 8.

V. 14. They die in youth, and their life is among the uncleane] God deales with them, as with thoſe curſed young men, who having ſpent their youth in all filthineſſe, and uncleanneſſe came to an untimely end by loathſome diſeaſes procured by their luſts.

They die in youth] They are taken away by Gods hand before they be old, chap. 15. 32. & 22. 16. & 33. 22. Pſal. 55. 23. Heb. Their ſoul dieth. That is, themſelves, or their life is taken away. For ſoul, ſee on chap. 14. 22. For youth, ſee on chap. 20. 11.

and their life is among the uncleane] They lie among filthy perſons in the grave. See life attributed to dead men, chap. 14. 22. or Their life ſhall be taken away among the Sodomites; that is, They ſhall be deſtroyed by ſome extraordinary judgement, as the Sodomites were. The word doth not ſo much look at Sodome as at the converſation of the inhabitants, they were ready to execute all filthineſſe even the confuſion of ſexes, So were theſe young men, and ſo much the word imports. So this word is uſed, Deut. 23. 17.

V. 15. He delivereth the poor in his affliction, and openeth their eares in oppreſſion] But God deales otherwiſe with godly men, for he frees them, out of their troubles, when he hath by private monitions of his ſpirit brought them to humble their ſoules before him.

He delivereth] God doth, who is ſpoken of verſe 11. The word חלץ ſignifies to pull off a thing, as the ſhoe, Deut. 25. 9, 2. To deliver out of trouble, Pſal. 6. 4. 3. To draw out of a multitude, or to chuſe men to be armed for ſouldiers. Numb. 31. 3. 4. To fatten, for ſo are beaſts fatted, that go in choice paſtures, and are choſen before others, Iſa. 58. 11. Here it is taken in the ſecond ſence, for delivery out of trouble.

the poor] Or, the afflicted. See on chap. 29. 12.

in his affliction] Or, In his poverty.

and openeth their eares] Or, when he hath opened their eares. When he hath taught them to make a good uſe of their afflictions. for ו When ſee Pſal, 139. 16. For the other words, ſee on chap. 33. 16.

in oppreſſion] When they are oppreſſed by others. and cry to him for help.

V. 16. Even ſo would he have remove thee out of the ſtrait into a broad place, where there is no ſtraitneſſe, and that which ſhould be ſet on the table, ſhould be full of fatneſſe] Now he comes to apply to Job in particular, what he had ſaid in general, and that from hence to verſe 26. wherein he tells Job. 1. What might have been, if he had carried himſelf well in his affliction, in this v. 2. What is on him, becauſe he did not, v. 17. 3. What will be, if he repent not, to v. 26. In this v. he tells Job, that if he had made a good uſe of his afflictions, God would both have delivered and proſpered him: and this he ſets out by two ſimilitudes, one taken from a man that dwels in a large ground, where he hath liberty enough; and the other from a man that keeps a plentiful table full of all manner of delicates. Liberty and wealth ſhould have attended on Job, if he had carried himſelf wiſely in his troubles.

Even ſo] As he uſeth to deal with ſuch as are truly humbled under his rod, ſo would he have dealt with thee.

would he have removed thee] He would have delivered thee, v. 10. 11. The word ſignifies to perſwade. Now becauſe thoſe that are perſwaded by others, are removed from their former purpoſes, therefore it alſo ſignifies to remove. As 2 Chron. 18. 31.

out of the ſtrait] Out of thy troubles, which have encloſed thee like a priſoner in a narrow roome, where thou canſt ſcarce ſtir or breath. Heb. out of the mouth of the ſtrait. A ſimilitude from a wild beaſt, that hath a lambe in its mouth, or a pit that gapes as it were, to devour ſuch as fall into it. Hereby is intimated deliverance from ſome great trouble or danger. For Mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

into a broad place] Into much liberty, Pſal. 18. 19.

where there is no ſtraitneſſe] Into an exceeding large place. He would have given thee abundance of liberty.

and that which ſhould be ſet on thy table] The diſhes of meat appointed for thy food. Or the reſt of thy table. Thou ſhouldeſt quietly have enjoyed a plentiful table, Pſal. 23 5. The word שלחן ſignifies. 1. The Table it ſelf, Exod, 25. 23. 2. A table furniſhed with meat, Pſal. 78. 19. 3. An altar, Ezek. 41. 22. Here it is taken in the firſt ſence.

ſhould be full of fatneſſe] Thou ſhouldeſt have the fatteſt meats, and daintieſt delicates on thy table. Others underſtand this v. of Gods former dealing with Job, and read it, Even ſo hath he removed thee. And, That which was on thy table, was full of fatneſſe. Thou haſt had experience O Job of what I have ſaid, in thy former proſperity. But it doth not appear, that Job was in poverty or ſtrait before, and therefore the former interpretation is better.

V. 17. But thou haſt fulfilled the judgement of the wicked: judgement and juſtice take hold on thee] But thou haſt taken a quite contrary courſe, thou haſt ſo behaved thy ſelf in reaſoning with God that it is too manifeſt, how guilty and worthy thou art of that judgement which God is wont to lay upon heynous offenders. And ſo it came to paſſe, as thou thy ſelf ſeeſt that that judgement, which he moſt juſtly hath given upon thee doth ſtill ſtand, and remaine unmoveable.

thou haſt fulfilled the judgement of the wicked] Thou haſt carried thy ſelf like a wicked man in charging God to deal unjuſtly with thee in afflicting thee ſo heavily, and ſo haſt confirmed them in their proud carriages againſt God. See on chap. 34. 8. others underſtand it of Jobs ill carriage in his proſperity, either in the courſe of his life, or in favouring wicked men in judicature. But Elihu never charges Job with any thing but miſchartiages under Gods hand in his affliction. For fulfilling, ſee on chap. 15. 2. on the word Fill. For wicked, ſee on chap. 3. 17.

judgement and juſtice take hold on thee] Therefore God hath juſt cauſe to paſſe a ſentence of proceeding ſtill in anger againſt thee: and his ſentence ſo takes hold of thee, that thou canſt not get out of thy miſery. Theſe are joyned together, Pſal. 9. 4. where it is interpreted cauſe and right. Some by juſtice underſtand the faire proſecution of the cauſe in the trial of it, and by judgement the pronouncing a faithful ſentence. Or, Judgement and juſtice ſhould uphold thee. But that agrees not well with the coherence. For juſtice, ſee on Chap. 22. 4. on the word judgement. For taking hold, תמך is tranſlated holding, Am. 1. 5. 8. Sometimes it ſignifies upholding, as Pſal. 63. 8. But the firſt ſignification ſuites beſt with this place.

V. 18. Becauſe there is wrath, beware leſt he take thee away with his ſtroak, then a great ranſome cannot deliver thee] Here Elihu counſels Job, what to do for time to come. 1. Not to provoke God further, to v. 21. 2. To take heed of iniquity, to v. 24. 3. To give honour to God, to v. 26. In the firſt part, firſt he exhorts him, v. 18. 2. Removes impediments of hearkning, as hope of ranſome to free him, v. 18, 19. or force, v. 19. or hiding, v. 20. I perceive that God is angry with thee by the continuance of thy Plagues. Beware thou offend him not further by thy obſtinacy, leſt he make an end of thee. Aſſure thy ſelf, if thou hadſt never ſo much to give, it would not be accepted to ſave thy life.

becauſe there is wrath] Becauſe it appears by Gods heavie hand on thee, that he is very angry with thee. For wrath, ſee on Chap. 19. 29.

beware] This word is not in the Original, but well added by the tranſlators to make up the ſence. As alſo Iſa. 36. 18. leſt he take thee away] Leſt God deſtroy thee, and ſo take thee cleane out of this world. For the word, ſee on v. 16. on the word, Removed.

with his ſtroak] See on Chap. 34. 26.

then] So this particle is tranſlated, Chap. 25. 1. when thou haſt provoked God ſo far, that he reſolves to deſtroy thee, it will be in vaine to think of any ranſome. Therefore prevent it before hand by repentance.

a great ranſome] All that thou canſt have to give, if thou hadſt all the word, Pſal. 49. 7, 8, 9. For great, ſee on Chap. 22. 5. For Ranſome, ſee on Chap. 33. 24.

cannot deliver thee] Heb. Turne thee aſide. To wit, from death and deſtruction.

V. 19. Will he eſteeme thy riches? no not gold, nor all the forces of ſtrength] Doſt thou think that if thou couldſt recover as much wealth, as thou hadſt before, or wert full of gold, or hadſt an army of ſtrong men to aſſiſt thee, that God would be hired or forced to releaſe thee from deſtruction? No certainly, thou ſhouldeſt then but feed thy ſelf with vaine thoughts.

will he eſteem thy riches?] He will make no account at all of wealth, that cannot free thee, Prov. 10. 2. & 11. 4. For Eſteem, ſee on Chap. 28. 17. on the word, Equal. For Riches, ſee on Chap. 34. 19. on the word, Rich. Others read it, Will he regard thy crying? That is, thy prayer in thy adverſity. So the word is uſed, Chap. 30. 24.

no not gold] This agrees well with the words before. Or, no not any defence. Which agrees well with the words following. For the word, ſee on Chap. 22. 24, 25. Others read it, No not in affliction.

nor all the forces of ſtrength] Not any force or ſtrength, though the greateſt in the world, can deliver thee if God purpoſe to deſtroy thee.

V. 20. Deſire not the night, when people are cut off in their place] As neither riches nor ſtrength can ſhelter thee from Gods ſtroak, ſo wit cannot prevent it. Think not to finde any hiding place to ſecure thee: Gods ſtroak lights on evil doers in the darkeſt night, Pſal. 139. 12.

Deſire not the night] Some underſtand it of deſiring the night for reſt, which Job had done. Job 7. 13. Others of the night of death, which he had deſired, Chap. 7. 15. But it is rather to be underſtood of the darkneſſe of the night, wherein he might think to hide himſelf from Gods ſtroak; but all in vaine. For deſire, ſee on Chap. 7. 2.

when people are cut off in their place] Thou canſt not be ſafe in the darkeſt night, for God hath deſtroyed nations in the dark, as the Egyptians in the red ſea, and Sennacheribs army. Chap. 27. 20. and 34. 20. Are cut off in their place. Heb. Aſcend under them. See the like phraſe, Chap. 5. 26. Pſal. 102. 24. As the light of a candle, when it is ready to go out, flyes up and then vaniſhes away. Or, as the corne is firſt taken up by the hand of the reaper, and then cut off, and laid flat on the ground. One Verbe included in another, as Pſal. 68. 18. Received gifts for men, to wit, to give to them, as it is expounded, Eph. 4. 8. So here, They go up, that they may be caſt down lower, Pſal. 102. 10.

V. 21. Take heed, regard not iniquity; for this haſt thou choſen, rather than affliction] Here is Elihu's ſecond exhortation to Job to take heed of ſpeaking unjuſtly of God in regard of his troubles, in this verſe, which he backs with reaſons from Gods power, and wiſdome, ver. 22. and from his authority, and juſtice, ver. 23. The ſumme of this verſe is, as if he had ſaid, Now I warne thee to take heed of ſpeaking unequally of Gods wayes any more. I ſee I had need to give thee ſuch an admonition; for thou art readier ſo to do, then patiently to bear what God hath laid on thee.

Take heed] Be very wary for time to come, regard not] Turne not thy face to it in way of approbation, as men do to things they like. For the word, ſee on Chap. 5. 1. & 21. 5.

iniquity] See on Chap. 15. 35. & 16. 3. on the word, Vanity. By Iniquity here he means Jobs unjuſt ſpeeches againſt Gods proceedings with him.

for this haſt thou choſen] To wit, iniquity, and raſh cenſuring of Gods wayes, as appears by thy former ſpeeches. See on Chap. 34. 33.

rather than affliction] Thou hadſt rather accuſe God of afflicting thee unjuſtly, than bear thy affliction patiently. Others read it thus. For, for this cauſe haſt thou choſen any thing rather than affliction. Becauſe thy heart diſlikes Gods dealing with thee, thou hadſt rather ſay any evil of him then be afflicted juſtly by him. Others thus, for this thou haſt choſen becauſe of thine affliction. Thou art ſo tranſported with the ſence of thy paines, that thou careſt not what thou ſayſt of God.

V. 22. Behold God exalteth by his power; who teacheth like him?] Look well at God, and thou ſhalt ſee, that though many in the world give many monuments of their power and wiſdome, yet none comes near to God in working or informing.

Behold] See on Chap. 1. 12.

God] See on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

exalteth] Himſelf, by his ſeat in heaven, or his great works on earth. Or, he exalteth the afflicted by delivering them, or the poor by preferring them, Pſal. 9. 13. & 18. 48.

by his power] By his great and infinite ſtrength, whereby he can do what none elſe can.

who teacheth like him?] No man, can teach ſo wiſely as God, and therefore none can direct him how to act better then he doth. Therefore thou oughteſt not to finde fault with his dealings with thee. Iſa. 40. 13. Rom. 11. 34. 1 Cor. 2. 18. Or, no man teaches in ſo ſtrange a way as God doth. He can teach thee wiſdom, by theſe ſore afflictions. For Teaching, ſee on Chap. 6. 24. & 8. 10.

V. 23. Who hath enjoyned him his way? Or, who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity?] Who hath ſhewed God how he ought to governe the world? No man had any ſuch power over him to preſcribe him his way. And though he be moſt free, yet never any man could charge him with one unjuſt act. Therefore thou, O Job, doſt moſt raſhly and arrogantly complain of his proceedings againſt thee, as if thou couldſt teach him to governe better, or hadſt taken him tripping in his dealings, and got ſome great advantage againſt him.

Who hath enjoyned him his way] Who hath preſcribed to him what he ſhould do? For enjoyning, ſee on Chap. 34. 13. on the words, Giving him a charge. For Way, ſee on Chap. 17. 9.

or who can ſay] See on Chap. 16. 1.

thou haſt wrought iniquity] Who can charge God with any unrighteous actions? Chap. 8. 3. & 34. 10. Deut. 32. 4. 2 Chron. 19. 7. Rom. 9. 14. For Iniquity, ſee on Chap. 16. 3. & 15. 35. on the words, vaine, and vanity.

V. 24. Remember that thou magnifie his worke, which men behold] This is Elihu's third exhortation to Job, to give glory to God, rather than to ſtand upon his own innocency. Which is ſet down in this verſe, and a reaſon given of it in the next. The ſumme of this verſe is, that Job give God the glory of afflicting him, which other men ſtand and gaze at, as wonderfull. Others underſtand it of the works of creation, which agrees with the following part of the Chapter.

Remember] Think ſeriouſly of it, which now thou ſeemeſt by thy ill carriage to have forgotten.

that] So this particle is tranſlated, ver. 10.

thou magnifie] Set it out at large, and, ſpeak highly of it.

his work] His ſtrange correcting thee; or his work of Creation.

which men behold] Other men dare not judge or cenſure God for afflicting thee ſo heavily, as thou doſt, but look at it with admiration. Others underſtand it of Gods workes in the sky, as the meteors, which are admired by men. Some read it, whereof men ſing. For which they praiſe God. For Man, ſee on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

V. 25. Every man may ſee it, man may behold it a farre off] Though thou wilt not, yet all other men take notice of Gods ſpecial hand upon thee, although they be not able to ſee the reaſon of it exactly, as being above their reach. Some underſtand it of the Meteors, which all men behold though they do not throughly conceive of Gods ſecret manner of forming them in the clouds.

Every man] Every man of underſtanding. For fooliſh men take no notice of Gods proceedings, Pſal. 92. 6, 7. For the word Man, ſee on Chap. 14. 1.

may ſee it] Take notice of it eaſily.

man] See on Chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

may behold it] See on Chap. 35. 5. on the word, Look.

a far off] Imperfectly diſcerne it, not fully ſee it, as things very high, or far remote, are ſeen but in part, as it were through a glaſs, and not ſo plainly as things that are nearer to us.

V. 26. Behold God is great, and we know him not, neither can the number of his years be ſearched out] Now Elihu begins to ſet out God in his government of the world in regard of natural things, to ver. 23. of the next Chapter. And firſt he ſets out the greatneſſe and eternity of God in this verſe. 2. He proves it by the Meteors, and ſeaſons afterwards. Seeing that we know Gods works but in part, ver. 25. certainly we cannot know God himſelf fully, neither is there any brain of man that can reach his greatneſſe, or any Arithmetick that can number his years.

Behold] See on ver. 5.

God] See on Chap. 8. 3, 5.

is great] In Power, Glory, and Majeſty.

and we know him not] So great, that we are not able fully to comprehend him, either in his eſſence or works.

neither can the number of his years be ſearched out] Spoken after the manner of men, to ſet out Gods eternity; for he was before there were any years. He were a very old man that could live ſo many years, that the skilfulleſt Arithmetician in the world could not reckon them. Gods continuance is beyond all count, Pſal. 102. 24, 27.

V. 27. For he maketh ſmall the drops of water, they pour down raine according to the vapour thereof] The reſt of Elihu's ſpeech is ſpent in deſcribing the Meteors and changes of the aire, as raine, thunder, ſnow, &c. ſo interweaved one with another, that they cannot well be divided. God ſhewes his great power daily, by dividing the drops of water in the cloud, ſo that the raine being thus diſſolved, poureth down upon the earth according to the proportion, and greatneſſe of the vapour, whereof it is made.

For he maketh ſmall the drops of water] He lets them not fall down like a flood, leſt they ſhould drown the earth, but doth as it were divide them in the cloud, and make them little. Others read it, He draweth up. To wit, vapours from below by the heat of the Sun, which being diſſolved in the cloud, fall down again in raine. Others thus, He withdraweth the drops of raine. He cauſeth it not to raine for a time, and when he pleaſeth it raines again; as in the end of the ver. For water, ſee on Chap. 14. 9.

they pour down raine according to the vapour thereof] As the vapours drawn up from below are greater or leſſer, ſo there is more or leſſe raine. He purifies the vapours, and ſo diſtils them in raine. See on Chap. 28. 1. upon the word, Fine. For vapour, ſee on Chap. 18. 12. on the word, Deſtruction.

V. 28. Which the clouds do drop and diſtil upon man abundantly] Though there be much water in the clouds, yet God orders it ſo, that it falls down by drops, yet in ſuch plenty, that it waters many countries, where abundance of men dwell.

Which] Which raine. Or, From whence. Out of which vapours.

the clouds] The receptacles of the raine. See on Chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8. on the word Heaven.

do drop] Send down on the earth by ſmall drops one after another.

and diſtil] The ſame thing in other words.

upon man] See on Chap. 14. 1. abundantly] In great plenty. Or, upon many men. For the raine falls at times all the world over, and waters many mens grounds.

29. Alſo can any underſtand the ſpreading of the clouds, or the noiſe of his Tabernacle?] Moreover, is there any one who knoweth how far the Lightnings will ſpread themſelves in the clouds, as verſe 30. or that knows the nature of thoſe ratling thunder claps, which come forth of the clouds, wherein God ſits in ſecret, and unſeen, as in a Tabernacle, creating many ſtrange Meteors, to ſend down upon the earth?

Alſo can any underſtand the ſpreading of the clouds?] Can the wiſeſt man in the world tell how far the clouds will ſpread, or on what places of the world they will pour down raine? As verſe 27, 28.

or the noiſe of his Tabernacle] Some underſtand this of the noiſe the windes make in the aire. Others of the Thunder-claps, Pſal. 104. 7. Gods Tabernacle, is ſaid to be in the clouds, Pſal. 18. 11. & 104. 3.

V. 30. Behold he ſpreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottome of the Sea] It is a wonderful thing to conſider, how God ſpreads the Lightning over the darke clouds, and makes them look bright like fire, yea which is more ſtrange, he makes the lightnings dart ſo abundantly through the waters of the ſea, that they do as it were cover all the bottome of it.

he ſpreadeth his light] He ſcatters it all abroad, as a cloth is ſpread. For Light, ſee on Chap. 17. 12.

upon it] Upon the cloud mentioned, ver. 29. or upon him, that is, upon man, as ver. 28.

and covereth the bottome of the ſea] Heb. The roots of the ſea. He not onely makes the lightning cover the earth, but alſo pierce deep into the ſeas. For Root, ſee on Chap. 5. 3. & 14. 8. For the Sea, ſee on Chap. 14. 11.

V. 31. For by them judgeth he the people, he giveth meat in abundance] Here he ſets out the infinite wiſdom of God, who by the ſame means can work good to his, and hurt to his enemies; he can make raine, lightning, thunder, beneficial, or hurtful, as he pleaſes, by drowning the fruits of the earth by a flood, or cheriſhing them by moderate raine, and blaſting trees by thunder, or clearing the aire without hurting any thing, Chap. 37. 13.

For by them] By raine, lightning, and thunder, judgeth he the people] He puniſheth them by drowning and blaſting ſome people, or their corne and cattel.

he giveth meat in abundance] By watering the earth in other places,and at other times,ſo that it brings forth abundance of corn. For giving, ſee on chap. 14. 4. on the word, bring. For abundance, ſee on chap. 8. 2, on the word, ſtrong.

V. 32. With clouds he covereth light, and commandeth it not to ſhine by the cloud that commeth betwixt] In this verſe is a preparation for raine, when God raiſes up clouds to darken the light of the Sun.

with clouds] The word כף ſignifies a crooked or hollow thing, and is uſed. 1. For the hand, as chap. 16, 17. 2. For an hollow veſſel, ſpoone, or platter, Jer. 52. 18, 19. 3. The hollow place, or middle of a ſling, 1 Sam. 25. 29. 4. The hollow place of the thigh, Gen. 32. 25. 5. A cloud, which is an hollow thing, chap. 26. 9. So here 1 Kings 18. 44. For clouds firſt appear ſmall like a mans hand ſhut, and then ſpread out like the palm of a mans hand he covereth the light] Hideth the Sun from our eyes, and ſo ſends dark and rainy dayes. It may be read thus, he covereth the light over the clouds. That is, he ſpreads it over them, as verſe 30. And when he will he takes away the light again, as in the end of this verſe. And this ſuits well with the former verſe, and ſhewes faire and foule weather to be at Gods will, to ſend when he pleaſes. For light, ſee on chap. 17. 12.

and commandeth it not to ſhine] Not to ſhine is added to make up the ſenſe. Heb. and commandeth it Or, layes a command upon it. But it is obſerved, that this word with the prepoſition על (as here) in Scripture language ſignifies moſt commonly to forbid, or command not to do a thing, Gen. 2. 16. & 28. 6. 1 King. 2. 43.

by the cloud that cometh betwixt] To wit, to darken it. The cloud is added to make the ſenſe plaine. Others read, and commandeth it, (or gives it a command) concerning the ſhowre that is coming, as verſe 33.

V. 33. The noiſe thereof ſheweth concerning it, the cattel alſo concerning the vapour] The thunder gives warning that raine is comming, and cattel that flee to ſhelter, when the vapour aſcends. For of a tempeſt coming he ſpeaks, verſe 27. 28, &c.

The noiſe thereof ſheweth concerning it] The Thunder. which is called the noiſe of the cloud, becauſe it ariſeth from the renting of the cloud. Or, his noiſe. That is, Gods, who makes it to thunder. This beares witneſſe that a tempeſt is coming, and gives warning to living creatures to keep out of the way. For ſhewing, ſee on chap. 15. 18. on the word, told.

the cattel alſo] Hogs, and ſheep, and oxen, that go to hide themſelves when they perceive a tempeſt coming. This was an ordinary thing in that Country, where were ſtore of cattel, Chap. 1. 3.

concerning the vapour] Heb. concerning that which goeth up. Thoſe cattel are much more quick-ſented than men, and can perceive the vapours going up to cauſe raine, before men can ſee or feel them. For aſcending, ſee on chap. 20. 6. Others read it thus; He declareth his will to it. whether it ſhould fall upon the cattel, or on ſome plant that aſcendeth. He directs the ſtorme to the deſtruction of cattel, or of corne and trees, which he will. As Exod. 9. 25.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Verſe 1. A*T this alſo my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place*] It ſeems that while Elihu was ſpeaking of the thunder, God to confirme what he had ſaid, cauſed it to thunder, that Job might be the more affected with what he ſaid,and prepared with reverence to receive what God ſhould ſay in the Chapters following. That there was a ſtorme, appears chap. 38. 1. And the Law was delivered with lightning and thunder, Exod. 19. 16. This inexpected coming of the thunder might well affright Elihu, as it did, in this verſe. That it did then thunder, appears in verſe 2.

At this alſo] Or, Even at this. For it doth not appear that he trembled at any thing before, till this inexpected thunder came. Others underſtand, At this which I ſhall ſay, for I intend yet to ſpeak more glorioully of Gods great works. Or, Therefore, as it is tranſlated, Gen. 2. 24.

my heart trembleth] I am heartily afraid. For heart ſee on chap. 15. 12. The thunder hath made great ones tremble, who denied that there was a God.

and is moved out of his place] Leaps up and down as it uſeth to do in a great fright. Or, is ready to leap out of my body, as the Ship was ſaid to be broken, Jon. 1. 4. And the net, Luke 5. 6. when they were but like to break. For place, ſee on chap. 18. 21. & 20. 9.

V. 2. Heare attentively the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth] Now he ſets down what it was that made him afraid, the terrible crack of thunder then preſent, and exhorts others to regard it, that they may reverence God in his power as well as he.

Heare attentively] Heb. Hear in hearing. There needed no great attention, for thunder ſpeaks loud, and will be heard, but he would have them heare with the eares of the minde, and carefully to obſerve Gods great power, that ſpake ſo terribly as no man could. For the word, ſee on chap. 13. 17.

the noiſe] The word Originally ſignifies an angry noiſe which makes others to tremble, as the roaring of the Lion doth the beaſts, Am. 3. 8. Pſal. 29. 3. It is Gods frighting which is heard in the thunder, it terrifies the ſtouteſt hearts. It makes ſo horrible a noiſe, that it is heard far and near.

of his voice] Of Gods thunder, wherein he ſo ſpeakes, that his people may take notice of his power, Pſal. 29. 4. & 81. 7. And thereby he awakens mens dulneſs, that they conſider of his workes. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 21. on the word, ſound.

and the ſound] The rumbling as it were, or inward noiſe of the thunder within the clouds, as doves mourn inwardly. See on chap. 27. 4. on the word, utter.

that goeth out] See on chap. 20. 25. on the word, commeth out. of his mouth] Out of Gods mouth. For he makes himſelf known by the thunder, as men do by their words which come out of their mouths.

V. 3. He directeth it under the whole Heaven, and his Lightning unto the ends of the Earth] He makes the noiſe of the thunder to ring in the aire all abroad, as he directeth it to any place under the whole heaven, and the lightning extends it ſelfe even to the moſt remote parts of the earth.

He directeth it] Or, maketh it to go right forward. He guides it, and makes it to be heard where he pleaſes. It is not meant of the lightning nor thunder-bolt (though God guide them alſo) but of the noiſe, or thunder it ſelf, ſpoken of verſe 2.

under the whole Heaven] Whereſoever it is heard on earth, God directs it thither. Or, he makes it to be heard far and wide. See on chap. 28. 24.

and his Lightning] Heb. his light. Hereby it appears that the former part of the verſe was meant of the noiſe of the thunder, and not of the lightning here diſtinguiſhed from it. For light, ſee on chap. 17. 12.

unto the ends] Heb. the wings. A metaphor either from birds that ſpread their wings wide when they fly, or from the ſkirts of garments, which are at the ends of them, for the word ſignifies both. כנף is uſed. 1. For a wing, as Gen. 1. 21. 2. The utmoſt part of any thing. As 1. Of a garment, Num. 15. 38. 2. For the ſailes of a ſhip, which are ſpread like wings, and make ſhips as it were fly, Iſa. 18. 1. 3. For the wings of an Army, Iſa. 8. 8. 4 For the fartheſt parts of the earth, Iſa. 11. 12. 5. For the ſpringing of the morning light, Mal 4. 2. 6. For the ſwiftneſſe of the winde, which ſeems to fly, it is ſo quick, and carries ſhips away apace, Pſal. 18. 10. Here it is taken in the fourth borrowed ſenſe for the corners of the earth, as alſo Job 38. 13.

of the Earth] Of the World. See on chap. 15. 19.

V. 4. After it a voice roareth, he thundereth with the voice of his excellency, and he will not ſtay them when his voice is heard] The thunder-crack is before the lightning in nature, but we ſee the lightning firſt, which God ſends as a fore-runner,or warning piece, when he meanes to ſpeak in thunder. Now the lightning is firſt ſeen, becauſe the light paſſeth through the aire ſwifter than the noiſe, and enlightens it in an inſtant, whereas the noiſe goes by degrees. Thus God ſends his light as an harbinger to his excellent and high voice. He delayes not to ſend out ſuch flames when he intends to thunder, or to ſend the thunder-cracks when it lightneth.

After it] After the lightning, v 3.

A voice] See on chap. 15. 21. on the word Sound: and in this chap. v. 2.

roareth] The thunder makes an hideous noiſe far above the roaring of a lion, which the word originally ſignifies.

he thundereth] See on chap. 26. 14.

with the voice] See before on v. 2.

of his excellency] Of this height. The word גאון ſometimes ſignifies pride, as chap. 35. 12. becauſe proud men think themſelves higher than others. But God is indeed higher than all, and ſpeaks accordingly in the thunder.

and he will not ſtay them, when his voice is heard] After the thunder he preſently ſends raine and haile, ſpoken of in the end of the former Chapter. Others underſtand it of the lightnings, and read thus, He will not have it to be behind, when his voice is to be heard. The word ſtay, comes from a word which ſignifies the heele. The way to ſtay one, is to take him by the heele, Gen. 25. 26. For כי when, ſee on chap. 7. 13. His voice, Gods. See before in this v. Is heard. See on chap. 13. 17.

V. 5. God thundereth marvellouſly with his voice, great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend] A tranſition from the thunder to other wonderful works of God, as if he had ſaid, It cannot be denied that this voice of God is very wonderful: but other things no leſſe admirable are done by God above the reach of our ſhallow capacity, as the bringing ſnow, v. 6. &c.

God] See on chap. 8 3, 5.

thundereth] See on chap. 26. 14.

marvellouſly] So as no creature can make ſuch a noiſe. Others read it, God thunders out marvellous things with his voice. And refer it to thoſe ſtrange things,which are wrought by the thunders,as melting the mony without hurting the purſe,breaking the ſword within the ſcabbard, exhauſting the wine within the barrel, breaking the bones within the fleſh, which are things above our reach. For Marvellous, ſee on chap. 5. 9.

with his voice] See on chap. 15. 21. on the word, Sound.

great things doth he] See on chap 5. 9.

which we cannot comprehend] Above our reach and capacity, chap. 36. 26. on the word, Know. Or, which we take no notice of. But paſſe them by careleſſely, as if they were not worthy of our obſervation.

V. 6. For he ſaith to the ſnow, Be thou on earth; likewiſe to the ſmall raine, and to the great raine of his ſtrength] For he it is, that no ſooner ſpeakes the word, but the ſnow covers the earth like wool: and at his command both gentle ſhowers, and tempeſtuous ſtorms come upon the earth.

For] This word giving a reaſon of what went before, ſhewes plainly, that the marvellous things ſpoken of, v. 5. were the effects of the thunder, but new meteors ſuch as follow.

he ſaith] He commands the ſnow to come, and it comes, Gen. 1. 3. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1.

to the ſnow] Snow and raine, and all the meteors are at Gods command, Pſal. 147. 15, 16.

be thou] Not onely come, but abide till I call thee back.

on the earth] See on chap. 15. 19.

likewiſe to the ſmall raine, and to the great raine of his ſtrength] Heb. And to the ſhower of raine, and to the ſhower of rains of his ſtrength. That is to the gentle raine dropping out of the clouds, and to the violent ſtormes that fall as evidences of Gods great ſtrength. Others read it thus, Or to ſhowers of raine: then ſhowers of much raine come.

V. 7. He ſealeth up the hand of every man; that all men may know his work] Now he ſhews what befalls men in this v. and beaſts in the next, when great ſnow, or raine falls upon the earth. Their work is hindered, that they ſitting at home may have time ſeriouſly to conſider of Gods great work abroad.

He ſealeth up] He hinders them from working, while the ſnow or raine laſts, and makes them keep within doors, as if they were ſhut up in their houſes under Gods ſeale, as Noah was in the Arke, Gen. 7. 16. For the word there uſed for ſhutting up come סגריר raine, Prov 27. 15. becauſe it ſhuts men up in their houſes, and hinders them from working in the fields. For ſealing, ſee on chap. 9. 7.

The hand] The labour. He hinders them from working, Exod. 9. 19. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 23.

of every man] Of every man that hath worke to do abroad in the fields, for within doors men men may worke. For Man, ſee on chap. 14. 1.

that all men] For man, ſee on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

may know] May take notice, that God hath ſequeſtred them from their field labours.

his work] That the ſnow and raine that ſhut them in, came from God. Others read it, That every man may know his workmen. That maſters of families may have time to call their ſervants to account. A frigid interpretation, and nothing to the ſetting out of Gods glory by ſo wonderful a work, which is the ſcope of this place.

V. 8. Then the beaſts go into dens and remaine in their places. So great is the force of a tempeſt, that not onely it drives men home, but even wilde beaſts to their dens, which uſe to prey in the night notwithſtanding the darkneſſe, if the weather be calme, Pſal. 104. 20, 21.

Then] When the raine and ſnow falls verſe, 6.

the beaſts] It is true of all beaſts, but eſpecially of wild beaſts, which muſt yeeld notwithſtanding their great ſtrength. They have their name from life or livelines in the Ooiginal.

go] See on chap. 15. 21. on the word, Come.

into dens] Into the dark places to ſhelter them from the ſtorme, where they uſe to lie in ambuſh to catch their prey. For ſo much the word ſignifies in the Original, chap. 38. 40 and remaine] Abide there till the ſtorme be over. The word ſignifies dwelling alſo, for men uſe to abide where they dwell.

in their places] Heb. In their dwellings. That is, in their holes.

V. 9. Out of the South cometh the whirlewinde and cold out of the North] Now he paſſeth on from ſnow and raine to whirlewindes, froſt, and ice. At Gods command ſometimes the South winde gathers clouds together, whereof comes a tempeſt, and ſometimes the North winde comes and ſcatters them, and ſo brings cold weather, though faire, verſe 22.

out of the South] Heb. Out of the chamber. See on chap. 9. 9. Others underſtand it out of a ſecret place, as Job 23. 9. Pſal. 135. 7. But the South is beſt, becauſe it brings tempeſt, and it is here oppoſed to the North, which brings fair cold weather.

the whirlewinde] See on chap. 21. 18. on the word; ſtorme.

and cold out of the North] Heb. out of the ſcattering windes. which are the Northerne windes which diſpel the clouds, and purifie the aire, and therefore are called by ſome learned men the broomes of heaven. Then followes faire cold weather, when the skie is cleared.

V. 10. By the breath of God, froſt is given, and the breadth of the waters is ſtraitned] When God pleaſe, a cold blaſt comes forth which bringeth froſt, whereby the waters, that ran at large before, are as it were ſhut up into a narrow priſon by the ice, which like the priſon walls encloſeth them.

By the breath of God] By a cold winde coming from God, as if he did breath it out of his mouth, Pſal. 18. 15. For the froſt comes from the exceſſe of cold windes, and therefore it is moſt rife in Northerne Countries, in ſo much that the ſea is frozen in thoſe parts. For God, ſee on chap. 8. 3, 5.

froſt is given] Heb. He giveth froſt. But it may be tranſlated paſſively. See the like on chap. 3. 3. That which here is tranſlated froſt, is divers times in this booke tranſlated ice. It comes from a word, that ſignifies to make bald, for it covers the graſſe which is as it were the haire of the ground, and makes it ſmooth like a bald head. For giving, ſee on chap. 14. 4. on the word, Bring.

and the breadth of the waters is ſtraitned] The waters are kept in from overflowing by the ice. Or, They are congealed into ice. And therefore ice is defined by ſome to be much water in a little roome, chap. 38. 30. For Breadth and ſtraitned, ſee on chap. 36. 16. For water, ſee on chap. 14. 9.

V. 11. Alſo by watering he wearieth the thick clouds; he ſcattereth his bright cloud.] As God ſometimes ſends froſt and ice, ſo at other times he ſends ſo much raine to water the earth, that the clouds are as it were weary with powring it down. He alſo drives away thoſe clouds of light, which were in the firmament before, as if he meant to ſend nothing but raine.

Alſo] God varieth his actions. Sometimes he ſends faire weather, ver. 9. and ſometimes foule, as in this verſe.

by watering] By watering the earth. By powring down continual ſhowres to that end. Or, by driving them to and fro to water divers parts of the earth, and then diſſolving them quite into raine.

he wearieth the thick cloud] Though the cloud be thick, and full of raine, yet he makes it ſpend all its ſtore, and ſo makes it weary, as a man is at night, that hath ſpent all his ſtrength in labouring all the day.

he ſcattereth his bright cloud] The cloud which was covered over with lightning before, chap. 36. 30. is now quite ſpent and diſperſed, and appears not at all. His bright cloud. Heb. The cloud of his light. For Light, ſee on chap. 17. 12. Others read it. And his light ſcattereth the cloud. That is, the Sun diſperſeth them.

V. 12. And it is turned round about by his counſels, that they may do whatſoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in all the earth] Thus you ſee that God turnes the clouds up and down as he pleaſeth by his wiſdom, that they may accompliſh his ends, and that not in ſome places alone, but all the world over.

and it] The cloud ſpoken of before in the former verſe.

is turned round about] Sometimes clouds are raiſed, ſometimes ſcattered, ſometimes driven as in a circle, or forward and backward from one place to another, ſometimes bright, and ſometimes dark.

by his counſels] The word in the Original is derived from the ropes of the ſhip, in managing of which for the beſt advantage of the ſhip, conſiſts the Sea mans skill. So God orders all theſe Meteors ſeverally for his own ends by his infinite wiſdom.

that they may do] That the clouds and other Meteors before mentioned may effect what God would have them to do.

whatſoever he commands them] A metaphor intimating, that the clouds and meteors are as ready to do what God requires, as a good ſervant is to do what his maſter commands. See the like, Levit. 25. 21.

upon the face of the world] Publickly in all the habitable world, whereſoever any men dwell. For the word, Face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word, Countenance. For World, ſee on chap. 18. 18.

in the earth] See on chap. 15. 19.

V. 13. He cauſeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy] Here he ſets out the end of Gods various diſpoſing of the clouds, and producing ſo many ſeveral Meteors out of them, to wit, either to correct men for their ſins by floods or lightnings, or to make the earth fruitful by ſending plenty of raine in due ſeaſon, or to coole men by gentle ſhowers in extremity of heat.

he cauſeth it to come] Heb. He cauſeth it to finde. He maketh it to finde a way to ſend out ſhowers or other meteors, for the ends appointed by God.

whether for correction] To chaſtiſe men for their ſins. Heb. for a rod, chap. 9. 34. For parents uſe to correct their children with rods; ſo doth God the world with floods and lightnings, chap. 36. 31. Exod. 9. 18, 23. 1 Sam. 12. 18, 19. Ezr. 10. 9. Others read it, for a Tribe. For ſome particular family. As parents uſed a rod for correction, ſo the chief of every family carried a rod or ſcepter in his hand, as a ſigne of authority. From thence the name came to be put for the whole Tribe, Numb. 17. 2. And ſo God cauſes it to rain on one place and not on another, Am. 4. 7.

or for his land] To make his land fruitful. That is, all parts of the world, where men dwell; for all is Gods, Pſal. 24. 1. Others reſtraine it to the land where Gods people dwell. Hoſ. 9. 3. Others take it for the wilderneſſe, which God onely lookes after, and men do not husband. God makes the raine to fall there, that the wilde beaſts may have food. So the ſea is ſaid to be Gods, Pſal. 95. 5. chap. 38. 26, 27. Pſal. 65. 12. & 104. 16. For land, ſee on chap 15. 19 on the word, Earth.

or for mercy] Or for other good uſes beſides fructifying the earth, as to purge the aire with lighening, to coole the earth with ſhowres in ſummer, &c. Others underſtand the former clauſe of watering the earth in an ordinary way, to produce an ordinary crop, and this of an extraordinary fruitfulneſſe. Others underſtand it of that mercy ſpoken of before, verſe, 7. That men may by the ſight of theſe extraordinary workes of God be brought to repentance, and eſcape deſtruction. The word ſometimes ſignifies reproach, but moſt commonly mercy, and that ſignification beſt fits here.

V. 14. Hearken unto this O Job : ſtand ſtill, and conſider the wondrous workes of God] Either Elihu conceives Job attended not, or that he was ready to interrupt him before he had done ; and therefore he calls upon him by name for attention, that laying aſide all diſquieting thoughts, he would hearken to him, diſcourſing of the mighty workes of God, that ſo he might not conteſt with God any longer, becauſe of his miſery, but might humble himſelfe before the mighty God, as he ought.

to this] To this diſcourſe of Gods various proceedings without blaming him. To that which I ſhall ſay further of it, if thou have been negligent before.

O Job] See on chap. 1. 1.

ſtand ſtill] Hear quietly, and do not reply till I have done. So this word is uſed, chap. 32. 16.

and conſider the wondrous workes of God] Lay aſide thy paſſion occaſioned by the greatneſſe of thy paines, and weigh well the ſtrangneſſe of Gods actions, which I have ſpoken of, and ſhall ſpeak of further, that thou mayeſt ſtoope unto him for the good of thy ſoul. For wonderous workes ſee on chap. 5. 9. on the word, Marvellous. For God, ſee on chap. 8. 3, 5.

V. 15. Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them, and cauſed the light of his cloud to ſhine ?] Canſt thou tell, when God is working in the clouds, or how he prepares them within to ſend forth Lightning and Thunder ? See on chap 36. 29.

Doſt thou know] God may be preparing for fair weather or foule weather in the clouds, and thou be quite ignorant of it.

diſpoſeth them] When he ſecretly orders the clouds for the ends aboveſaid, v. 11, 12. and that unſeen of men. Or his wonderful works, v. 14, 16.

and cauſed the light of his cloud to ſhine] Or, That he may cauſe, &c. That he may bring lightning and thunder, verſe 3. 11. chap. 36. 30. Others underſtand it of the Raine-bow, a ſigne of faire weather after raine. Others of the Sun-ſhine ſcattering the dark clouds. Theſe things neither Job nor any creature can foretell, much leſſe Gods ſtrange proceedings with the ſons of men, and therefore Job muſt not cenſure God, though he be in miſery. For light, ſee on chap. 17. 12.

V. 16. Doſt thou know the ballancings of the clouds, the wondrous workes of him who is perfect in knowledge ?] When God lifts up the vapours to the clouds, or keeps them there in an equall diſtance from the earth, as if he weighed them, or meanes to ſend them down again in raine, doth he make thee acquainted with his purpoſe ? Some underſtand it of Gods equall ballancing the clouds at firſt, ſo that they continue ſtill in their place, and fall not down to drown the earth. But this agrees not well with the reſt about the daily producing of new meteors.

Doſt thou know] See on v. 15.

the ballancings of the clouds] How God makes them bigger or leſſer, higher or lower, according as he meanes to uſe them for the good or hurt of the creatures, and that ſo exactly, as if he weighed them with a ballance in every change.

the wonderous workes] See on chap. 5. 9. on the word, marvellous of him which is perfect in knowledge] Of God, v. 14. See alſo on chap. 36. 4. 1 Sam. 2. 3.

V. 17. How thy garments are warme, when he quieteth the earth by the South winde] Now he brings Job neerer home, to convince him the more of ignorance in the reaſons of Gods actions. Canſt thou tell before hand when, or the reaſon why after ſtormes brought in by the South winde verſe 9. the ſun ſhould grow ſo hot that thou art ſcarce able to endure thy cloathes upon thy back ? For in thoſe hot Countries cloathes though light, were very burdenſome.

How] Doſt thou know throughly how it comes to paſſe, or when this change of weather will be ? If not, how canſt thou tell greater things ?

thy garments] See on chap. 6. 15. on the word, deceitfully.

are warme] Or, are hot. For ſo the word originally ſignifies.

when he quieteth the earth] Then God takes away the ſtorme from it, and ſends heat. Or, imperſonally, when the earth is quieted. For earth, ſee on chap. 5. 19.

by the South winde] Which brings heat, Luke 12. 55. As the North doth cold, verſe 9. Or, from the South. That is, from the Sun ſhining in the South, for there is no mention of winde in the Original, and that the ſunne is hotteſt when it comes into the South, and that ſuddenly after a great ſtorme, which made mens garments wet and cold before, is the more ſtrange. The word hath its Original from an high habitation, for the Sun is higheſt when it is in the South.

V. 18. Haſt thou with him ſpread out the skie, which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking-glaſſe] When the aire is darkned with clouds, and rent to pieces as it were with thunder, chap. 26. 9, 11. Canſt thou do as God often doth, make it ſtrong againe, and clear like a glaſſe that hath paſſed through the fire ? The ſumme of Elihu's argument in this matter of the meteors is this. If God call not man in other things, which he daily doth, as a counſellour or judge of his actions, nor cannot juſtly be required by any man to do ſo, nor may any man preſume againſt his ordering the meteors and ſeaſons, which yet concern the great good or hurt of many thouſands, it is a very equal thing, that a particular man ſhould not expect of God a reaſon of his particular dealing with him, but patiently ſubmit unto him, not queſtioning his juſtice at all though he never ſo grievouſly afflict him.

Haſt thou with him] Or, Doſt thou with him. For he ſpeakes of a thing often done, after every ſtorme, not of ſpreading the skie at firſt. See the reaſon on verſe 16. Thou canſt not do that which God often doth, nor art not helpful to him in that work, and therefore knoweſt not the reaſon of that ſettlement.

ſpread out the skie] Make it all cleare and faire after a ſtorme, as if it were covered over with a cleane cloth. For skie, ſee on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8 on the word, Heaven.

which is ſtrong] Though it be but a ſlight ſubſtance, yet none can alter the face of it but God.

and as a molten looking-glaſſe] That is, very cleare : For he ſpeakes of a faire skie after a ſtorme, and is not in the Original, and therefore it may be read, which is ſtrong as a molten looking-glaſs. If thoſe were made of mettals melted, as ſome conceive, then no doubt they were very ſtrong.

V. 19. Teach us what we ſhall ſay unto him, for we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſſe] If thou wouldſt have us to plead thy cauſe, bring out ſome of thoſe many arguments thou didſt brag of (Chap. 23. 4.) For we are ſo ignorant, that we can finde nothing for thee to ſay againſt God. A ſharp irony.

Teach us] Heb. Make us to know.

what we ſhall ſay] In thy defence, or if we were in the like caſe, and had ſuch a deſire to plead with God, as thou haſt expreſt, chap. 13. 3. & 23. 3. & 31. 35. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1.

unto him] Unto God mentioned, verſe 18.

for we cannot] So the future is tranſlated, chap. 11. 7, order our ſpeech] Our ſpeech, is added by the Tranſlators to make up the ſenſe. See it fully expreſt, chap. 32. 14. For order, ſee on chap. 13. 18.

by reaſon of darkneſſe] Becauſe of the darkneſſe of our underſtandings, which makes us unable to dive into the reaſons of Gods actions. חשך Darkneſſe is ſometimes put for trouble, as chap. 15. 22. Sometimes for death, as chap. 15. 23. Sometimes for ignorance, as Iſa. 9. 2. So here he glanceth at Jobs preſumption, that would controule Gods workes.

V. 20. Shall it be told him that I ſpeak ? if a man ſpeake, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up] It was the cuſtome of thoſe times, very likely and is ſo ſtill, that ſuites were entred in a book, and then dayes appointed for the hearing of them, as it is now in matters of law. The words may better be rendred thus ; Shall it be recorded unto him that I will ſpeake ? would any man ſpeake when he ſhall be ſwallowed up ? As if he had ſaid : Thinkeſt thou that I will enter into the liſts with God to maintaine thy cauſe againſt him ? Sure no man but a mad man, would ſpeak in a cauſe wherein he knows before hand he muſt needs be undone.

Shall it be told him] Shall God be made acquainted with my purpoſe, or bad ſpeeches of his proceedings like thine, or ſhall it be regiſtred for God to take notice of it. Such bookes of accuſation are mentioned, chap. 19. 23. & 31. 35.

that I ſpeak] That I will take thy cauſe in hand, and plead it againſt him. Others, that I will ſpeak ſo raſhly of his dealings as thou haſt done.

if a man ſpeake] Or, would any man ſpeak. To wit, in thy behalfe, or as thou haſt done. So אם is uſed by way of queſtion, chap. 17. 2. For man, ſee on chap. 1. 1. For ſpeak, ſee on chap. 16. 1. on the word, ſaid.

ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up] Or, when he ſhall be ſwallowed up. When he knows before hand that God would overthrow him by his power and majeſty. For כי ſurely, ſee on chap. 34. 31. For כי when, on chap. 7. 13. For ſwallowing, ſee on chap. 20. 15.

V. 21. And now men ſee not the bright light which is in the clouds, but the winde paſſeth, and cleanſeth them] Some underſtand the words thus. Thou ſeeſt O Job the Sun ſhining brightly, ſo that thou art not able to look upon it now the winde hath cleanſed the clouds ; how thinkeſt thou then that thou canſt behold Gods majeſty ? But it rather ſeems to be a preparation for the whirlewinde coming, in which God intended to ſpeak, chap. 38. 2. God had made way by lightning and thunder before, verſe 2. Now he darkens the aire again, ſo that they could not ſee the Sun. An argument of Gods coming to ſpeake in anger. And the words may be read thus at the end of the ver. But when the wind paſſeth, and cleanſeth them, then faire weather will come, &c. verſe 22.

And now] At this inſtant ſee a ſudden change of the face of the sky.

men ſee not the bright light which is in the clouds] The clouds have ſhut in the light of the Sun, ſo that men cannot behold it. For ſeeing, ſee on chap. 19. 27. on the word, behold. For light, ſee on chap. 31. 26. For clouds, ſee on chap 9. 8. & 11. 8. on the word, heaven.

but] Or, but when. It is tranſlated, and when, 1 Sam. 13. 1. For but, ſee on chap. 30. 1.

the winde] See on chap. 15. 2. upon vaine knowledge.

paſſeth] See on chap. 15. 19.

and cleanſeth them] When the winde hath ſcattered the dark clouds, then it will be fair again.

V. 22. Fair weather cometh out of the North: with God is terrible majeſty] When God pleaſeth to darken the aire, and afterthat to make it clear again by ſending northerne winds to purge it, then he ſhewes that he is both terrible and glorious, worthy both to be feared, and to be praiſed.

Faire weather] Heb. Gold. Shining and bright things in Scripture are compared to gold. As oyle, Zech. 4. 12. So here the bright beams of the Sun.

cometh] Or, will come. For it may be then it was cloudy. See on v. 21.

out of the North] By meanes of the northern winds clearing the aire, verſe 9. Prov. 25. 23. It hath his name from hiding, becauſe in the remote parts of the North the Sun is not ſeen ſome part of the year.

with God] Or, in God. So it is tranſlated, Pſal. 42. 5, 6. Exod. 29. 3. For God, ſee on chap. 5. 17. & 11. 5.

is terrible majeſty] He is to be feared and honoured. The word Majeſty may come from ידה to confeſſe. It argues ſome ſpecial greatneſſe, that makes men acknowledge and confeſſe it. Others read it in way of a doxology, unto God be reverend Majeſty. Let his glory be acknowledged in theſe meteors, and ſtrange changes in the aire.

V. 23. Touching the Almighty we cannot finde him out; he is excellent in power, and in judgement, and in plenty of juſtice: he will not afflict] This verſe and the laſt contain the concluſion of Elihu's ſpeech. The doctrinal part concerning Gods incomprehenſibleneſs, greatneſſe, and juſtice, is in this verſe. The practical part of reverence due to him therefore is in the next verſe. The ſum of this verſe is, that though God be above mans reach in his eſſence, and infinite in power, yet he never abuſeth his power to the wronging of any man. A fit concluſion for ſo ſerious a diſcourſe.

touching the Almighty] See on chap. 8. 3, 5.

we cannot finde him out] See on chap. 11. 7. We cannot comprehend the infiniteneſſe of his eſſence, nor approach to the brightneſs of his glory, nor pierce into the ſecrets of his providence.

he is excellent] Very great, chap. 36. 26. It comes from a word that ſignifies to encreaſe. Men that encreaſe in wealth grow very rich: God is greater than they in power, though he grow not, for he alwayes was ſo.

in power] In ſtrength and ability to do what he pleaſe, chap. 9. 4. & 12. 13, 16. & 36. 5.

and in judgement] See on chap. 22. 4.

and in plenty] See on chap. 22. 5. on the word, Great.

of juſtice] Of upright dealing toward all.

he will not afflict] Not willingly, but when he is as it were forced by mens ill carriage, Lam. 3. 33. or without juſt cauſe. Others read the end of the verſe thus, He will not afflict him in judgement and plenty of juſtice. That is, he will not uſe ſuch extremity, as he might without violation of juſtice in afflicting men. Others thus, He will not oppreſſe judgement and plenty of juſtice. That is, he will not pervert it, for that is a kinde of oppreſſion of it. Others thus, He will not (or, need not) anſwer. He being ſo juſt, that he will by no means abuſe his power, there is no reaſon why any ſhould call him to account for his actions, neither will he give any anſwer, if they do. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1. on the word, Anſwered.

V. 24. Men do therefore fear him: he reſpecteth not any that are wiſe of heart] In regard of Gods great power, and juſtice, it is fit, that men ſhould have a reverent account of his actions, and the rather becauſe he regardeth not the cenſure of thoſe that think themſelves wiſe enough to controule him in his actions.

men] See on chap. 5. 17. & 9. 2.

do] Or, ſhould. So the future is tranſlated, chap. 34. 6. Wiſe men do fear God: All men ſhould do it.

therefore] Becauſe of his infinite power and juſtice.

fear him] Reverence God, and have an high account of all his actions, and not raſhly diſpute againſt them, though they know not the cauſes of them. See on chap. 1. 1. & 15. 4.

he reſpecteth not] He regards not. See on chap. 19. 27. on the word, Behold.

any that are wiſe of heart] That think themſelves able to convince him of unwiſe and unjuſt dealing. Others read it, But he ſeeth not all wiſe in heart. Men ſhould be ſo wiſe, as not to diſpute againſt any of his proceedings. But he knows all are not ſo. A ſecret nip for Job, who had deſired often to reaſon with God about the cauſe of his afflictions. Others read it thus, No men, though never ſo wiſe in heart can ſee him. He is inviſible, and incomprehenſible. For the phraſe, ſee on chap. 9. 4. For Heart, on chap. 15. 12.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Verſe 1. THen the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlewinde, and ſaid] That though Job had rightly maintained, that he was not puniſhed as an hypocrite, nor was worſe than his accuſers, yet ſome impatient ſpeeches eſcaped from him, which needed correction. As Elihu had in part ſhewed before, ſo God doth it now more fully; and that in two Orations, to each of which is adjoyned Jobs ſubmiſſion. The firſt from hence to verſe, 6. of the 40. Chap. The ſecond, to ver. 7. of the 42. Chap. In the firſt note, 1. Gods long Oration, Chap. 38. & 39. 2. His call for an anſwer, Chap. 40. 1, 2. 3. Jobs ſhort and ſubmiſſive anſwer, Chap. 40. 3, 4, 5. In Gods long ſpeech obſerve, Firſt, the Preface, in this Chap. ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. The ſpeech it ſelf to the end of Chap. 39. In the Preface note, firſt a tranſition of the Pen-man, ver. 1. 2. Gods objurgation of Job for his boldneſſe, verſe 2. 3. His permiſſion of him nevertheleſſe to ſpeak for himſelf, ver. 3. Job had often deſired Gods judgement in the cauſe. So had Jobs friends, Chap. 11. 5. They were all weary with diſputing, and God now comes beyond all their expectation, and determines the buſineſſe. He had now long enough ſuffered his ſervant Job to be hurried by Satan and his inſtruments. He now raiſeth a ſtorm, and out of it ſpeaks to Job as followeth, verſe 2. &c. It is worth obſerving, how much Gods ſpeech goes beyond Elihu's for matter and manner.

then] When the reſt had done diſputing. So this particle is tranſlated, chap. 20. 1.

the LORD] Jehovah in Heb. He that is, was, and is to come; for it hath a touch of all three tenſes in it. And it comes from Being; for God hath his being in himſelf, and gives being to al creatures.

anſwered] To Jobs former complaints, and ſtopt his mouth, which his three friends could not do. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 1.

Job] Not his friends, nor Elihu; for Job was the perſon tried, and chiefly concerned in the buſineſſe. For Job, ſee on chap. 1. 1.

out of the whirlewinde] Which was raiſed before, together with lightning and thunder, chap. 37. 2, 21. To make way for Gods ſpeaking in ſtate, yet hiding his glory, and to make Job and his friends the more attentive. Thus God did uſe in former times to ſpeak to his ſervants, Deut. 4. 12. 1 King. 19. 11. &c. Ezek. 1. 4. &c. Nah. 1. 3. Heb. 12. 18.

and ſaid] See on chap. 16. 1.

V. 2. Who is this, that darkneth counſel by words without knowledge] Here is a check to Job, and likewiſe an implication of what God intended to prove againſt him, to wit, that he had ſpoken ignorantly concerning Gods afflicting of him, and by his complaints of injuſtice had obſcured or caſt a cloud upon Gods righteous dealing, to make the world believe that God had done him wrong.

who is this] Which of you is it? As if God had expected that Job being guilty ſhould take it to himſelf. Or, as if God had pointed to Job. Or, what manner of man is this, that dares thus to obſcure Gods counſels? chap. 42. 3.

that darkneth counſel] That caſts a black colour on the ſoveraigne brightneſſe of the juſtice, and wiſdome of my providence, accuſing my judgements of folly and injuſtice. Who by ſearching out the counſel of his own corrupt reaſon makes it the more obſcure, and declares his own folly, Rom. 1. 22.

by words without knowledge] See on chap. 35. 16.

V. 3. Gird up now thy loines like a man; for I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me] The ſame challenge is made to Job, chap. 40. 7. Job had put God to his choice, chap. 13. 22. And now God cuſeth the replying part, and puts Job to anſwer for himſelf. As if he had ſaid, if thou wilt needs diſpute with me, prepare thy ſelfe like a man to battel. As he girds his loines, ſo do thou bring forth thy beſt reaſons for thy ſelf. See what thou canſt anſwer to what I ſhall demand, If thou canſt not, ſee thine own folly in accuſing, and challenging me to this weighty diſpute.

Gird up now thy loynes] Their garments being looſe in thoſe hot Countries, as appears by the phraſe of covering the feet, Judg. 3. 24. They did uſe to gird their clothes to them, that they might not be troublſome, when they did eat, Exod. 12. 11. or went to labour or travel, 1 King. 18. 46. or to fight, 1 King 20. 11. So here by way of metaphor, prepare thy ſelfe for this tongue combate, ſo well as thou canſt. See the like phraſe alſo, Prov. 31. 17. Jer. 1. 17.

like a man] Like a valiant man that meanes to grapple with his adverſary. Thou haſt bragged much, now ſee what thou canſt do. For a man ſee on chap. 14. 10. & 22. 2.

for] I meane to ſettle to the worke: thou haſt a ſtrong adverſary therefore, beſtir thy ſelf. For I for ſee on chap. 17. 10.

I will demand of thee] Thou thinkeſt thy ſelfe wiſe enough to cenſure my proceedings. I will convince thee of ignorance by certain queſtions. Anſwer them if thou canſt.

and anſwer thou me] Heb. And make thou me to know. Thou thinkeſt thy ſelfe a very underſtanding man, ſee if thou canſt either tell me, or teach me the right in what I ſhall aske.

V. 4. Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou haſt underſtanding] To convince Job of ignorance he begins with the Creation of the World, enterlining many things which cannot well admit of a diviſion, but muſt be handled in order, as they ſtand. He loads Job with many deep queſtions, the leaſt whereof he could not anſwer. The ſum of this v. is, Thou art but of yeſterday, I am from eternity. Thou waſt taken out of the earth, and therefore couldſt have no being when I made the earth. Much leſſe couldſt thou be my councellour or companion in the work. And ſhall I need thy counſel in governing of the world, that needed it not in making it? See thy errour and repent.

Where waſt thou] Thou that takeſt ſo much upon thee now, hadſt no being, when I did that great work, chap. 15. 7.

when I laid the foundations of the earth] A metaphor from builders; who when they go about ſome great fabrick firſt lay a deep, and ſtrong foundation that the building may continue. So God though he founded the earth on the center, a thing of nothing, yet laid it ſo faſt, it cannot be moved; or by the foundations of the earth, may be meant the body of the earth, which lies loweſt, and like a ſtrong foundation upholds as it were the other elements, and the heavens. For the phraſe ſee Pſal. 102. 25. & 104. 5. Prov. 8. 29. For the earth, ſee on chap. 15. 19.

declare] See on chap. 15. 18 on the word, Told.

if thou haſt underſtanding] Heb. If thou knoweſt underſtanding. Dan. 2. 21. 1 Chron. 12. 32. & 2 Chron. 2, 12. Iſa. 29. 24.

V. 5. Who hath laid the meaſures thereof, if thou knoweſt? or who hath ſtretched the line upon it] Having ſpoken of the Creation of the earth in general in the former verſe: He now goes on in the manner of building, to ſet out the greatneſſe of this work, too great for Job or for any creatures braine or hands. Firſt the Builder cuſeth a ground to build on fit for what he intends to do. Then he meaſures it by a line, that the building may be proportionable. After that the foundation is laid, and then the walls are raiſed, and the building is firm. So did God firmely make and ſettle the earth, verſe 5, 6.

who hath laid] Wiſely diſpoſed, as a builder doth a plot of ground, in which he means to build. Who choſe a fit place for the earth, and left roome for the other elements fit for each of them? None but I did it: none but I could do it.

the meaſures thereof] Who hath proportioned the length, breadth, height, depth, thickneſſe of it?

if thou knoweſt] Tell if thou canſt, who did it. For כי if, ſee chap. 21. 15. Others read it, (For thou knoweſt.) Thou takeſt upon thee to cenſure my actions, as if thou kneweſt all things, better than I. A tart irony, as v. 21. So כי is tranſlated For. Pſal. 135. 4.

or who hath ſtretched the line upon it] Who proportioned it into levels, hills, dales, as by a line? Zech. 1. 16. & 2. 1. For ſtretched, ſee on chap. 26. 7. There is mentioned in the Prophets a line for building, as before: and a line for deſtroying, as Iſa. 34. 11. The firſt is here meant.

V. 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtned? or who laid the corner ſtone thereof] Upon what props did I ſet ſuch an infinite weight, and by whoſe aid did I as it were lay an high corner ſtone to uphold, and keep together ſo great a building.

whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtned] Heb. The ſockets thereof made to ſinke] For foundations are laid in the ground, and the beams on them joyned with ſockets. All this is to ſhew the firmneſſe and unmoveableneſſe of the work. See Pſal. 104. 5.

or who laid the corner ſtone thereof] Who made the parts to keep ſo cloſe together, and to keep up one another? It is in vaine to enquire here, what is the foundation of the earth and the corner ſtone; for all is metaphorical to ſhew the firmneſſe of the work, as buildings laſt, that have good foundations, and corner ſtones. For laid, ſee on chap. 6. 24. & 8. 10. For ſtone, ſee on chap. 14. 19.

V. 7. When the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the ſonnes of God ſhouted for joy] Some joyne theſe words immediately to the former, and underſtand it all of the Angels, whom they conceive to be made the firſt day, and being as it were the ſtars of heaven for brightneſſe, to praiſe God at the laying of the foundation of the earth that day, like the ſhoutings at laying the head-ſtone of the Temple, Zech. 4. 7. Ezr. 3. 10, 11. Others joyne it to v. 4.

where waſt thou when the morning ſtars, &c.] And theſe ſuppoſe the ſtars and Angels both made the fourth day, and the ſtars to praiſe God materially, as the heavens do, Pſal. 19. 1. And the Angels vocally, as muſitians ſing or play upon inſtruments. And that at the firſt upon that ſtrange ſight of the Creation of the ſtars, and of themſelves.

when the morning ſtars] The ſtars new created, Pſal. 148. 3. or rather the Angels created in the firſt morning of the world, that they might behold the creation of all other creatures, though they had no hand in it, and firſt praiſe God for it, before man was made. Thus it muſt be underſtood, for elſe ſtars and Angels praiſe God ſtill. So Angels are compared to ſtars for brightneſſe, Rev. 1. 20. And are called Angels of light, 2 Cor. 11. 14. And they are called morning ſtars becauſe they were the firſt living creatures made in the morning of the world. Chriſt is alſo called the morning ſtar, Rev. 22. 16. For Morning, ſee on chap. 7. 18.

ſang together] At the ſame time in a harmony. Or, together with the laying the foundation of the earth, or with the creation of the ſtars or Angels, or Sang alone. When there were yet no other creatures to praiſe God, man being yet not made. So this word is tranſlated onely, chap. 34. 29. And ſhould be, alone not together, as it is Ezr. 4. 3.

and all the ſons of God] All the Angels, for there were no other ſonnes of God then, See on chap. 1. 6.

ſhouted for joy] See chap. 33. 26 Ezr. 3. 11.

V. 8. Or who ſhut up the Sea with dooers, when it brake forth, as if it had iſſued out of the wombe] God goes on to ſet out his mighty power in bounding the Sea. It did at firſt overflow the earth being the higher element, till God was pleaſed to prepare as it were a great houſe to encloſe it, and doors to ſhut it in, that there might be a dry land for men and beaſts to inhabit. This none could do but God.

Or] So it is tranſlated, chap. 15. 7.

who] This is added out of verſe 5. to make up the ſenſe.

ſhut up] Kept the Sea within certain bounds, that it might not drown men and beaſts, chap. 7. 12. & 26. 10. Pſal. 104. 9. & 33. 7. Gen. 1. 9 Prov. 8. 29.

the Sea] That huge heape of waters, into which all the rivers run. See on chap. 14. 11. Eccl. 1. 7.

with doors] With banks and downes, and ſometime with the weake ſands. The hollow places of the earth, wherein it is lodged, are as it were the houſe of the Sea. The borders are like doors.

when it brake forth] Out of the Earth at firſt, and then overran it all. Moſes makes no mention of the Creation of the Sea, yet it ſeems it was brought forth out of the earth, becauſe the fountains of it are mentioned, v. 16. Gen. 7. 11. Prov. 3. 20. The word ſignifies a breaking forth with a kind of force or violence.

as if it had iſſued out of the wombe] Some underſtand it of coming out of the wombe of Gods providence; but it is moſt likely it came out of the wombe of the earth, as before a metaphor taken from child-bearing. And after that God ſhut it within certain bounds, as v. 10, 11. For Iſſuing out, ſee on chap. 20. 25. on the word, Cometh out. For wombe, ſee on chap. 24. 20.

V. 9. When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkneſſe a ſwadling-band for it] The Lord goes on in the metaphor. When the childe is borne, garments and ſwadling-bands are provided for it to compaſſe it about and cover it; ſo hath God girt it, and covered the Sea with clouds and darkneſſe. As though the ſea were but a little babe in the hands of God to order it, as he liſt, which yet the greateſt Potentates cannot curbe.

when I made the clouds the garments thereof] Underſtand, where waſt thou then? out of v. 4. To wit, when I having ſeparated the Sea from the earth did firſt make the clouds to cover it as garments do the childe, that comes naked into the world. See for Garment, on chap. 24. 7, 10. on cloathing, and covering.

and thick darkneſſe a ſwadling-band for it] Some underſtand it of the clouds, as before, but it may well be underſtood of fogs and miſts, which ariſe often upon the ſea, and are between the clouds and the ſea, as the ſwadling bands between the upper garment and the childe.

V. 10. And brake up for it my decreed place, and ſet barrs and doors] Becauſe the clouds and fogs could not keep the ſea from running over the earth, God hath therefore impriſoned it in thoſe hollow places, which he determined to hold the waters of the ſea, and hath ſhut it in there, as it were with ſtrong doors, and added bars to them to make them ſure, See on v. 8.

And brake up] Where waſt thou when I brake it up? The word שבר ſignifies. 1. To cleave or break any bodily ſubſtance, Jer. 19. 10. 2. To breake the heart with grief making it as unprofitable, as a broken ſtick, Pſal. 69. 20. 3. To pull down the pride or violence of wicked men by taking away the upholders or inſtruments of it, Pſal. 3. 7. 4. To ſatisfie hunger or thirſt whereby the rage of them is broken. Pſal. 104, 11. So we call it breaking our faſt, when we firſt eat in a morning. 5. To buy corne, Gen. 41. 57. 6. To ſell corne, Gen. 41. 56. 7. To make war to ceaſe, Hoſ. 2. 18. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for Gods making hollow places in the earth to hold the waters of the ſea.

my decreed place] See on chap. 26. 10. on the word, Bounds. Others read it, And eſtabliſhed my decree upon it. But שבר ſignifies breaking rather than eſtabliſhing.

and ſet bars and doors] Made ſtrong banks about it, and other bounds to keep it within compaſſe.

V. 11. And ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed] When I had ſhut the ſea within its bounds, then I laid a command on it to keep within thoſe limits, and not to ſuffer the greateſt waves to go beyond them.

And ſaid] And commanded. See on chap. 16. 1.

Hitherto ſhalt thou come] Thou maiſt come as far as the appointed ſhore. For come, ſee on chap. 15. 21.

but] So it is tranſlated, chap. 30. 1.

no further] Heb. Thou ſhalt not adde. To wit, to go beyond thy bounds, or to cover the earth any more, Pſal.124. 9.

and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed] Heb. and here it ſhall ſet it ſelf againſt the pride of thy waves. That is, the ſhoare which I have ſet for a bound ſhall oppoſe and keep in thy ſtrongeſt wave, Pſal. 89. 9. For wave, ſee on Chaptar 15. 28. on the word, heaps.

V. 12. Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy dayes? and cauſed the day-ſpring to know his place] God now ſets out his own power, and Jobs weakneſſe, by the production of the morning light. Doth the day-light obey thee, and the Sun ariſe at ſuch times and places as thou doſt appoint? Were not theſe things ſet in order long before thou waſt borne?

Haſt thou commanded] Haſt thou ſo commanded, that it came at thy command? As when God ſaid, Let there be light there was light, Gen. 1. 3. So this word is uſed, Lev. 25. 21. Pſal.133. 3. & 68. 28. Iſa 45. 12. For what God commands muſt ſtand, Pſal. 33 9. & 148 5.

the morning] The morning light, which ſhewes men what lay in darkneſſe before. For the word, ſee on chap. 7.18.

ſince thy dayes] Since thou wert born Were there not mornings before thou waſt borne? or didſt thou ever once in all thy dayes command the light to come out of darkneſſe? For dayes, ſee on Chap,14. 14.

and cauſed the day-ſpring to know his plate?] Made it to know when and where it ſhould break forth. The word day-ſpring comes from blackneſſe, for it is not clear light at firſt.

V. 13. That it might take hold of the ends of the Earth, that the wicked might be ſhaken out of it] He ſets forth here a double benefit of the morning light. Firſt that it ſuddenly ſpreads it ſelf over the earth, and turns darkneſſe into light. Secondly, that it puts wicked men to flight, as theeves, adulterers, murderers, who ſin in the dark, and fly as ſoon as morning light appears.

That it might take hold of the ends of the earth] Not only give light in ſome places, but every where, taking poſſeſſion as it were of the whole world, whereſoever the light of the Sun comes. Ends, Heb. wings, Chap.37.3. For Earth ſee on Chap.15.19.

that the wicked might be ſhaken out of it] Some underſtand it of their hiding themſelves ſo cloſe in the day-light for fear of being diſcovered, that none of them dare act thoſe wickedneſſes in the light, which they do boldly in the dark. Herein they are like wild beaſts, ravening in the night, and lurking in the day, Pſal. 104.20.22. See Chap 24. 13. 17. John 3 20. Others underſtand it of apprehending malefactors in the morning for ſinnes done in the night, and bringing them ſuddenly to judgment, by ſentence whereof they are either driven out of the land by baniſhment, or out of the Earth by death. For judgement in the morning, ſee Ruth 3. 14. with 4. 1. Pſal. 101. 8. Jer.21. 12. Exod. 18. 13.

V. 14. It is turned as clay to the ſeale, and they ſtand as a garment] In this verſe is an expoſition of the former part of the former verſe. In the next verſe, of the latter. The light ſuddenly running over the world, ſets a new ſtamp upon the earth, the Sun-beams ſhining upon it as lace upon a garment, and the flowers and graſſe that cover the earth, and were covered themſelves in the night, now in the morning diſcovering themſelves, as pictures do on the clay when the ſtamp of the ſeale is ſet upon it. So there is a double metaphor to ſet out the renewed face of the earth every morning. The one from the clay altered by the ſeal: The other from men putting on new attire in the morning, and appearing glorious, that lay obſcure in the night.

It] The Earth appears beautifull, that was hidden in the dark before.

is turned] It hath as it were got a new form; Or, is renewed, to the ſame ſhape it had the day before.

as the clay to the ſeale] As if it had a new ſtamp put upon it by the Sun-beams, as the clay hath by the impreſſion of the ſeal. For clay, ſee on Chap.13.12.

they ſtand as a garment] The beautifull things that grow on the earth, are like a ſtately garment, or ornament on a man, Matth.9. 28.29.

V. 15. And from the wicked their light is withholden, and the high arme ſhall be broken] Here is an expoſition of the ſecond part of verſe 13. A ſecond effect of light is, that wicked men are judged, condemned, and executed, and ſo their pride, oppreſſion, and other deeds of darkneſſe ceaſe.

And from the wicked their light is withholden] The coming of the day-light, as it brings malefactors to judgement, ſo it deprives them of the light of worldly happineſſe, as honours, riches, pleaſures, yea and life it ſelf, which are in Scripture phraſe ſet out by the name of light, Chap.18, 5,6, For wicked, ſee on Chap.3.17.

and the high arm ſhall be broken] As they ſhall loſe all their comfort; ſo alſo ſhall they be deprived of all their ſtrength, wherein they prided themſelves, and wherewith they oppreſſed others. It is called an high arm, becauſe the arm uſeth to be lifted up to ſtrike, Pſal.10. 15. & 37 17. Ezek.30 22.
For arm, ſee on chap.22.8. on the word, mighty.

V. 16. Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea? or haſt thou walked in the ſearch of the depth] He ſhewes that it is not poſſible for Job to attain to the depth of Gods counſels, that cannot comprehend the depth of the ſea, ver. 16. 17. nor the breadth of the earth, verſe 18. nor the height of heaven, verſe 19, 20, 21. God had ſpoken of the creation of the ſea before, verſe 8. Now he ſpeaks of the depth of it, which was far above Jobs reach, as the making of it at firſt.

Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea?] Haſt thou ever been at the bottome of the ſea to ſee how the waters there abundantly come out of the earth? ſee on verſe 8. Entred, Heb. come. For ſpring, ſee on chap. 28. 11. on the word, overflowing. It ſignifies weeping. Springs pour out water, as eyes do tears. One word in the Originall ſignifies an eye, and a ſpring. For ſea ſee on chapter 14. 11.

or haſt thou walked in the ſearch of the depth?] Haſt thou gone up and down in the bottome of the ſea, and obſerved thoſe ſecret parts there, which no man can by any ſearch find out. Or, or haſt thou walked in the depth by ſearch? Haſt thou found any unknown way to the bottome of the Sea by curious enquiry? The depth is expounded by the ſea, chap.28.14.

V. 17. Have the gates of death been opened unto thee, or haſt thou ſeen the doores of the ſhadow of death?] Are thoſe deadly and dark places in the bottome of the ſea, or in the bowels of the Earth; made known to thee, where dead men lye rotting.

Have the gates of death been opened unto thee] Doſt thou ſee how dean men deſcend to their reſting place, or what they endure there? For gates of death, ſee Pſal.9.13. & 107.18.

been opened unto thee] Heb. revealed. No man living can ſee thoſe ſecrets.

or haſt thou ſeen the doores of the ſhadow of death?] The ſame thing in other words. Haſt thou ſeen thoſe dark and diſmall places where dead men lye, which were enough to ſtrike thee dead alſo with terrour and fear. For ſeen, look on Chap.19.27. on the word, behold. For ſhadow of death, ſee on Chap.3.5. & 10.21.

V. 18. Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the earth? declare, if thou knoweſt it all] Though the earth be better known to man than the depth of the ſea, yet no man ever ſaw it all. There are ſo many wilderneſſes and bogs in it, that as no man can paſſe through them all, ſo Methuſelahs life would not ſerve to do it. In vaine therefore ſhould Job think to apprehend the inviſible reaſons of Gods proceedings, that could not give an account of all viſible things in the world.

Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the earth?] Haſt thou travailed all the world over, and ſeen what is in every corner of the earth? The word breadth containes alſo the length, and circumference of the earth, ſee on Chap.36.16. The breadth of a thing is the largeneſſe of it in Scripture language oppoſed to ſtraitneſſe and narrowneſs, as Deut.19.8. Ezek. 41. 7. And threfore it is the breadths in Heb. in the plurall number including the length and circumference. For Earth, ſee on chap.15.19.

declare, if thou knoweſt it all] If thou canſt tell what is in all parts of the world: Or as others, if thou canſt reſolve all that I have asked thee, ſpeak out, that it may apear thou canſt do it. For declare, ſee on Chap.15.18. on the word, told.

V. 19. Where is the way where light dwelleth, and as for darkneſſe where is the place thereof] Tell if thou canſt where the Sun lodgeth, and the light of the day when the Sun goes down, or what becomes of the darkneſs when the Sun ariſeth.

Where is the way] What way leads to the lodging of the light? A poeticall expreſſion, as if the Sun-ſetting retired himſelf to his chamber, as we do at night. Pſal. 19. 5.

where light dwelleth] Where it abideth when it is not ſeen abroad. For men are ſuppoſed to be at home, when they are not employed without doores. For light, ſee on Chapter 17. 12. & 25. 3.

and as for darkneſſe] Which comes by the abſence of the Sun.

where is the place thereof] Whither goes it when it goes from home? A metaphor from men, who when they goe from one place, goe to another. Not that darkneſs doth ſo remove. But the plain meaning of it is, Thou canſt not tell what is become of it.

V. 20. That thou ſhouldeſt take it to the bound thereof, and that thou ſhouldeſt know the paths to the houſe thereof] Art thou able to direct the light or darkneſs to the place where it ſhould abide, till ſuch time as it is to come forth again.

That thou ſhouldſt take it to the bound thereof] Or, at the bound thereof. That thou like a guide ſhouldſt take it by the hand as it were, and lead it to the place of abode. One verb included in another. See on chap. 15. 8. & 16. 11. & 18. 8. Others underſtand it of bringing it to the longeſt day of the year, and then to the ſhorteſt, which are as bounds of light and darkneſſe. For take, ſee on Chap.15.12. on the word, carry away.

and that thou ſhouldſt know the paths to the houſe thereof] That thou ſhouldſt ſo perfectly underſtand all the paths thereof, that thou canſt guide it to its reſting place. By houſe here, is meant place, as verſe 19. For the word, ſee on chap.15. 28.

V. 21. Knoweſt thou it becauſe thou waſt then born, or becauſe the number of thy dayes is great] Thou waſt not ſo much as born when I ſet a diſtinction between day and night, between light and darkneſs. Thy dayes are not of ſo long continuance. How then canſt thou know certainly what was done before thou waſt born.

Knoweſt thou it] Doſt thou perfectly underſtand what I have demanded of thee, ſo that thou canſt give me a full anſwer.

becauſe thou waſt then born] Hadſt thou any being then, if not, how couldeſt thou know it.

or becauſe the number of thy dayes is great] Thou muſt be a very old man if thou have lived ever ſince the beginning of the world. For day, ſee on chap. 14. 1. For great, ſee on chap. 22. 5. Others read the whole verſe ironically thus: Thou knoweſt it, for thou waſt then born, and for that the number of thy years is great. Others thus; Didſt thou know that thou ſhouldſt be born at ſuch a time, and that the number of thy years ſhould be great. But the firſt reading is beſt, and moſt agreeable to the coherence.

V. 22. Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow, or haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the haile] God now proceeds to the meteors, and begins with ſnow and haile. As if he had ſaid, thou O Job haſt often ſeen it ſnow and haile, and it may be haſt wondred at the ſtore of it, and whence it ſhould come; but thou waſt never above in the clouds, where I lay it up, as men do treaſures in great abundance to bring forth when they mean to uſe them.

Haſt thou entred] See on verſe 16.

into the treaſures] Or, into the ſtore-houſes For God uſeth ſnow and haile as weapons rather than treaſure, verſe 23. God hath alſo treaſuries for the winds, out of which he brings them when he pleaſes, Pſal, 135. 7.

of the ſnow] See on Chap. 37, 6.

or haſt thou ſeen[See on Chap. 19 27. on the word, behold.

the treaſures] See before in this verſe.

of the haile] Which alſo falls abundantly, as out of a treaſury.

V. 23. Which I have reſerved againſt the time of trouble against the day of battell and war] Here God ſets out his armory to us, wherein are ſuch weapons as no man can produce, to deſtroy his enemies, namely, ſnow and haile, as Exod. 9. 24. Joſh. 10 11. Iſa. 30. 30. With theſe and ſuch like meteors God judgeth the people, Chap. 36. 31. And ſealeth up the hand of every man, Chapter 37. 7.

Which] Some reſtrain it to the haile, becauſe no mention is made of hurt done by ſnow in Scripture. Yet experience ſhewes that men and beaſts have been buried in a great ſnow, and drowned in floods at the thaw.

I have reſerved] Laid up in the clouds my magazine and arcinall.

againſt the time of trouble] Againſt the time when I intend to bring trouble upon the ſonnes of men for their ſin. Or, againſt the time of the enemy. For the word ſignifies both, and battell and war follow in this verſe.

againſt the day] See on chap. 14. 1.

of battell] The word properly ſignifies a war near at hand, wherein the enemies approach, one to another, but may be uſed for any war.

and warre] When God layes judgements on his enemies, he is ſaid to have war with them. Exod. 17. 16. Iſa. 27. 4.

V. 24. By what way is the light parted which ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind upon the earth?] It may be underſtood either of parting the light from the clouds, in ſending forth lightnings, which often come from the Eaſt, Matth. 24. 27. and raiſe an Eaſt-wind by troubling the aire, as light is uſed, Chap 36. 30. & 37. 3. and this agrees well with the next verſe. Or, of parting the light from the darkneſs, when the Sun riſing brings light, 2 Sam. 23. 4. and it may be ſhines in one place, and not in another, and raiſeth the Eaſt-wind; which often follows the riſing Sunne. Job could not tell, how either of theſe wonderfull works could be done.

By what way] See on verſe 19.

is the light] See on Chap. 17. 12. & 37. 15.

parted] From the clouds or darkneſſe, as before.

which ſcattereth the Eaſt wind upon the earth] As the thunder coming from the Eaſt may raiſe an Eaſt wind, ſo alſo the riſing Sun. For the Sun is called Ventorum pater, the Father of the Windes, and the Eaſt wind is Subſolanus, as being under the command of the Sunne, Others read it, And which way the Eaſt wind ſcattereth it ſelf upon the earth] That is, which way it will be ſcattered, or in what country it will blow. Or, ſcattereth the clouds which are over the earth. As chap. 37. 11. For earth ſee on chap, 15. 19.

V. 25. Who hath divided a water courſe for the overflowing of waters? or a way for the lightning or thunder?] Who ſends the rain down upon the earth in abundance, and that in ſeverall places as he pleaſe himſelf, as if he had made leaden pipes in the clouds? Or who hath rent the clouds that the lightning and thunder may come forth?

Who] Not thou ſurely, nor any elſe beſide my ſelf.

hath divided] Or, derived. For the Hebrew word for a River comes from this root. And thence alſo comes Pelagus the ſea, out of which the rivers are divided.

a water courſe] A place to convey the rain from heaven to earth where God will, Chap. 28. 26. So here verſe 26, It comes from a word that ſignifies to aſcend, or to be on high, for ſuch places uſe to begin on high, and carry water to lower grounds. Such are the windows of heaven, Gen. 7. 11.

for the overflowing of waters] Of the waters above, that abundance of rain may fall. For he ſpeaks not of floods on earth to deſtroy, but of plentifull and ſeaſonable rain to nouriſh the fruits of the earth, as appears, verſe 27.

or a way for the lightning of thunder] See on Chap. 28, 26. where all theſe words are found.

V. 26. To cauſe it to rain on the earth, where no man is; on the wilderneſſe, wherein there is no man? Gods providence extends it ſelf to places not inhabited. He ſends rain to ſuch places where no men are to water the earth, or eat of the fruits of it, to ſhew it to be his work alone, and that he feeds all living creatures, as verſe 27. Pſal. 104. 27. & 145. 15.

To cauſe it to rain on the earth] To make way for ſhowers to water the earth. For Earth, ſee on Chap. 15. 19.

where no man is] Where there are no towns, nor Cities of habitation. That is, on deſerts, as follows. For Man, ſee on Chapter 1. 1.

on the wilderneſſe] Pſal. 107. 35. Though he mean on all deſert places in the world, yet God may allude to the wilderneſſe of Arabia, not farre from Job. See on Chap. 1. 19.

wherein there is no man] It is repeated again, to ſhew the certainty of it, and that God gives rain even to the moſt deſert places. For Man, ſee on Chap. 14. 1.

V. 27. To ſatisfy the deſolate and waſte ground, and to cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth] That the ſtore of rain falling upon the wilderneſſe, which otherwiſe would be dryed up, may make it bring forth herbs and plants to feed the wild beaſts, for which no man takes care, to ſhew Gods abundant ſtore of proviſion for all living creatures, to ſatiſfy] To water it abundantly, ſo as if it had ſence, it may ſay, it had enough, and may bring forth enough to ſatisfy the wild beaſts there.

the deſolate and waſte ground] Broughton elegantly, The waſte and vaſt ground. For the words ſee on Chap. 30. 3.

And to cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth] That is, to bring out of the earth green herbs for food of the beaſts.

V. 28. Hath the rain a father, or who hath begotten the drops of the dew?] The rain comes not into the world as children do, who are formed out of the ſubſtance of their parents, or as herbs and plants out of ſeeds, but is formed by me onely, and at my pleaſure. It falls when and where I will.

Hath the rain a father?] Is there any in the world, that can bring forth rain when the earth needs it? Surely no. For Father, ſee on Chap. 15. 10.

or who hath begotten the drops of the dew?] It is not in the power of any creature to produce them. Some read it, who hath conceived, as a mother doth children; but the word being maſculine will not bear it. And it is uſed for begetting, 1 Chron. 4. 2. The word drops hath its name from roundneſſe in the originall. For dew ſee on Chap. 29. 19.

V. 29. Out of whoſe wombe came the Ice? and the hoary froſt of heaven who hath engendered it?] An elegant ſimilitude or metaphor from thoſe that beget others, or bear them in their bodies for a time. The Ice is not like an infant conceived in the womb, or begotten, but being congealed falls on the earth by Gods only appointment.

Out of whoſe womb came the Ice] Or, out of whoſe belly, It may be taken either from the Father or from the Mother. For though it be ordinarily ſpoken of the mother, yet it is ſpoken of David, Pſal. 132. 11. Of the fruit of thy body. Heb. Of thy belly. The meaning is, The ice, and alſo the froſt, as follows, comes not by ordinary generation, but by Gods great power working without the means of men. For Wombe, ſee on Chap. 15. 2. on the word, Belly. For Came, ſee on Chap. 20. 25. on the word, Cometh out. For Froſt, ſee on chap. 37. 10.

and the hoary froſt of heaven who hath gendered it?] The hoary froſt hath its name from covering or dawbing over, becauſe it is a faſt covering of the earth, Pſal. 147. 16. By Heaven is meant the aire or clouds out of which comes the matter that cauſeth the froſt. For Heaven, ſee on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8. The word Gendering may be Begetting, as Pſal. 2. 7. See on the former verſe.

V. 30. The waters are hid as with a ſtone, and the face of the deep is frozen] Such is the force of the froſt, that it brings ice, which covers the rivers all over, yea and the deep ſea in many parts, and that with a cover as hard as ſtone, and of a great thickneſſe, ſo that loaden carts may go on it, and men make tents on it, as if it were changed into firm land, nay into hard rocks. Strabo in his ſecond book writes of the entrance of the Lake Meotis, that a Captain of Mithridates overcame the enemy in a pitcht battell upon the ice in the Winter, and in a ſea battell in the ſommer with ſhips.

The waters are hid] They appear not, they look as if they had loſt their nature. They hide themſelves, as if they were aſhamed to be ſeen. For water ſee on chap. 14. 9.

as with a ſtone] Heb. As a ſtone. They are as hard as a ſtone, and as it were paved over with it. For the words, ſee on Chapter 14. 19.

and the face] The uppermoſt part of the water which is in ſight, as the face of man is, For Face ſee on Chap. 14. 20. on the word Countenance.

of the deep] Of the Sea. See on verſe 16. So in Greenland, and ſometimes nearer home the Sea is frozen, is frozen] Heb. Taken. The water is as it were taken captive and put into a priſon. See on chap.36.8.

V. 31. Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of the Pleiades, or looſe the bands of Orion ?] He paſſeth on from the Meteors to the ſtars. And ſets out the four quarters of the year by four kind of Stars. The Summer and Autumne in the next. The ſumme of this verſe is, art thou able to keep off the pleaſantneſſe of the Spring, when the Pleiades rule, or the bitter ſtorms of Winter, which Orion then brings forth. No queſtion but the ſtarres have a great force in the variety of weather and ſeaſons. See for theſe Starres on chapter 9. 9.

Canſt thou binde] Canſt thou hinder them from their kindly operation in their ſeaſon ? A man bound cannot do that which he can being at liberty. The word קשר ſignifies, 1. to bind one thing to another, as Prov. 3. 3. Jer. 51. 63. 2. To bind men together in a league or conſpiracy, as Gen. 44. 30. 2 King. 21. 23. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for binding them ſo as they cannot ſtirre.

the ſweet influences] Heb. The delights. That is, the green herbs, flowers, and other delicacies that the Spring brings forth. From this root the garden of Eden had her name.

of the Pleiades] See on chap. 9. 9. Or, the ſeven Starres. Amos 5 8.

or looſe] Or ſet at liberty in winter thoſe bitter ſtormes, that Orion brings, whereby mens work is hindered, and the earth bound up with froſt and ice, chap. 37. 6, 7. For the word ſee on chapter 12. 18.

the bands] It hath its name from drawing. Canſt thou untye thoſe bands, wherewith Orion drawes foule weather after him?

of Orion] See on Chap. 9. 9.

V. 32. Canſt thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon ? or canſt thou guide Arcturus with his ſonnes ?] Or canſt thou bring forth thoſe ſtarres that bring in the Summer, or lead thoſe along that uſher in the harveſt ?

Canſt thou bring forth] Cauſe them to appear, as men do that are brought out of their lodgings, or fruits out of the earth ?

Mazzaroth] Or, the twelve ſignes, So ſome take it. But others take it for the Southern Starres, which are called the chambers of the South. Chap. 9. 9 Others for Northern ſtars, as the word in the Maſculine gender is uſed, Chap. 37. 9. But this muſt be left to Aſtronomers to determine.

or canſt thou guide] Heb. Guide them, direct them which way they ſhould go.

Arcturus] See on Chap. 9. 9.

with his ſonnes] With the leſſer ſtars of that conſtellation ſtanding about him as ſons at a fathers table. Pſal. 128. 3. For Sons ſee on chap. 14. 21.

V. 33. Knoweſt thou the ordinances of heaven ? canſt thou ſet the dominion thereof in the earth ?] God having before ſpoken of ſome particular ſtars, now comes to ſpeak of the whole courſe of heaven, and the influence thereof in things here below. Are the heavenly bodies guided and their motion by thy wiſdom ? or haſt thou given them power to work upon inferiour bodies ? Theſe things exceed thy wit and ſtrength.

Knoweſt thou the ordinances of heaven ?] Doſt thou know the various motions of the heavenly bodies, which they keep conſtantly, as if they walked by a rule ? Jer. 31. 35. For Ordinances ſee on chap. 26 10. on the word, Bounds. For heaven, ſee on chapter 9. 8. & 11. 8.

canſt thou ſet the dominion thereof in the earth ?] Canſt thou give power to the ſtars to rule day and night, and cauſe diverſity of weather, and of ſeaſons, to which things below muſt ſubmit ? Gen. 1. 16. 8. For earth, ſee on chap. 15. 19.

V. 34. Canſt thou lift up thy voyce to the clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee ?] haſt thou that power over the clouds, that they will hear as ſoon as thou commandeſt, and poure down plenty of, waters, or rain to cover thy fields, and make them fruitfull.

Canſt thou lift up] Canſt thou ſpeak ſo loud that the clouds which are ſo high above thee may hear thee ?

thy voyce] Thy commanding voyce. So it is tranſlated, Numb. 9. 23. For Voyce ſee on chap. 15. 21. upon the word, Sound.

to the clouds] Heb. to the cloud. As if he would command ſome particular cloud to give rain when and where he ſhould pleaſe.

that abundance of waters may cover thee] See on chap. 22. 11. Where all theſe words are uſed, though by waters there be meant troubles.

V. 35. Canſt thou ſend lightnings that they may go, and ſay unto thee, Hear we are ?] Art thou the great Emperour of heaven and earth, at whoſe command the thunder and lightnings as ſo many ſouldiers are ready to go where, and do what thou biddeſt them ?

Canſt thou ſend] Send them about thy buſineſs, as thy ſervants out of the clouds. See on Chap. 14. 20. on the word, Sendeſt him away.

lightnings] That is too hard a work for any creature to do.

that they may go] Whither thou ſendeſt them, or commandeſt them to go. For Go, ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word Paſſeth.

and ſay unto thee] For Say ſee on chap. 16. 1.

Here we are] Heb. Behold us. We are at thy command, ready to do whatſoever thou ſhalt bid us. Gen. 22. 1. Or to go whereſoever thou ſhalt ſend us. Iſa. 6. 8. Others underſtand it of their return to give an account of their meſſage, as if they ſhould ſay, we have done thy will. But lightnings go forth, and return not; and therefore the former interpretation is more naturall.

V. 36. Who hath put wiſdom in the inward parts ? or who hath given underſtanding to the heart ?] Theſe things are marvellous which I have ſpoken of, and although man have not wiſdome enough to invent, or work ſuch things, yet he hath knowledge to underſtand, ſo much as is revealed of them. Neither hath he that knowledge of himſelf, but from me.

Who hath given wiſdom in the inward parts] Who hath beſtowed that reaſonable faculty upon man, and placed it in his ſoul, whereby he is able to conceive the truth about theſe ſtrange works of God, and to find out many ſecrets of nature. None could do it, but I alone. The inward parts (as the word is tranſlated here, and Pſal. 51. 6.) is tranſlated reines, which by ſome is conceived to be the ſeat of wiſdom, It comes from a word that ſignifies to plaiſter over or hide a thing, as the reines or kidneys are covered with fat. But the ſoule, the true ſeat of wiſdome muſt be meant here, yet as exerciſing its wiſdom in the reins and heart, and inward parts, by regulating the affections, and wiſe meditations of outward thing, preſented by the ſenſes.

or who hath given underſtanding to the heart ?] None but God, Chap. 32. 8. Eccl. 2. 26. The ſame thing expreſſed in other words, For Given, ſee on chap. 14. 4. on the word, Bring. The word Heart is read only in this place, and is therefore the harder to be interpreted. It ſeems to be derived from a word that ſignifies a picture; for in mans mind are the repreſentations of things. Others tranſlate it, to the Cock; who gave skill to that creature to diſtinguiſh the houres of the night ? The firſt is beſt, for God hath given moſt knowledge to man.

V. 37. Who can number the clouds in wiſdom ? or who can ſtay the bottels of heaven] Beſides the difference of the clouds, there is a great number of them, which will paſſe any mans capacity to reckon up, He may as well number the waves of the Sea, or ſtars of heaven, Gen. 15. 5 Neither can any man hinder the rain from overflowing the earth, when God pleaſeth to ſend it.

Who can number the clouds in wiſdom] Or, by his wiſdom, Who hath ſo much underſtanding, as to be able to tell how many clouds there be in heaven. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 22. 17. or who can declare the clouds, &c. Who can tell the nature of them throughly, or the ſeverall uſes of them. So this word is uſed Pſal. 2. 7. or who can make the clouds like a Saphire. Who can make the sky bright, and clear after raine ? For the Saphire hath his name from hence in the originall. For Number ſee on Chap. 14. 16. For clouds ſee on Chap. 35. 5.

or who can ſtay the bottles of heaven] Heb. Who can cauſe to lie down ? Who can hinder the clouds from powring down rain. The clouds are compared to bottles, which hold the rain, till God pleaſe to poure it down on the earth; when men poure out the water they hold up the bottles : when they intend not to powre it out, they ſet them down. For lying down ſee on chap. 14. 12. Some read, The ſhowres of heaven. For it comes from a word, that ſignifies to fall, others, the conſent, or harmony of heaven, becauſe the word ſometimes ſignifies a muſicall inſtrument. The Chaldee Paraphraſt reads, The clouds which are like bottles. They hold the rainwater, as bottles hold wine. For heaven ſee on Chapter 9. 8. & 11. 8.

V. 38. When the duſt groweth into hardneſſe, and the clods cleave faſt together] Who is the cauſe of drought, when there is want of rain, when the earth growes hard like a molten pillar or bell, and the clods cleave one to another, and run together, ſo as that they leave clefts in the earth ? No creature can bring the earth to this dry and hard condition.

when the duſt] See on Chap. 14. 8. on the word, Ground.

Groweth into hardneſſe] Heb. Is powred into hardneſſe When it is as hard as mettall powred out into a bell or pillar. So this word is uſed for an hard piece. Chap. 37. 18.

and the clods] See on chap. 21. 33.

cleave faſt together] Run one to another for lack of moiſture, as it were for ſuccour, V. 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lion ? or fill the appetite of the young lion] God having ſhewed his great power in the Elements and Meteors, now ſets it out in the living creatures. Therefore ſome begin the next Chapter here, becauſe it is the beginning of a new matter. The creatures he ſpeaks of are the beaſts of the earth, the birds of the aire, and fiſh of the Sea. He chuſeth out thirteen in all, in which Gods great power is wonderfully ſeen. 1. The lion, verſe 39, 40. 2. The raven, 41. 3. The wild goat, Chap. 39. 1. 4. The hind, verſe 1, alſo, 5. The wild aſſe, Chap. 39. 5. 6. The unicorne, verſe 9. 7. The peacock, ver. 10. 8. The oſtrich, ver. 11, 9. The horſe, ver. 19. 10. The hauke, ver. 26. 11: The eagle, ver. 27. 12. The Elephant, Chap. 40. 15. 13. The Whale, Chap. 41. 1. God ſhewes his power in theſe, partly in his proviſion for them, which men take no care for, nor can effect; and partly in the extraordinary ſtrength, or other qualities, which he hath beſtowed upon them, in ſome whereof they go beyond men.

wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion] VVilt thou undertake to provide food for thoſe devouring creatures in the wilderneſſe? This is too great a work for thee: it muſt be my work. Pſal. 104. 21. He mentions hunting the prey, becauſe lions live on other beaſts taken by hunting, By the lion here is meant the old lion, that either cannot go out of his den to hunt for food, but expects it to be brought to him, or lies in ſome thicket, till by Gods providence ſome beaſt comes within his reach. As ver.40. This appears to be the meaning becauſe it is oppoſed to young lions in this verſe And they are ſaid to be ſuch lions as want ſtrength to hunt for themſelves in the next verſe. And the young ravens are mentioned v.41. which cannot provide for themſelves. And thus the word is tranſlated old lion, Nah. 2.11. It is more for Gods honour to provide for lions that are either too old, or too young to provide for themſelves, than for ſuch as are ſtrong enough to ſeek their own food.

or fill the appetite of the young lion] God ſtirres up the middle ſort of lions which are ſtrong to provide food not for themſelves only, but alſo for ſuch as by reaſon of age or youngneſſe, cannot provide for themſelves. This is too great a work for man. He uſeth the word of filling becauſe though a little may ſerve the old lions, whoſe ſtomack decayes with age, yet yong lions have a ſtrong appetite, and God gives them as much as they deſire. The appetite. Heb. the life. The word חיה is uſed ſo Chap. 33. 8. &24.22. where it is joyned to the ſoule, which is ſometimes tranſlated will or deſire, as Pſal.27.12. Pſal.107.9. And appetite (as here) Prov. 23. 2. And greedy. Iſa.56.11. Some tranſlate it, The troop or company For all the lions whelps, which are many. Canſt thou feed them all? So the word is tranſlated. Pſal. 68.30. The laſt word is uſed for young lions, Nah.2.12 oppoſed to old. It ſignifies one ſo young that he dare not go far from his den, but lies in it, as in an ark, or covered place. So the originall word imports.

V. 40. VVhen they crouch in their dens, and abide in the covert to lie in wait] When they either lie reſting in their dens for want of ſtrength or hid in ſome thickets, till a prey come in their way.

VVhen they couch] Lie down for eaſe, or weakneſſe.

in their dens] Which are as it were their houſes, chap 37.8.

and] It may may be read. Or, For neither is in the originall; and then the former part of the verſe may be of the young lions, that have not yet gone out of their dens to hunt for prey: And the latter part of the old lions which have not ſtrength enough to follow the prey, but lie hid in ſome thicket, till it fall in their way.

abide[Run not abroad, but lie ſtill there.

in the covert] In ſome other thicket, which is, not their den, for beaſts uſe not to come by lions dens to be taken. The word ſignifies a Tabernacle to abide in for a time, not an houſe to dwell in. It is oppoſed to their dens or houſes mentioned in the beginning of the verſe.

to lie in wait] To lie in ambuſh as it were to prey upon ſome beaſt, that goes by that way. See on chap.37.8. on the word, Dens

V 41. VVho provideth for the raven his food? when his young ones cry unto God, they wander for lack of meat] VVho takes care to feed ravens? Yea who takes care to feed the young ones, whoſe cry none hears but God, in their neſts? And when they begin to fly, and are forſaken of the old ones, none gives them food but God, who] None can do it but I. Mat.6.26.

provideth] Not onely creates food for birds, but makes it ready at hand, and as it were layes it in their way.

for the raven] For the old raven, that hath young ones. How ſhould it feed the young that could not feed it ſelf without Gods proviſion.

VVhen] VVho then provides food for the young ravens, when the old one being gone abroad to ſeek it, they cry for hunger in the neſt? God gives food to the old ones for themſelves, and their young.

his young ones] Heb. His children. As is tranſtated chap. 1.11.

cry] Make a great noiſe for hunger, as if they cried for relief. See on chap.19.7. to God] Pſal 147. 9. They are ſaid to cry unto God, becauſe men oftentimes hear them not: and if they hear them, yet regard them not; But God takes notice of it, as if they directed their voyce to him, and ſupplies their want. For God ſee on Chap.8,3 5 they wander] The old ones leave the neſt, and flie up and down to get food for themſelves and their young ones: but cannot get it, unleſſe God give it. Or, And when they wander So And is added in the former verſe and when underſtood in the latter part of it, out of the former. And then the ſenſe is, that when the young ones begin to flie, and leave the neſt, or are driven out of it by the old ones, they could not live, if God did not provide food for them.

for lack of meat] Heb. becauſe there is no meat. When they find none in the neſt nor the old ones will no longer feed them, they flie abroad to ſeek for food, and God gives it them.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Verſe 1. KNoweſt thou the time, when the wild goats of the rock bring forth? or canſt thou marke, when the hinds do calve] In the beginning of this Chapter, is ſet out Gods great care of ſuch cattell, as are remote from men, and bring forth their young with great difficulty, yet ſafely through Gods providence without mans help. He demands of Job, if he know 1. The time. 2. How long they go with young, before they be delivered ver. 2. 3. The manner of their bringing forth ver. 3. 4. How ſoon their yonug ones grow ſtrong and leave them, ver. 4. The ſumme of this verſe is. Art thou acquainted with the time, when the wild goats or hinds bring forth, young, that thou mighteſt help them in their difficult, and dangerous bringing them forth.

Knoweſt thou the time] Theſe wild creatures bring forth their young in rocks inacceſſible, and therefore men that cannot come there, cannot help them being ignorant of the time; God onely aſſiſts them.

when the wild goats] They have their name from aſcending in the originall, becauſe they uſe to be in high rocks for ſafety 1 Sam. 24. 2. Pſal.104. 18. Others derive it from a word that figifies profit, but by the contrary, becauſe there is much danger in hunting them.

bring forth] VVhich they uſe to do with great difficulty, as alſo the hinds do.

or canſt thou mark] Canſt thou obſerve that time to know it certainly? Doſt thou keep their reckoning? As we uſe to ſpeak of women with child. For the word, ſee on Chap. 7. 20. on the word, Preſerver.

when the hinds] That theſe bring forth their young very hardly, is collected out of Pſal. 29. 9. Where among other hard things effected by thunder, as breaking ſtrongeſt trees, and ſhaking the greateſt hills, this is reckoned for one, Making the hinds to calve.

Do calve] The word it ſelf carries a great deal of pain with it, for it ſignifies to bring forth with grief.

V. 2. Canſt thou number the moneths that they fulfill, or knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth] Doſt thou know exactly how many moneths thoſe wild creatures go with young before they be delivered? If not, becauſe thou converſeſt not with them, nor knoweſt not the time when they come together, how ſhouldeſt thou know either how long they go with their burden, or when they will lay it down?

Canſt thou number] The number was not ſo great but might eaſily be reckoned; but the meaning is, that men certainly know not how many moneths they bear their young within them, though ſome writers conceive it to be about eight moneths. For the word, ſee on Chap. 14.16.

the moneths] See on chap.29. 2.

that they fulfill] That muſt be compleat from the time they are with young, till they muſt lay down their burden.

or knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth] Or, that thou ſhouldeſt know the time, &c. If thou neither knoweſt when they came together, nor how long they go with young, how ſhouldeſt thou know the time of their delivery? For the words, ſee on verſe 1. where all theſe words are found.

V 3. They bow themſelves, they bring forth their young ones, they caſt out their ſorrows] A deſcription of the travaile of theſe wild beaſts. They bow themſelves of their own accord, aud bring forth without the help of any Midwife, and preſently all their ſorrow leaveth them.

They bow themſelves] Or, How, or, when they bow themſelves Doſt thou know the manner how, or the time when they bow themſelves, that they may with the more eaſe bring forth their young?

they bring forth] They are as it were cleft aſunder with the greatneſſe of their pain, becauſe of the naturall ſtraightneſſe of the paſſage. So this word is tranſlated Cleaving. Chap.16.13.

their young ones] See on Chap 38.41.

they caſt out their ſorrows] They make grievous exclamations in the time of travell. Or, they violently caſt out their young ones, the cauſe of their ſorrows, and then their pangs ceaſe. For Caſt out, ſee on chap 14.20. on the words Sendeſt him away. The word for Sorrow ſignifies ſuch great pangs, as like cords gird them ſorely in time of travaile.

V. 4. Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with corn: They go forth, and return not unto them] Although the young ones be brought forth with ſo much pain and ſtraitneſſe, that one would think they ſhould be very weak, yet they are ſtrong, neither do they long trouble their dams, but ſoon leave them to feed, and fat themſelves in the corn fields.

Their young ones] Heb. Their ſons. See on Chap.14. 21.

are in good liking] They are ſlick and fat. Or, are recovered. So this word is tranſlated Iſa. 38. 16. They ſoon recover from the weakneſſe vvhich came upon them by their painfull entrance into the vvorld.

They grow up] The word ſignifies to grow much, or great. They are quickly grown great and ſtrong.

With corn They ſoon leave ſucking their dams, and are well fed with corn. Some read, in the field, or, by the field That is, by that which growes in the field. Hence ſome collect. that they uſe to be born about Harveſt time, when corn is in the fields.

They go forth] To ſeek for food for themſelves. For the word, ſee on Chap.20. 25.

and return not unto them] They come not back to their dams to ſuck, becauſe they finde food enough in the fields. This ſhews they live by Gods providence, For return, ſee on Chap. 14. 13. on the vvord, paſt.

V. 5. Who hath ſent out the wild aſſe free? or who hath looſed the bands of the wild aſſe?] Who hath made the wild aſſe ſo ſtout, that he will not be caught nor tamed, nor be brought in ſubjection to do any work for man, as not only other creatures, but other aſſes do.

Who hath ſent out] All creatures are as it were bound with bands to do thoſe ſervices God requires. But he hath as it were manumiſed or ſet free ſome from all ſervice of men, as the wild aſſe among the reſt, For the word, ſee on chap. 14.20.

the wild aſſe] That will not come near men, nor be employed by them. From this word in the Hebrew comes Fere, wild beaſts, for they are as wild as any.

free] From men, ſo that he is not in their power. For the word, ſee on chap. 3.19, or who hath looſed the bands of the wild aſſe?] Not that the wild aſſe was ever bound, but is kept from thoſe bands which other cattell are ſubject to, to be employed by man for the ſaddle, the cart, or the plow, from all which the wild aſſe is as free as if he had thoſe bands taken off, which lay upon all creatures at firſt to ſerve man. For looſeth, ſee on Chap. 12,18.

V. 6. Whoſe houſe I have made the wilderneſſe, and the barren Land his dwellings] To whom I have given a large dwelling in the wilderneſſe, far from the ſight of men, where he is well content to be at liberty with very mean food, rather than to live among men, and fare better.

Whoſe houſe] The place where he abides; as men do in their houſes. For the word, ſee on Chap. 15.28.

I have made] I have appointed, or ſet out for him.

the wilderneſſe] A ſolitary place where men live not, yet though it be not ſo fruitfull as other places, it affords food for theſe wild creatures, Job 24. 5. Jer. 2. 24. It is likely he alludes to the wilderneſſe of Arabia not far off, Chap. 1. 19. wherein were wild aſſes ſwifter than horſes, as Xenophon reports in the third book of Cyrus his expedition. The wilderneſſe and Arabia have both of them their names from the ſame root in Hebrew. Others read it, the plain, as if it were oppoſed to wild goats, that live on hills and rocks, verſe 1. But the former reading is better, wild places agree beſt with wild beaſts.

and the barren land] Heb. the ſalt place. As barren as if it had been ſown with ſalt, Judg. 9. 45. Pſal. 107. 34. Jer. 17. 6.

V. 7. He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, neither regardeth he the crying of the driver] He lives in places remote from the noiſe and tumults in cities, and where he is not called upon to go to work, as tame beaſts are by the drivers.

He ſcorneth] Heb. He laugheth at. He is as free from it as one that ſtands by, and laughs to ſee others in a rage, or cattell ſcared with the noyſe and cry of drivers (ſo laughing is uſed for ſlighting, chap. 5. 22. Pſal, 2. 4.) And if the drivers ſhould offer to urge him to work, as they do tame beaſts, he would ſcorn it, and ſhew them a light paire of heels, and be gone. See the great difference between the wild Aſſe & tame. One very quick, the other very dull, & obſerve Gods power in putting ſo great difference between creatnres of the ſame kind. Some Commentators conceive this to be a reaſon why God inſtances in this creature. For the word ſee onch. 29. 24.

the multitude] He feares not a great many. He can by his ſwiftneſſe eſcape them all. Or, The noyſe. If a whole City ſhould ſeek to ſcare him, to bring him to work like other beaſts, he would not regard it. So it is tranſlated Noiſe. Am. 5. 23.

of the city] Of the Citizens, The place for the perſons, as it is uſed, Prov. 11. 10. He is not afraid of a whole City.

neither regardeth he] Heb. Heareth. He will not be brought to labour by any cry or noiſe of any. For the word ſee on chap. 13. 17. on the word, Hear.

the crying] Or Noiſe, as Chap. 36. 29. which they make to drive the beaſts to labour.

of the driver] Heb. of the exactour. Such were the Task-maſters of Egypt, who urged the Iſraelites to their labour. Exod. 5. 6. So do the drivers call on the beaſts to haſten them in their work. But ſuch the wild Aſſe had none to trouble him. See on Chap. 3. 18. where it is tranſlated oppreſſour. Such men uſe importunate cries to urge poor men to hard labours.

V. 8. The range of the mountains is his paſture, and he ſearcheth after every green thing] That which he finds by diligent ſearch; and ranging up and down the mountains is his food: he looks not that men ſhould bring him hay in Winter, as they do tame beaſts, but finds green graſſe all the year long, and variety on the hills. And it is a marvellous thing, that this wild Aſſe being no ramping beaſt, that lives on fleſh, as Lions and Wolves do, can find graſſe to live on in the deſerts, and eſcape the rage of thoſe ravenous creatures, and not be devoured by them.

the range] Some underſtand it of the choiceſt things, that grow in the mountains. Other of things that grow in unknown places that none can find out but himſelf. It comes from a word that ſignifies to ſearch, and intimates that he ranges up and down the hills, aud feeds on what he likes.

of the mountains] There are many mountains in deſerts, as well as low grounds. It may be the wild Aſſe keeps there for fear of Lions, and other beaſts of prey, leſt while he ſeeks food below, he be devoured himſelf.

is his paſture] Affords him food, as the paſtures do the tame beaſts.

and he ſearcheth after every green thing] He ſeeks for green herbs, and graſſe to eat, and lives altogether upon it.

V. 9. Will the unicorn be willing to ſerve thee, or abide by thy crib] As before the freedome of the wild aſſe was ſet out in oppoſition to to the ſervice of the tame aſſe, ſo here the liberty of the unicorn in oppoſition to the ſervile nature of the oxe. God here brings in man as it were hiring the unicorn to ſerve him about the ground, as the oxe doth, which he can by no means bring him to, becauſe he will not be tamed. Yet God provides for him, and man may ſee his ſin in the refuſall of ſervice by theſe great creatures, that have ſtrength enough to do it, and were ſubject to him before the fall. The ſervice he propounds is, 1. Set down in generall in this verſe. 2. in particular verſe 10, 11, 12. And that 1. In ſowing the ground ver. 10, 11. 2. In bringing home the crop ver. 12.

Will the unicorn] This muſt be a wild beaſt that will not be tamed, nor brought to ſerve man. Many conceive there is no ſuch creature, as an unicorn, that hath but one horn, and that growing in the midſt of his forehead, becauſe it appears not certainly, that ever any man ſaw ſuch a creature. Alſo this creature hath more horns than one, Deut. 33. 17. where the horns of an unicorn are mentioned in the original, though it be unicorns in the tranſlation. Some would have it to be the Rhinoceros here meant, which is an enemy to the Elephant. But that hath a trunk or ſnout rather than an horn, or, if an horn on the ſnout, but a ſmall one. And the naturaliſts write, that it may be tamed; and therefore it is not likely to be the beaſt here meant. It is more like to be the wild bull, for oxen are joyned to this beaſt elſewhere. Deut. 33. 17. Pſal. 29. 6. Iſa. 34. 6. Such creatures alſo are ſtrong, and have great horns. And very likely there were ſome ſuch in thoſe parts, as untameable, as wild aſſes. And this is the more probable, becauſe the wild aſſe was before oppoſed to the tame: and ſo here the wild bull may be to the tame oxe. It hath his name from a word, that ſignifies height, for it is an high creature in reſpect of many other wild beaſts, and the horns are long.

Be willing to ſerve thee] Can he be tamed, that he may readily go to cart, and plow as tame oxen will.

or abide by the crib] When he hath done thy drudgry all day, will he come to thy yard at night to eat what thou haſt provided for him, and lie there all night to be at thy ſervice next day again, So the word ſignifies to lodge all night. See on chap. 29. 19.

V. 10. Canſt thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the vallies after thee.]

Haſt thou power to bind him as thou doſt thy oxen, with his bands to draw the plow before thee to make way for the ſeed, or to follow thee with the harrow to lay the ground even, and cover it?

Canſt thou bind the unicorn] The word ſometimes ſignifies binding men together in a conſpiracy, as 1 Sam. 22. 8. but ordinarily ſignifies the binding of one thing to another, as of cattell with cords to keep them from being unruly, and tie them to their labour. So here. For the word ſee on chap. 38. 31. For the unicorn ſee on verſe 9.

with his band] The word ſignifies a twiſted thick rope able to hold the ſtrongeſt beaſt. & it is called his band, becauſe it is uſed to bind him.

in the furrow] Or, For the furrow. Or, To the furrow. That is, to plow, and make furrows. And the cattell are bound; that they may go right, as they are guided by the driver, to make ſtrait furrows. So, ב is uſed chap. 24. 5. They go forth to their work. For the word ſee on chap. 31. 38.

or will he harrow] Will he do any kind of husbandry work for thee? Harrowing is to break the clods, that the corn may be cheriſhed in the earth, and come forth the more eaſily. Iſa. 28. 24. Hoſ. 10. 11.

the vallies] The furrows, as before, though ſome conceive the ridges between the furrows to be meant here, which lie as vallies between them, yet vallies may here be meant properly, for they are moſt commonly uſed for corn, and hills for paſture, becauſe more difficult to plow. It hath its name in the originall from deepneſſe, becauſe it lies lower than the mountains.

after thee] Though thou go before to guide him, yet he will not follow. The plow-man puts the horſe before, the harrower leads him after.

V. 11. Wilt thou truſt him becauſe his ſtrength is great? Or wilt thou leave thy labour to him] Wilt thou be confident, that he will do thy work, as the tame oxe, becauſe he is as ſtrong, or ſtronger rather? or wilt thou leave that which thou haſt ſo long laboured for to be brought home by him? Sure thou dareſt not confide in him.

wilt thou truſt him] To plow and harrow thy ground, as verſe 10. or to bring home thy crop, as verſe 12.

becauſe his ſtrength is great] Much ſtrength is required for plow and cart. Therefore the ſtrongeſt men and beaſts are imployed in that labour. He hath ſtrength enough to do it, but will not. For Great ſee on chap. 22. 5.

or wilt thou leave thy labour to him] Men uſe to leave things to be done with ſuch as they truſt, but he will faile thee if thou think to imploy him in bringing home thy harveſt, So labour is put for that which is got by labour chap. 20. 18. Pſal. 128. 2.

V. 12. Wilt thou believe him. that he will bring home thy ſeed, and gather it into thy barn] God brought in [verſe 9.) Job as hiring the unicorn to do his country work. Now he tells him, that if that beaſt could, and ſhould ſay, he would undertake it, yet Job had no reaſon to believe him, that he would bring home the crop that comes of his ſeed into the barne, no more than he would plow or harrow.

Some underſtand the former part of carrying the ſeed into the field, but that is but a ſmall labour, and it ſeems to be expounded in the end of the verſe of carrying it home. Others underſtand it of plowing and harrowing the field ſo, as that the ſeed may yeeld ſuch plenty that the barn be filled, which is done by the labour of the oxe, but cannot by the unicorne, who hath neither will, nor skill to do it.

wilt thou believe him] See on Chap. 15.22.

that he will bring forth] See on Chap. 15 13. on the word Turneſt, and on Chap. 20.10. on the word Reſtore, thy ſeed] זרע is taken 1. For the ſeed of trees and herbs, and corn, Gen. 1. 29. 2. ſeed of living creatures. Gen. 38.9. 3. Poſterity, which comes, of mans ſeed. Pſal. 22. 23. 4. For ripe corn, that comes of the ſeed corn. Hag. 2.19. So here, for it is ready to be brought home, and carried into the barne. And ſo was labour put for that which comes of labour, verſe 11.

and gather it] That is, when it is gathered out of the field, carry it into their barn And one verb included in anorher. See on Chap. 18. 8. For the word ſee on chap. 27.19.

into thy barn] Or gather the corn in, which uſe to lye in thy barn: for ſo the ſame word tranſlated Floore, Deut. 1.5.14. is uſed for the corne.

V. 13. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the Oſtrich] God now ſets out his excellency in the adorning and providing for ſome ſtately birds, although very fooliſh. Two are named in this verſe, and the latter largely ſpoken of in the following verſes.

gaveſt thou] Theſe words are not in the original, but added to make up the ſenſe: which are expreſſed in the like caſe, verſe 19.

the goodly] The word ſignifies rejoycing or delighting in a thing, as Chap 20.18. Prov. 7.18. The peacock takes great pleaſure in his feathers.

wings] Or Feathers. For the beauty of a peacock is in his taile, which hath feathers in it, as well as the wing. For the word ſee on Chap. 37.3. on the word ends.

unto the Peacocks] It hath the name in Hebrew from the great noyſe it makes, which may be heard afar off.

or wings] It comes from a word, that ſignifies ſtrong? and ſuch are the wings of oſtriches.

and feathers] It hath his name from flying, for they are inſtruments thereof. Some make a diſtinct bird of it, and take it for the the oſtrich, but it is commonly uſed for the feathers of a bird Ezek. 17.3.7.

unto the oſtrich] This word is elſewhere tranſlated the ſtorke, which ſhewes pitty to the aged parents, according to the derivation of the word in the Hebrew, but here it is taken for the oſtrich by the contrary, for ſhe ſhews no pitty to her young. verſe 16. It cannot be the Stork here, for it hath no ſuch beautifull feathers, as the Peacock, nor doth not ſo carry it ſelf to the young ones, as is deſcribed in the verſes following: neither doth it lay egges on the ground. but in neſts in high trees, Pſal. 104. 17.

V. 14. Which leaveth her egges in the earth, and warmeth them in the duſt] The blockiſhneſſe and unnaturalneſſe of the Oſtrich is now ſet out in this, and ſome verſes following, that whereas other birds carefully lay their egges in neſts out of danger, and ſit on them to hatch them, ſhe clean contrary covers them in the ſand, and flyes away, leaving them to the hot ſun to hatch them. This ſets out Gods providence in bringing them forth in this ſo ſtrange a manner, which none elſe could do.

VVhich leaveth] Takes no further care of them after ſhe hath laid them.

her egges] Out of which ſhe might expect young ones, in the earth] See on chap. 15. 19.

and warmeth them] Leaveth them for the ſon, and hot ſand to warm, that they may bring forth young ones, which is no unuſuall thing in very hot countries.

in the duſt] See on Chap. 14.8. on the word, Ground.

V. 15. And forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, or that the wild beaſt may break them] The Naturaliſts give other reaſons why ſhe leaves her egges thus, to wit, leſt ſhe ſhould break them with weight, and becauſe ſhe cannot hatch them well for want of feathers on her belly, but God tells the true cauſe, her unnaturalneſſe and blockiſhneſſe. Men make her wiſe and provident, but God ſets her out as fooliſh and careleſſe, that conſiders not how eaſily they may be utterly ſpoyled by the foot of any beaſt paſſing that way.

and forgetteth] That is, when ſhe leaves them there, ſhe doth not conſider the danger of it. She carries her ſelf, as one that had forgot it, For ſhe cannot in property of ſpeech be ſaid to forget what ſhe never knew.

that the foot] That the foot of ſome beaſt; as follows, for men ſeldom came that way, unleſſe on horſeback to hunt wild beaſts.

may cruſh them] May break them, before they be ready to bring forth young. Heb. May cruſh it. That is, each egge. See the like, chap. 38.20. 33.

or that the wild beaſt] Heb. The beaſt of the field. That lives not about houſes, as tame beaſts do, but in the deſert. For Beaſt ſee on Chap. 37.8.

May break them] Heb. May threſh them. That is, break them all to pieces.

V. 16. She is hardened againſt her young ones, as though they were not hers: her labour is in vain without fear] Contrary to the nature of other fowles ſhe hath a hard heart, that can ſo leave her egges, as if ſhe had no relation to the young ones that ſhould come out of them: and had laboured to no purpoſe in laying them, that feares not any hurt that may befall them, nor takes any care for the hatching of them.

ſhe is hardened] Others read it, God hath hardned her. Becauſe the word is the Maſculine gender, and ſignifies actively, Iſa. 63 17, And God is expreſſed in the like caſe in the verſe following.

againſt her young ones] Againſt her egges, out of which ſhe might look for young ones. So ſeed is put for the corn that comes out of it, verſe 12. Heb. Her children. See on chap. 14 21.

as though they were not hers] Heb. For that they were not hers. She counts them none of hers, &therefore is hard hearted toward them.

her labour] Her pains in laying the egges is in vain] Empty, and to no purpoſe. No good comes of it. As good no egs, as no hope of young, for ought ſhe knowes.

without fear] Becauſe ſhe hath no care what becomes of her egs, ſhe fears no evill that might come to them. For the word ſee on Chap. 15 21. on the word, Dreadfull.

V. 17. Becauſe God hath deprived her of wiſdome, neither hath he imparted to her underſtanding] God who hath given ſome ſmall knowledge to other birds and beaſts, at leaſt ſo much as might teach them how to take care of their egs, and young ones, hath not given her ſo much knowledge. And no wonder then if ſhe be ſo unnaturall.

becauſe] Here is the reaſon of her careleſneſſe ſet down; becauſe God hath not communicated that wiſe care to her. The creature can have no more good than God pleaſeth to beſtow on it.

God] See on Chap. 5. 17. & 11. 5.

hath deprived her of wiſdom] Heb. hath made her to forget wiſdom. That is, hath not given it to her. Now that a man hath not, he receives not, doth no more good by or with it, than if he had forgotten it. So forgetfulneſſe is uſed, Chap. 8 13.

neither hath he imparted to her underſtanding] He hath not given her any the leaſt part of that forecaſt that is in other fowles. For the word imparted, ſee on chap. 27. 17. on the word Divide.

V. 18. VVhat time ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high, ſhe ſcorneth the horſe and his rider] Here is an anſwer to a ſecret objection. If the Oſtrich which is ſo heavie of body, be ſo dull of wit, then it may eaſily be taken. No, ſaith God, I have provided for that alſo. As ſoon as ſhe ſees the hunter coming, ſhe lifts up her ſelf, and though ſhe cannot fly up very high, yet partly with fluttering her wings, which are like ſayls driven with the wind, and partly with the help of her feet ſhe runs ſo faſt, that the ſwifteſt horſe cannot overtake her. The Naturaliſts write of her, that when ſhe thus ſtretches out her ſelf in her flight, ſhe is higher than horſe and rider both, and runs ſo faſt, that the ſwifteſt horſes give over purſuing her; for ſhe is as ſwift as a bird that flies And that the Arabians uſe to try their horſes ſwiftneſſe by overtaking them. See Ælian and Oppian, and Xenophon in Cyrus his expedition, 1. Book, in Arabia.

what thing] Some knit theſe words to what went before. As ſoon as ſhe hath hid her egs in the ſand, ſhe haſts away. But the time is rather intimated in the words following, to wit, when ſhe is purſued by the hunter on horſe-back.

ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high] She lifts up her neck on high, that ſhe may run the ſwifter.

ſhe ſcorneth the horſe and his rider] She ſlights the hunter, and deludes him, and will not be taken by him, notwithſtanding the ſwiftneſſe of his horſe. For Scorning ſee on verſe 7.

V. 19 Haſt thou given the horſe ſtrength? haſt thou clothed his neck with thunder?] God having before ſhewed how the horſe was ſlighted by a fooliſh bird, takes occaſion from thence to ſhew wherein this creature excells the Oſtrich, to wit, in his ſtrength and courage, which is ſo uſefull to man in time of war. As if he had ſaid to Job; Thou ſeeſt the horſe is a ſtrong beaſt, but how came he by his great ſtrength, and that terrible power of neighing, that doth as it were cloath his neck, and terrifie the enemies in war? Sure thou didſt not give it him. He muſt needs have it from me.

haſt thou given] For this word ſee on ch. 14.4 on the word Bring.

the horſe ſtrength] The horſe is a very ſtrong creature, and very uſefull in war. See on chap. 26.14 on the word, Power.

haſt thou clothed his neck with thunder?] Haſt thou given him ſuch a ſtrength in his neck, that he can neigh till his eyes ſparkle, as if he did both thunder and lighten. So men are ſaid to be clothed with honour and ſhame, which yet do not cover their bodies. Others underſtand it of his mane which is an ornament of his neck, and a flagge, as it were of arrogance. Or, it may be taken of indignation, when ſhaking his mane he goes furiouſly into the battell. For it comes from a word, that ſignifies to be moved with indignation, as well as to thunder. See on Chap. 26. 14,

V. 20. Canſt thou make him afraid, as a graſhopper? The glory of his noſtrills is terrible] Canſt thou with noiſe make him afraid, and cauſe him to fly from thee like a graſhopper. Nay he will make ſuch a noiſe with his noſtrills, that he will rather terrifie thee.

Canſt thou make him afraid] Or, quake, as Broughton reads it, others read, Canſt thou make him to move. The horſe is an heavie body, yet runs into the battel as nimbly, as a graſhopper leaps. But that is not by any ſtrength from thee' The former is better, becauſe the originall word carries fear with it.

as a graſhopper] Make him ſo afraid, that he ſhall run away as nimbly as a graſhopper. It hath his name from a word of multitude, for graſhoppers go in troopes to devoure the fruits of the earth. They are part of Gods great army, Joel 2. 25. where the ſame word is tranſlated, Locuſt.

the glory of his noſtrills is terrible] His ſnorting and ſneezing makes men afraid. For glory ſee on ch. 37. 22. on the word Majeſty. Heb. Terrours. That is, very terrible. For the word ſee on chap. 9. 34. & 13. 21. on the words, Fear and Dread.

V. 21. He paweth in the valley. and rejoyceth in his ſtrength: he goeth on to meet the armed men] When the Army comes into the valley to fight, ſeeſt thou not, how the wanton horſe cannot ſtand ſtill, but is making holes in the ground with his feet. Judg. 5. 22. And is ſo proud of his ſtrength, that the rider can hardly keep him in till the enemy come, but he will run forth to meet him, and is no whit afraid of his terible weapons?

He paweth] Heb. They digge. That is, his feet digge. It may be read, When they digge in the valley he rejoyceth, &c. That is, when the Army go to entrench themſelves, as if they durſt not fight, his courage failes not, The horſe would faign be in the battell. The word חפר ſignifies, 1. To digge, as Chap. 11. 18. 2. To ſeek by digging, for to that end men dig, that they may ſeek for mines, or ſome good thing. Chap. 3. 21. 3. To be aſhamed, becauſe when men finde not what they dig and and ſeek for, they are aſhamed. Iſa. 1. 29. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

in the vally] For there battels uſe to be ſought, eſpecially of horſemen, that cannot ſo well fight on hills. For the word ſee on ver. 10.

and rejoyceth in his ſtrength] Is ſo confident of his ſtrength, that he cheerfully goes on to the battell. Pſal 19. 5.

he goeth on to meet the armed men] Heb. The armour. He is ſo ſtout, that without fear he runs upon the pikes. For Goeth on, ſee on chap. 14. 2. on the word, Cometh forth. Or it may be meant of comming out of the trenches, when men dare not. As before in this verſe The laſt word נשק ſignifies, firſt, Battell, as Pſal. 140. 7. 2. Armour. 1 King, 10. 25. But here it muſt be armes rather than armour. Offenſive weapons, as Pikes and Spheares, which gall the horſes rather than defenſive, which are to preſerve men from wounds, as ſhields and bucklers.

V: 22. He mocketh at feare. and is not affrighted, neither turneth he back from the ſword] He counts that a ſport and play whereof others are afraid. He is not daunted at the noyſe of armes, or trumpets: neither is he afraid of the glittering ſword.

He mocketh] He is as little afraid, as men are of thoſe things at which they laugh. See on verſe 7. on the word, Scorneth.

as fear] At thoſe terrible things that men are afraid of. See on Ch. 19. 21. on the word, Dreadfull. Here is meant ſuch things as fright men in battell.

and is not affrighted] Neither noiſe, nor enemies abate ought of his courage.

neither turneth he back] As fearfull cowards uſe to doe, that they may flye from danger. For the word ſee on Chap. 14. 13. on the word, Paſt.

from the ſword] Heb. From the face of the ſword. Or, Becauſe of the ſword. That is, for fear of the ſword. For the word ſee on ch. 27. 14.

V. 23. The quiver ratleth againſt him, the glittering ſpeare and the ſhield] Though arrowes. ſpeares and darts rattle about his eares, yet he is not afraid.

The quiver ratleth againſt him] The arrowes out of the quiver being ſent with great force, come ſinging as it were againſt him: for the ſtring drawne home cauſeth a great noiſe, and we uſe to ſay, when the arrow comes with great force, it ſings. Others read, The quiver ratleth over him] That is. the arrowes in the riders quiver that rides on him might ſcare him with their noiſe. Horſemen then uſed arrowes as well as footmen, for they had no guns.

the glittering ſpear] The brightneſſe whereof, as well as the ſharpneſſe, might make him afraid. Heb. The flaming ſpeare. For it ſhines like a flame. Gen. 3. 24.

and the ſhield] Rather the javelin, or ſome ſuch offenſive weapon, that might puſh the horſes, or be flung at them: for horſes need not fear ſhields. It is tranſlated a ſpear. Chap, 41. 29. Joſh. 8. 18 and joyned to offenſive weapons here.

V. 24. He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſſe, and rage: neither believeth he that it is the ſonnd of the trumpet] He runs ſo ſwiftly and fiercely, as if he would not only overcome men, but deſtroy even the whole earth: and whereas the enemies think to ſcare him with the ſound of their trumpets, he regards it as little, as men do things they do not believe to be true.

He ſwalloweth the ground] Some underſtand it of digging holes in the ground, as verſe 21. But it is rather to be underſtood of his ſwift courſe, whereby he runs over the ground as faſt, as if he did ſwallow it up at a draught. For ground ſee on Chap. 15. 19.

with fierceneſſe and rage] Or, with commotion and unquietneſs. As 2 Sam 22. 8. Pſal. 77. 18. Iſa. 13. 13. & 14. 16 Joel 2. 10.

neither believeth he, that it is the ſound of the trumpet] Some underſtand it, He is ſo glad to hear it out of his deſire to the battell that he cannot believe it for joy. Luke 24. 41. So far is he from any fear of the battell. Others read, Neither ſtands he ſtill, when the voyce of the trumpet is heard. That is, he can hardly be kept back by the rider, when the ſigne is given to begin the battell. For the word, Believeth ſee on Chap. 15. 22. The trumpet was of old, as now it is, ſounded in the beginning of the battell, as a ſign when to give the onſet. Numb. 10. 9. & Chron. 13. 12.

V. 25. He ſaith among the trumpets, Ha, Ha; and he ſmelleth the battell afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the ſhouting] He rejoyceth when by the loud ſound of the trumpets, and the noyſe of the captains to encourage the ſouldiers, and their ſhouting, he perceiveth the approaching battel, as if he cried out for joy, and triumph.

He ſaith among the trumpets, Ha, Ha;] He is as joyfull as men that ſhew their joy by ſuch expreſſions. And is ready to ſhew it in his kind by neighing. Some read it, in the ſufficiency of the trumpet. That is. when it blows ſo loud, and clear, that all may take notice of a call to the battell, ha, ha. A note of rejoycing, as Pſal. 34 21. 25. & 42. 15.

and he ſmelleth the battell afar off] He knowes, when he hears the trumpets that the battell is at hand. By ſmelling is meant perceiving. So ſmelling is tranſlated touching, that is, perceiving the force of fire. Judg. 16. 19. See more on Job 14. 5. On the word, Sent. Afar off is long before ſometimes as. Iſa. 22. 11. & 2 King. 19. 25.

the thunder of the captains, and the ſhouting] The great noyſe the captains make to encourage their ſouldiers to fight, and the acclamation of the ſouldiers in token of forwardneſſe. Theſe alſo are tokens to the horſe of the approaching battell. For thunder ſee on chap. 25. 14. For ſhouting ſee on ch. 33. 26. on the word; Joy.

V. 26. Doth the hauke flye by thy wiſdom, and ſtretch her wings toward the South] God now inſtances in certain birds of prey, ſhews his power and providence in the ſwiftneſſe of their flight, and have a naturall forecaſt given them for their good, which no man could beſtow upon them. The ſomme of this verſe is, could thy underſtanding reach ſo far, as to make wings for the hauke to flye withall, or to teach her how to uſe them, or direct her courſe. Southward toward the warm Sun to cheriſh her new feathers, when ſhe hath caſt her old, or againſt winter to leave colder countries to flie to warmer?

Doth the hauke flye by thy wiſdome[Doſt thou teach her how to flye? Others read it. Doth the hauke get her feathers by thy wiſdom? To wit, at firſt, or when ſhe hath caſt them. See on verſe 13. on the word wings.

and ſtretch her wings toward the South.] That is, Doſt thou direct her to flye that way? For wings ſee on chap. 37. 3. on the word Ends. The ſouth in the originall is taken from a word that ſignifies the right hand, becauſe when a man turns his face to the riſing ſun, the South is on his right hand. See on chap. 9. 9.

V. 27. Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command, and make her neſt on high] The Lord here begins to ſet out his powerfull providence in guiding the Eagle, which is accounted the Prince of foules, as the lion of wild beaſts. And that 1. in the height of her flight in this verſe. 2. of her neſt in this verſe and the next. 3. in her quick ſight to diſcern her prey afar off. verſe 29. 4. in ſmelling out dead carkaſes afar off, that ſhe and her young ones may feed on them. She flies higher than other birds, that ſhe may the better be undiſcerned, and with greaterforce ruſh down upon her prey. She builds her neſt on high for the ſafety of her young ones. Job never taught her theſe things.

doth the Eagle] Some take it for the Vulture, becauſe they conceive, ſome things here ſpoken fit not the Eagle.

mount up] Fly right up, till ſhe be quite out of ſight.

at thy command] Heb. At thy mouth. See on chap. 33. 6. & 15. 5.

and make her neſt on high] On the top of high rocks in places inacceſſible. v. 28. Jer. 49. 16. Obad. v 4. It may be read, And that ſhe make her neſt on high. Is it at thy command that ſhe doth ſo?

V. 28. She dwelleth, and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the ſtrong place] As the Eagle can fly up to the higheſt rocks, ſo there ſhe picks out a dwelling and lodging, and makes her neſt in the clefts on the very craggy tops of the rocks, which are to her, and hers, as an invincible caſtle made by nature, not by art.

ſhe dwelleth and abideth on the rock] There ſhe remaines day and night, unleſſe ſome time, ſhe fly abroad for her pleaſure, or to get food for her ſelf, or her young. The word abiding is tarrying all night. See chap. 29. 19.

upon the crag of the rock. Heb. upon the tooth of the rock. For crags of rocks are like great teeth in faſhion, and ſharpneſſe. For the word ſee on chap. 16. 9. on the word, Teeth.

and the ſtrong place] It is derived from a word, that ſignifies to hunt, becauſe men that are hunted like wild beaſts, fly to ſuch ſtrong places for refuge. And ſuch places ſeeks the Eagle for the ſafeguard of her ſelf, and her young.

V. 29. From thence ſhe ſeeketh the prey, and her eyes behold afar off] In this verſe he ſets out the quick ſight, and nimble induſtry of the Eagle to provide food for her ſelf and hers. She ſpies it afar off, and quickly ſeizeth on it.

From thence] From the very top of the rocks, where her neſt is.

ſhe ſeeketh] Heb. She diggeth. See on verſe 21. Men ſeek by digging, and the Eagle by flying.

the prey] Heb. Meat. For her ſelf, and hers.

and] Or, which, For ſhe ſees it firſt, and then ſeeks it. And neither word being in the originall, the one may be added, as well as the other.

her eyes] See on Chap.15.15. on the word Sight.

behold a afar off] Heb. That which is afar off. This notes the curious ſight of the Eagle, that can at a great diſtance diſcern her prey.

V. 30. Her young ones alſo ſuck up blood: and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe] Whereas other birds drink water, the young Eagles do not, but eat the fleſh of men, and beaſts newly killed, and ſuck their blood. The carkaſes are brought to them by the old ones, which can ſmell dead corps afar off, yea as ſome naturaliſts report, before the battell be fought; Nrither can any carcaſe be any where, but they ſoon reſort to it, to get food for themſeves. and theirs.

Her young ones alſo] Not ſhe alone but her young ones alſo live on fleſh and bloud. It comes from a word that ſignifies to put forth. and ſuch young ones are meant, as are putting forth feathers, and cannot yet fly to ſhift for themſelves.

ſuck up blood] They ſuck it out of the dead carkaſes till they leave none. For blood ſee on Chap 16.18.

and where] Heb. And in the place in which.

the ſlain are] Such as are killed by men, eſpecially in battell; where ſtore of dead corps lye neglected, and unburied. See on ch. 24. 12. on the word wounded: for the ſame word ſignifies both.

there is ſhe] Thither preſently flies the old Eagle to provide for her, and hers. See how our Saviour applies this Matth. 24. 28. Luke 17. 37.

CHAP. XL.

Verſe 1. M*Moreever the Lord anſwered Job and ſaid*] When the Lord had ſtaid a while, that Job might have ſpace to anſwer, if he would, God ſeeing that he held his peace ſpake again, and calls upon him for an anſwer.

Moreover] Heb. And.

the Lord] See on Chap.38.1.

anſwered] See on Chap.16.1.

Job] See on Chap.1.1.

and ſaid] See Chap.16.1.

V. 2. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him? he that reproveth God let him anſwer it] Doſt thou think thy ſelf able to teach God, how to guide the world, that thou ſtandeſt out againſt him thus to cenſure his actions? Is it not more fit, that thou ſhouldeſt be called to account thy ſelf for blaming God?

ſhall he that contendeth] To wit, in judgement. Not that will fight with God, but that will plead againſt Gods proceedings. See on Chap.13.6. on the word. Pleadings.

with the Almighty] See on Chap.8. 3. 5.

inſtruct him] Teach him to guide the world better, or do greater things than I have told thee. Others read, Is it wiſdom to contend with the Almighty? Others thus, ſhould he be inſtructed that contends with the Almighty? He deſerves not to be reaſoned with, but cenſured.

he that reproveth] See on Chap. 15. 3. on the word, Reaſon.

God] See on Chap.5.17. & 15.1.

let him anſwer it] Let him anſwer for ſo doing. Or, Let him anſwer any one of thoſe things which I have ſaid before if he can. He intimates to Job, that he ſhould either anſwer, or yeild the cauſe. For the word ſee on Chap. 16. 1.

V. 3. Then Job anſwered the Lord and ſaid] Job being now convinced by ſo many arguments, and ſo plainly called upon by God for an anſwer, humbly confeſſeth his fault.

Job] See on Chap. 1, 1.

anſwered] See on Chap.16.1.

the Lord] See on Chap.38. 1. 1.

and ſaid] See on Chap.16. 1.

V. 4. Behold I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth] Job now ſhews his repentance, and deſires pardon for his exerciſes, acknowledges his own meanneſſe, and that he is ſo overcome by arguments, that he hath nothing more to ſay againſt God, or for himſelf, and therefore reſolves to be for ever ſilent in that argument. Yet ſeeing he doth not make ſo full an acknowledgement of his ſin, and repentance as was fit, God ſets on him again, verſe 6. and brings him to it, Chap 42.1.

Behold] See on Chap.1.12.

I am vile] I am light and have no ſubſtance or weight in me; and therefore am worthy to be contemned. So much the word in the originall imports.

what ſhall I anſwer thee] Thou haſt ſhewed thy greatneſſe, and goodneſſe by ſo many demonſtrations, that I have nothing to oppoſe. For the word ſee on Chap. 20, 10, & 15. 13. on the words, Reſtore, Turneſt.

I will lay mine hand upon my mouth] See on Chap, 21. 5. where all theſe words are handled.

V. 5. Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer. yet twice, but I will proceed no further]. My ſin already is too great, that I have divers times ſpoken preſumptuouſly againſt Gods proceedings, but I will ſo order my ſelf for time to come, that I will offend in that kind no more.

once have I ſpoken, yea twice] See on Chap.33.14.

but I will not anſwer] I will not defend what I have unadviſedly ſaid. For the word ſee on Chap, 16. 1.

but I will proceed no further] Heb. I will not adde. I will not only not defend what I ſaid before, but alſo not ſay ſo any more.

V. 6. Then anſwered the Lord unto Job out of the whirle-wind, and ſaid] Here begins a new ſpeech of Gods to Job. The reaſon of it ſee on verſe 4. of this Chapter. In which note, 1. A preface ſet before Gods ſpeech in this verſe. 2. A challenge, verſe 7. 3. A reproof, from verſe 8. to verſe 15. 4. Proofs of Gods greatneſſe, from the greateſt living creature in the ſea, from verſe 15. to the end of this Chapter, and in the land, Chap.41. All theſe words were expounded on Chap 38.1. See there.

V. 7. Gird up thy loynes now like a man. I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me] This verſe was all expounded on chap. 38. 3. The words are all there. So that this is a ſecond challenge to Job, & ſhews, that God hath not yet received full ſatisfaction from him.

V. 8. Wilt thou diſannull my judgement? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayeſt be righteous?] It is not enough, that thou defendeſt thine own innocency, but that thou muſt do it by accuſing me of injuſtice. Either I have wronged thee by afflicting thee without a juſt cauſe, or thou haſt wronged me by accuſing me, that I have done ſo. One of theſe muſt needs be granted, for there is no mean between them. Now therefore lay aſide thy paſſions, and judg in thine own conſcience whether it be more likely that I have wronged thee, or thou me.

Wilt thou alſo] Wilt thou not onely clear thy ſelf, but alſo wrong me.

diſannull] Make it voyd. For an unjuſt ſentence is in law and equity no ſentence, neither ought it to be executed, Pſal. 51 4. Rom. 3 4.

my judgement] See on Chap.22. 4.

wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayeſt be righteous?] Wilt thou accuſe me of injuſtice in afflicting thee, that thy cauſe may be eſteemed juſt? For the woord, ſee on Chap 9.20.

V. 9. Haſt thou an arm like God? or canſt thou thunder with a voyce like him?] Or if thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe, that thou canſt not deale with me by right, doſt thou think thou canſt do it by the might of thine arme, or terrour of thy voyce. In both theſe thou muſt fall far ſhort of me.

Haſt thou] Heb. Or haſt thou? If thou thinkeſt thou canſt not prevaile one way, haſt thou any hope to prevail another? So ו is tranſlated. Or, Exod.21. 15 17. Some read, And if thou have an arme, &c. Then deck thy ſelfe. verſe 10. Shew what power thou haſt. But the firſt reading is more emphatical and moving.

an arme] See on Chap. 22.8. on the word, Mighty.

like God] See on Chap 8. 3.5.

or canſt thou thunder with a voyce like him?] That the thunder is Gods voyce ſee on Chap.37.2.5. And for the words, ſee there alſo.

V. 10. Deck thy ſelf now with majeſty and excellency, and array thy ſelf with glory and beauty] If thou haſt ſuch a power, and thundering voyce as God, then cloath thy ſelf with ſtate, ſuch as becomes God, and mount up, and ſpeak out of a whirle-wind, as I do, that we may be on equall terms, and try out the matter in controverſie between us.

Deck thy ſelf now] As Kings on high dayes put on their Crowns and Robes to ſhew their ſtate, ſo do thou, appear as glorious as thou canſt. From this word in the originall comes another that ſignifies ornaments. Thus God decks himſelf, Pſal.93. 1. & 96. 6. & 104. 1. 2. Job 29.14.

with majeſty] Such ſtate, as proud men uſe to ſet out themſelves withall. For the word ſignifies Pride alſo.

and excellency] The word ſignifies height and pride, which often go together. Set out thy ſelf in the beſt manner, as men highly advanced uſe to do.

and array thy ſelf] Be covered all over with it as with a garment, let no ragge of infamy be ſeen upon thee. See on Chap. 39. 19. on the word, Clothed.

with glory] See on chap. 37. 22. on the word, Majeſty.

and beauty] So many words are uſed to the ſame purpoſe to ſet out the greatneſſe of that ſtate that he had need of, that would contend with God, that Job might the more be humbled, who was already brought ſo low.

V. 11. Caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath, and behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him] Let the enemies that are proud and lift up themſelves againſt thee, ſee what thou canſt do in the height of thine anger, that with a look only thou canſt in a moment abate their pride, and abaſe their pomp and greatneſſe. This muſt needs humble Job much, that was ſo much contemned by others, and could not help himſelf.

Caſt abroad] Scatter the effects of thine anger in thunder, lightning, and whirle-windes, as I do.

the rage] Heb. The rages. Shew what thou canſt do in thine utmoſt anger. For the word ſee on Chap.21.30. on the word, Wrath.

of thy wrath] See on Chap. 4. 9. & 9.5.13. & 14.13.

every one] Or, any one, be he as great as may be. See on ch.8. 12.

that is proud] See on verſe 10. on the word, Majeſty.

and abaſe him] Lay him as low as a valley, that looks as high as a mountain. That is the force of the Heb. word.

V. 12.

V. 11. Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low, and tread down the wicked in their place] The ſame thing in effect with the former ver. to affect Job the more. Onely it is enlarged by the overthrow not of proud men onely, but of all ungodly men alſo. A work worthy of God, and too great for Job to do.

Look on every one that is proud] See on the former ver.

and bring him low] Caſt him down from his greatneſſe.

V. 12. and tread down] Not onely lay him low, but alſo tread upon him, which is a great diſgrace, Joſh. 10. 24.

the wicked] See on chap. 3. 17. Bring down all troubl ſome perſons and oppreſſours.

in their place] Heb. under them. Bring them very low.

V. 13. Hide them in the duſt together, and bind their faces in ſecret] All that rebel againſt thee, and all the ungodly of the earth, kill them, and bury them in the ground, that they may appear no more in this world to trouble thee or others.

Hide them] Lay them in the grave where they may not be ſeen.

in the duſt] In the bowels of the earth bury them, Pſal. 22. 15.

together] Not at one time, or in one place, but alike, or in the ſame condition, that one may appear no more than another, chap. 3. 18.

and bind their faces in ſecret] Some take it to be a metaphor taken from men condemned to die, whoſe faces were covered, to ſhew that they were not worthy to ſee the light. See on chap. 9. 24. Eſth. 7. 8. But it is rather taken from dead men, whoſe faces uſe to be bound up and covered. Make them to lie, as priſoners and obſcure perſons in the grave, Prov. 10. 6. Joh. 11. 44. & 20. 7. For face, ſee on chap. 14. 20. on the word, Countenance.

V. 14. Then will I alſo confeſſe unto thee, that thine own right hand can ſave thee] If thou canſt do all theſe things, then I will acknowledge, that thou art ſtrong enough to uphold thy ſelfe, and haſt ſome colour to contend with me. But if thou canſt not do them (as thou knoweſt thou canſt not) then ſubmit thy ſelfe to me, and be content, that I ſhould deale with thee, as I think fit.

that thine own right hand] See on chap. 23. 9.

can ſave thee] Can keep thee out of all danger.

V. 15. Behold now Behemoth, which I made with thee, he eateth graſſe as an oxe] That, thou maiſt learne hereafter to meaſure thy ſelfe by the length of thine own foot, and to keep thy ſelfe within thy bounds, behold I ſet before thee two great beaſts, the one on earth, the other in the ſea, both my creatures that thou mayeſt know by thy diſability to deale with them, that thou art utterly unable to contend with me. The former is ſpoken of in this chap. the latter in the next.

Behold now] God ſtirs up Job to conſider well of this huge beaſt, as if he had ſaid, if thou doſt not yet underſtand how weak a man thou art, and how unfit to grapple with me, ſee how thou canſt deale with this great beaſt. For Behold, ſee on chap. 1. 12.

Behemoth] In Heb. Beaſts. It is plurall, as ſome conceive, to ſhew that it is ſo great, that it is, as it were, compounded of many beaſts, or in ſtrength is equall to many. Others ſet the ſingular before it, and read, The beaſt of beaſts. That is, the principal beaſt; as wiſdomes, Prov. 9. 1. That is, the wiſdome of wiſdomes, or chief wiſdome. Like that title of the Canticles, The ſong of ſongs, that is, the moſt excellent ſong. To find out this beaſt what it is, this may be taken for a ground, that God having ſhewed his power in divers ordinary creatures before, now would ſumme up all in two of the greateſt, which are the Elephant, and the Whale. The Elephant is an high beaſt, and being but one, may ſtand for many to ſet out Gods power, &c. It is the greateſt beaſt on earth. He is called, the chief of Gods wayes, v. 19. Some would have it underſtood of beaſts in general, but that cannot be. 1. Becauſe he ſpake of particular beaſts and birds before. 2. Becauſe the Leviathan is a particular fiſh ſpoken of in the next chapter. 3. Becauſe here is a particular deſcription of this beaſt, many parts whereof will not agree with many other beaſts. It being then a particular beaſt, it is moſt likely to be the Elephant. 1. Becauſe, that is the greateſt beaſt. 2. Becauſe all the parts of the following deſcription agree well with it. And becauſe the Elephant is not named any where in Scripture, therefore he gives unto him the common name of Beaſts by way of excellency, as Chriſt is called the Sonne of man. This great beaſt is deſcribed; 1. By his making and preſerving cauſe in this v. 2. By his parts, as his loines, and navel, v. 16. 3. By his taile and ſtones, v. 17. 4. By his bones, v. 18. 5. By the power God hath over him, v. 19. 6. By the place of his feeding, v. 20. 7. Of his abiding, v. 21, 22. 8. By his huge ſwallow, v. 23. 9. By his fearfulneſſe of being taken, v. 24. For the word, ſee on chap. 18. 3.

which I made with thee] Though he be ſo great, yet he is my creature, as well as thou. Or, I made him the ſame day with man. Or, to live with man on earth, not with fiſhes in the Sea, as the Leviathan doth. Or, to excell other creatures, as thou doſt. For the Elephant is ſaid to come neareſt to man in his ſenſes. So God is ſaid to advance (Heb. to make) Moſes and Aaron, that is to make them more excellent than others, 1 Sam. 12. 6. Others, whom I have made to ſerve thee. For Elephants are uſed in war: But it is a great queſtion, whether ſo anciently men knew how to tame them more, than how to take Whales. And God to convince Job inſtances for the moſt part in creatures not tamed. For the word, ſee on chap. 14. 9. upon the word, Bring-forth.

he eateth graſſe like an oxe] Though he be ſo huge a beaſt, yet is he not ravenous. He feeds not upon other cattel, as Lions and Wolves do, but on graſſe, as do the oxen, that labour for man. If he ſhould feed on fleſh, ſo great a beaſt muſt needs deſtroy a multitude of leſſer. For eateth, ſee on chap. 21. 25.

V. 16. Lo now his ſtrength is in his loines, and his force is in the navell of his belly] He now begins to ſet out the great ſtrength of the Elephant in this v. in his loines and in his navell, which as they are greater, ſo ſtronger than in other creatures.

Lo now] As in the former ver. he had called on Job to view this great beaſt in general, ſo he repeats the note of admiration here to draw him down to the conſideration of the particulars, wherein the great ſtrength of this great beaſt conſiſts: For Lo, ſee on chap. 1. 12. on the word, Behold.

his ſtrength is in his loines] Theſe are counted the ſeat of ſtrength in living creatures, and therefore are girded up, when men go to war or labour, Pſal. 69. 23. Nah. 2. 1. Eph. 6. 14 Prov. 31. 17.

and his force is in the navell of his belly] The navell is the center of the body, where the principal chanells of the veines and arteries meet, and from whence they paſſe into ſeveral parts of the body, and therefore it is eſteemed another ſeat of ſtrength. Heb. Navels, in the plural number; it may be becauſe of the ſeveral folds of it, or parts that meet there. For the word Belly, ſee on chap. 15. 2.

V. 17. He moveth his taile like a cedar: the ſinews of his ſtones are wrapt together] Some underſtand this of the Elephants moving of his taile which way he will. Others of his yard, when he goes to generation, becauſe mention is made of his ſtones afterwards. But neither of theſe are like a Cedar, but are obſerved by the naturaliſts to be leſſer, than anſwers to the proportion of ſo great a beaſt. Beza reads it thus. He moveth his prominent part, which is as the cedar, the ſinews of the terrible thereof are wrapped together. That is, though his ſnout be very great, yet he turneth it about hither and thither, as he pleaſe: which is wholly compact of ſinews, wrapped, and as it were twiſted together, able to terrifie any man, ſeem he never ſo ſtout and couragious.

He moveth] He turneth it, which way he pleaſe: for the Original word hath ſomething of will and pleaſure in it. Or, He ſetteth up. He makes it to ſtand ſtraight or upright.

his taile] It being ſmall, it is more likely to be meant of his ſnout, which is like a taile, and the taile ſometimes is uſed for the end of a thing, as Iſa. 7. 4. Neither is it likely ſo great a member, and uſeful as the trunke would be omitted, and ſo ſmall an one, and unprofitable, as the taile mentioned.

like a cedar] As the Cedar is moved and ſhaken with the wind. Or, which is as a Cedar, great and high. The word ארז ſignifies. 1. A Cedar tree, 1 King. 4. 33. 2. Boords of Cedar, 1 King. 6. 18. 3. Great men, which are higher than others, as Cedars are taller than other trees, Zeph. 11. 2. Here it is taken in the firſt ſenſe.

the ſinews of his ſtones are wrapt together] They hang not down as in other creatures, but are hidden in, or carried cloſe to the belly by nerves and ſinews. As the taile, or yard, or ſnout, is compared to the cedar, ſo the ſinews are compared to branches platted one within another. For ſinews, ſee on chap. 10. 11. The word for ſtones is not ſo uſed elſewhere, but for Feares, and may be tranſlated, his terrible ſinews.

V. 18. His bones are as ſtrong pieces of braſſe, his bones are like bars of iron] He further ſets out the ſtrength of this beaſt by the ſolidneſſe of his bones, which are harder than the bones of other creatures, and therefore compared to the hardeſt braſſe and iron. Some think it to be an intimation, that he cannot bow like other creatures.

his bones] See on chap. 20. 11.

are as ſtrong pieces] Or, as conduit pipes of braſſe. See on chap. 6. 12.

his bones] A different word in the Original, yet the thing is the ſame. His bones I ſay, are harder than braſſe, they are like iron. Some to make a difference underſtand by one word the hollow ones like braſſe pipes, and by the other, the ſolid ones like iron bars. Others make it a diſtinction between greater bones, and leſſer. Others between higher and lower, thoſe in the body, and thoſe in the legs. Others between the teeth and other bones in the body.

are like bars of iron] Very ſtrong, and very hard. The word Bar in the Original may come from a word, that ſignifies to caſt, or throw. Thoſe iron bars, which men fling to ſhew their ſtrength, are hard and heavie. So are the Elephants bones. For Iron, ſee on chap. 28. 2.

V. 19. He is the chiefe of the wayes of God: he that made him, can make his ſword to approach unto him] This creature is the greateſt and ſtrongeſt of all the beaſts on earth, that God made, and accordingly God hath armed him with an excellent ſword, to wit, his trunke, wherewith he defends himſelfe, and deſtroyes his enemies.

He is the chiefe] Some underſtand it of a beginning in time, as the word is uſed, Gen. 10. 10. They conceive that God made the Elephant before any other beaſt. But that being uncertain, it may better be taken for the firſt in dignity, that is, the chiefe, for the Elephant excells other beaſts in ſtrength, bigneſſe, and docibleneſſe. So the word is uſed, 1 Sam. 15. 15, 21.

of the wayes of God] Of the workes of the Lord, or of the creatures which he hath made. For God, ſee on chap. 8. 3, 5.

he that made him, can make his ſword to approach unto him] Some underſtand it thus, None can kill him but God. But there are ways now found to kill Elephants. Others thus, None dare fight with him: but ſuch as do kill them do it by ſlight and cunning. Others thus, God hath appointed the Rhinoceros to be his ſword, which uſeth to ſmite the Elephant in the belly, and ſo to kill him. But it may be read thus, He that made him, made his ſword to be near him. That is, God hath given him a trunk ready at hand to fight for himſelfe, which is as a ſword to him. For made ſee on chap. 14. 9. on the word, Bring forth. For Sword, ſee on chap. 27. 14.

V. 20. Surely the mountains bring him forth food; where all the beaſts of the field play] Two things are ſet out in this verſe. The one, that though the Elephant be a great beaſt, and need much food, yet God makes the mountains to afford him plenty without mans help. The other is, that he is ſo milde of nature, that he lets the leſſer beaſts ſport by him, and yet devoures them not, as Lyons and Wolves do. He hath a ſword, yet God curbs him, that he uſeth it not to deſtroy other beaſts.

Surely] So this particle is tranſlated, chap. 28. 1. The Interpreters tranſlate it ſo, becauſe it gives no reaſon of what went before. Yet it may be read with reference to what followes, Becauſe the moutains bring him forth food, therefore all the beaſts of the field play there. So it yeelds a reaſon of the ſecurity of the beaſts, becauſe God hath provided the Elephant other food. So ו is tranſlated Therefore, chap. 35. 16. Or, Surely the mountains bring forth food, though all the beaſts of the field play there. And then it is a proof of Gods abundant proviſion there in thoſe deſert places, to ſatisfie the huge Elephant, and a multitude of other beaſts.

the monntains bring him forth food] See the like proviſion for the wilde Aſſe, chap 39 8. and for other beaſts, Pſal. 104. 14. & 147. 8. For Bring forth, ſee on chap. 21. 3. on the word, Suffer. Him. For him to eat. Food; That which grows naturally out of the earth, as graſſe and ſuch like.

play] Not onely feed quietly without danger, but abide there with delight, not withſtanding the great ſtrength of the Elephant. For the word, ſee on chap. 29. 24. on the word, Laughed.

V. 21. He lieth under the ſhady trees, in the covert of the reed and fens] Though the Elephant feed on the mountains, yet being an hot creature, and living in hot Southerly Countries, he often comes down into the vallies near rivers, where are great trees, reeds, and fens to ſhelter him from the ſcorching beames of the ſun, and water plenty to waſh, and coole him in, and drink his fill.

he lieth] Or rather, Sleepeth. For the Elephant uſeth not to lie down, becauſe he knoweth not how to get up again, but leanes againſt a great tree when he ſleeps, as the Naturaliſts write. For the word, ſee on chap. 30. 17. on the words, Take no reſt.

V. 22. The ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow, the willows of the brooke compaſſe him about] It ſeems there are great trees in thoſe parts, that may ſerve to be a ſhadow to ſo great a creature as an Elephant.

compaſſe him about] As the high trees hide him over head from the heat of the ſun, ſo the willowes compaſſe him about underneath to ſhelter him from the winde and cold.

V. 23. Behold he drinketh up a river, and haſteth not; he truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth] An hyperbolical ſpeech, to expreſſe the greatneſſe of the Elephants draught proportionable to his bigneſſe. He drinks as greedily when he comes to the water, as if he would ſwallow up the whole river. Yet he drinks when he will, and as much as he will, and fears not that any ſhould diſturb him, as the dogs do that drink in Nilus, and haſt away leſt a Crocodile ſhould hurt him. And though Jordan be a very great river, yet he is ſo dry and ſo great, that he conceives that he could, and enters in as boldly as if he would, drink it up at a draught.

Behold] See on chap. 1. 12.

he drinketh up a river] He drinks very much at a time. Heb. He oppreſſeth, or, robbeth a river. He takes away the water of the river violently by drinking, as theeves take mens goods away by ſtealing.

and haſteth not] Drinkes much but takes his own leiſure. Fears not any diſturbance. The word ſignifies to haſt away for fear. Others read, He hindereth the river that it haſteth not. His body is ſo bigge, that it ſtops the courſe of the ſtreame.

he truſteth] He thinkes he can do it, becauſe he is ſo great and ſtrong.

that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth] That he can ſwallow the whole river at one draught. He can take it by force or violence. For Draw up, ſee on chap. 38. 8. on the word Brake forth. Jordan was a great river not far off, & well known in thoſe parts, ſo called, as ſome conceive, becauſe it came out of the tribe of Dan. And others conceive that here is an alluſion to the Dead ſea, into which Jordan falls, yet it ſwells not. For mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

V. 24. He taketh it with his eyes; his noſe pierceth through ſnares] He looks upon the river as if he would drink it all up, and puts in his trunke ſo violently, that he breakes through ſnares ſet for him in the water. Others read thus, Will any take him in his ſight? or bore his noſe with a gin? Intimating that none dareth to come to take him openly by force, or to lead him away by the noſe. This agrees well with what is ſpoken of the Leviathan, chap. 41. 1, 2.

CHAP. XLI.

Ver. 1. C*Anſt thou draw out Leviathan with an hooke? or his tongue with a cord, which thou letteſt down?*] The Lord paſſeth now from the land to the ſea, and ſets out his power in the great Leviathan, which is far greater than the Elephant. This is ordinarily conceived to be the Whale; but reverend Beza oppoſeth it, and would have it to be the Crocodile. 1. Becauſe ſome things ſpoken in the deſcription of this fiſh agree not to the Whale. The contrary will appear in the application of particulars. 2. That Whales were unknown in Idumæa, as being far off in the wide ſea, and never coming into the Arabian Gulf. To which it is eaſie to anſwer, that good Authours report that great Whales have been ſeen in the Arabian gulf, and that the parts neer did daily uſe divers parts of the Whale. Neither was the Mediterranean ſea far off, where Whales were. And many things are heard of, that are never ſeen in ſome parts of the world. It may be Elephants were not ordinary in Idumæa neither, yet God inſtances in them. Now that it ſhould be the Whale, and not the Crocodile, appears. 1. Becauſe as God did inſtance in the greateſt beaſt, to ſhew his power, ſo it is ſuitable to inſtance in the greateſt fiſh. 2. Becauſe this fiſh is in the ſea, and not in the river Nilus, v. 31, 32, 33. But the the Crocodile is in the river, and in the day time often on the land. 3. The Whale reſiſts men, and cannot be tamed, ver. 25. But the Crocodile flies, and yeelds to be trode on. 4. This fiſh can lie on ſharp ſtones, v. 30. But the Crocodile cannot. 5. This fiſh hath a tongue, v. 1. The Crocodile hath none. See Coccelus on this ver. God ſpeaks of the Leviathan here, as of a little fiſh, that might be taken with an hooke, or plaid withal by his power, though he be terrible to men. The ſum of this verſe is, That thou O Job mayſt ſee thy preſumption in pleading with me; look upon the Whale, and ſee if thou be able to deale with it by force. If not, how canſt thou contend with me, that made that great creature, and can deſtroy it when I will?

Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with a hooke?] Smaller fiſhes may be taken with an hooke, but the Whale will breake all hookes. It is tranſlated by way of interrogation, though there Be no interrogative ſign in the Heb. For we finde the next ver. interrogative. And it is not true otherwiſe; for the Whale cannot be taken with an hooke. For the future Engliſhed, Can. See chap. 8. 11. Draw out. Of the ſea, as leſſer fiſhes are by an Angle drawn out of the River. Leviathan. The Whale, as before. It hath his name from addition. Either becauſe of the greatneſſe of the members, or becauſe greater than any other living creature. See for this word, on chap. 3. 8. on, Their mourning.

or his tongue] Rather, Or by his tongue. Canſt thou make thy hook lay hold upon his tongue, and ſo draw him to land? For it is not meant of drawing his tongue out of his mouth. For the word, ſee on chap. 15. 5. By is added, Iſa. 51. 19.

with a cord] That is, with an hook hanging on a cord, which ſometimes laies hold on the noſe, ſometimes on the tongue, and ſometimes on other parts of the fiſh. The Whales tongue being ſo great, an hook might quickly lay hold on it, yet not draw out the Whale. For the word, ſee on chap. 18. 10. on the word, Snare.

which thou letteſt down] Into the waters to catch fiſh. Heb. which thou drowneſt.

V. 2. Canſt thou put an hooke into his noſe? or bore his jaw through with a thorne?] Some take this verſe to be an expoſition of the former, and to intend the taking of the fiſh. But it may rather be an alluſion to the cuſtome of Fiſhermen, who when they have taken fiſhes with an angle, uſe to hang them on a twig or bulruſh, and ſo carry them away. So could not Job do with a Whale, if he had taken him.

Canſt thou put an hook into his noſe] Either to take him, or to carry him home when thou haſt taken him. The Hebrew word for an hook אגמון 1. ſignifies a pond, or ſtanding water, Pſal. 114. 8. 2. A bulruſh, becauſe they grow by ponds, Iſa. 58. 5. So it may be here, for it is not unlikely they had ſtrong bulruſhes which might ſerve to carry fiſh, home on. Others take it metaphorically for an hook to take fiſh, which is crooked like a bulruſh bowing down. For noſe, ſee on chap. 4. 9. & 9. 5, 13. & 14. 13. on the words, noſtrils, anger, wrath.

or bore his jaw through with a thorne] Make an hole in it to put a twig of thorne through to carry it home being taken. Others underſtand it of fiſhing with a thorne, or an hook ſharp like a thorn.

V. 3. Will he make many ſupplications unto thee? Will he ſpeak ſoft words unto thee] Will he like a priſoner taken in war, intreat thee not to hurt or kill him, or pray thee to ſet him at liberty, or ſpeak gentle words to thee, as Balaams aſſe did to him, Numb. 22. 30. No, his ſtomack is too great he will reſiſt to death.

Will he make many ſupplications unto thee] Will he often and earneſtly intreat thee to ſpare him, as the Gibeonites did Joſhua, Joſh. 9. 9. &c. Spoken of beaſts after the manner of men. See the like, chap. 39 18.

Will he ſpeak ſoft words unto thee] Will he flatter, or humour thee that he may get looſe again. For ſpeak, ſee on chap. 13. 22.

V. 4. Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a ſervant for ever] If by gentle words he cannot get looſe from thee, will he ever be brought to ſubmit to thee as a ſlave, to ſerve thee all his life long? His ſtomack is too great to ſtoop ſo low.

Will he make a covenant with thee] Heb. Will he cut a covenant with thee? For the ſenſe of theſe words, ſee on chap. 31. 1.

wilt thou take him for a ſervant for ever] Haſt thou power to keep him in perpetual ſubjection, or make him do thy drudgery ſo long as he lives? Or, That thou ſhouldſt take him for a ſervant for ever. His life is his ever, he hath no being after death. For take, ſee on chap. 15. 12. on the word, carry away. The word, forever, comes from a word that ſignifies to be hidden. For whether it be taken for eternity, or for a long time, no man knows when it will end.

V. 5. Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou binde him for thy maidens] If thou canſt not bring down his ſtubborn heart to do thy work, canſt thou make ſport with him as a little bird? Or, canſt thou tie him with a ſtring for thy little girles to play withal, as thou doſt young birds? So great a fiſh is not ſo tractable.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird] He means playing with him not as with a companion, but as making him an object of their ſport, as the Philiſtines did Sampſon, Judg 16. 25. For play, ſee on chap. 29. 24. on the word, laughed. The word for bird, ſignifies any ſmall bird, but more eſpecially a ſparrow, which is moſt converſant with men, and fitteſt to make ſport withal. So it is tranſlated, Pſal. 84. 3.

or wilt thou binde him for thy maidens] Wilt thou tie him in a ſtring that thy maid-ſervants may make ſport with him for themſelves, or for thy little daughters, who take great delight in little birds ſo tied, that they may not eſcape till they be ſatisfied. And for or, ſee Exod. 21. 15, 17. For binde, ſee on chap. 38. 31.

V. 6. Shall thy companions make a banquet of him, ſhall they part him among the merchants] Fiſhermen uſe to go out in companies, eſpecially for taking greater fiſhes. But it ſeems the taking of the Whale, which now is very perillous, was not then known. For neither could the fiſhermen make a feaſt with the whale among themſelves, nor ſell him to the Merchants, as now, to divide among them for their profit, as they did with other fiſhes, becauſe they knew not how to catch or kill them.

Shall thy companions] Thoſe that joyne together to take the whale.

make a banquet of him] Or, for him, Can they catch him, that they may feed on him, or make merry becauſe they have taken him? One verb included in another, ſee on chap. 15. 8. & 16 11. & 18. 8. The word for making a banquet ſignifies alſo to dig, as chap. 6. 27. But that ſignification fits not here.

* ſhall they part him] Shall they ſell him to divers Merchants that they may divide him among themſelves?

among the Merchants] The ſame word ſignifies Canaanites alſo. It ſeems they were great Merchants, and well might they be ſo, living near the mediterranean Sea. Neither could their little land maintain ſo many hundred thouſands without the help of the Sea.

V. 7. Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fiſh ſpeares] Canſt thou find any way to take the whale? If not by an angle, canſt thou pierce him with ſharp irons, or take him with an Eel-ſpeare? It ſeems they knew not any way then to take the whale.

Canſt thou fill] It muſt be many iron darts caſt upon him that muſt kill him, he muſt be pierced in many places.

his skin] It ſeems that is ſo hard, that iron will ſcarce pierce it.

with barbed irons] Heb. with thornes. That is, with iron darts ſharp like thornes.

or his head] It is not one fiſh-ſpeare can do it, it muſt be many, more than thou canſt come to ſtrike into his head. For the word, ſee on chap. 19. 9.

with fiſh-hooks] An inſtrument wherewith they ſmite fiſh in the water, to catch, or kill them, like our Eel-ſpears.

V. 8. Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battel, do no more] If when thou canſt not take him by ſlight, or any of the former wayes whereby fiſh are taken, thou wilt adventure to do it by force, thou wilt ſoone be weary of that combate, and glad to ſhift for thy ſelfe by flight, and not dare to adventure on him any more. Others underſtand it of laying hold on him when he is ſleeping near ſome rock, yet he cannot ſo be taken, v. 9. Neither dare any awake him, verſe 10.

Lay thine hand upon him] Uſe violence to take him. For hand, ſee on chap. 29. 9.

remember the battel] Thou wilt have cauſe to think all thy life long what fierce encounter thou haſt had, and how hardly thou haſt eſcaped.

do no more] Thou wilt have no maw to meddle with him any more.

V. 9. Behold the hope of him is in vaine, ſhall not one be caſt down even at the ſight of him?] If none of theſe means can take him, then there is no hope of it, for if a man do but look at ſuch a terrible creature, it is enough to make him faint, and fall flat on his face for feare.

Behold] See on chap. 1. 12.

the hope of him] The expectation of him that would take the whale. In ordinary ſpeech it ſhould have been thy hope, for he ſpake to Job before. But the perſon is changed, to, ſhew, that not onely Job, but no man elſe, though much ſtronger than he, could take the whale.

is in vaine] Heb. is lying. It will deceive him if he make account to take this great fiſh. For the word, ſee on chap. 24. 25.

ſhall not one be caſt down even at the ſight of him] How little hope a man may have to take him his terrible countenance ſhewes, which will make him give over for very fear. Others read it thus, will he be caſt down even at the ſight of him? It may be thou thinkeſt that though thou canſt take him none of the former wayes, yet he will lie down for fear as ſoon as he ſees thee, and then thou mayſt do with him what thou wilt, but thou art much deceived. Others thus, if his hope be in vaine, will he be caſt down even at the ſight of him? That is, if the whale be ſo wearied that he have no hope to eſcape, yet he will never yield, but ſtand it out to the death. For even, ſee on chap. 18. 5. on the word, yea. For not omitted in a queſtion, ſee on chap. 20. 4.

V. 10. None is ſo fierce that dare ſtirre him up, who then is able to ſtand before me?] In this verſe God fitly applies to the preſent diſputation, what he had ſaid before of this great fiſh. Ye would wonder to ſee the ſtouteſt of men dare to awake the whale when he is aſleep, or provoke him to fight with him when he is awake. How then canſt thou O Job, or any man elſe contend with me, who gave him that great ſtrength, and have much more ſtrength my ſelf.

None is ſo fierce] Or, bold. Heb. cruell. For cruelty makes men fierce.

that dare ſtir him up] Heb. That he ſhould dare to ſtir him up. He will ſoon forget his fierceneſſe, and be daunted at the ſight of ſo great an adverſary, if he provoke the whale to fight with him. This is the battel mentioned, verſe 8. The particle כי ordinarily ſignifies for, or becauſe, but ſometimes that, as here, and chap. 36. 10, 24. For ſtir up, ſee on chap. 31. 29.

who then is able to ſtand before me?] If I will ruine any man, how can he help it, that cannot ſtand before a whale? Heb. and who is he that can ſtand before me? So ו is tranſlated then, and infers a concluſion upon a former reaſon, 2 King. 18. 24. For ſtand, ſee on chap. 33. 5. on the word, ſet in order.

V. 11. Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him? Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine] Some include the latter part of the former verſe, and all this verſe, in a parentheſis, becauſe at the 12. verſe God goes on again to ſpeak of the Leviathan. The ſenſe is, who did me a good turne firſt that I ſhould be forced to require it? Yea I am ſo far from receiving courteſies, that I have given being, and all things they have to all creatures in the world, and therefore may diſpoſe of them as I will, and who can then have any colour to plead againſt me that I do him wrong?

Who hath prevented me] Who did me a good office before I did him any? Or who hath directed me how to governe the world, Rom. 11. 34, 35. I can do no man wrong, becauſe I am obliged to none, but all are engaged to me for all they have. For prevented, ſee on chap. 30. 27. For repay, ſee on chap. 34. 11. on the word, render.

Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine] The Aire, Sea, and Earth, and all that is in them belongs to God, ſo doth the Heaven alſo: But he mentions things below, becauſe he had to do with one on earth. See Exod. 19. 5. Deut. 10. 14. Pſal. 24. 1. & 50. 12 1 Cor. 10. 26, 28. For Heaven, ſee on chap. 9. 8. & 11. 8.

V. 12. I will not conceale his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion] A tranſition from the general deſcription of him to the particulars of his members in the following verſes, which contain as it were a picture of this terrible beaſt. That thou O Job mayſt know what little hope there is to overcome this great fiſh, and mayſt ſee my great power in making ſo huge a creature, I will give thee a ſpecial character of him.

I will not conceale] I will ſpeak largly of it. A Meioſis. See the like, chap. 14. 11. & 15. 18.

his parts] His ſeveral and large members, wherein his ſtrength conſiſts. The word ſignifies boughs of trees, and ſo members, which are to the body, as boughs to the tree. It ſignifies alſo door-bars, which are made of boughs of trees. See more on chap. 18. 12. on the word, ſtrength.

nor his power] Heb. The matter, or, The word of his power. I will ſpeak of his great ſtrength, as well as of his great members, for great members without ſtrength are but burdens to the body. The word ſtrength is plurall in the Original, either to ſet out the greatneſs of his ſtrength, or to intimate that he is ſtrong in every member.

nor his comely proportion] Heb. nor the grace of his diſpoſition. That is, the lovely proportion of his parts, that are not ſome great, ſome little, but all ſutable on to another. Others underſtand it of his muſtering of his members in battel array, when men come to take him; for the word ſignifies ſometimes ſetting an Army of ſouldiers in battel array, that they may be ready for to fight. But the former interpretation agrees better with the particular deſcription following.

V. 13. Who can diſcover the face of his garment, or who can come to him with his double bridle?] No man dares approach to this terrible fiſh as to an horſe in the ſtable, to take off his cloth, and bring a bridle to put into his mouth, that he might ride on him. No man can draw him out of the ſea, which is as a garment to cover him. Others underſtand it of flaying off the skin of the whale when he is taken, but that agrees not well with the following, verſe.

Who can diſcover the face of his garment?] Who can take that off from him that is ſeen as a garment about him, and hides a great part of him? That is the ſea. Who can take that ſhelter from him? For face, ſee on chap. 15. 15. on the word, ſight.

or who can come to him with his double bridle] Or, within. Who dare come nigh him to bring him forth to any ſervice? For come, ſee on chap. 14. 14.

V. 14. Who can open the doors of his face? His teeth are terrible round about] He goes on with the ſimilitude of an horſe. If any man durſt come near him, yet his jawes being like two great doors, and armed with huge teeth within, he would be afraid to open them to put in a bridle. All this ſhewes how dangerous it is for a man to meddle with a whale. It is objected that whales have no teeth, therefore the whale cannot be meant here. It is anſwered. 1. That they have long things in their months like rods, with a kind of hair in the end, wherewith they feed on the froth of the ſea. 2. That there are divers kinds of whales, ſome whereof have huge and terrible teeth, as good Authors affirme. See Pineda on the place.

Who can open the doors of his face?] Who can force him to gape that he may bridle him? For open, ſee on chap. 12. 18. on the word, looſeth. For face, ſee on chap. 15. 15. on the word, ſight.

His teeth are terrible round about] They are all ſo large round about his mouth, that they make men afraid to look on them. For teeth, ſee on chap. 16. 9 For terrible, Heb. terrour, ſee on chap. 9 34 & 13. 21. on the words, feare, and dread.

V. 15. His ſcales are his pride, ſhut up together as with a cloſe ſeale] In this verſe is ſet out the hardneſſe of his ſcales, they are like ſo many braſſe bucklers, and the cloſeneſſe of them, that nothing may come between to hurt him; which is ſet out by the ſimilitude of a thing cloſe ſealed up. It is objected that whales have no ſcales. It is anſwered. 1. That ſome kinds have great and thick ones like ſhields. See Cocceius on the Text. 2. That it may be read otherwiſe. His height is the ſtrength of ſhields ſhut up with a cloſe ſeale. That is, his back is covered with a thick skin, no more to be pierced than a ſhield. And if there be any diviſions in it like ſcales, they are ſo cloſe as if they were ſealed together.

His ſcales] The word is never ſo tranſlated elſewhere. It is tranſlated ſtrong pieces, chap. 40. 18. And ſuch lumpes or flakes of fleſh the whale may have with a thick covering. See v. 23. Heb. His ſtrong pieces of ſhields. For ſhields, ſee on chap. 15. 26. on the word, Bucklers.

are his pride] He is ſo proud of them, that he thinks none can pierce through them to hurt him. Or, His height. That is, his honour. The word ſignifies both.

ſhut up together] His ſcales are ſhut up together. Or the whale himſelſe is ſafe, like one ſhut up.

as with a cloſe ſeale] As things faſt ſealed up, that cannot be parted. Heb. A ſtraight ſeal..

V. 16. One is ſo near to another, that no aire can come between them] Theſe ſcales or flakes are ſo cloſe joyned, and in ſo good order, that the ſearching wind that finds out all crannies, cannot enter between them, much leſſe any weapon to hurt the whale.

One is ſo near to another] Heb. One comes ſo near to one. That is each to other.

that no aire can come between them] For aire ſee on, chap. 15. 2. on vaine knowledge. For come, ſee on chap. 14. 14.

V. 17. They are joyned one to another, they ſtick together that they cannot be ſundred] As no wind can come between theſe ſcales or flakes, ſo no force can ſeparate them. Either they knew not then the late way of taking whales by wounding them in ſome tender parts, or elſe their whales had harder ſcales or skins than ours.

they are joyned one to another] Heb. A man to his brother. A common ſcripture phraſe in things that have no life nor ſexe, as well as in thoſe that have. The ſame phraſe is, Exod. 25. 20. For a man, ſee on chap. 1. 1. For brother, ſee on chap. 19. 13.

they ſtick together] Like captives taken in war, and fettered one to another. So much the word imports.

that they cannot be ſundred] No force or art can make a ſeparation between them.

V. 18. By his neeſings a light doth ſhine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning] His neeſing doth cauſe much water to fly up into the aire, which ſhining clear, looks as if the Sun were riſing out of the Sea, and his eyes are very bright and ſhinning, and that afar off in regard of their greatneſſe, as the morning light quickly ſpreads it ſelfe over the earth.

by his neeſings a light doth ſhine] Like the light of the Sun. See on chap. 17. 12. & 31 26.

and his eyes] See on chap. 15. 15. on the word, Sight.

are like the eyelids of the morning] See on chap. 3. 9. on Dawning of the day. The words are the ſame in the Original. The morning light coming ſuddenly affects men more than the noone light, which is far greater, but comes by degrees. This ſets out the great brightneſſe of the eyes of the whale.

V. 19. Out of his mouth go burning lampes, and ſparkes of fire leape out] Here God goes on to ſet out the great heat that is within this great fiſh, as in a great kitchen, to digeſt his meat, breaking forth as it were in firebrands, and fiery flames, and ſparkles caſt forth in abundance by him as if he ſpit fire, v. 19. 20, 21. Theſe things and many others agree not with the Crocodile which Beza would have to be meant here.

out of his mouth] See on chap. 15. 5.

go] See on chap. 14. 20. on the word, Paſſeth.

burning lampes] See on chap. 12. 5.

and ſparkes of fire leape out] For fire, ſee on chap. 15. 34. & 20. 26. They leape out, or ſend themſelves out, as it were out of a priſon. See on chap. 19. 20. on, Eſcaped.

V. 20. Out of his noſtrills goeth ſmoke, as out of a ſeething pot or caldron] He ſets out the great heat coming from the whale by another ſimilitude taken from the ſmoke, that aſcends out of ſome huge pot, or caldron, when it boiles.

out of his noſtrills goeth ſmoke] Smoke is an uſual companion of fire. How hot then is this fiſh within, when one chimney will not ſerve to vent the heat of it? It ſends fire out of the mouth, and ſmoke ont of the noſe. For goeth, ſee on chap. 14. 2. on, cometh forth. The word עשן Smoke is uſed. 1. Literally for a darke vapour ariſing from heat, Gen. 15. 17. 2. To ſet out a great, and devouring fire, Iſa. 34. 10. For fire brings ſmoke. 3. A dark cloud like ſmoke, Iſa. 4. 5. 4. A vaine, empty, weake, helpleſſe thing like ſmoke, Pſal. 68. 2. 5. To ſet out trouble, for ſmoke is very troubleſome to the eyes, Iſa. 14. 31.

as out of a ſeething pot] Heb. As out of a pot blown. For blowing makes the pot boile quickly, and fiercely, Jer. 1. 13. See on chap. 20. 26. where it is tranſlated Blown.

or a caldron] It is ſuppoſed to be a great brazen kettle in which dying ſtuff to colour cloath was boil'd. This word אגמון Every where in Scripture, ſave here, ſignifies a ruſh, or a bulruſh which grows by ponds. And אגם which is near it in letters, ſignifies a pond. Some take this for a pond, that ſometimes ſends out vapours like ſmoke. Others for a great caldron like a pond, which when it boiles doth the like. So a great veſſel uſed in the Temple is called a ſea, 2 Chron. 4. 2. See on v. 2. on the word Hooke.

V. 21. His breath kindleth coales, and a flame goeth out of his mouth] Here the whale is compared to a great winde, or a paire of ſmiths bellows, that blowing the coales raiſeth a mighty flame. No ſuch thing in the Crocodile.

His breath] Heb. His ſoul. See on chap. 14. 22. The ſoul is the cauſe of breath, and when it leaves the body, the breath failes.

kindleth coales] Or, Would kindle coales. It is ſo hot, that it might do it, for there are no coales in the ſea to kindle. The word ſignifies ſometimes a live, or burning coale, and ſometimes a dead one not kindled, as here. See Prov. 6. 28. Iſa. 44. 19. 2 Sam. 22. 9. Pſal. 18. 8.

and a flame goeth out of his mouth] A bright beame like o flame of fire. For goeth out, ſee on chap. 14. 2. on the word cometh forth. For Mouth, ſee on chap. 15. 5.

V. 22. In his neck remaineth ſtrength, and ſorrow is turned into joy before him] His head and other parts are ſtrongly joyned together by his neck, and thoſe ſwelling waves, or ſtormes, that affright paſſengers are a pleaſure to him.

In his neck] In the conjunction of the head to the members as ſome would have it, that conceive, no fiſhes have necks; others think that Whales, and Dolphins, and great Fiſhes, that breath have necks, and ſtrong ones too, which cannot eaſily be broken, like the necks of other living creatures, yet this proves not the Crocodile to be here meant, for it hath no more neck, than a whale. The ſtrength of his neck is ſet out in this verſe, of his fleſh, verſe 23. of his heart, verſe 24.

remaineth ſtrength] Heb Lodgeth, or, abideth all night. His ſtrength makes him cheerful, and feareleſſe, as appears by the oppoſition in the end of the verſe.

and ſorrow is turned into joy before him. Heb. And ſorrow rejoyceth before him] Some underſtand it of the unweariableneſs of the Whale. Though he be in the ſea in all ſtormes and tempeſts, yet he is never out of heart, nor fearfull, nor grieved with any thing, that can befall him. Others underſtand it of his frightning all that come in his way, and putting them to grief: and read thus, And before him danceth fear. He makes ſuch a combuſtion in the ſea by ſtirring the waters before him, that none dare come near him.

V. 23. The flakes of his fleſh are joyned together, they are firme in themſelves, they cannot be moved] There is ſo firm a conjunction of all the parts of his body, and the fleſh ſo hard, that he is like a moulten pillar, no part whereof can be taken from another.

The flakes] Heb The fallings, All is faſt and hard about him, even thoſe parts that hang looſe in other fiſhes. Or, the refuſe, or vileſt parts, as the word is tranſlated, Amos 8 6. Some take it for flakes of fleſh diſtinguiſhed by veines like branches of oke or aſh.

of his fleſh] There is a kind of fleſh in fiſh, diſtinct from the bones. Lev. 11. 11. & 1 Cor. 15. 39. For fleſh ſee on chap. 14. 22.

are joyned together] Cleave faſt one to another. See ver. 17.

they are firm in themſelves] Every one is firm, and ſo is their knitting together. Or, He is firm in himſelf. That is the whole Whale is ſo. The word in the original is, Moulten. Bell-mettall, while it is caſting is ſoft and looſe, but when it is caſt, is is hard and firm, they cannot be moved] One part cannot be taken from another. Or, He cannot be moved. The Whale is ſo ſtrong, that no man can make him give place, unleſſe he will himſelf.

V. 24. His heart is as firm as a ſtone, yea as hard as a piece of the neither milſtone] Neither is his heart any thing inferiour to the might of his body, but, as ſtrong, as any rock, and as, hard and unmoveable to abide all brunts, as the neither milſtone.

His heart] See on chap. 15. 12.

is as firme] As hard. See on ver. 23.

as a ſtone] See on chap. 14. 19.

yea] If any ſtone be harder than others, the Whales heart is as hard or firm as it. So this particle is tranſlated chap. 14. 10.

as hard] See on ver. 23.

as a piece of the neither milſtone] The neither milſtone is the hardeſt, becauſe the whole weight lies upon it.

V. 25. When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid: by reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves] having ſet out the terrour of this great fiſh before, by the ſtrength of his members, now he ſets it out by his carriage. When he lifts up himſelf like ſome moving mountain in the waters, he ſtrikes ſuch terrour into the ſtouteſt men, whether marriners, or paſſengers, that by reaſon of the huge waves which he raiſeth before him, they thinking death at hand, and that they ſhall either be devoured by him, or drowned in the ſea, prepare themſelves for death by confeſſing their ſins, and craving pardon for them

When he raiſeth up himſelf] When the Whale begins to move on the top of the waters, Broughton reads it, At his ſtatelineſſe. For the word ſee on chap. 21. 3. on the word, Suffer.

the mighty are afraid] Not timerous people, or mean men only, but the ſtrongeſt and greateſt are ſtruck into a great fright. For Afraid ſee on ch. 19. 29. It ſignifies ſuch a fear, as ſtrangers have in a forrain country where they are expoſed to many dangers, and have no ſuccour. For the word ſignifies to be a pilgrim, and to fear.

by reaſon of breaking] By reaſon of the waves, which are as cleavings of of the Sea raiſed by rhe Whales motion. Broughton reads of ſhivering.

they purifie themſelves] They cry to God as dying men do for mercy, and pardon of ſins. So Jonas marriners did in a tempeſt, John 1. 5. others underſtand it of a bodily looſeneſſe brought on them for fear. Others of wandring up and down like men diſtracted that know not what they do. Pſal. 107, 27, 28.

V. 26. The ſword of him that layeth at him, cannot hold; the ſpear, the dart, nor the habergeon] Here it ſeems alſo, that the way of taking the Whale was not then known. Which is ſhewed by the unprofitableneſſe of ſome ſeveral weapons, that might be uſed to this end, in this verſe &c. to verſe 30. If any man dare be ſo bold as to come near him to ſmite him with a ſword, it it is to no purpoſe; for it will break before it can wound the Whale. And if he be afraid to come near him, and caſt ſpears, darts, or javelins at him afar off, neither will they pierce or wound him, of him that layeth at him] That ſtriketh at him to wound or kill him.

The ſword] See on chap. 27. 14.

cannot hold] Heb. will not ſtand, or, abide, or . riſe. It will be broken, and not be taken off whole as it was before. See on chap. 14. 12. on the word, Riſeth.

the ſpear] It comes from a word that ſignifies to pitch a tent, becauſe they were weapons uſed in war, and as ſome write, pitched round about their tents inſtead of a trench, for defence. However it is an offenſive weapon. See on chap. 39. 33.

the dart] A weapon uſed afar off to caſt at the enemy. Some would have it to be a ſling; but that is mentioned verſe 28. Others joyn it to the former, and read, The ſpear that goeth forth.

nor the habergeon] Or, Breaſt-plate. As his offenſive weapons will not hurt the Whale, ſo his defenſive ones will not ſafeguard him. Yet it may well be an offenſive weapon, as a javelin, for ſuch are mentioned before and after it,

V. 27. He eſteemeth Iron as ſtraw, and Braſſe as rotten wood] He makes as little account of, and is as little hurt with weapons of iron or braſs, as if one caſt a ſtraw, or a piece of rotten wood at him.

he eſteemeth] He ſlights it, and fears no hurt from it, as if he had reaſon, and knew it could not wound him.

iron] See on chap. 28. 2.

as ſtraw] Heb, For ſtraw. An hurtleſſe thing.

and braſſe] See on Chap. 6. 12.

as rotten wood] Heb. For rotten wood For Wood ſee on chap. 14. 7. on the word, Tree. For Rotten on Chap. 13 28.

V. 28. The arrow cannot make him flee: ſling ſtones are turned with him into ſtubble] Before guns were invented, arrows, and ſlings were much in uſe, and went together in the battel. But the Whale feared neither of both, no more than if men had flung ſtubble at him.

the arrow] Heb. The ſon of the bow] Arrows are ſhot out of bows, as children come out of their parents. They are called ſons of the quiver. Lam. 3. 13.

cannot make him flee] He is not ſo afraid as to run away from it.

ſling ſtones] Such as are flung out of a ſling- For Stones ſee on Chap. 14. 19.

are turned with him into ſtubble] He blowes them away, as one would blow ſtuble away, Darts are counted as ſtubble; he laugheth at the ſhaking of a ſpear] He addes here other warlike weapons, peradventure unknown to us, to ſhew, that then they could not take the Whale with any weapons.

V. 26. Darts] A dart was mentioned before, as alſo a ſpear, ver. 26. But as they were other words in the originall, ſo very likely they were other weapons unknown to us, and therefore want names in our language, are counted] See on ver. 27. on the word, Eſteemeth.

as ſtubble] See on ver. 28.

he laugheth at the ſhaking of a ſpear] If one ſhould ſhake a ſpear at him to ſcare him, he would regard it no more, than we do things, we laugh at. See on chap. 29 22. on the word, Mocketh.

the ſhaking] Se on chap. 39. 24, on the word, Fierceneſſe, of a ſpear] See on chap. 39. 23. on the word, Shield.

V 30. Sharp ſtones are under him: he ſpreadeth ſharp pointed things upon the mire] His skin is ſo hard, that he can reſt himſelfe on the ſharp tops of rocks in the ſea, and not hurt himſelf no more than if he lay on the ſoft mire.

ſharp ſtones are under him] Heb. Sharp pieces of the potſherd. That is things as ſharp, and pricking as the pieces of a broken potſherd, yet he feels them not,

He ſpreadeth ſharp pointed things upon the mire] The Whale is here compared to ſome hardy man ſcorning to lie ſoft on the mire, but laying as it were ſharp ſtones upon it, to ſhew what he can enduro without hurt. The word חרוץ in the original for ſharp pointed things ſignifies, 1. Deciſion. Joel 3. 14. 2. A thing broken. Lev. 22. 22, 3. Gold, Prov. 3 14. 4. An harrow 2 Sam. 12. 31. 5. A wall, or breach, or ditch. Dan. 9 25. 6. A ſharp piercing thing like an harrow, as here others underſtand it of ſtones and darts caſt at him to kill him, which are ſo far from hurting him, that he lies down upon them, as on ſoft mire, without any hurt, and ſo ſhews all their weapons and labour to be in vain.

V 31. He maketh the deep to boyl like a pot: he maketh the ſea like a pot of ointment] And what is all this to the Crocodile who comes not in the ſea, or what fiſh can do all this, but an huge Whale? The Lord now ſets out the great ſtrength of this fiſh by the ſtirring of the ſea from top to botttom by his wallowing in it, as if it were too narrow for him, and by caſting up the waters in abundance, and making ſuch a foam, as an Apothecary doth when he boyles his ointments.

He maketh the the deeps to boyle like a pot] As the water in the pot ſet over the fire riſeth up ſo doth the ſea by the bluſtring of the Whale. By the deep is meant the ſea, which is the deepeſt of all waters. Chap. 28. 14. Exod. 15. 5. For Boyle, ſe on chap. 36. 27.

he makeeth the ſea like a pot of ointment] As the Apothecary putting many ſpices in the pot, raiſes a great ſcumme on the top of the water, ſo doth the Whale in the Sea. For See, ſea on chap. 14. 11.

V 32. He maketh a path to ſhine after him; one would think the deep to be hoary] As he troubleth the ſea before him, ſo he leaves a bright path behind him, that men may ſee where he went. He makes it ſo white, that it looks like an old mans head, whoſe haire is turned all white. How powerful is this creature, that raiſes ſuch ſtirs before and behind him in the great Sea?

He maketh a path to ſhine after him] By ſwimming in the ſea, and violent moving of the waters, he leaves a white foam behind him, like a path wherein men walk. So do ſhips alſo, and much more Whales, which are far bigger. For Path ſee on chap. 18. 10. on the word, Way.

one would think the deep to be hoary] It ſeems this path is very wide according to the greatneſſe of the Whale, and therefore God ſpeaks as if the whole ſea were made white by him. For Thinking ſee on verſe 27. on the word, Eſteemeth. So a man would think that ſees the Whale paſt. Some read it, he thinke. The Whale turning about, and looking behind him, thinks he hath made all the ſea white. So verſe 27. He eſteemeth, the deep] The ſea. See on verſe 31.

to be hoary] To be all white,and looking old, that looked green and youthfull before, as if the ſea were ſo ſcared, that the colour were ſuddenly altered.

V. 33. Upon earth there is not his like, who is made without fear] Here is the concluſion of all concerning the VVhale in this verſe and the next. In this verſe God ſets out the VVhale, and prefers him before other creatures for greatneſſe and ſtrength. And not only before all the fiſhes in the ſea,where he hath command vvithout controverſie; but alſo before all beaſts on earth the ſtouteſt of vvhich are more fearfull, and eaſier to be ſubdued,than he.

upon earth] Heb. upon the duſt. See on chap. 14 8. on the vvord, Ground.

There is not his like] Heb. There is no compariſon of him.

who is made without fear] Or, VVho behave themſelves without fear. There is not any one creature on earth ſo fearleſſe. He fears none, and all are afraid of him. For Made ſee on chap. 14. 9. on the vvord bring forth. Broughton reads it thus, His like are not upon the land which do deal without fear. No creature carries it ſelf ſo ſtately, or ſtoutly, as the VVhale. Cocceius thus, his dominion is not over the earth, who is made without fear, That is, God hath ſhut the VVhale into the Sea, Chap 7.12. For had he ſet him on the land, and given him members like the wild beaſts, he would have deſtroyed all living creatures.

V, 34. He beholdeth all high things: he is a King over all the children of pride] He doth with a kind of contempt look down upon the talleſt and greateſt creatures, as far below him. And no marvel, for as he is greater, ſo is he prouder than the proudeſt of them.

he beholdeth] He ſeeth it as it were far below him,he deſpiſeth it, and contemneth it,and looks upon it without fear. For looking on one with contempt,ſee Canticles, 1.6. For the word ſe on ch. 19. 12.

all high things] Or, Any high thing be it never ſo high. The word is tranſlated Excellency. chap, 40. 10. The meaning is, The higheſt and talleſt of the living creatures.

He is a king over all the children of pride] He exceeds the proudeſt creatures in greatneſſe and ſtrength, and carries himſelf as ſtately, as if they were all at his command. For children of pride ſee on ch. 28 8 though there it be meant of the young lions,which are proud creatures, Here it is meant over all the wild creatures, which are proud,and inſult over the tame ones, which are weaker than they. Cocceius reads it thus,He that beholdeth all high things, is king over all the children of pride. Though the Whale be the greateſt creature.yet ſome are ſo proud, they will not ſtoop to him, but he muſt ſtoop toGod,and ſo muſt thou O Job.And this Job doth in the beginning of the next chap.

V. 2. I know that thou canſt do every thing, and that no thought can be withholden from thee] I do now acknowledg,that there is nothing, which thou art not able to do,and that as thy counſels are wiſe and juſt,ſo thou wanteſt not power to bring to paſſe, whatſoever thou haſt decreed. A thing that no man can do,for the greateſt, and wiſeſt, are often croſſed in their deſignes. A ſhort confeſſion, but accepted of God,who looks not for many words, but for much faith.

I know] Job knew this before, but his troubles had ſo diſtracted him, that for want of conſideration he ſpake ſometimes as if he thought otherwiſe, but now being better inſtructed by God, he acknowledged his errrour ingenuouſly and freely.

that thou canſt do every thing] That thou art Almighty and canſt do whatever thou wilt, or haſt determined.

and that no thought can be withholden from thee] Or, And that no thought of thine can be hindred. That is, that thou canſt not be hindred from doing any thing,that thou intendeſt to do. Gen. 18. 14 Jer. 32.27. Luke 1.37. Others underſtand it of Jobs thoughts, as if he had confeſſed, that God knew all the hard thoughts he had of Gods proceeding with him. But what need that confeſſion, when Job had ſpoken ſo plainly in that point, that all his friends knew his meaning?

V, 3. Who is he, that hideth counſell without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderfull for me, which I knew not] Here it appears that Job marked Gods words well, Chap 38. 2. and was affected with them, For he confeſſeth, that God had met with him in thoſe words; for he had by unskilfull ſpeeches caſt a cloud upon Gods proceedings with him, and had ſpoken more than was fitting in things far above his capacity.

Who is he] Or, what manner of man is this? As if he ſtroke at Job in particular, that hideth counſell without knowledge] See on chap.38. 2. where all theſe words are. Only for Darkneth there, it is, Hideth, here, which is all one in ſence, for things in the dark can no more be ſeen, than things hidden.

therefore have I uttered, that I underſtood not] I confeſſe I am the man that have done ſo by paſſing my verdict on things in which I was not verſed. Such unwiſe ſpeeches came from him chap. 19. 6,7. and elſewhere Broughton reads, Therefore I tell, that I had not underſtanding. That is, I confeſſe now, that I ſpake unwiſely then, For uttered ſee on Chap. 15. 18. on the word, Told.

things too wonderfull for me, which I knew not] I took upon me to ſpeak of things far above my reach, and therefore no wonder if I ſpeak unadviſedy, and fooliſhly. Pſal. 40.5.& 141. 1. 139.6. The whole verſe may more plainly be read thus. Thou haſt ſaid, who is he that hideth counſell without knowledge? therefore I confeſſe, that I have uttered, &c. That is, thou haſt acquainted me with mine errour, which I ſaw not before. See the like addition, Pſal. 27. 8.

V. 4. Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak, I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me] He ſuſpects, there is more yet amiſſe in him, and deſires to be further informed by God in thoſe things, that are too high for him. I have formerly deſired to contend with thee Chap. 13. 22. and thou haſt juſtly caſt it in my teeth, chap. 38.3. Ch.40.2. as if I thought I could teach thee: but now I ſubmit and deſire to be inſtructed by thee. For Hear ſee on Ch. 13 17.

I beſeech thee] Now Job ſpeaks ſubmiſſively unto God, as becomes him, and I will ſpeak] I will ſeek reſolution of thee in what I am ignorant of, as followes in the verſe. For the word,ſee on chap. 13.22.

I will demand of thee] I will not diſpute with thee, but deſire to be inſtructed by thee.

and declare thou unto me] Heb. make me to know.

V. 5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee] I have been religiouſly bred in the knowledge of God, and heard many things of thy infinite wiſdom and power by tradition from my Anceſtors, but never had that honour to ſee a viſible demonſtration of thy preſence in a cloudy tempeſt, and to hear thee ſpeaking to me immediately till now. Thus God ſometimes did appear, and ſpeak to ſome eminent men in ſome weighty buſineſſe in the old Teſtament, that they might be confirmed, and teach others. Gen. 31, 10. Num. 12.8. & 14.14. 1 King. 22.19. Job 38.1. & 41 6.

I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear] I have heard others ſpeak highly of thee, For heard, ſee on chap. 13.17. For ear, ſee on chap. 13.17. alſo.

but now mine eye ſeeth thee] Job could not ſee Gods eſſence, which is inviſible, but ſaw ſome cloud, out of which God ſpake to him, which was an extraordinary favour.For eye ſee on ch 15.15. on the word, ſight. For ſeeth, ſee ch. 19.27. on the word, behold.

V, 6. Wherefore I abhorre my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes] This familiar and powerful revelation of thy ſelf, and of thy will toward me, makes me not only to diſlike my former impatient carriage, but even to loath my ſelf, and to repent heartily that ever I ſhould ſo ſin againſt thee, and for the demonſtration hereof, I will throw my ſelf down in duſt and aſhes remembring that I am no better by nature, and therefore have very much forgotten my ſelf in ſpeaking ſo indiſcreetly of my God.

Wherefore] Becauſe thou haſt ſo gracioosly manifeſted thy ſelf to me and ſhewed me mine errour. Here ends the Hebtew metre,which begun at the 1. v. of ch.3.The reſt is in proſe. So the hiſtorical part is in proſe, the conferences in verſe, and very likely ſo compoſed by the writer, rather than ſo ſpoken ſuddenly by the parties.

I abhorre my ſelf] See on chap.7.16. on the word loath.

and repent] The word נחם ſignifies ſometimes to grieve for a mans ſins here, and ſometimes to take comfort, as Ezek. 32. 31. For comfort alwayes follows true repentance.

in duſt and aſhes] Throwing my ſelf down upon the ground. Jer. 6. 26. & 25. 34. 2 Sam. 12. 16. Or ſitting on the ground in duſt or aſhes. chap. 2.8. Iſa. 58 4. Jon. 3. 6. V. 7. And it was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job, the Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite, my wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends, for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath] Here begins the ſecond part of the Chapter. Wherein is firſt Gods accuſation of Jobs three friends in this ver. 2.The way of reconciliation preſcribed by God, v.8. 3.Practiſed by them. v 9. Elihu is not here blamed, for he did not condemn Job for an hypocrite or wicked man, as they did; neither meddles with his former life, but only checked him for ſtanding too much upon his own innocency, & by reaſon of his pain caſting ſome aſperſions upon Gods dealing with him in his paſſion,& ſo made way for Gods ſpeech.Yet God commends not him neither, for he did not always make a right conſtruction of Jobs words. Now

God paſſeth ſentence on Jobs ſide, that (although he had ſpoken fooliſhly ſometimes in his paſsion, for which God had formerly reproved him) yet he was in the right for the ſubſtance of the diſputation, and his friends in the wrong; and therefore God was well pleaſed with him, but angry with them.

And it was ſo] It came ſo to paſſe.

that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Iob] It is likely that Iobs friends ſtaid to hear both Elihu's ſpeech, and Gods, and that preſently after God had done, and Iob had ſubmitted, he paſſeth this ſentence on them for Iobs greater comfort. For the Lord, ſee on chap. 38. 1. For ſpoken, ſee on ch. 13 22. For words, ſee on chap. 19. 28, on the word, matter. For Iob ſee on chap. 1. 1.

my wrath is kindled againſt thee] I am very angry with thee. See on chap. 32. 2 and againſt thy two friends] Bildad and Zophar, chap. 2. 11. who were indeed Eliphaz his friends, rather than Iobs, for they joyned with him in condemning Iob. For friend, ſee on chap. 16. 29.

for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Iob hath] Ye have not ſpoken ſo truly of my proceedings as he hath done; for ye have maintained, that my ſevere judgements lighted only upon ungodly men, which had been enough to make Iob deſpair, and did drive him to many paſsionate ſpeeches. But he recovered himſelf, and maintained ſtoutly againſt you, that I did ſometimes afflict mine own ſervants heavily to try their graces, as now I have done to him at Satans inſtigation. And therefore he ſhall now find comfort, for he hath done me right, and overcome Satan, and you, whom he hath uſed as inſtruments to diſcourage him For ſpoken, ſee on ch 13. 22. Of me, that is, concerning me, and my proceedings: So אל is uſed for, of, Gen 20. 2. Others read, To me. Ye would have me to judge between you and Job, and ſo have directed your ſpeeches to me, chap. 11. 5. I pronounce that ye have not maintained the truth in this controverſie. The word נכון for right ſignifies ſometimes eſtabliſhed, as ch. 21. 8. Sometimes ready at hand, as ch. 15. 23. Sometimes right, as here. Job is called Gods ſervant, a great honour, and it may be an hint to them, that they in their wrath had ſerved Satan againſt God and Job, Eph. 4. 27. For Job, ſee on chap. 1. 1. Some underſtand it thus. Job hath ſpoken unadviſedly of me, ye have ſpoken worſe; but he hath confeſſed his fault, ye have not done ſo. But it is not likely that God would object this unto him, for he had ſhewed Job his errours, but not them.

V. 8. Therefore take unto you now ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams, and go to my ſervant Iob, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt offering, and my ſervant Iob ſhall pray for you, for him will I accept, leſt I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing which is right, like my ſervant Iob] Now God in mercy ſhews unto them the way of reconciliation. Two things God requires of them. Firſt, that as they had greatly ſinned, ſo they ſhould provide a great ſacrifice. Secondly, that they ſhould bring it to Job, whom God makes the Prieſt to offer, and pray for them. The Lord withall intimates that he will then be reconciled to them, and threatens that if they do not ſo, he will puniſh them for their fooliſh carriage in diſparaging him in their former conference.

take unto you now ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams] A great ſacrifice to put them in mind of the greatneſſe of their ſin. Some conceive that each of them was to offer ſo many, and that had been a very great ſacrifice. But that appears not in the Text. For take, ſee on ch. 15. 12. on the word, carry away. Seven bullocks. Seven was a number much uſed, both in ſacrifices and other things. ch. 2. 13. Numb. 23. 1. 1 Chron. 15. 26. Neither was there any greater ſacrifice ordinarily offered, nor ſo great enjoyned in the Law for the greateſt ſin, or perſon, whether ye look at the number, or greatneſſe of the cattell. It is likely alſo that they were rich, for God did accept of meaner ſacrifices from poorer men. And ſeven rams. Rams according to the tranſlation. Strength in the originall.

and go to my ſervant Iob] God was pleaſed to ſend them to Job. 1. Becauſe they had wronged him, and therefore muſt reconcile themſelves to him, before they offer a ſacrifice to God, Mat. 5. 24. So carefull is God of the credit of his ſervants, that he will not be reconciled where they are wronged, till they be righted. God would have them by this means to acknowledge Job for a good man, whom they had condemned for an hypocrite, and ſo intreat him to ſpeak for them, whom they had lately uſed ſo ſcornfully. So we read in the book of Martyrs, in Cranmer's life that King Hen. 8. would not be reconciled to Sir John Goſtwick for accuſing the Archbiſhop falſely, till he came to ſpeak for him. Thus God tries their modeſty and ſubmiſsion. 2. Becauſe God would have them to know that Job was reconciled to them as well as he For go, ſee on ch. 14, 20 on the word, paſſeth. For ſervant, ſee on verſe 7. For Job, ſee on chap. 1. 1.

and offer up for your ſelves a burnt offering] Let Job do it for you, do ye bring it to him, and he ſhall offer it to me for your good. For the Iſaraelites did not offer their own ſacrifices, but the Prieſt. Thus God honours Iob, makes him a Prieſt to offer ſacrifice for them, and three times in this verſe calls him his ſervant. For the words, ſee on chap. 1. 5. There was afterwards ſome difference between ſin-offerings and burnt-offerings, but very likely that was not known in Iobs time.

and my ſervant Iob ſhall pray for you] He ſhall not only offer up your ſacrifice, but he ſhall alſo by prayer obtain pardon of your ſins committed againſt me and him. See the like of Abraham, Gen. 20. 7. For ſervant ſee on v. 7. For Iob, on Chap. 1. 1.

for him will I accept] I am ſo offended at you, that I will neither receive offering nor prayer from you, but I will take both from him in your behalf, ſo much do I accept of his perſon and faithfull ſervice. The word tranſlated for, commonly ſignifies but, yet here the ſenſe requires the former, becauſe it gives a reaſon of what went before. So this word is rendred, Prov 23. 18. For him will I accept Heb. his face will I accept. See on chap. 32. 21. Though the phraſe be there uſed in a bad ſenſe, and here in a good. As alſo Gen. 19. 21.

leſt I deal with you after your folly] Or, leſt I do that which may be a diſgrace unto you. For deale, ſee on chap. 14 9. on the word, bring forth. Folly is put for the puniſhment of folly, as ſin oftentimes for the puniſhment of ſin, 1 King. 13. 34.

in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing which is right, like my ſervant Job] See on v. 7. where all theſe words are which are repeated here, to ſhew that God was very angry with them.

V. 9. So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the Lord commanded them: the Lord alſo accepted Job] Here they are all three named, leſt any ſhould miſtake, and think Elihu to be one of them with whom God was angry. And as theſe three ſhewed their ready obedience in doing what was required, and Job his readineſſe to be reconciled, ſo God ſhewed his infinite mercy in forgiving ſo ſpeedily.

V. 10, And the Lord turned the captivity of Iob when he prayed for his friends: alſo the Lord gave Iob twice as much as he had before] Here begins the laſt part of this Chapter, and book, the reſtauration of Job after all his miſery, which is ſet out 1. In generall, in this verſe. 2. In particular, to the end of the chapter. And that 1. In the acceſſe, and gifts of his friends, v. 11. 2. In wealth. v. 12. 3. In children, v. 13, 14, 15. 4 In long life, and numerous poſterity, v. 16. 5. In a comfortable death. v. 17. The intreaty that Job had made for his friends that dealt ſo hardly with him, God took in ſo good part, that he turned all his ſorrrowes wherewith Satan had as it were held him captive into joy, and gave him twice ſo much as he had taken from him,

And the Lord turned the captivity of Job] Some underſtand it of reſtoring thoſe riches to him which were taken from him before. But it is rather to be underſtood of taking away Satans commiſſion, who by Gods permiſſion held Job hitherto as a priſoner, and bound him with bands of poverty, and ſores, which now God frees him from; but whether immediately, or by degrees, is not recorded. Thus Job ſpeaks of himſelf as of a priſoner. chap. 13. 27, And David, Pſal. 69. 33. See the like phraſe, chap. 36. 8. For the Lord, ſee on chap. 38. 1. For turned, ſee on chap. 14. 13. on the word paſt. Captivity muſt be interpreted as before, for Job was never led away into captivity. For Job, ſee on chap. 1, 1, when he prayed for his friends] Some underſtand this of the act of his prayer. While he was praying for them, God either by fire from heaven to devoure the ſacrifice, or by ſudden healing his ſores, or ſending all his friends to him in that inſtant, ſhewed that he liked ſo well of his charity, that he was fully reconciled both to him and his friends. Others read, when he had prayed. Intimating, that after the end of his prayer God did either preſently, or by degrees give him health and riches again. For prayed, ſee on v. 8. The Hebrew word for friends is ſingular, and may intimate, that Job prayed for each of them ſeverally. For the word, ſee on chap. 16. 20.

alſo the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before] God not only reſtored, but doubled Jobs riches, as appears by comparing chap. 1. 3. with ver. 12 of this chap. Onely his children were not doubled, as is manifeſt by comparing ch. 1. 2. with v. 13. of this ch. And it appears that God intended the doubling of his wealth by the particulars mentioned v. 11, 12. And he gave him as many children as before; and twice ſo much wealth to enjoy while he lived, and leave his children when he died. Heb. Added all that had been to Job unto the double. For the Lord, ſee on chap. 38. 1. For Job, on chap. 1. 1.

V. 11 Then came there unto him all his brethren, and all his ſiſters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his houſe, and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evill that the Lord had brought upon him; and every man alſo gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold] This verſe contains the beginning of the reſtauration of Jobs comfort, honour, and wealth, by the acceſſe and gifts of his friends.

Then] After God had accepted Job, and he had prayed for his friends. So this particle is uſed, Ch. 16. 1. Others read it, for, as giving a reaſon of his future proſperity from the gifts of his friends. So it is rendred Chap. 11 4. Others read, therefore. as making it an inference from what went before. Theſe friends came not at him in his miſery; but when God made him proſper again, then they would own him. So it is rendred, Chap. 35. 16.

every man alſo gave him a piece of money] This they did as a pledge of their renewed friendſhip, and toward the recovery of his loſſes Heb. A man. That is every man. For gave, ſee on ch. 14 4. on the word, bring. Some conceive they gave him each of them a lamb to ſtock him again. But it appears to be a piece of mony (peradventure with a lamb ſtamped on it) by the uſe of the ſame vvord, Gen. 33. 19. Joſh 24. 32. So Angels are called vvith us from the ſtamp of the coine. And that vvas a greater gift than a lamb, and more ſuitable to the golden ear-ring. So Steven interprets Moſes, Act. 7. 16.

and every one an ear-ring of gold] In vvay of congratulation of his recovery out of his malady. This gift is conceived to be a gold-ring with ſome jewels hanging on it worn in the ear, or noſe, or hanging down from the forehead.

V. 12. So the Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning, for he had fourteen thouſand ſheep, and ſix thouſand camels, and a thouſand yoke of oxen, and a thouſand ſhee-aſſes] God not onely gave plenty of cattell to Job, but twice ſo many as he had before. See on ver. 10. Thus Bildad proves a true prophet, chap. 8 7.

he had fourteen thouſand ſheep, and ſix thouſand camels, and a thouſand yoke of oxen, and a thouſand ſhe-aſſes] For theſe words, ſee on verſe 10. and on chap. 1. 3.

V. 13. He had alſo ſeven ſons, and three daughters] Had Job had no children to have left this great eſtate unto, his comfort had been the leſſe, Gen. 15. 2. And children are a greater bleſsing than cattell. Therefore God gave Job many children after his reſtauration, to ſhew that he was fully reconciled to him, and to comfort him for the loſſe of his former children, It is not mentioned by what wife he had them but it is likely by the ſame, becauſe neither her death, nor any other wife of his is mentioned. For the words, ſee on ver 10. and on chap. 1. 2. There they are put before his eſtate, here after it, for no doubt God gave his riches before he could have ſo many children.

V. 14. And he called the name of the firſt, Iemima, and the name of the ſecond, Kezia, and the name of the third, Kerenhappuch] The names of Jobs daughters are ſet down in this verſe, their beauty, and inheritance in the next. Their names are ſet down 1. To ſhew the truth of the hiſtory. 2. To take occaſion to commend their beauty. 3. Becauſe their names are loſt in marriage, whereas the names of ſons remain. Hence the male זכל hath his name from remembrance in the original. The females נשים from forgetfulneſſe. Theſe names impoſed by Job, may have relation to the beauty of his daughters; which being one of the excellencies of nature, and ſome part of Gods image, and a thing much looked upon in women, and accounted the portion of maids, he thought fit to ſet out their names. The firſt had her name from the day to ſhew the brightneſſe of her beauty. The ſecond from a moſt precions and ſweet ſmelling ſpice, to ſhew, what great account would be made of her comelineſſe. The third from the horn, wherein proud perſons uſed to put their colouring ſtuffe to make them beautiful, intimating that ſhe was more beautiful by nature, than they by all their art. Theſe names alſo may have relation to Jobs former miſery, and preſent delivery to nouriſh thankfulneſſe in him. The name of the firſt may be oppoſed to his former darkneſſe, or trouble (now taken away) of which he complains chap. 19. 8. The ſecond oppoſed to his former corruption, and ſtench of his wounds (now healed) of which he complains ch. 7. 5. The third oppoſed to his former weeping and flurried countenance (now made clean and fair) of which he complains, ch 16 16. Thus Godly men uſed to put themſelves in mind of their miſeries, and Gods mercies by the names of their children. So did Lamech, Gen. 5. 29. And Joſeph. Gen. 41. 51, 52.

And he] Job gave the names. This was done ſometimes by the father, as Gen. 5. 5. 29. Sometimes by the mother, as Gen. 29, 32, 33. & 1 Sam. 1. 20.

V. 15. And in all the land there were no women found ſo fair as the daughters of Iob: & their father gave them inheritance among their brethren] Here is an expoſition of what went before, Thoſe names were not given to Jobs daughters without a cauſe, becauſe there were none in all the country to be compared with them in beauty, and comelineſſe. Here is alſo an addition of an unuſuall favour, and a great token of their fathers love, that he equalled them to his ſons in portions.

The verb found is maſculine: ſo are the affixes in the originall, for Job counted them as his ſons in the diviſion of his eſtate. V. 16. After this lived Iob an hundred and forty years, and ſaw his ſons, and his ſons ſons, even four generations] The length of Jobs life which alſo was a bleſſing that he might the longer enjoy the comfort of his goods and children is ſet out in this v. both in the number of his yeares of proſperity after his miſery, and in ſeeing a great poſterity. The Jews conceived that he lived twice ſo long after his troubles as before, & ſo ſhould be aged 70 years, when his troubles began, becauſe God doubled what he had before. A weak argument: for why ſhould his years be doubled more than his children? It is likely he was in the ſtrength of his years, for he had had 10. children? And the trial was the greater; that thoſe years, which brought comfort to others, ſhould bring ſo much trouble upon him. That God might heap all manner of bleſsings upon his victorious champion, he lived after this conflict, and triall an hundred, and forty years, and that in continual health, and proſperity, in ſo much, that he ſaw his cdildrens children unto a fourth generation.

and after this] So it is in the original. Some conceive that Jobs whole life is ſet down here: but that is againſt the letter of the text, which mentions only the time of his life after his reſtauration, to ſhew Gods great mercy, who gave him ſo long time of comfort afterwards. But how long Job lived in all is uncertain, becauſe the ſcripture mentions not his age, when his troubles began.

CONCERNING

The Argument, Uſe, and Diviſion, of the Book of PSALMES.

THis Book, (ſo cited by Chriſt himſelf, Luke 20. 42. and by Peter, Acts 1. 20. which as it confirmes the antiquity of this inſcription ſo to prevent ſcrupulouſneſſe in titles and quotations, Luke 24. 44. We find it, in the Pſalms, barely ; not, the book of Pſalms, as before :) hath of ancient times, both by Jews and Chriſtians, been ſubdivided into five Books ; The firſt ; ending at the 41. Pſalm : the ſecond at the 72. The third, at the 89. The fourth, at the 106. The fifth comprehending the reſt unto the end. The reaſon of this ſubdiviſion is by moſt given, the concluding words in thoſe laſt Pſalmes : amen, amen, in the three firſt books : a ſingle amen in the fourth : and an hallelujah at the laſt. Other reaſons are given too, but not any very probable or ſatisfactory. See more upon Pſalm 41. 72. laſt words. However, this diviſion being ancient, ſhould not be unknown to them that read ancient bookes. Other diviſions according to the order of reading or ſinging, called (καθισματ) cathiſmata, &c. which according to different Churches and Rites, have been various, we here omit. Of the diviſion of the Book into 150. Pſalms, ſee upon Pſalm firſt.

The Book of Pſalms : according to the Original, properly, of praiſes : ſo ſtyled from the greater part, which contain the praiſes of God, in ſeveral reſpects, and upon ſeveral occaſions. Penitential Pſalms alſo, which contain confeſſions of ſins, may truly, according to the Scripture phraſe, be called praiſes, becauſe when we freely and ingenuouſly confeſſe our ſins, we are ſaid to glorifie God, Ioſh. 7. 19. Apoc. 16. 9. &c. The book of prayers, Pſal. 72. laſt verſe : See there: and a little after (here) of the uſe of theſe Pſalms. Pſalms that contain praiſes, are properly called Hymnes. And again, Pſalms are ſuch hymnes properly, as are fitted for ſome muſical inſtrument. However, in common uſe, what Pſalms are found in other books of Scripture beſides this, we commonly call hymnes, and ſo diſtinguiſh them from thoſe herein comprehended.

The Author of this book (the immediate and ſecondary we mean, beſides the original and general of all true Scripture, the Holy Ghoſt : See of the Pſalms particularly, Mar. 12. 36. Act. 1. 16. & 4. 25.) though named in ſome other places of Scripture, Dauid ; as Luke 20. 42. and elſewhere ; is not here in the title of the book expreſſed. The truth is, they are not all Davids Pſalms, ſome having been made before, and ſome long after him ; as ſhall be ſhewed in due place. Neither is that to be truſted to, as a general rule, that thoſe onely are Davids, that bear his name in the title or beginning, ſince (beſides other reaſons) we find ſome in other places of Scripture directly aſcribed to David, which have not his name prefixed ; as Pſal. 2. Act. 4. 25. However, to make good this title and inſcription, it is enough that the greater part were made by David, and others by him (as is generally believed) collected into one, and appointed or fitted for publick uſe.

Of the excellency of this book, by a divine hand, nay by the immediate hand of God himſelf, as we may ſay, ſo wonderfully contrived and fitted for all mens occaſions, whether in adverſity, or proſperity of what degree or condition ſoever they be (a thing ſo known, and acknowledged by all, that have made any trial) we ſhall not need to ſpeak : But never was greater injury done to any book of Scripture, than hath been done to this, by one Bonaventure, who ſubſtituting the word Mary, or Lady, inſtead of Lord, or God, in moſt places, with ſome other alterations, (in ſome more, in ſome leſſe) hath made them all appliable, or rather hath actually applied and transferred them to the Virgin Mary. As for example, he makes the firſt Pſalm to begin, Bleſſed is the man that loves your name, ô Virgin Mary ; your grace ſhall comfort him. The ſeventh, O glorious Lady, I have put my truſt in you : I beſeech you deliver my ſoul from the hands of mine enemies. Caſſander, a moderate Papiſt, ſpeakes of it with much indignation ; Quid, quod totum Pſalterium ſublato ubique Domini nomine, in nomen Dominæ commutatum legitur? Nevertheleſſe the book is in credit among the vulgar ; and that it might be of more vulgar uſe, is tranſlated into vulgar tongues. What hath been here cited, is taken out of the French tranſlation, printed at Paris, 1607. The Original Latin is extant in Kemnitius his Examen.

The uſe of the Pſalms (common and practical) is twofold : Either for a daily exercerſe of devotion, and divine worſhip whether private or publick ; (therefore alſo called Prayers, as before noted :) or for particular occaſions and occurrences, whether private or publick, according to the ſubject and argument of every Pſalm.

For the firſt ; that the Pſalms (not to ſpeak of holy ſongs and hymnes, long before David uſed upon extraordinary occaſions, as we find recorded in the Scriptures ;) as they were partly compoſed, and partly collected and put together by David to that end ; ſo were ever ſince Davids time uſed as part of Gods publick ſervice among the Iewes, is not queſtioned by any. And that this uſe of them did continue among Chriſtians ſince the firſt Plantation of Chriſtianity in the world, may appear by the moſt ancient records and monuments of thoſe times, that remain unto this day. As for private devotion, though we will not condemn the uſe of other late books and helps, knowing what variety there is of ſpiritual, as well as ſenſual palats and appetites : yet we muſt be allowed, both for profit and delight, to give the preeminency to this Divine Book far above and beyond whatſoever, that hath been ſince, or ſhall ever be invented and diviſed by human wit. And as we give the preeminence to the Pſalms ; ſo after the Pſalms to thoſe Books of private Devotions, above all others, that are grounded upon the Pſalms eſpecially, and go along with them, or take them along ; as I have ſeen ſome. Now for this uſe, whether publick or private, the reading of the Pſalms in order, as commonly digeſted, by certain portions, as 'tis moſt ordinary ; ſo, except there be extraordinary occaſion, it is moſt profitable.

The ſecond uſe, we ſaid, was upon eſpecial occaſions and occurrences, ſuch as this life doth afford many, both publick and private, according to the particular ſubject and argument of every Pſalm. Now becauſe ſuch occaſions, as we ſaid but now, are very frequent, and that all men are not ſo well verſed in the Pſalms ; or, though well verſed, have not that judgement, as to diſcern of themſelves what Pſalm is fit and proper for every particular occaſion, wherein neverthleſſe the chief uſe of the Pſalms doth mainly conſiſt : many diviſions have been by divers, both ancient and late, and divers Tables ſet out to that purpoſe, repreſenting the Pſalms digeſted according to their ſeveral ſubjects and arguments. The moſt ancient Table now extant in that kind is that of Athanaſius, an ancient Greek Father ; and though divers have been ſet out by others ſince him, yet I know not any that have been more copious and accurate in that kind than he, as may appear to them that ſhall peruſe him. But of all thoſe Tables in general, it muſt be conſidered ; Firſt, that difference of tranſlations, as it muſt needs breed diverſity of Expoſitions, ſo ſome diverſity of applications too, to particular occaſions. Neither is this diverſity obſervable in ancient tranſlations onely, compared with modern ; but even in, and among later tranſlations alſo. So, for example, in ſome Tables of that kind, that have been ſet out by ſome learned men, we are ſent to the 41. Pſalm, to learn that we ſhould not judge raſhly and uncharitably of the juſt and righteous, when he falleth into troubles and adverſities. There indeed, ac- cording to the tranſlation and expoſition which we embrace in theſe Notes, we ſhall find a notable leſſon to that purpoſe, as may be ſeen there: but according to ſome other both tranſlations and and expoſitions (Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, &c. which ſeems to import relief and ſuccour onely:) little or nothing to that purpoſe. Secondly, it muſt be conſidered, that the Argument of many Pſalms, is mixt and various, ſo that the ſame Pſalm may be reduced to ſeveral titles, according to its ſeveral parts, as Petitory, Deprecatory, Imprecatory, Euchariſtical, & the like: So that it is no wonder if all Tables do not agree in their indications. For theſe reaſons, and becauſe that according to variety of tempers, phantaſies, and capacities, ſome men are more taken with ſome, than others, it were better for every man that is able, with diligent reading and digeſting of the ſaid Pſalms, there being ſtore to fit all, to make ſuch a Table for his own particular uſe, to which he may have recourſe upon occaſion, and not be deceived of his expectation, as haply he may ſometimes, if he truſt to common Tables. However, for the help and direction of them that are not ſo able of themſelves, we have here ſet down ſome few generals of moſt common uſe, to which divers Pſalms may be referred. They that deſire a larger direction may have recourſe to Athanaſius, in his Epiſtle ad Marcellinũ, περὶ τῆς Ἑρμηνείας, &c. where they ſhall find a double Table, very copious & accurate both, and both tending to one effect. The firſt begins, Οἱ μὲν ἐν διηγήμασι λεγόμενοι, &c. The ſecond, Αὐτοῖνυν μακαρίοις τινα δίκας, &c. The ſame have been tranſlated not into Latin only, & often ſo printed but in engliſh alſo, if I be not miſtaken.

As for imprecatory Pſalms, which are many, how to be read, and applyed, ſee upon Pſal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c. and upon Pſal. 143. 3. For the enemy hath perſecuted my ſoul, &c.

PSAL. I.

P*Salm firſt*] That this diſtribution or diviſion of Pſalms into firſt, ſecond, &c. is ancient, nay authentick, may appear by Act. 13. 33. as it is alſo written in the ſecond Pſalm: though ſome queſtion be made by the moſt learned (whereof ſee in Beza upon the place) of the right reading of that place. However, that the whole Book is, and hath been of old divided into 150. Pſalms, the learned, both Jewes and others, do agree; but of the diviſion of every particular Pſalm, to make up this number, there is not like agreement. The firſt and ſecond Pſalms are by moſt Ancients reckoned but for one, to wit, the firſt: who alſo in that place of the Act, 13. 33. had it in their copies, in the firſt; not as it is now, in the ſecond Pſalm. Some of the learned Rabbins alſo would have it ſo, and give ſome reaſons why theſe two (as we reckon them) ſhould be but one pſalm. Again, the ninth pſalm with us, in the Greek and vulgar Latine make two, the ninth and the tenth: So that from that place, to pſalm 147. (where we agree againe) their account exceeds ours conſtantly by one. Other differences there be in ſome other pſalms of leſſe moment. As therefore we hold it ſafeſt and ſureſt to follow our ordinary diviſion; ſo we need not preſſe it upon others too rigidly, or to build upon it as canonical, ſince ſo much can be ſaid on the other ſide. See more upon pſalm 96. at the beginning.

This firſt pſalm, according to our diviſion, is by divers of the Ancients rather taken as a Preface or Introduction to the whole Book, than as one barely; to wit, the firſt of the number: by which (whether pſalm, or Preface) the happineſſe of man, what it is, and wherein it conſiſteth, is declared. Indeed it hath alwayes been accounted the part of a prudent wiſe man, before he betake himſelf to any ſerious work, to conſider firſt of the general end, and what reference it hath unto it, that accordingly he may beſtow his pains more or leſs, as he ſees it more neerly and immediatly, or otherwiſe, to tend unto the end. Now the main and general end of all men, is happineſſe, or bleſſedneſſe. And therefore the wiſeſt and moſt renowned of all ancient Philoſophers, his two beſt pieces, (both for uſe and accurateneſs) his Ethicks and his Politicks, he begins with this very conſideration of the end, laying this for a foundation, That all men deſire to be happy. Now that is it that we are here taught by this firſt pſalme, what is true (though not according to ordinary judgements perchance) and real happineſſe, and what is not: a way to this happineſs being alſo ſhewed and propoſed to them that ſhall make a right uſe of this Book. See more upon pſal. 10 v. 4. will not ſeek after God.

Verſ. 1. B*Leſſed*] The Original is plural; which neverthleſs, according to the propriety of the word, may be joyned (& ſo rendred) with either plural or ſingular. But whether a ſubſtantive, or adjective, is controverted. Moſt take it for a ſubſtantive, as if it were bleſſedneſſes: whereupon ſome infer the multiplicity; Others, the perfection of that happineſs here intended. But this being the common uſe of the word, there can be no great ſolidity in this conceit.

the man] האיש Some obſerve the emphaſis of the article, as ſet of purpoſe, in oppoſition to common human judgement; as if he ſaid, Bleſſed is, not whom the world doth ordinarily bleſſe, and count happy; but truly bleſſed he, &c. The word may alſo (as often) be rendred, quilibet, whoever; Bleſſed is he, whatever he be, (whatever others think and judge) who, &c.

walketh not in the counſel, &c.] Moſt obſerve a gradation in theſe ſeveral words; 1. To walk, to ſtand, to ſit: 2. Counſel, way, ſeat: 3. Ungodly, ſinners, ſcornful. The beginning of godlineſſe, ſay they, is to company with the ungodly, to keep correſpondency, and to communicate counſels with [illegible] cannot be, but their example will infect in ſome meaſure, and caſt us into ſome inconveniences, though againſt our wills and purpoſes. But to ſtand, argues ſome purpoſe and reſolution: as, to ſet, the extremity of wickedneſſe, when we make a practice of it without any remorſe, or reluctancy. So, counſel, we may take of intention; way, of action; but ſeat, of profeſſion; wherein is the height of wickedneſs, when that we have done wickedly, we dare boaſt of; and are ready, yea deſirous (as maſters of the chair) to teach others. So far the moſt, and moſt ſober; as Calvin, and ſome others: but at the third and laſt gradation ſome ſtick, becauſe they find no gradation in רשעים (here tranſlated, ungodly:] and חטאים (ſinners;) though they acknowledge themſelves well ſatisfied about the laſt word, לצים (ſcorners) that by it, profeſt Atheiſts, that make a mock of godlineſſe, and deride the Scriptures, (the very worſt of ſinners) are underſtood. But ſince all the reſt agree ſo well, a probable gradation between theſe two words alſo that are ſtuck at, may without much difficulty be found and ſhewed, as it is here by ſome others. Somewhat to this purpoſe, ſee upon Prov. 12. 12. The wicked deſireth the net of evil men, &c. And theſe gradations admit of ſeveral interpretations, as may be ſeen in variety of Interpreters: the moſt literal and probable, have been ſet down. Neverthcleſſe, if any like better of their opinion, who think all theſe words promiſcuouſly to be heaped and put together, the more emphatically and fully to expreſſe the care and duty of a godly man, in avoiding the company, as much as he can; but eſpecially, the example of wicked and profane men; all wickedneſs, for the moſt part, proceeding from bad examples, and imitation: this, alſo without any alteration of the main ſcope, may be allowed. See more upon v. 4. The ungodly are not ſo; and Pſal. 95.6. Let us worſhip. And of the danger of evil company in general, upon Pſal. 26 4. I have not ſet, &c.

V. 2. in the law of the Lord] To the wicked and ungodly, he doth oppoſe, not the godly and religious ſimply; but thoſe, whoſe godlineſſe is grounded upon the law, or Word of God. Many are very religious (or rather ſuperſtitious) in their own way, or led by others whom they have addicted themſelves unto: but thoſe onely truely religious, whoſe religion is well grounded. See 2 Tim. 3. 15, 16, 17.

meditate day and night] Many do receive the Word of God in general, but take no thought or care to underſtand it. (they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, Rom. 10. 2.) Others, receive it with joy, but their joy continueth not: as in the parable of the ſeed, Mat. 13. To meditate here, is to take care that we may underſtand: day and night, importeth conſtancy and perſeverance. By meditating alſo may be underſtood an endeavour to digeſt; that is, to reduce into practice; without which bare knowledge profiteth not. Now, this deſcription of bleſſedneſſe in theſe two verſes, how it doth agree with that, Pſal. 32. 1, 2. and St. Pauls inference or obſervation upon it, Rom. 4. 6, 7, 8. ſee more upon that Pſalm.

V. 3. And he ſhall be like a tree] The happineſſe and proſperity of the godly is here ſet forth by a ſimilitude: which although according to the meaſure of knowledge in thoſe dayes, and the promiſes of the Law, (ſubject nevertheleſſe to many limitations, as we ſhall have occaſion to ſhew afterwards,) may admit of a literal interpretation alſo; that is, may be underſtood of temporal proſperity, according to that of the Apoſtle, That godlineſſe is profitable unto all things, having the promiſes both of this life and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Yet is not this the happineſſe or proſperity principally here intended; but that which is permanent and eternal. To which alſo, not reaſon only, but the very words, if well pondered and examined, do lead us. For what is the greateſt proſperity that this world doth afford, or the longeſt life of man, or what account to be made of it, but, according to the Scripture, as of graſſe, and the flower of the field, Eſa. 40 6. which in the morning flouriſheth and groweth up; in the evening is cut down and withereth, Pſal. 90. 6. See alſo Pſal. 103. 15, 16. And what account David himſelf made of it, appeareth Pſal. 39. 5, 6. & Pſal. 62. 9. which even they, who becauſe they had no certain knowledge of any better after this, had moſt reaſon to make the moſt of this preſent world, and the goods of it, have freely acknowledged and expreſſed in many pithy ſentences and ſpeeches, comparing all human felicity to a ſhadow, to a dream, to a bubble, &c. So noted and incurrent into the eyes of all wiſe men hath this truth ever been. This ſenſe therefore, as principally intended, and moſt proper to the place, we ſhall henceforth inſiſt upon, in the following words.

a tree] See Jer. 17. 8. & Ezek. 47 12. where it is apparent, that the fruit and waters ſpoken of, cannot be underſtood of others, but ſpiritual and celeſtial. Some very learned Interpreters would have the tree here ſpoken of, particularly to be the palm tree, named Pſal. 92. 12. The righteous ſhall flouriſh like a palm tree; becauſe divers things are written of the palm tree, which ſeem to agree well to this deſcription; as that it is alwayes green, beareth alwayes, &c. So they gather from Pliny. But I doubt they will ſcarce make that good; that it growes and thriveth beſt by rivers. The Author of the Geoponicks (as I remember) ſaith it groweth in none but dry ſalt grounds: I know not how truly Pliny ſaith in light and ſandy, which muſt often be watered. But whereas they quote Pliny for the perpetuity of the fruit he ſpeakes it not of the tree, but of the frutex, which he diſtinguiſhes from the tree; non in arborem ſed in fruticem; the manner of growing whereof is alſo different from the growing of the tree. It is not neceſſary therefore that we ſhould underſtand it of any certain tree really extant in the world, no more than in the paſſage of Ezekiel, before quoted. Such a tree may be conceived, and from things meerly conceiveable, ſimilitudes are often taken.

planted] Not growing of it ſelf. Every plant which my Heavenly father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted up, Mat. 15. 13.

rivers of water] Thoſe waters that iſſue out of the Sanctuary, Ezek. 47. 12. of which Chriſt ſpeaketh, Joh. 4. 14. the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing into everlaſting life.

his fruit in due ſeaſon] Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away, Joh. 15. 2.

ſhall proſper] All things work together for good to them that love God, Rom. 28. and in all theſe, (tribulations, diſtreſſe, perſecution, &c.) we are more than conquerours, ver. 37.

V. 4. The ungodly are not ſo] Here by the word ungodly, muſt be underſtood the ſinners and ſcorners alſo, mentioned in the firſt verſe: whence ſome would infer, that there alſo by thoſe three different words, the ſame muſt be underſtood, becauſe all are comprehended here under one. But that is not neceſſary: for it is ordinary enough, as to other Authors, ſo to the Scriptures, to uſe one and the ſame word, (ſometimes in one and the ſame verſe,) in different ſenſes. So, the Hebrew word לחם Pſal. 104. 14. is taken, and ſo tranſlated, for food; a general word: and in the very next verſe, tranſlated bread, as bread is taken in its proper ſenſe. So the word νόμος, Law, Rom. 8. 1, 2. &c. is taken in different ſenſes: ſometimes more generally, and ſometimes more particularly. However, I am not againſt it, (as was ſaid there,) that the ſame men by thoſe three ſeveral words in the firſt verſe, (if any like it better ſo) ſhould be underſtood. See alſo upon Pſal. 26. 4. I have not ſate with vaine perſons.

like the chaff] They have no hope after this life, which for the tranſitorineſſe and unſtability of it, may well be reſembled unto chaff, (as unto a ſhadow, Eccl. 8. 13. a hand breadth, and nothing, Pſal. 39. 15) which is driven by the wind. The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever, 1 Joh. 2. 17. The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſſe; but the righteous hath hope in his death, Prov. 14. 32.

V. 5. not ſtand] They ſhall not be acquitted: ſentence ſhall be pronounced againſt them. Watch ye therefore, and pray alwayes, that ye may be counted worthy to eſcape all thoſe things that ſhall come to paſſe, and to ſtand before the Son of man, Luke 21. 36. See alſo, Epheſ. 6. 13.

in judgement] For God ſhall bring every work into judgement, with every ſecret thing, Eccl. 12. laſt words.

ſinners in the congeregation of the right] There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and you your ſelves thruſt out, Luke 13. 28.

V. 6 knoweth the way of the righteous] Preſerveth the way of his Saints, Prov. 2. 8. He knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth as gold, Job 23. 10.

the way of the ungodly ſhall periſh] There is a way which ſeemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the wayes of death, Prov. 14 12. and, when thou awakeſt, (ſee there) thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image, Pſal. 73. 20.

PSAL. II.

Verſe 1. WHy do the Heathen] Throughout the Pſalm, David is ſet out as a type of Chriſt. Whatſoever is here ſpoken of David, though it was fulfilled in him more immediately, yet by the principal aim and inſtitution of the Holy Ghoſt, it belongs to Chriſt (as ſhall appear) more eſſentially and properly. The Apoſtles therefore apply theſe words to Chriſt immediately, Act. 4, 25, 26. As alſo verſe 7. of this Pſalm: ſee there.

rage] Or, tumultuouſly aſſemble.

a vain thing] That is not grounded on reaſon, or can produce any good effect.

V. 2. The Kings of the earth] It was propheſied of Chriſts Kingdom by Eſay 49. 33. And Kings ſhall be thy nurſing fathers, and their Queens thy nurſing mothers: they ſhall bow down to thee with their face towards the earth, and licke up the duſt of thy feet, and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord. This was fulfilled in the miraculous converſion of ſo many Gentile Kings and Emperours to the Chriſtian faith, whereof we read in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. However, this hapned not preſently but after many bloody perſecutions; many plots and projects contrived with all poſſible human ſubtilty, for the deſtruction of Chriſtians. As for David the type, what oppoſitions and difficulties he met with, both before and ſince he was come to his Crown, the Hiſtory of Samuel doth ſhew. But nothing there that can make the application of theſe words ſo proper to him, as to Chriſt.

V. 3. Let us break their bands aſunder] By bands and cords, total ſubjection and ſtrict obedience, ſuch as theirs muſt be that are truly converted unto Chriſt, muſt be underſtood. Much like unto this is that expreſſion, Ezek. 38. 4. I will put hooks into thy chawes. Many Kings and Kingdoms, ſince their firſt converſion and ſubmiſſion to the Goſpel of Chriſt, have ſince apoſtatized, and ſhaken off the yoke; and more (according to the predictions of Chriſt and his Apoſtles) may yet: but ſhall (all Kingdoms and Nations) in due time return to their obedience, notwithſtanding all oppoſition, and ſmall appearance of it to humane judgements.

V. 4. that ſitteth in the heavens] God, emphatically, in oppoſition to Kings of the earth, before, verſe 2.

V. 6. Yet have I ſet my King] Or, Even I. It is in vaine for you to ſeek to pull him down, whom I have ſet up.

my holly hill of Zion] Spoken of with ſo much reſpect and love, by God himſelf, Pſal. 78. & 132. a type of the Church; to which belongs that promiſe of Chriſt, Matth. 16. 18. That the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it. See more upon Pſal. 68. 16. Yea the Lord will dwell in it for ever.

V. 7. I will declare the decree] In the Hebrew אל־חוק, which word hath troubled interpreters, and is differently tranſlated, whereof variety of interpretations of the whole paſſage have iſſued. But I hope we ſhall ſo clear it, as no further doubt ſhall need to be made. This word then חק in the Scripture, beſides ſome other uſes is many times uſed to expreſs that law and order, which God hath ſet to natural things; thoſe particularly, that are generally accounted moſt immutable: as to the Sea, that it ſhall not overflow the earth, Jer. 5. 25. to Sun and Moon, that they ſhall give their light, Jer. 31. 35, 36. to the viciſſitude of night and day, Jer. 33. 25. In all which places (as elſewhere alſo, Pſ. 148. 6. &c.) the word חק is uſed; tranſlated ſometimes decree; and ſometimes ordinance. And this to be the force and ſcope of the word in this place alſo, may further appear by Jer. 33. v. 20, 21. and v. 25, 26. where the Prophet ſpeaking of this very thing, the promiſes of God unto David, he doth not onely uſe the word חק (or another equivalent ברית, tranſlated covenant) but alſo ſets out the immutability of theſe promiſes, that decree, by likning it to thoſe immutable ordinances of night and day, &c. Thus ſaith the Lord, if you can break my Covenant of the day, and my Covenant of the night, and that there ſhould not be day and night in their ſeaſon: Then may alſo my Covenant be broken with David my ſervant, &c. and in the 25. verſ. —— and if I have not appointed the ordinance of heaven and earth, &c. By all which may clearly appear, that חק here doth imply an immutable decree, in effect as irrevocable (ſo much to be collected out of the propriety of the word) as thoſe things are, that are moſt irrevocable in the courſe of nature.

thou art my Son] Of David, the type, as Pſal. 89. 26, 27. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my father, &c. But of Chriſt, to whom it more properly belongs, and to whom it is applyed, Act. 13. 33. Heb. 1. 5. & 5. 5. whether it is ſpoken of his divine nature, as he is the Son of God from all eternity; or as God and man, either conceived at ſuch a time, as ſome; or publikely declared by a voice from heaven to be the Son of God, at his Baptiſme; as others: Or laſtly, conſtituted King after his reſurrection; is not agreed among Interpreters. Thoſe that underſtand it of his Divine and eternal Generation, obſerve the propriety of the word, this day, which they ſay, notes the perpetuity of the act without any variation, or viciſſitude of time. But not to ſpend time needleſly in refuting of others, it is certain from what hath bin obſerved before of the propriety of the word חק, that this Generation (whatever it be otherwiſe) muſt be a thing promiſed, and (when this was written) of future and expected accompliſhment; not therefore that eternal Generation of the Son of God: Nor This day, the immoveable (as ſome expreſs it here) point of eternity. We follow them therefore, who interpret this generation of the manifeſtation, and publick demonſtration of Chriſt his Deity, by his Reſurrection; upon which (as here alſo followeth) preſently followed his inauguration, or ſolemn admiſſion, into the rule and government of the world, as God and man: whereof himſelf ſpeaketh, Matth. 28. 18. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. And thus was the Pſalmiſt interpreted by Saint Paul himſelf, Act. 13. 32, 33. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promiſe which was made unto the Fathers, God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again, as it is alſo written in the ſecond Pſalm: Thou art my Son: this day have I begotten thee. This paſſage indeed is eluded by ſome, who by reaſon of the ambiguity of the Original word ἀναστήσας, not ſo proper to the Reſurrection, but that it may be otherwiſe interpreted alſo (as for example, Act. 3. 22.) would have this raiſed up, to be taken in a more general ſenſe, as if it had been, hath conſtituted and appointed: or, hath ſtirred up. But as there was no need at this diviſe, ſince that the word ἀναστῆναι is more uſually taken in the New Teſtament of the reſurrection: ſo if they had thought of another paſſage of the ſame Paul, which doth not admit of this evaſion, they had certainly forborn. And that is, Rom. 1. 3, 4. where the words are, Concerning his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord, which was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh; And declared to be the ſon of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſſe, by the reſurrection from the dead. If any ſtick at this expreſſion, I have begotten, for, I have declared, or manifeſted thee to be begotten: let them conſider of thoſe, Immundabit & mundabit ſacerdos, Lev. 13. he ſhall (if we may ſo ſpeak) unclean and clean, as it is in the Hebrew, often repeated in that Chapter; for he ſhall pronounce clean or unclean, as it is there rendred: and Jer. 1. 10. to root, and to pull down, &c. for to propheſie of rooting, and pulling down, &c.

this day] At a certain and appointed time; the better and more emphatically to ſet out the certainty of the promiſe. Or, this day, particularly to be underſtood of the day of Chriſts reſurrection; as thoſe words alſo, Pſal. 118. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoyce and be glad in it; according to ſome there, both old and latter.

V. 8. Ask of me] The better to ſet out the love of God to his Son, according to that voice from heaven, Matth. 3. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. It was a faſhion in former days among great Princes, when they would ſhew their great affection, or extraordinary good liking, to bid the parties ask what they would, promiſing they ſhould have their deſire. Beſides what examples common Hiſtories do afford, ſee Eſther 5. & 7. & Matth. 14. 6, 7. To this cuſtom is here alluded. Such alluſions are frequent in the Scripture. Some take the words literally and ſimply, and refer to this, that prayer of Chriſt, recorded Joh. 17. 5. And now, O Father, gloriſie thou me with thine own ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. It doth not ſeem to me ſo probable.

and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion] Not onely the Jewes, but the Gentiles alſo.

V. 9. Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron] Revel. 2. 27. & 19. 15. The word in the Original Hebrew, here tranſlated to break, may alſo come from [illegible] root, which ſignifies to feed; as feeding doth include all duties of a paſtoral charge; to lead, to rule, &c. Whence it is, that the Septuagint here tranſlate it ποιμανεῖς: whom the Author of the Apocalypſe doth follow, 2. 27. and 19. 15.

like a potters veſſel] So as they can never be reſtored, Iſai. 30. 14. Dan. 2. 44.

V. 10. Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings] He exhorteth all Rulers to repent in time, and leave conſpiring againſt him, or Chriſt.

V. 12. Kiſſe the Son] In token of homage, according to the cuſtome of thoſe dayes and places. So Gen. 41. 40. Thou ſhalt be over my houſe, and according unto thy word ſhall all my people be ruled. It is in the Original, ישק: ſhall all my people kiſſe; (oſculabitur,) as ſome interpreters there. The Septuagint with the Chaldee Paraphraſe, tranſlate the words, Take hold of inſtruction: wherein they may be thought, as in divers other places, to have had more reſpect to the ſenſe and matter of the words, as they did underſtand them; than to the words themſelves. But I rather believe that they had a reſpect unto the words, as well as to the matter. For נשק Ezek. 3. 13. ſignifieth, to touch: as it is well rendred there; which is as far from the proper ſignification of the word, (to kiſſe:) as δράξασθαι, or to take hold is from touching. Then בר without any alteration of the conſonants, may ſignifie purity, (a principal effect of good inſtruction, or diſcipline) as well as filius, a ſon. Beſides, παιδεία, (inſtruction, or diſcipline:) in Greek, cometh from παῖς, a ſon, becauſe unto ſuch properly diſcipline doth belong. In this word therefore παιδεία (ſonſhip, as it were:) they had a reſpect doubtleſſe to the Original word, which ſignifieth a ſon. St. Jerom by Kiſſing, here, underſtands adoration, becauſe it was the cuſtom in old time, as appeareth by many ancients, and by Job 31. 27. to kiſſe the hand, when they adored: as the very Latin word adorare, (according to the common opinion, and etymology) doth import. His tranſlation therefore of the words is: Adorate purè, or, adorate filium: of which he treateth in divers places. Some of the Rabbins alſo, (as Aben Ezra for one) are for this tranſlation; adorate filium: and acknowledge this whole Pſalm to belong to the promiſed Meſſias.

When he fled from Abſolom his ſon] 2 Sam. 15. 14.

Verſe 1. HOw are they increaſed that trouble me?] This was a token of his ſtable Faith, that for all his troubles he had his recourſe to God.

V. 2. Selah] There be variety of opinions, whereof many have been collected of old by old Jerom, concerning the uſe and true ſignification of this word. Theirs to me (and they are the learnedeſt of theſe later times) ſeems beſt grounded, who make it a bare muſical note, whether for raſing of the voice, repetition, or the like. The vulgar opinion is, that it pointeth at ſome extraordinary thing, which requireth elevation of mind, or more than ordinary attention. Indeed it is hard to ſay of any place of Scripture, where leaſt words ſometimes afford great myſteries, that it is not extraordinary, or needs not elevation of mind. But if a man ſhould peruſe all thoſe places (ſome 70. in the Book of Pſalms; and ſome two or three in the Prophet Habakkuk:) where this word is found, he would be put to it perchance, to give a reaſon, why ſuch places as theſe, and ſeek after leaſing, Pſal. 4. 2. and remaine in the wilderneſſe, Pſal. 55. 7. that would ſwallow me up; and, they are fallen themſelves, Pſal. 57. 3, 6. I proved thee at the waters of Meribah, Pſal. 81. 7. they have holpen the children of Lot, 83. 8. and the like, ſhould require more peculiar elevation of mind, then a thouſand other places of the ſame Pſalms, apparently more myſterious, or ſententious. That we be not therefore forced to deviſe myſteries, where there is no need, and to impoſe our own conceits upon the Scripture, I think ſafeſt to let it paſſe where we meet it, as either a muſical note, as was ſaid before; or unknown word, as many believe.

V. 3. for] Or, about.

V. 5. I laid me down and ſlept: I awaked] Though the words, of themſelves, ſimply taken, afford a good ſenſe, as Prov. 3. 24. Job 11. 18. yet that ſenſe will be more full, if it be obſerved, that it was a proverbial ſpeech among the Hebrewes, to ſet out great confidence and ſecurity. As for example, Mark 4. 27. (which not underſtood there, hath troubled ſome Interpreters;) So is the Kingdome of God, as if a man ſhould caſt ſeed into the ground; and ſhould ſleep, and riſe night and day, and the ſeed ſhould ſpring and grow up, he knoweth not how. Sleep and riſe night and day; that is, trouble himſelfe no more about it; take no further thought, but reſt himſelfe with all confidence and ſecurity.

V. 6. I will not be afraid of ten thouſands of people] Pſal. 27. 3. When he conſidered the truth of Gods promiſe, and tryed the ſame, his Faith increaſed marvelouſly.

V. 7. upon the cheek bone] Thou haſt laid reproach upon them, Job 16. 10. and weakned their power, Pſal. 58. 6.

thou haſt broken the teeth of the ungodly] Thou haſt taken away all means of hurting me from them.

V. 8. Salvation belongeth unto the Lord] Iſa. 43. 11. Hoſ. 13. 4. Be the dangers never ſo great, or many, yet God hath ever means to deliver his; and he is the onely author of ſafty, Pſal. 60. 11. Prov. 21. 31.

Verſ. 1. H*Ear*] Heb. Anſwer.

O my God of righteouſneſſe] Or, O my righteous God, as Pſal. 59. 10, 17. Thou that art both moſt righteous, and the defender of my righteous cauſe, Pſal. 26. 1. and 35. 1.

have mercy upon me] Or, be gracious unto me.

my prayer] Complaint made to thee, as to my Judge; for ſo the word ſignifies, Pſal. 17. 1, 2.

V. 2. my glory into ſhame] Whether this Pſalm were made by David when he was perſecuted by Saul, or by his own ſon Abſolom, is uncertain; but when under perſecution, all agree: and that by my glory here, he underſtands his Kingdome: as if he had ſaid, How long will ye thus continually plot and project, how you may either keep me out, or defeat and diſappoint me of that honour and dignity which I have boaſted of, and rejoyced in, as caſt upon me by Gods immediate providence; and ſecured unto me by Divine Promiſes and Revelations; to make me appear to the world as an uſurper, or impoſtor?

love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing] All your endeavours againſt God and me, are but in vain: though for a while ye prevail; yet in the end, the fruit of all your plots, and daily machinations, will be but wind, and a lye: a mere abortive of your own phanſies, that ſhall never come to paſſe really.

V. 3. the Lord hath ſet apart] Marvellouſly ſeparated, by ſome ſigne of diſtinction and excellency, Exod. 8. 22. & 9. 4. & 11. 7. & 33. 16. Pſal. 17. 7.

that is godly] A King that walketh piouſly in his vocation; not like Saul.

V. 4. Stand in awe, and ſin not] Before, David ſpake to is enemies; Now, (as ſome of the moſt learned here,) to his friends, that were extremly ſcandalized, and confounded in themſelves, at his ſufferings; and that God ſhould ſuffer the wicked to prevaile ſo much againſt his own cauſe. As if he ſaid; Let not your indignation and juſt reſentment of theſe confuſions proceed to a wicked murmuring againſt God, or raſh forſaking of his truth; but conſider of it wiſely, in your moſt retired ſober thoughts. The word רגזו tranſlated here (contremiſcite) ſtand in awe, doth alſo ſignifie, commoveri irâ, to be angry: and by the Septuagint, (who did often affect to keep to the propriety of words according to the Etymology; the words ὀργὴ, et ὀργίζω, in all probability proceeding from the Hebrew רגז:) is here rendred ὀργίζεσθε, be angry. Whoſe Tranſlation is followed by St. Paul, Epheſ. 4. 26. Be angry and ſin not; let not the Sun go down upon your wrath. Either of thoſe ſignifications, ſtand in awe, or be angry, may do well enough in this place; but this latter (preferred alſo by Mollerus,) will fit better.

V. 5. Offer the ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe] If you cannot (in this time of confuſion, and being driven from Jeruſalem and the Temple) offer legal ſacrifices, and want the comfort of that ſolemne ſervice; ye may (in any place, and at all times) offer the ſacrifice of a godly righteous life, and put your truſt in the Lord, which is above all legal ſacrifices. The ſacrifice of God is a broken ſpirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe. Pſal. 51. 17. & 50. 8, &c. I will not reprove thee for thy ſacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, &c. Offer unto God thankeſgiving, and pay thy vowes unto the moſt High. And call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me. See alſo upon Pſal. 51. 19. Then ſhalt thou be pleaſed.

V. 6. Who will ſhew us any good?] The multitude ſeek worldly wealth, but David ſetteth his felicity in Gods favour.

Who will ſhew us any good] We looked for peace, and there is no good: and for the time of healing, and behold trouble, Jer. 14. 19.

lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us] Num. 6. 26. Make us feel the full effect of thy Favour, as the Sun ſcatters his beams at noon.

the light of thy countenance] For they gat not the land in poſſeſſion by their own ſword, neither did their own arm ſave them; but thy right hand and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, becauſe thou haſt a favour unto them, Pſal. 44. 3. See alſo Pſal. 80. 3, 7, 19. Turn us again, O God, &c.

V. 7. Thou haſt put gladneſſe, &c.] He praiſes God, that in the midſt of theſe temporal troubles and afflictions which God had laid upon him, ſo great, and ſo laſting, that many of his ſide were ready to ſink; yet God had affoarded unto his ſoul ſuch ſpiritual joyes and comforts, as he valued more then the greateſt joyes of this world; ſuch as uſeth to be among the generality of men in time of harveſt and vintage. Whence it is, that the joy of harveſt, was among the Hebrewes proverbially uſed for a great extraordinary joy, Eſt. 9. 3. & 16. 10.

V. 8. I will both lay me down in peace, and ſleep] Pſal. 3. 5.

V. 5. The fooliſh ſhall not, &c.] The Hebrew word הוללים doth more properly ſignifie mad-men, as it is here tranſlated by moſt Interpreters; roarers, royſterers, riotous perſons. The ſame root (in another conjugation) ſignifies to laud and praiſe: and is often uſed of them, who were appointed ſolemnly to praiſe God in his Church. Now, in outward appearance, there is ſometimes ſome affinity of carriage between thoſe that are ſo mad, through exceſſe of worldly mirth, and joviality, as they call it; and thoſe that praiſe God, aloud, with intention of mind and voice. David therefore by this word here, excluding ſuch from the preſence and houſe of God, (mentioned in the 7. verſe,) ſeemeth to allude to thoſe ſolemn, or any other devout praiſers of God, who had a right to his houſe and preſence.

Dan. 6. 10. But if this Pſalme, according to the title, and common opinion, were Davids; theſe words can have no relation to that cuſtome, at leaſt, as grounded upon thoſe places before quoted; becauſe the Temple (properly ſo called) was not yet built: and by the Temple, muſt here be underſtood the Tabernacle. But if by Temple, we underſtand here the inmoſt and holieſt part of the Tabernacle, into which none had acceſſe but the High Prieſt; then even they that were within the Tabernacle, might be ſaid to pray toward, as it is here. V. 4. deliver my ſoul] My life from death, which is nigh, verſe 5.

V. 5. For in Death, &c.] See Iſa. 38. 18, 19. & Pſal. 30. 9. & 115. 17, 18. and elſewhere. All which places muſt not be underſtood as though it were intended by ſuch expreſſions poſitively to determine any thing concerning the eſtate of the dead, (a thing in thoſe infant dayes of the Church not ſo fully revealed, nor ordinarily talked of) but onely, the better to ſet out the duty of the living. Now God himſelfe having revealed unto men, that the moſt acceptable ſervice (far above the Legal and Ceremonial) they could do unto him, was to call upon him in time of trouble; and after deliverance, to glorifie him: as is more fully expreſſed, Pſal. 50. from verſ. 8. to 16. thoſe holy men, being in danger of death through ſickneſſe or otherwiſe, could not pitch upon any other conſideration, upon which they might preſſe their recovery, or deliverance, with God, with more boldneſſe or confidence, then this of Gods glory, ſo much intereſſed (as by his own gracious declaration they were aſſured) in the thanks and praiſes of the living. This therefore they inſiſt upon, and preſſe it home; profeſſing alſo at the ſame time, that it is the main end, and ſcope of their lives, to glorifie God. See more upon Pſalme 88. 10. Wilt thou ſhew, &c.

V. 6. all the night] Or, every night.

Shiggaion] The meaning of this word is very uncertain. Some would have it an inſtrument of muſick: Others, a certain tune; or beginning of Song, or certain kind of verſe. They that have written moſt of it, profeſſe themſelves moſt irreſolved, and think it not very material, or neceſſary to be known what ever it be. Which may be ſaid, and indeed is ſaid by the moſt learned, of all theſe Titles of Pſalms (that have any obſcurity) in general, as belonging all to that either Muſick, or Poetry, then in uſe; now, altogether unknown.

Cuſh the Benjamite] Moſt Interpreters by Cuſh, think Saul, who was the ſon of Kiſh, a Benjamite, 1 Sam. 9. 1, &c. to be intended. This reaſon of changing the name, ſome think was in reverence to his ſacred perſon and function, Job 34. 18. Others, the better to ſet out his obſtinate impenitency, and hardneſſe of heart. For Cuſh properly ſignifieth an Ethiopian, or Blackmore; according to that of Jer. 13. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin? or the Leopard his ſpots? then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed to do evil. Certain it is, that ſuch ſecret alluſions, or diſguiſes of proper names have been obſerved by the learned in divers places of Scripture. See Junius upon 2 King. 23. 13. and others there. Neverthele ſſe, their opinion that would have this Cuſh rather to have been ſome of Sauls officers or courtiers, who had calumniated David, and incenſed Saul againſt him, as though he had plotted ſecretly to take his life away; if any like better of it, the tenour of the Pſal. will agree well enough with it. But then it will be better to tranſlate this דברי here in the title, the words, as it is already in the Text; then, the buſineſſe, as in the margin.

Verſ. 2. L*Eſt he tear my ſoul like a lyon*] He deſireth God to deliver him from the rage of cruel Saul, his principal adverſary.

V. 4. If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me] If I reverenced not Saul as Gods anointed, and preſerved his life, 1 Sam. 26. 8, 9.

V. 5. and lay mine honour in the duſt] Let me not onely die, but be diſhonoured for ever.

V. 6. lift up thy ſelf] Set thy ſelf on thy Judgement-ſeat. Tribunals were high, 1 King. 10. 19.

to the judgement that thou haſt commanded] David ſeems here to challenge that jus regni (as Vatablus here, and ſome others) which God had promiſed unto him. Now we read of a jus regni, 1 Sam. 8. 9, 10, &c. and Chap. 10. 25, where indeed we find the very ſame word משפט, as is here; though there tranſlated manner; here judgement. But of that jus there, how to be interpreted, there is much controverſie; and it ſeemeth to have more particular reference unto Saul. The jus regni challenged here by David was his right and title to the Crown, by Gods promiſe, and Samuels anointing of him by Gods command, in greater confirmation. The words alſo may be taken more generally; That God would do him right, and execute Juſtice, in his behalf; which God himſelf hath commanded to be executed among men.

ſo ſhall the congregation of the people compaſs thee about] Then ſhall all men flock unto thee, and glorifie thee; then ſhall religion and piety be in credit among men, when they ſee thy juſt Judgements. for their ſakes therefore return thou on high] As before, verſe 6. Lift up thy ſelf, &c. that is, Betake thy ſelf to thy throne, and high tribunal of Juſtice, from whence by this prevailing of wickedneſſe among men, thou ſeemeſt to have been abſent of late. That this word high, hath relation to adminiſtration of Juſtice among the Hebrewes, appears alſo by Eccl. 5. 8. If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poor, and violent perverting of Judgement and Juſtice in a Province, marvel not at the matter; for he that is higher then the higheſt, regardeth; and there be higher then they; that is, Though men do not, whom God hath truſted, yet there is a ſuperiour Judge, that in due time will do Juſtice, and render unto every one according to his works. Let it not therefore ſeem ſtrange unto thee, if, among thoſe inferiour Judges, injuſtice and extortion do prevail for a while.

Gittith] Some inſtrument that came from Gath, or, that was uſed by the ſons of Obed-edom the Gittite, 2 Sam. 6. 10. The word Gittern, or Guittern might come from thence. However becauſe Gath ſignifies alſo a wine-preſſe, it is not unlikely that this and other like Pſalmes that ſet out the goodneſſe and providence of God towards man in this kind, were, in time of harveſt and vintage, publickly ſung.

Verſ. 1. WHo haſt ſet thy glory above the heavens] Thy throne, the ſign of thy glorious Majeſty.

above the heavens] Pſal. 113. 4. & 148. 13.

V. 2. Out of the mouth of babes and ſucklings] The common opinion is, that David doth here ſet out the wonderful providence of God toward Infants, in their birth and ſuſtentation; and particularly, in providing ſuch convenient food for them, as milk, and conveying it to them ſo fitly, and fitting them by ſecret inſtincts and diſpoſitions of nature for it, and the like: Which things, indeed, if well and rationally conſidered, are very wonderful, and afford matter of high contemplation to a Naturaliſt; as may be ſeen by them that have written of thoſe particulars, Philoſophers, and others. See upon Pſal. 22. 9. that took me out of the womb. See alſo, Pſal. 139. 13, 14, &c. & Pſal. 22. 9, 10. Pſal. 71. 5, 6. Nevertheleſs, this being no common ſubject for every ordinary mans ſpeculation or obſervation; nor of it ſelf ſo far above and beyond the ordinary courſe of Natures wonders in natural things; thoſe eſpecially, that belong unto the nature and ſtructure of man in general, whether his body or ſoul be conſidered: That David would pitch upon this one particular of Infants, as the moſt eminent and conſpicuous of Gods wonderful works, to ſtop the mouths of blaſphemous atheiſts, doth not ſeem to be very probable. The heathens I am ſure (whoſe teſtimony in this caſe is very conſiderable) in their writings upon this ſubject, unanimouſly acknowledge the ſight and contemplation of the Heavens, Sun and Moon, &c. ſo open and obvious unto every ordinary man, that hath any thing of common ſenſe and reaſon in him, to be the thing, if not the onely, yet the chief and principal, that hath compelled the moſt obſtinate and obdurate to an acknowledgement of a Deity. And ſo David himſelf, Pſal. 19. The Heavens declare the glory of God, &c. and Pſal. 89. 5. The heavens ſhall praiſe; and 97. 6. The heavens declare. That therefore which I ſhall propoſe to the further conſideration of the learned, is, whether theſe words, babes and ſucklings here, might not be taken proverbially, for things that have no voice, or cannot ſpeak; it being ſo proper to, and obſervable in Infants, that they do not ſpeak, that from that very thing they have their names in the Latine tongue; infans, properly ſignifying one that cannot ſpeak; and infantia, diſability to ſpeak. And is not this the very thing that David doth in that other Pſalm of the ſame ſubject as this, more plainly, in words; but with the ſame acuteneſs of ſence, inſiſt upon, That the heavens, though they have no ſpeech, nor language, nor voice, (for all thoſe words are there, ver. 3. as ſhall be ſhewed there) yet they have power enough to ſpeak and preach their Maker all the world over? Neither can it be any material objection againſt this interpretation, that Chriſt doth apply theſe words to children, that were very children, not figuratively ſo, Mat. 21. 16. For beſides that there be examples, divers; of more remote applications in the New Teſtament: is apparent, that the propriety of words may not be preſſed in this particular, ſince that Chriſt there applieth them to children (though ſuch otherwiſe as might be called infants well enough; as the word even by profane Authors is uſed ſometimes) that actualy did ſpeak: whereas here, ſuch as cannot ſpeak, (wherein is the chiefeſt emphaſis, or dinoſis, as they call it) are properly intended. Yet was Chriſt his application of the words very proper and natural, according to the proper nature of ſuch applications; which ſometimes are but bare alluſions, as it were; and yet ſuch alluſions, as out of all queſtion, were even from the beginning ſo fore-caſt and appointed, as it were by the Holy Ghoſt.

ordained] Heb. founded.

the avenger] Of all enemies, thoſe that purſue after vengeance, uſe to be the fierceſt and moſt diligent. Here it is taken for a deſperate atheiſt; one that is very buſie and active to oppugn Gods providence: that greedily catcheth at all opportunities to blaſpheme. So alſo, Pſal. 44. 16. For the voice of him that reproacheth, &c.

V. 3. the heavens, &c.] there be two faces or aſpects of heaven, that are uſual and ordinary; the one by day, the other by night. By day, that which is moſt conſpicuous, is the Sun: (for what elſe we ſee, is rather clouds, and aire, then heaven) here therefore included in the word heaven. By night, the Moon and the Stars are ſeen, mentioned by themſelves. This I take to be ſufficient and ſatisfactory, ſo that we ſhall not need to mention multiplicity of reaſons that have been deviſed by Interpreters, why the Sun, the moſt glorious of all, is here left out among the works of God, which I conceive to be but their miſtake. If they had ſaid, why not named, they had ſaid ſomething.

the work of thy fingers] A curious divine work. A metaphor from them that make tapeſtry.

the moon and the ſtars] Theſe were Davids night-meditations, for he mentioneth not the ſun. So ſome: but ſee before.

V. 4. What is man, &c.] That is, thou that art the Maker of ſuch glorious creatures, ſo pure, ſo bright, ſo beautiful; how canſt thou ſtoop ſo low, as to take care of man, ſo vile, ſo frail, ſo wretched, in compariſon? Or, which is more; What was man unto thee; or what in himſelf, that thou ſhouldſt create and provide for his uſe, ſuch glorious creatures? Not for his uſe onely, to enjoy hereafter, when transferred thither after death; (which ſome would have chiefly intended) but for his uſe now living; for the contentment of his contemplation, and for the benefits which he receiveth from them: not light onely, but the ſeaſons of the year, and the fruits of the earth, which without the heavenly influences could produce nothing. And ſo much ſome of the heathen have acknowledged, and from thence well inferred both the goodneſſe of God, and the worthineſſe of man, above other creatures. Theſe, and the following words are interpreted of Chriſt, by the Apoſtle, Heb. 2. 6. &c. and 1 Cor. 15. 27. Eph. 1. 22. From hence as it may well be inferred that Chriſt, indeed is the principal aim in the intention of the Holy Ghoſt, who dictated it unto David; ſo nothing hinders, but that David might have a more immediate and obvious aim, to ſet out, (as we ſaid before) the goodneſſe and providence of God to mankind. And though 'tis true, that man ſince his rebellion againſt Him, of whom he had received it, hath loſt much of that ſoveraignty upon the creatures inſiſted upon in the following verſes; yet that it holdeth to this day in a great meaſure, is evidently true, and acknowledged by ancient Heathens, Tullie, Plutarch, and others; who from thence fetch excelent arguments for a providence.

V. 5. Then then the Angels] In the Hebrew, צלהים; then the Gods properly; or, then God, βραχὺ τι παρὰ θεῦ; as ſome ancient Greek Verſions had it. However, אלהים is often taken for Angels; as Pſal. 97. 7. worſhip him all ye gods; that is, Angels; and elſewhere. And ſo is the place expounded in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes.

V. 6. thou haſt put all things under his feet] 1 Cor. 15. verſe. 27.

Upon Muth-labben] Heb. על-מות לבן, It may be tranſlated (not as it is now; but as it may be pointed) Upon the death of Laben: So the Chaldee Paraphraſe indeed: על-מות ſuper morte. But then, who this Laben ſhould be, is not agreed. Some would have Goliah underſtood: others, ſome principal man under Saul. Many again, (of all moſt improbable) his own ſon Abſolom. There be ſome very Learned men, who by a metatheſis, or tranſpoſition of letters; in proper Names, more properly called annagrammatiſmus; (of which kind there be divers examples in Scripture; as of tranſpoſitions in general, פלר for לפר : אלסינים for אלנוסים, &c. and in proper names, יעבץ for יעצב ; 1 Chron. 4. 9. Jehojachin, for Jechonias, or Jechonias for Jehojachin, I know not which: 2 King. 24. & 25.) read this Laben, the radicals being the ſame in both, Nabal. Some tell us of Laben, that was a Singer; mentioned, they ſay, 1 Chron. 15. and ſo gnalmuth, or galmuth, might be taken for an inſtrument. But I finde no ſuch name there; except they mean Ben, mentioned there, verſe 18. and would have לבן here to be tranſlated for Ben. When all hath been ſaid that can be ſaid, the concluſion muſt be the ſame as before; That theſe Titles are very uncertain things, if not altogether unknown in theſe dayes.

V. 6. O thou enemy, &c. Moſt take theſe words as a Sarcaſme, (or cloſe deriſion) as if David intended to upbraid them of their bloody thoughts and threats: O enemies, your intended and ſo much threatned deſolations have taken effect; Cities are deſtroyed, and their memory periſhed: So you boaſted and threatned indeed; and had done it perchance, but that there is a juſt God in heaven, whom your rage could not reach, &c. Others make this to be a continued proſecution of the former verſe, expreſſing the vengeance of God upon his enemies: and tranſlate the firſt words; (making האיב not a Vocative, but a Genitive) The deſolations, or devaſtations of the enemy are come to an end, &c. This indeed doth cohere better with the former; but not ſo well with the latter verſe. It may be that David did not aim here at any particular enemy, but onely intended to ſet out the terrous of War, and the ſtrange iſſues and effects of it; when both the guilty and the innocent are involved in one ruine, as though all were committed and permitted to the power of the ſword, and no ſuperiour power to over-rule: which breeds great confuſions among men, and great murmurings. To this David, in the next verſe, with much confidence, grounded upon his own experience, &c. doth oppoſe, That notwithſtanding theſe confuſions, there is a God in heaven, ſtill; a righteous God, who though for a while, for ſecret cauſes, &c. he give away, and ſuffers the triumphing of the wicked; yet will in due time, ſooner or later, in this world or that which is to come, &c. Upon this follows this inference, That men therefore at ſuch times, ſhould not ſo extreamly be diſmayed, but lift up their hearts to God, with aſſured confidence, and wait patiently. So Iſa. 51. 12, 13. I, even I, am he that comforteth you; Who art thou, that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of a man, &c? and haſt feard continually every day, becauſe of the fury of the oppreſſour, as if he were ready to deſtroy: And where is the fury of the oppreſſour? Which words do very much illuſtrate theſe, and confirm this interpretation of them. Higgaion Selah] Higgaion, taken ordinarily, from, הגה, is as much as meditatio; ſo uſed (in conſtruction, as they call it) Pſal. 19.15. But here what it ſignifies, or to what purpoſe, I know no man that can tell me certainly: The Greek and vulgar Latine leave it quite out, as no part of the Text; wich I think is the ſafeſt way, except we knew more of it. Of Selah, ſee before, Pſal. 3.

V. 17. into hell] Some by hell underſtand here, ſepulchre; and ſo tranſlate it. Others, the place of torments. For otherwiſe, ſay they, what man is he, good or bad, that can eſcape the grave? As for the Hebrew word שאול (whereof ſo much hath been written) it is certain it ſignifies both. But beſides theſe two ſignifications, שאול (as ᾅδης in Greek) doth alſo ſometimes import a bare non-entitie, or annihilation; as Iſa. 5. 14. Therefore hell hath enlarged her ſelf, and opened her mouth without meaſure: and their glory, and their multitude and their pompe, and he that rejoyceth ſhall deſcend into it. So here alſo ſome expound it, redigentur in nihilum: they ſhall be reduced into nothing: not that they ſhall be annihilated in every deed by death; (which is the errour of many Jewiſh Interpreters, who teach, that the wicked and ungodly ſhall altogether be extinct, nor ever riſe again: contrary to Chriſts direct Doctrine, Joh. 5. 28, 29. and the Apoſtles, 2 Cor. 5. 10.) but becauſe this word ſerveth well, more fully to ſet out the vanity of worldly men; both of their lives, and of their actions.

PSAL. X.

Verſ. 1. W*Hy ſtandeſt thou ſo far off O Lord*] God, eſſentially is in all places equally, intra omnia, ſed non incluſus, &c. that is, within all things, but not included: without all, but no excluded: whole and entire in the whole; and in every part of the whole: as the School-men ſpeak, and the Scriptures (David himſelfe) teach, Pſal. 139. and elſewhere. However, He is frequently ſaid, to be, or to dwell, where his glory is moſt viſible, as in the Heavens; or in his Church, or whereſoever he doth in an extraordinary manner manifeſt himſelf by any effects of his Power or Grace. Now becauſe nothing is more proper and natural (if we may ſo ſpeake) unto God, then to be juſt and righteous: where (for juſt, alwayes: but hidden cauſes often:) where I ſay, he doth ſuſpend the execution of his juſt judgements, and ſuffers iniquity to prevaile and to proſper; He is there, by a kind of anthropopathia, ſaid to abſent himſelfe, or to hide his eyes: as being of purer eyes (Hab. 1. 13.) then to behold iniquity, and ſuffer it. And ſure enough it is, that he never doth, abſolutely and totally: but for a while onely; (for what is long to him, to whom a thouſand yeares are but as one day, or a watch in the night? Pſal. 90. 4. though to us it is otherwiſe, who by reaſon of our ſhort continuance, think ten or twenty yeares a great matter:) for the further manifeſtation both of his juſtice and of his mercy in after-times; either in this world, or that which is to come; to which moſt promiſes in the Scripture, if rightly underſtood, have reference.

This whole Pſalm, with divers others of the ſame argument, may ſerve for an ample confutation of their errour, who make the worldly ſucceſſes of great undertakers, without any further enquiry, an argument of the goodneſſe of their cauſe; as alſo for their conſolation, and confirmation, who ſuffer, though it be much and long, (Pſal. 74. 9.) for a good cauſe. See alſo upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c. and Prov. 1. 32. For the turning away of the ſimple, &c.

Why hideſt thou thy ſelfe in time of trouble] Heb. Why hideſt thou in time of trouble: which I conceive would better have been ſupplied by a Noune ſubſtantive, thy face, or thine eyes, then by this reciprocal Pronoune, thy ſelf. So is God in the Scripture very commonly ſaid in full expreſſion, to hide his face; as Deut. 31. 18. Ezek. 39. 23. Micah 3. 4. and elſewhere frequently. And ſo Eſ. 57. 17. I hid me and was wroth: there too there being no me in the Text, I conceive it would according to the uſual phraſe of Scripture, more warrantablly be ſupplied, my face: I do not remember this me, of Gods hiding, expreſſed in all the Scripture : included in the reciprocal verb, I finde it in one place : Eſa. 45. 15. Verily thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf, O God of Iſrael the Saviour. But the hiding there intended, is not the ſame as is here ſpoken of, of God his not affording himſelf to the reliefe of his people in time of trouble and perſecution ; but of his wayes and counſels, both in his general adminiſtrations, and particular judgements, for the moſt part, impenetrable, and incomprehenſible to mortal man : as we are taught, Rom. 11. 33, 34. Pſal. 77. laſt verſe, and elſewhere. And this to be the meaning of the Prophet in this place, beſides other reaſons may appear by ver. 9, 10. of the Ch. Wo unto him that ſtriveth, &c. Saturnus, one of the ancienteſt Heathen gods, had his name from thence : from Sater, I meane, to hide ; as all learned men agree. And why not from this very kind of hiding, here ſpoken of by the Prophet ; as well as divers other particulars of their Mythology from other Scriptures, of which no queſtion is made ? Heathen Mythologiſts, I know, tell us of another kinde of hiding, belonging to this ſuppoſed Deity ; as their manner is, when long time and prevailing ſuperſtitions, had obliterated originall truths. There is good uſe to be made of ſuch obſervations : neither do I remember to have met with it elſewhere. But to the Pſalmiſt here : Though I know no great difference, as to the ſence, whether we tranſlate, Why hideſt thou thy ſelf, or, thy face : yet becauſe this is the uſual phraſe of the Scripture ; and that ſmalleſt differences in Scripture, ſometimes, may afford obſervations of no ſmall weight ; I therefore take notice of it here. Beſides in this particular place ; for God to hide himſelfe in time of trouble, might ſound at firſt hearing, (to vulgar eares) as an imputation of ſome feare in God for himſelfe : but to hide his face, or, eyes, (as ſome Rabbins here ſupply) though that too might be miſtaken ; yet not ſo eaſily, as I conceive.

V. 3. For the wicked boaſteth] Inſulteth, triumpheth. Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, thou mighty man ? Pſal. 52. 1. Whoſe glory is in their ſhame, Phil. 3. 19. Or, boaſteth of Gods favour, becauſe of his ſucceſſe, Joh. 16. 2. whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doth God ſervice. See upon Pſal. 21. 2. his hearts deſire.

and bleſſeth the covetous] Rather, as in the margine there, the covetous bleſſeth himſelf ; he abhorreth the Lord. See Deut. 29. 19. that he bleſſeth himſelfe in his heart, &c. and Deut. 8. 11, 12, &c.

Some tranſlate the whole verſe, which the words will bear too. He praiſeth the wicked for the deſire of his heart, and bleſſeth the covetous, who abhorreth (or deſpiſeth) the Lord.

V. 4. will not ſeek after God] In the Hebrew, there is no more queſtion, will not ſeek, or, enquire. Now becauſe to ſeeke God, or after God, is an uſual Scripture phraſe, by which all duties of Religion are often comprehended, as Pſal. 9. 10. Thou haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee and elſewhere very frequently : why may not after God, here alſo, though not expreſſed, be ſupplied in the tranſlation ? I ſee no great reaſon but it may. Yet ſome Interpreters of beſt account, are much againſt it, and call it (ſomewhat too rigidly by their favour) a depravation of the ſence. For, ſay they, by this general word, will not ſeek, or conſider ; David doth here point at the original cauſe of all wickedneſſe and impiety ; which is, want of due conſideration. And that is very true ; For if men (as would well become rational creatures to do) would take time, and make it a buſineſſe, (which is indeed the buſineſſe of their lives) well and ſeriouſly to conſider with themſelves ; firſt in general, what is the end of man, as endowed with a rational and immortal ſoul : and then of particular actions, how they conduce more or leſſe, or how contrary to that end : what is true, real, ſolid happineſſe ; what is deceitful, and imaginary : this, and the like, often and ſeriouſly thought upon, muſt of neceſſity bring a man to a deſire of ſeeking after God, and to a purſute of the means, a conſciencious life, and the like. See more upon Pſal. 1. upon the inſcription of it, Pſalme firſt. However, though this general ſence may do better here ; the limited, by addition of thoſe words, after God ; warranted by ſo many other places, ought not in my judgement, to be called a depravation. But may not the fooliſh Seekers of our time, of whom the Scripture ſpeaketh : ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 7. toſſed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine : (Epheſ. 4. 14.) whoſe labour is, by oppoſing approved and long ſetled truths, to overthrow all truth : may they not take ſome advantage of this general ſence ? They may certainly, as well as they can pervert all other Scriptures ; their chiefe ſtudy : and as eaſily may they be anſwered, if any anſwer will ſerve men of ſuch perverſe judgements and affections.

Some, by the tongue here, would have us to underſtand the heart ; becauſe, ſay they, the heart is under the tongue. That the tongue is ſo taken ſometimes, I grant ; but I do not approve of the reaſon. However, under his tongue, for, in his tongue (that is, whatever he ſpeaketh) is the more probable interpretation in this place.

V. 8. He ſetteth in the lurking places of the villages.] Some of the Rabbins by חצרים here turned villages, underſtand atria, that is, open Courts, publick Halls, and the like. The word of it ſelfe doth include both ſences we know : and ſome Interpreters, beſides Rabbins, like well of this latter, as if David aimed here, by this word, not at petty theeves, who rob in obſcure places ; but at the grand ones, who in open Courts, and publick places of Commerce, by perverting juſtice, by horrible, though tollerated, and allowed extortions and exactions, and the like, do the ſame as the petty theeves, with as bad a conſcience ; but with more credit and allowance. And here ſome inveigh very much againſt Merchants, as men uſually very guilty of this kinde of theft. For my part, I do not think ſo ill of that profeſſion, but that even amongſt them, I believe may be found men of great integrity, and generoſity ; nor ſo well of any other, that is a quaeſtuoſa profeſſio, (that is, whoſe chiefe end is gaine and profit :) but that it will afford examples of ſuch theeves good ſtore. But how ſhall lurking places agree with open Courts and common-Halls ? It may be anſwered, I know that the Original word may be tranſlated (as it is by divers) in ambuſhes, as well as lurking places : and ambuſhes may be laid in publick places, there is no queſtion : but then it followes immediately, במסתרים (in latebris) in ſecret places, which is directly oppoſite to publick. Somewhat might be ſaid to that too : but when all is done, I muſt profeſſe, that I conceive villages, as it is here, the more warrantable tranſlation of the two.

The Hebrew word חלכאים, here tranſlated the poor, is by moſt Interpreters ſuppoſed to be a compound of two, and to ſignifie the company, or congregation of the poor (or, lowly.) It is found in the Scripture no where, but in this place : except it be the plurall of חלכה which is here in the 10. and 14. verſes of this Pſalme ; and no where elſe to be found.

PSAL. XI.

Verſ. 1. I*N the Lord put I my truſt*, &c.] As if he had ſaid; God hath paſſed his promiſe to me; and my truſt is fixed: Why do you ſet your hearts ſo violently to chaſe and purſue me, (as a Patridge in the Mountains, as himſelfe ſpeaks to Saul, 1 Sam. 26. 19.) as though you would fruſtrate the purpoſe of God?

how ſay ye to my ſoul] 1 Sam. 26. 19. for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, ſaying, Go ſerve other Gods. Not that they ſaid ſo in very deed; but the more emphatically to ſet out their wickedneſſe and cruelty, repreſenting the conſequent of their act, as the original aim and purpoſe of their hearts.

flee] A plural in the Hebrew, flee ye: as to David and his company.

V. 2. privily ſhoot] Heb. in darkneſſe; or, in the darkneſſe: meaning (as moſt Interpreters) that there was no place ſo private, or ſo dark, left to him, that was free from the perſecution of his enemies.

V. 3. If the foundations be deſtroyed] Heb. השתות, here rendered foundations, is by ſome Interpreters both here, and Iſa. 19. 10. And they ſhall be broken, &c. tranſlated retia, or, nets. According to which tranſlation ſome make the ſenſe of the verſe to be: Certè retia deſtructa ſunt: juſtus quid operatus eſt? (ſo Vatablus) that is, Their nets indeed are broken and deſtroyed; but what hath the juſt done to bring this to paſſe? As if David intended by theſe words to give the glory of his deliverance, not unto any humane power, or policy; but to God onely, and his immediate working. But that this word שתות doth alſo ſignifie retia, is not a thing agreed upon, and generally granted: and being chiefly grounded upon that place of Eſay, it will appear upon further examination, but a weak ground. That it ſignifies foundations, is not denied, or doubted by any. Now, foundations, taken metaphorically, may be applied to many things: which hath bred great diverſity of interpretations. Moſt think by foundations, the Laws, execution of juſtice, &c. upon which Common-weales are chiefly founded, to be meant. Some take foundations here, and Pſal. 82. 5. to be meant of the ſame; and refer to that place, for the meaning of this. But the words, though the ſame in our tranſlation, are different in the Original; and even of the meaning of the word there, there is ſome controverſie alſo, as we ſhall ſee there. The right meaning here, I take to be this; That there is a time of ſuch general confuſion, when the very foundations which kept up other ſtructures, are overthrown: and then no wonder, if the righteous alſo have his ſhare of ſufferings. So God himſelfe once anſwered Baruch, by his Prophet Jeremy, Jer. 45. 4, 5. Behold, that which I have built, I will breake down; and that which I have planted, I will pluck up, &c. See alſo Pſal. 32. 6. Now at ſuch times when weak men begin to ſtagger, or to murmure, it is the part of a well grounded godly man, to comfort himſelfe, in this confidence, that God is in heaven, nevertheleſſe, and doth ſee and conſider, &c. as David here in the next verſes. See before upon Pſal. 9. 6. O thou enemy, &c.

V. 4. The Lord is in his holy Temple] Hab. 2. 20. The Lord is ſtill where he was, and therefore I will look up to him for juſtice, who can and will right me, when men will not.

his holy Temple] By Temple, here, moſt underſtand Heaven: which indeed is Gods moſt proper Temple, whereof Temples or Churches made with the hands of men are but figures and types. Neither doth the Original word היכל: though frequently uſed of the Temple; properly ſignifie a Temple, but a Palace: as it is here rendered by ſome. Much like unto this, is that expreſſion Pſal. 102. 19. For he hath looked down from the height of his Sanctuary: from heaven did the Lord behold the earth: here alſo by Sanctuary, heaven is underſtood.

his eye-lids] That is, his eyes, according to the Hebrew phraſe: and the repetition of the ſame thing in other words; (The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lords Throne is in Heaven: his eyes behold, his eye-lids try, &c.) very well ſets out Davids confidence, and earneſtneſſe, being then in great affliction, and in the bitterneſſe of his ſufferings; (when men of a temporary faith, and weakely grounded in their principles, are wont to give off;) oppoſing their reiterated maximes, to ſuch inferences as wicked men, and weak judgements (when they ſee the afflictions and oppreſſions of the righteous, and the ſucceſſe of the proud and ungodly: whether openly ſo (proud and ungodly) as ſometimes: or covertly, under the pretence of zeale and piety; which is very ordinary; and of the two, the more dangerous:) would make. See alſo upon Pſal. 33. 13. The Lord looketh and 38. 9. Lord all my delight. v. 5.

The Lord tryeth the right; but the wicked] See Jam. 1. 12. Bleſſed is the man, &c. and Hebr. 12. 6, 7, 8. For whom the Lord loveth, &c.

his ſoul hateth] He hates a wicked man with all his heart. An emphatical expreſſion, very ſeaſonable then, when a good cauſe doth ſuffer, and moſt men are ready to judge, (as heathens were wont of them that oppreſſed the Jewes:) that they are moſt in Gods favour, and by conſequence, moſt godly, who have moſt occaſion to boaſt of their ſucceſſes and hearts deſire (Pſal. 10. 3.) in this World.

V. 6. rain ſnares] Ezek. 38. 22.

fire and brimſtone] As in the deſtruction of Sodome, Gen. 19. 24.

an horrible tempeſt] Or, a burning tempeſt. All expreſſions of terrible judgements and calamities which by Gods ſpecial order and appointment ſhall befal thoſe wicked ungodly men (though great pretenders of godlineſſe perchance) who did, or do ſo much boaſt of their flouriſhing condition, and great ſucceſſes in this world. Now becauſe it doth often fall out that men that have been great oppreſſours of the Church, and of Gods people, enjoy their peace and proſperity to the laſt, and die quietly, as to the world; upon their beds: it is very probable that David by theſe expreſſions intended eſpecially the judgements of God upon them that are ſuch, in another world: of which though the Old Teſtament ſpeakes but ſparingly, and obſcurely; (whereof ſee upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelfe, &c.) according to the condition of thoſe times: yet in the New, we read plentifully; ſo that all execution of juſtice and judgemeet ſeems almoſt to be referred to that time: to that at leſt, if not as the onely, yet the proper time. See 2 Theſſ. 1. v. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgement of God, &c. Nay from this very thing, (beſides the revelation of Scripture) many learned men have inferred the neceſſity of a future judgement, becauſe we ſee things fall out oftentimes, ſo contrary to what we apprehend of Gods juſtice, in this world. We may the ſooner be induced to believe that David by theſe words intended eternal paines and torments, becauſe hell in the New Teſtament is not onely ſet out by fire; abſolutely: but by fire and brimſtone, in St. Johns Apocalypſe, more then once: the original of which expreſſion in St. John, though it be truely derived from that particular fire and brimſtone, which was the deſtruction of Sodome and Gomorrah; as in Geneſis we read at large, Gen. Ch. 19. and is further confirmed by our Saviour, Luk. 17. 29. yet it is poſſible that it was not without ſome alluſion to this very place of David, and other like, if other like be. See alſo upon Pſal. 68. 3. But let the righteous.

this ſhall be the portion of their cup] Which they ſhall drink, even to the dregs, Ezek. 23. 34. Pſal. 75. 8.

V. 7. For the righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſſe] Heb. righteouſneſſes: That is, all manner of righteouſneſſe, to puniſh the evil, and preſerve the good. Or, righteouſneſſes, that is, righteous men: the abſtract, for the concret; as ſcelera for ſceleſti, and the like.

his countenance doth behold the upright] The Rabbins do mention three ſeveral interpretations of theſe words: all good and Orthodoxe, and all agreeable enough to the Original words. The firſt is that we have here. But here it muſt be noted, that in the Original it is in the plural, their countenances do behold: not his countenance, &c. Whence ſome would inferre the myſtery of the Trinity to be here intended: and whereas it is objected that the affixe מו is ſometimes ſingular; Genebard ſaith no, but onely where that myſtery is intended. But that is manifeſtly falſe. Mercerus upon Job doth obſerve many places, where it is uſed for a ſingular. As for the plurality of the verbe in the Original, (יחזו videbunt) that maketh nothing to this purpoſe, becauſe it depends of the Nominative plurall, פנים facies, for face; or countenance, according to the Hebrew Idiotiſme. However, if we follow this firſt interpretation, it is free for us, if we will make a myſtery of it, to make a plurall of this affixe; ſince it may be either plurall, or ſingular. Now for the ſence of the words according to this firſt tranſlation; we need not go far: the countenance of God is propoſed unto us, as the ſumme and perfection of hapineſſe: There be many that ſay: who will ſhew us any good? Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Pſal. 4. 6. But ſecondly, if we tranſlate, (as we may very well, without doing any violence to the words) The upright (rectitudo, for rectitudine præditi: examples of ſuch defective expreſſions in the Scripture there be many:) ſhall ſee thy face: then have we here a cleer expreſſion of the happineſſe of Gods Saints in heaven, which doth conſiſt in the beatifical viſion, as it is called by the School-men: according to that of David, Pſal. 17. laſt verſe. As for me (having ſpoken before of worldly mens happineſſe:) I will behold thy face in righteouſneſſe: I ſhall be ſatisfied when I awake with thy likeneſſe; and that in the Goſpel ſpoken to Chriſt by one of his Diſciples: Lord ſhew us the Father, and it ſufficeth us. I like of this here the better, becauſe it will confirme the interpretation of the former verſes, fire and brimſtone, &c. of which we have ſpoken there: it being ſo much the more probable that by thoſe expreſſions the eternal paines of hell are intended; if it be granted that by this here, eternal bleſſedneſſe is ſet out, and propoſed: of which no queſtion can be made, if this tranſlation of the words, againſt which I know nothing very material, that can be objected, be allowed of. But becauſe I think it the part of a faithful Interpreter to unfold and purſue the riches of Gods word, where it may be done without affected and groundleſſe ſubtilty: I muſt not conceal from the Reader a third interpretation of the words, not leſſe warrantable, for ought I can ſee, then either of the former, and affording a doctrine full of comfort, and of great uſe, in time of great confuſions. It is this: Their faces (of the juſt and righteous:) ſhall ſee him righteous, or, that he is righteous. The Providence of God, which in this world is an object of our faith; it ſhall be hereafter, of our eyes: we ſhall then know, and diſcerne clearely, (and in that, no ſmall portion of our happineſſe:) which we do here but imperfectly; (witneſſe, David, Jeremy, Habakuk, and ſo many other of the godly that have ſtumbled at this block, even ready to fall, as themſelves have acknowledged:) that God is juſt and righteous in all his wayes: and that all things, even that ſeeming proſperity of the wicked, which now we can ſo hardly brook, was but a myſtery of Gods wiſdome, to bring about with more admiration the true bleſſedneſſe of thoſe that put their truſt in God, and have patience unto the end, &c. Very pregnant are the words of Malachi to this purpoſe: Ye have ſaid, it is vaine to ſerve God: and what profit is it, &c. And now we call the proud happy: yea they that worke wickedneſſe, are ſet up: yea they that tempt God, are even delivered. Mal. 3. 14, 15. then follows verſe 17. &c. In the day when I make up my jewels, &c. Then ſhall ye (both good and bad: all men ſhall) return and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked: between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not. So Ezekiel: and you ſhall know that I have not done without cauſe all that I have done in it, ſaith the Lord, Ezek. 14. laſt verſe.

Verſ. 1. HElp] Or, Save. Nothing doth ſo much afflict pious ſouls; no publick nor private calamity goes to their heart ſo much, as when they ſee impiety and profaneſſe to prevail, and to bear ſway: men that formerly made a ſhew of godlineſſe and piety, to be carried with the ſtreame, and to draw others by their examples, that are not throughly well grounded: in a word, the kingdome of Satan, (Epicuriſme, Libertiniſme, Sacriledge, and the like:) to prevail and flouriſh; Gods Power, and Soveraignty, to be eclipſed; whereby a way is made to publick and profeſſed Atheiſme; as often, through juſt judgement, it doth happen, where God had been long diſhonoured by formal and hypocritical religion.

for the godly man ceaſeth] Mic. 7. 2. Which dares defend the truth, and ſhew mercy to the oppreſſed. חסיד in the Original: a very remarkable word: of which ſee upon Pſalme 86. verſe 2. for I am holy.

V. 2. with flattering lips] He meaneth the flatterers of the Court, which hurt him more with their tongues then with their weapons, Pſal. 5. 9. Or, as ſome of the beſt of Commentators here, Potius David in genere deplorat mores ſuæ ætatis, &c. It is more likely that David doth here deplore in general the corrupted lives and manners of the moſt of his dayes, their baſe and fraudulent dealing towards one another, oppreſſion of the poor, and the like.

with a double heart do they ſpeak] Heb. an heart and an heart, 1 Chron. 12. 33. that is, a deceitful heart; as a ſtone and a ſtone, ſignifies deceitful weights, Deut. 25. 13, 14.

V. 3. proud things] Heb. great things, Dan. 7. 8.

V. 4. With our tongue will we prevail] We are able to perſwade to whatſoever we take in hand.

who is lord over us?] Who ſhall appoint us what we ſhall ſay?

V. 5. For the oppreſſion of the poor] God is moved with the complaints of the poor, and ſets them at liberty for his promiſe ſake.

ſaith the Lord] He makes God himſelfe; by an ordinary figure of Rhetorick, to ſpeak: which of its ſelfe is very elegant and emphatical: and ſerves here very well to ſet out the certainty of the matter, here averred, and which David would have all men, though there were little appearance of it to the eye of many, very confident of; that God would in due time do juſtice, and bring down the power and pride of theſe lofty ones.

from him that puffeth at him] Or, that would inſnare him; as is in the margine. The Hebrew words יפיח לו may alſo, with no leſſe advantage to the ſence, be tranſlated (as indeed they are by more then one) He will [freely] ſpeak unto him; or, He will puffe at him; that is, the godly, before oppreſſed by the mighty, will now dare to ſpeak freely, &c.

V. 6. The words of the Lord are pure words] Having ſpoken before of the treachery of men, and breach of faith; and of his confidence in God, grounded upon the Word of God: he now falls (by way of briefe interpoſition) upon the commendation of Gods Word, the ſincerity whereof, certainly believed, as it much addeth to our confidence; ſo it condemneth the more, the infidelity of men, before ſpoken of.

pure words] without droſſe of falſhood ſticking to them, or mingled with it.

as ſilver tryed] Some think that the furnace here intended, is the furnace of afflictions and tribulations, by which as the faithful are tryed; ſo by thoſe comforts they then receive from the Word of God, they try and prove the truth and excellency of it, more ſenſibly, then at any other time, or by any other way. The Grecians alſo uſe the ſame ſimilitude, to expreſſe the trial of a friend in time of adverſity, ſaying; Κρίνει φίλους ὁ καιρὸς, ὡς χρυσὸν τὸ πῦρ. and Χρυσὸν μὲν οἶδεν ἐξελέγχεσθαι πυρί. Ἡ δ' ἐν φίλοις εὔνοια καιρῷ κρίνεται. In the ſimilitude of pure ſilver, beſides the worth, &c. (in which reſpect the ſimilitude of gold is elſewhere uſed, Pſal. 19. 10. & 119. 127.) the pure whiteneſſe doth alſo well fit to ſet out the purity of Gods word. Campenſis, in his ſo much commended Paraphraſe, expreſſes it; Verba & promiſſiones Domini candidiſſima ſunt, &c.

for ever] The expreſſion is very pathetical. There can be no greater aggravation of miſery, then that it ſhould be both grievous, and laſting. We ſee not our ſignes, there is no more any Prophet, neither is there among us any that knoweth how long, Pſal. 74. 9. A ſad buſineſſe, when it is come to that. But this, how long: this, ever; faith will tell us, though it ſhould be as long as we live, is but a very little time; yea a very moment of time; no wayes conſiderable to eternity. So doth Eccleſiaſtes oppoſe faith, to ſenſe. Though a ſinner do prolong his dayes, (as to the eyes and thoughts of men, that look no further then this world:) Yet he ſhall not prolong, &c. Eccleſ. 8. 12, 13. and the Prophet Habakuk, 2. 3, 4. upon another occaſion, yet to the ſame purpoſe, grounding upon the inconſiderableneſſe, (if well conſidered:) of that which we commonly call long: For the viſion, — though it tarry — it will not tarry. — but the juſt ſhall live by faith, And ſo David himſelf, in other places, which we ſhall meet with, and take notice of, as we go a long.

V. 3. lighten mine eyes] As when the body is much exhauſted through ſickneſſe, or otherwiſe; it appeareth moſt in the eyes, which are as it were a glaſſe through which we may look into the inward temper and diſpoſition of the whole: So if the body be revived, and receive comfort; it will ſooneſt appear by the quickneſſe and chearfulneſſe of the ſight. See 1 Sam. 14. 29. Jonathan, Sauls ſon, after he had refreſhed his faint and wearied body with the taſte of a little honey; See I pray you, ſaith he, how mine eyes have been enlightned, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey. When therefore David doth here pray, that God would lighten his eyes, he prayes for his whole body, that God would raiſe it from that pining condition into which perpetual grief and danger had brought it; and by conſequence he prayes, that God would deliver him from thoſe croſſes and perſecutions, which had been the occaſion of his griefe. See Pſalme 38. 10. My heart panteth, my ſtrength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it alſo is gone from me. But in a ſence much different from this, the word of God is ſaid, to enlighten the eyes, Pſal. 19. 8. which is to be underſtood of the eyes of the minde, or underſtanding, as it is expreſſed, Epheſ. 1. 18 verſe.

PSAL. XIV.

This Pſalm, with very little variation, we have again Pſal. 53. whereof more there.

Verſ. 1. THe fool] That is, the wicked as appeares by what follows; and ſo folly, for wickedneſſe, in the Scripture, often. Ariſtotle teacheth in his Ethicks, that a man may be imprudent, or ſimple, (that is in effect, a fool;) as to the maine end of his life, (which is the general end of all men, true happineſſe:) who is very wiſe, or rather, as the ſame doth well diſtinguiſh there, very prudent to ſome particular (worldly) ends: and on the other ſide, ſome very wiſe, as to the maine; who to particular ends and buſineſſes, are very ſimple and meer idiots. Ethic. Nichom. lib. 6. cap. 5. et. 7. To which purpoſe is that of the Prophet Jeremy alſo; For my people is fooliſh, they have not known me; they are ſottiſh children, and they have none underſtanding: they are wiſe to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge, Jer. 4. 22.

fool hath ſaid in his heart] Pſal. 10. 4. & 53. 1. Philoſophers diſtinguiſh between the λόγον ἐνδιάθετον, and the λόγον προφορικὸν of man: his inward, and his outward ſpeech.

There is no God] He ſheweth, that the cauſe of all wickedneſſe is infidelity; that is, either an abſolute denying of a God: which ſcarce any man, or heathen ever did: and if any did, they were, even by heathens themſelves (as we call them: but more religious in many things, then many profeſſed Chriſtians:) ſeverely puniſhed in former times: or infidelity, (from whence we terme infidels) may be taken, and is commonly, for a denying of Gods providence, and his care of particular men, and that he is a rewarder of the juſt, and unjuſt. Such an infidel, or atheiſt was Epicurus: and it is much to be feared that many ſuch are to be found among ordinary men, who may be known by their looſe and riotous lives, and open contempt of godlineſſe: but among many alſo, who make great ſhew of holineſſe, and have the name of God very frequent in their mouths, but for worldly ends, that they may have the praiſe of men; or the better to bring their politick ambitious deſignes to paſſe; there being no better and ſurer inſtrument, for the moſt part, for the atchievement of worldly ends, then hypocriſie, and palliated ſanctity. Such were the Phariſees of old among the Jews, Math. 23. 14. and thoſe whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, 2 Tim. 3 5,6. Now of ſuch Atheiſts or Infidels in general that deny, that is, believe not in their hearts, a providence, &c. the Pſalmiſt hath ſpoken already, Pſalme 10. where he deſcribeth them more particularly, verſe 4. 11, 13. and it is very probable that he intended no other here. For to deny the providence and juſtice of God, is in effect to deny the being of a God: and if there be any difference, this is the worſt and moſt dangerous (the denying of a providence, either general, or particular:) atheiſme. But how could David ſee their hearts, or judge of their thoughts? no otherwiſe, (not to ſpeak of him here as a Prophet, which would be impertinent) then by their deeds, and actions. However, he ſpeakes not here of any particular man; but in general delivereth this doctrine, that whoever they be that do ſuch and ſuch things; whatever they ſay, or profeſſe of themſelves; yet in very deed, they are no better then arrant atheiſts.

they are corrupt] There is nothing but diſorder and wickedneſſe among them.

V. 2. The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men] Pſal. 102. 19. and 33. 13. The Lord looked. See there.

if there were any] By theſe and the following words, are chiefly intended by David natural men, not inlightened by his Word, nor ſanctified by his Spirit: which becauſe the greater part, by far; in thoſe dayes, eſpecially: he ſets out in general termes, as ſpeaking of all. Except we take the children of men properly here, (as ſome do) oppoſed to the children of God, Gen. 4. 26. & 6. 2. However, theſe words of the Pſalmiſt ſeem to be applyed by St. Paul to mankind in general: and in ſome ſenſe, it may be true even of the beſt, that their beſt actions are not without ſome mixture; nor ſo exactly good, as to abide a trial of Gods ſtrict judgement. See Job 4. 18, 19. & 15. 14, 15. Some would have David to mean this of his perſecutors onely; which is contray to the whole tenour of the words.

V. 3. They are all gone aſide] God found all out of the way, Rom. 3. 12.

there is none that doth good, no not one] Rom. 3. 10. See upon verſe 2. If there were any. And upon Pſal. 53. 1. that doth good.

V. 4. who eat up my people as they eat bread] Λαοβόροι, an uſual epithete of unjuſt, tyrannical Judges, and Governours. See Mic. 3. 3. However, as is here obſerved by ſome, there being no note of ſimilitude in the Hebrew, theſe words, they eat bread, may be joyned alſo with thoſe that follow, and call not upon the Lord: as an expreſſion of their ſecurity; as Jer. 22. 15. did not thy father eat, and drinke, &c. that is, did not he live ſecurely: or, enjoy peace and proſperity? as ſome there. See alſo before, upon Pſal. 3. 5. So, to eat bread, of a feaſt, or banqnet, Exod. 18. 12. Then the next words would well follow upon theſe, the better to ſet out their great unthankfulneſſe and infidelity; ſince that this plenty of food and proviſion, which God doth daily afford us, (with all other neceſſaries to life;) ſhould be a cleer evidence (even to natural men; according to St. Pauls doctrine, Act. 14. 17. Neverthbeleſſe he left not himſelfe without witneſſe, &c.) of the goodneſſe of God; and a daily provocation to us, to praiſe and glorifie him (that is, to call upon him) for thoſe things we receive from him.

call not upon the Lord] Iſai. 64. 7.

V. 5. There they were in great fear] Their deſtruction ſhall come upon them ſuddenly, in their greateſt ſecurity, (where no fear was, as Pſal. 53.) and to their great amazement: Eſay 13. 8. And they ſhall be afraid, &c. The words alſo might be taken of the godly; as an expoſtulation or check for their too great amazement in time of trouble and confuſion, as though no God were in heaven, &c. See before upon Pſal. 3. 6. and the paſſage of Eſay there.

were they in great fear] Heb. they feared a fear. See more upon Pſal. 53. 5. where no fear was.

for God is in the generation of the righteous] Becauſe their conſcience tells them, that God loves the godly, whom they oppreſſe. Or, rather, the Pſalmiſt himſelfe ſheweth the ground of his confidence, why it muſt needs be, that wicked men ſhall in time be deſtroyed, and the godly delivered; becauſe God is, where godlineſſe is: he is with, and among a righteous generation, or nation, and people. O my Lord, ſaith Gideon to the Angel that appeared unto him, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? Judg. 6. 13. The Iſraelites went upon the ſame ground, that none evil could befal them, becauſe God was among them: Micah 3. 11. but they miſtooke in the maine, for which they and their confidence is rebuked by the Prophet. For though God was among them, in ſome reſpect, as in their temple, and becauſe he did own them ſtill, as his peculiar people, and the like: yet they had driven him from that poſſeſſion of their hearts, (by which he might moſt truly and effectualy be ſaid to be among them,) by their corrupt lives, and abominable ſins; as is there more particularly declared unto them by the ſaid Prophet. Now for Chriſtians, (ſince the perfect light and revelation of eternal life, and rewards, as is ſhewed more at large upon Pſalme 37. Fret not thy ſelfe, &c. the caſe is not altogether the ſame. We cannot abſolutely ground, either privately or publickly, upon temporal deliverances, becauſe we know, and have juſt ground to confide, that God is with us, and among us. It is enough for us to know, and firmly to belive, that nothing ſhall, or can ſeparate us from the love of God: no ſword, famine, nakedneſſe, &c. that is, no kind of death, or calamity, though never ſo terrible to fleſh and blood: and that all things worke together for good, to them that love God: as the Apoſtle teacheth at large, Rom. 8. 28, 35, 36. &c. The ſame may be ſaid of the godly of thoſe times under the Law, ſometimes; as doth appear by many examples: eſpecially in the caſe of particular men, who might ſuffer ſometimes, though juſt and righteous themſelves, with the ungodly. And ſometimes alone, for particular ends, and trials, as Job did.

V. 6. You have ſhamed the counſel of the poor] By mocking them for truſting in God, Pſal. 22. 8.

V. 7. O that the ſalvation of Iſrael were come] Heb. Who will give, &c.

out of Zion] Some think though the occaſion of this Pſalm was in the time of Davids perſecutions under Saul, before he was poſſeſt of the Kingdom, and had ſettled the Ark of God (which he long before purpoſed and intended) in Zion: yet he might write this afterwards, when King, &c. Others make him pray to God for the ſpeedy accompliſhment of what, by Divine inſpiration, he intended; to wit, when he ſhould be eſtabliſhed in his Kingdom, to remove the Ark, and to ſettle it in that place. Out of Zion, then, becauſe of the Ark of God, and propitiatory there placed: to which (that is, to God, there reſident and preſident;) ſupplications were made, and deliverances commonly ſaid to come from thence: as Pſalme 20. 3. Send thee help from the Sanctuary, and ſtrengthen thee out of Sion. See alſo upon Pſal. 63. 2. To ſee thy power, &c. Or, Or, out of Sion, with reference to Chriſt, the expected Redeemer and Deliverer, the laſt refuge of the faithful Jewes in their greateſt diſtreſſes and calamities, (as to us Chriſtians, the coming of Chriſt unto judgement:) the conſolation of Iſrael: Luke 1. 25. who was promiſed, and expected out of Sion, Pſ. 10. 2. The Lord ſhall ſend, &c. becauſe at Sion, and Jeruſalem began the preaching of the Goſpel; according to that of Eſay 2. 3. for out of Sion ſhall go forth the Law: and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem.

when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people] He compares their miſery to a captivity; for the people were not captives in Davids time; as Job 42. 10.

PSAL. XV.

Verſ. 1. WHo ſhall abide in thy Tabernacle?] Pſ. 24. 3, &c. abide] Heb. ſojourn.

who ſhall dwell in thy holy hill?] The Tabernacle before, and the holy hill, here, (that is, mount Sion; or mount Moriah :) types and figures of heaven. For otherwiſe we know, that theſe places, were not places of habitation : eſpecially for ſo many, as either among the Jews, or in any other nation (Act. 10.34, 35. Of a truth I perceive. &c. But in every nation, &c.) were ſo qualified, as to pretend juſtly to theſe priviledges. It further appeareth by the laſt words : He that doth theſe things, ſhall never be moved : which cannot be made good, but of an everlaſting habitation : (Lu. 16.9.) ſuch as we know this preſent world doth not afford unto any. However, to love Gods houſes, built with the hands of men, with relation unto God, as they are Gods houſes; places of Gods worſhip ; appropriated to that uſe ; and to be converſant in them, (ſo long as God is, and may be ſerved in them, as he ſhould be:) with zeal and affection ; is a very good ſign ; and he that is a hearty Chriſtian will think it no ſmall happineſs in this world, to have the priviledge of ſuch a houſe, unto which he may freely repaire, and wherein he may perform his duties and devotions. I believe David did know what it was to worſhip God in ſpirit and truth; as well, as moſt in our dayes : and that he was not deficient in that kind of worſhip, we may gueſs by that intereſt he had in God (a man according to his own heart: 1 Sam. 13. 14. and elſewhere :) and by theſe very Pſalms of his, ſo high and ſublime in their kind, that they are able to carry a mans ſoul to heaven, whileſt he reads them, and to bring him to the ſight of Him, that cannot be ſeen with mortal eye ; if he reade with an innocent heart, and with competent zeal. Yet David as ſpiritual as he was, how heartily he did affect Gods material houſe, and ſolemne ſtanding ſervice, may ſufficiently appear by his own expreſſions, ſo frequent in theſe his Pſalms: whereof ſomewhat hath been ſaid upon Pſal. 27. v.8. ſeek ye my face, &c. They that have a more particular relation to Gods houſe, or houſes, all true lawfully ordained miniſters, they have reaſon to applaud their happineſs, for that neerer acceſs they have unto God, by their place, then other men ; and that intereſt they have, by their place, to his houſe, above other men. If they be of Davids ſpirit, they will: For a day in thy Court, is better then a thouſand, ſaith he. I had rather be a door-keeper in the houſe, &c. Pſal. 84.10. But they muſt be ſuch too, in their lives and converſations (beſides other qualifications more proper to that calling:) as he deſcribes here : elſe, their judgement will be ſo much the heavier, that having been ſo much honoured by God, they have ſo much diſhonoured Him. For the literal interpretation of theſe words, (which we willingly allow of, though not as chief and principal in this place:) we have Pſ. 84. 1. How amiable are thy tabernacles, &c. and v. 4. Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe, &c. where the literal meaning is moſt proper, and ſo principal. And ſo Pſ. 27.4. That I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord. See alſo upon Pſal. 43. 30. Send out thy light.

holy hill ?] Heb. hill of holineſs.

V. 2. He that walketh uprightly] The Heb. word(תם or תמים) properly imports ſimplicity and ſincerity of heart, which commends all our actions unto God, and without which our beſt actions before God, (ſuch as are outwardly & materially good, and of themſelves very commendable; but not done with reference unto God, and his glory; nor out of any true love of goodneſs theſe, but for ſome other end,) become greateſt ſins; hypocriſie being ſo great a ſin; as that all ſins are ſometimes comprehended under that name.

in] Or, with.

V. 3. taketh] Or, receiveth, or endureth.

V. 4. In whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned] It is out of all queſtion, that the original words do afford that ſenſe alſo that was in the former Engliſh tranſlation : He that ſetteth not by himſelf, but is lowly in his own eyes : which ſenſe is not rejected by any, as not agreeable to the Hebrew; but becauſe they conceive the other, (which we have here) to be more agreeable to the context. For, ſay they, moſt things here ſet down, have reference to mutual converſation; and therefore more likely that David intended here alſo ſomewhat to that purpoſe. Beſides, ſome ad the oppoſition between the two members of this verſ. a vile perſon contemned, but honoureth them, &c. I am not againſt this ſenſe, which moſt do follow ; though for the other, we have the authority of the Caldee Paraphraſt, of great antiquity, which is ſomewhat : nay and ſome Rabbins too, of very good account. But for the reaſons that are oppoſed, they are but plauſible, at the moſt, not convincing; of the firſt, which by moſt is inſiſted upon, we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak in the next Note, and ſhall examine of what force it is. But grant it plauſible ; may not this be as plauſible, that David intending here the deſcription of a perfect honeſt man that is in the right way to heaven ; as he deſcribes him by his moral performances, without which, it is certain that there is no way to heaven : and that all pretence to godlineſs without that, is but meer deluſion and hypocriſie: ſo alſo that he ſhould ad ſomewhat of a juſt and godly mans apprehenſion of his own inſufficiency, to perform or fulfil the law: upon apprehenſion whereof he muſt, laying aſide his own righteouſneſs, caſt himſelfe of neceſſity upon Gods mercy, and ſeek for ſome other way of ſalvation, then what he can find from his own performances ? This would be very well expreſſed by theſe words ſo rendred ; that ſetteth not by himſelf, but is lowly, &c. and would very well agree with Chriſts judgement concerning the proud and high-conceited Phariſee, (ſet out unto us as a very innocent moral man, and very charitable; &, but for his pride, blamleſs:) and the humble Publican, whoſe very profeſſion, a publican, was accounted a practiſe and profeſſion of ſinning, Luk. 18.9. &c. And as for the oppoſition of the members, objected againſt this ſenſe : I account them a very weake objection. For why is not the oppoſition as good, and as apparent, if we ſay, A man, who though he think of himſelfe, and his own parts and performances very meanly ; that is very apt to judge the beſt of others, and doth highly honour all them that make profeſſion of godlineſs, and live accordingly ? However my meaning is not ſo to commend this ſenſe, that I would paſs by the other, which I think very good and warrantable too : as was ſaid before.

In whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned] This muſt be underſtood with certain limitations. Firſt it muſt be a vile perſon indeed; not in our own private judgement ; nor upon a judgement grounded upon particular quarrels and intereſts ; (for moſt are very prone to fly in the face of them, whom they ſuppoſe to have done them wrong, though it may be a wrong judgement in them to think ſo; and that the caſe, by men indifferent, is otherwiſe apprehended:)but generally ſo accounted, by all, or moſt honeſt men, that make profeſſion of godlineſs. Secondly, we muſt diſtinguiſh between private men, and Magiſtrates. Fateor quidem ſi dominentur improbi, non ita ſpernendos eſſe, quin illis pareamus, &c. I muſt confeſſe, if wicked men be in power, we may not ſo far contemn them, but that we muſt yield obedience unto them ſo far, &c. they are the words of one upon this place, whoſe zeal was not alwayes tempered with ſo much diſcretion and moderation, as himſelf, in ſome of his Prefaces and Epiſtles, doth acknowledge and bemoane ; as might be wiſhed : however, for his zeal, and much other worth, by men of zeal and moderation worthily honoured : but very unhappy in many of his Diſciples and Abettors, whoſe ignorant rigidneſs, in the moſt, and contempt of all antiquity, hath been the occaſion of many troubles both in Church, and Common-wealth. But this, obiter only. If we muſt obey bad men in authority, in all lawful commands ; much leſs are we allowed to revile them. Job 34.18. Is it fit to ſay to a King, &c. and Exod. 22. 27. confirmed by St. Paul, Act. 23.4, 5. However ſo far a vile man (wicked, impious, ſacrilegious, &c.) though in authority may and muſt be contemned by us, that what reſpect we give him, muſt be in ſubmiſſion and obedience to God; not out of any admiration, or high eſteem we have of his greatneſs, wealth, honour, power: which things we muſt look upon with a generous ſcorn, and contempt: nor think them happy for this their exaltation, and glory, be it more or leſs: but rather (within our ſelves, at leſt) pity them, as men accurſed (in their condition) in the eyes of God: (Pſal. 92.7. When the wicked ſpring as the graſſe, &c.) and pray to God to keep us and our friends from ſuch places, ſuch preferment, ſuch proſperity; and to bleſs the condition of an honeſt beggar, before theirs. As for others that are no Magiſtrates, and are known to have proſpered by wickedneſs, it were not amiſs if ſuch were publickly ſcorned by all men, ne ſe magnum aliquid adeptos putent, qui huc felicitate perveniunt, ut rideantur : that they may have no occaſion to applaud themſelves, but to repent, when they ſee what is the fruit (even in this world) of their unrighteous courſes; rather to be an obiect of ſcorn, then of envie.

he that ſweareth to his own hurt, &c.] He that ſweareth to his neighbour, and diſappointeth him not : was our old tranſlation, embraced not only by all, or moſt ancients, and by all Moderne Interpreters and Commentators of the Roman party: (as many, at leaſt, as I have ſeen:) but ſo well liked of by moſt of our ſide, that were it not for the Hebrew points, which are conceived to croſs it, they ſhew a good inclination to prefer it, before that we have here. Indeed there is reaſon for it : the ſame as was alledged before, for that ſence, In whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned : becauſe moſt paſſages in this deſcription, or character of a moral honeſt man ; are conceived to relate to mutual converſation. I confeſſe, that is ſome reaſon; but not of ſuch force, that except we can anſwer what is objected againſt it, I would think my ſelf bound to give it the firſt place. The objection is, that הרע ſo pointed as we find it in our Hebrew Bibles, ſignifieth malum, not proximum. The one to be read harangs, the other, hareangh. Calvins words are obſervable: Optimè quadraret Græca verſio ; niſi puncta obſtarent : quibus tametſi nunquam caruerunt Hebræi, credible tamen eſt, non ſemper ſcribendo fuiſſe ab illis expreſſa. It is not likely, ſaith he, though points have alwayes been, yet that they were always written. Any man may ſee, what he aims at, when he doth ſay ſo. Yet he dares not but embrace the other verſion. Another tells us plainly, (a man of great exactneſſe, for the text, and particular words, as any hath written upon the Bible:) that though it be not ſo uſually, yet he knows no reaſon to the contrary, but that rang both here, and in ſome other places of Scripture, may be taken for reangh, the difference being ſo ſmall. It cannot be denied, but that there be examples, good ſtore, of far greater anomalies and permutations of words, in the Scriptures : which have been collected by learned men, and are obvious enough to men acquainted with theſe ſtudies. However, ſince that ſenſe is good too, and very warrantable, that is made of the words, without this ſhift; there's no reaſon that we ſhould impoſe it upon any man againſt his will ; this that we have ſpoken of, I mean, generally ſo well approved of, but not ſo well agreeing with the common uſe and notion of the word, רע : at leaſt, ſo pointed. We ſhall therefore take that ſenſe into conſideration too, and another too, beſides that, though not ordinarily taken notice of ; after we have ſaid ſomewhat more of this we are now upon. Of which all that we have more to ſay, is concerning the word reangh, in this and the former verſes, commonly tranſlated proximus, or neighbour; that we take heed of the miſtake of the Phariſees, who by neighbour, in the Scripture, (as where we are commanded to love our neighbour, and the like;)underſtood them that lived neer, and whom we daily converſe with : whereas by the idiotiſm, and propriety of the Hebrew tongue, רע or הרע (in both places, at leaſt :) is no more then ἕτερος, or alter : any man (friend, or foe; known, or unknown :) that comes in our way, and whom, for the preſent, we have to do with. And ſo the Apoſtle Paul, what he found in the Hebrew, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour : he very well exppreſſeth in the Greek, ἀγαπήσεις τὸν ἕτερον. Ὁ γὰρ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἕτερον, ſaith he : For he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the Law, Rom. 13. 8. Neither is this proper to the Hebrew word onely : for both the Grecians uſe their ὁ πέλας ; and the Latins, their ſocius, much after the ſame manner ; as might appear by divers examples, if need were. However, it doth not follow from this, but that we may owe ſome duties to a neighbour, which we do not to a ſtranger : as again, ſuch a caſe there may be, where we ought to preferre a poor ſtranger, before a neighbour. But theſe Notes are not for the examination of ſuch caſes.

he that ſweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.] Moſt Jewes expound this, to his own hurt, of penances, by vowes impoſed upon our ſelves, whether upon our own bodies, purſes, goods, or any thing that belongs unto us. In this ſence, the word evil perchance, would be more proper then hurt. The Grecians alſo call ſuch penances, ſuch eſpecially, that are inflicted upon the body, κακώσεις, and κακουχίας. As this ſence is not to be excluded,ſince we know that this very thing was taken into conſideration by the Law of God ; ſo I grant that I ſee no reaſon to make it the proper ſence of the words. It is ordinary for men to make bargaines, and to paſs their words,and to confirm them by oath,and afterwards to repent. Or to promiſe of their one accord, and to bind themſelves by oaths,and afterwards to be ſorry. It were well,if Chriſtians,ordinary Chriſtians were as ſtrict,and conſcientious in keeping their oaths, as ordinary heathens,Romans eſpecially, have been. But a hundred evaſions have been found out by Chriſtians,that were never thought of by heathens; or if uſed by ſome,yet condemned by moſt : yea and ſeveral puniſhed in ſome places. As for forced oaths,or unlawful oaths,it affords many ſpeculations,and limitations,which we are not here to determine of.I find a third tranſlation and interpretation of the words : that ſweareth to do evil (to another, to be ſupplied) but doth not recompence it : or, fulfil it. This ſence is not very probable, and therefore leſs will ſerve of it. It is true,it is the part of an honeſt man, if he have made any ſuch vow, or oath, not to keep it ; but to repent of his raſhneſs,and perjury. For though there may be more hurt in the execution,then in the perjury ; yet the unlawfulneſs of the execution, doth not acquit him of the guilt of perjury before God. A godly man that makes conſcience of idle words, will not eaſily inſnare himſelf with ſuch raſh oaths : and therefore though ſuch a thing may happen perchance,yet it is very unlikely that David in this his deſcription, among other particulars of daily occurrence, would inſiſt in a caſe ſo extraordinary as this.

and changeth not] He that will not hinder his Neighbour,though he hinder himſelf, v. 4.

V. 5. He that putteth not out his mony to uſury] There is no obſcurity in the words, but about the thing, uſury ; many queſtions are raiſed, which to diſcuſſe, or determine, would require more room, then ſuch Annotations can afford. The common diſtinction of biting, and more moderate uſury, hath no ground at all in Scripture; neither is the bare Etymology of the word,a ſufficient ground to build ſuch a diſtinction upon. For certain it is, that the Jewes were forbidden all manner of uſury, without any ſuch difference among themſelves. But to one that was a ſtranger, they might put money to uſe ; that was permitted. What from hence may be gathered, or whether any thing at all, to make it lawful among Chriſtians, thoſe that have written of this controverſie at large, may be conſulted. See, among others, learned Grotius upon Luke 6. 35. μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες.

taketh reward againſt the innocent] Exod. 23. 7, 8. Deut. 16. 19.

he that doth theſe things] For, not the hearer,but the doer of the Law ſhall be juſtified Rom. 2. 13. and, Happy are ye; not, if ye know theſe things : but if ye do them, Joh.13.17. A doctrine much to be preſſed, becauſe many deceived, 1 Cor. 7. 9, 10. and Gal. 6. 7. through ignorance of it.

ſhall never be moved] Out of an happy eſtate, into which he is entred already,Pſal.55.22.Prov.10.30.& 12.3. This may go for the literal meaning of the words,not altogether to be rejected, becauſe even to us Chriſtians (though to be underſtood with many limitations and reſtrictions,) the Apoſtle ſaith : That godlineſs is profitable unto all things,having promiſe of the life that now is,and of that which is to come : 1 Tim.4.8.and that this literal ſence and meaning ſeemeth alſo to be further confirmed by the Prophet Eſay, He that walketh righteouſly and ſpeaketh uprightly, he that deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſion,&c. He ſhall dwell on high : his place of defence ſhall be the munition of rocks,&c. Eſay 33. 15, 16. However, we muſt ſtill remember,that it is the proper ſtile of the Law,under the types and figures of things material and temporal, to propoſe unto us, that are now come to the full light of the Goſpel,and to the knowledge of thoſe myſteries concerning the Kingdom of heaven,which were not known in former times ; to us, I ſay, Chriſtians,things ſpiritual and eternal. And more particularly, that the mount and tabernacle here ſpoken of, are to be underſtood myſtically,as to the chief intention of the Pſalmiſt ; as hath been ſaid upon the firſt verſe.

PSAL. XVI.

Title.

Michtam] Some render, A golden Pſalm, which the words would beare, and the mater of this Pſalme being very ſublime, as treating of the reſurrection of Chriſt, &c. would be not improbable, were there not other Pſalms ſo inſcribed, of which (eminently above the reſt) no ſuch thing can be ſaid. Others therefore take it for an inſtrument of Muſick : Others for a certain Tune. Eugubinus upon them Pſalmes hath divers other conjectures and expoſitions : but not any, that he can fixe upon. Nothing more certain, then that it is uncertain what to make of it. See upon former Pſalmes 7, &c.

Verſ. 1. IN thee do I put my truſt] The Pſalmiſt doth often preſſe this, and repeate it in his greateſt extremities, ſometimes with much variety of words, and ſometimes repetition of the ſame ; that he had great confidence in God. *I will ſay of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortreſſe;my God,in him will I truſt,*Pſ.91.2.And this, not without cauſe, but upon a ſure confidence, grounded upon good experience,that God did delight in nothing more,then that a man ſhould put his truſt in him,Pſal.50.14,15. Offer,&c. And call upon me, &c. and Pſal. 147. 10.11. He delighteth not, &c. The Lord taketh pleaſure,&c. St. Chryſoſtome, upon the tenth Pſalm 8. verſe, maintaineth, that even ſinners, yea great ſinners, if they put confidence in God,are able to do much : and become ἀχείρωτοι, that is, to others inconquerable. It may ſeem ſtrange,and ſomewhat contrary to ſome places of Scripture : himſelf acknowledgeth it θαυμαστὸν : a ſtrang thing : yet I believe he ſpake it upon good experience, Acts 14.9. it is recorded of a certain creeple : The ſame heard Paul ſpeak : who ſtedfaſtly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed &c. For want of which *faith,*or confidence,we read that Chriſt himſelf did not (nay could not, Mar.6.6.) do many mighty works in his own countrey, Math. 13. laſt verſe. We might enlarge our ſelves upon this ſubject,if Davids words required it. All we ſhall adde is that if Chriſtians every where did well underſtand the nature of God in this one point, and particular ; there would not be ſuch ſuing to Saints, and to the bleſſed Virgin (ever to be remembred with all honour and reſpect ;) as is in many places, God himſelfe, in Chriſt, would oftner be called upon, and oftner thought upon, then he is.

V. 2. My goodneſſe extendeth not to thee] As Job 22. 2. & 35.7. Nor my goods, Pſal.50.9.&c. and this ſeems the moſt genuine ſenſe of the words : though ſome (men of eminent worth otherwiſe) upon this ground, that becauſe ſome parts of this Pſalm do certainly belong unto Chriſt, as applied to him by the Apoſtles, therefore all muſt : upon this ground, they have deviſed this ſenſe : my good not ; that is, my ſufferings and afflictions, my croſſe and paſſion, עליך, is for thee,and from thee : that is,ſay they, not occaſioned by any ſin, or proper tranſgreſſion of mine ; but to ſatisfie thy Juſtice,&c. But as I conceive their ground to be but weak, (as may appear by divers other Pſalms, and particular Chapters of Prophets, where this rule doth not hold) ſo this interpretation as violent.

V. 3. But to the Saints] My goodneſſe, as they that concur with me in the ſame affection of zeal for thy glory : that think it greateſt happineſſe, to ſee piety and religion promoted, &c. and my goods, as they that have a peculiar intereſt in them.

and excellent] Excellency is often aſcribed to God, and to thoſe things that belong to him more neerly. His Name alone is excellent, Pſal. 148. 14. and, the excellency of Jacob, in the Prophets often ; and Pſal. 47. 4. His excellency is over Iſrael, Pſal 68. 34. As if he ſaid here ; My goodneſſe is nothing to the Holy One, and Excellent of Heaven ; but to the Saints and excellent upon earth ; whoſe neerer relation unto God, and imitation of his holineſſe, &c. gives them right (among men) to theſe titles.

V. 4. their ſorrowes] עצבות in the Original : and עצבים from the ſame radix, being taken for Idols ; as Jer. 22. 28. &c. ſome think the former alſo ſhould have that meaning in this place. However,if we like better of that more proper ſignification, ſorrows ; yet ſince Idols are here ſpoken of, certain it is, that the Pſalmiſt doth thereby allude to the etymology of the word עצבים taken for Idols, coming from a radix that ſignifies dolore afficere, to occaſion grief, or pain. Now Superſtition and Idolatry may be ſaid to occaſion ſorrow and grief,and trouble of minde,in many reſpects ; which is ſhewed at large by Plutarch in his Treatiſe Περὶ δεισιδαιμονίας, and ſome others of the Ancients, that have written againſt Superſtition.

haſten after another] Or, give gifts to another.

their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer] He would neither do as they did, nor honour them ſo much as to name them.

names into my lips] Exod. 23. 13. Joſh. 23. 7.

V. 5. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance] Deut. 32. 9. Lam. 3. 24. Inheritances were divided, and drink likewiſe in banquets, of old : each had his part. Let others chooſe worldly comforts, God is my portion.

of mine inheritance] Heb. of my part.

thou maintaineſt my lot] Thou not onely giveſt it me at firſt, but alſo preſerveſt me in it againſt my foes.

V. 6. The lines are fallen unto me in pleaſant places] That is, my inheritance.The land was divided of old by lines,Iſa.34.17.Pſal.78. 55. The word might have been tranſlated portion here, as well as Joſh. 17. 5, 9. & 19. 9. and elſewhere. A portion is fallen to me, &c. It is the ſame word in the Original.

V. 7. my reines alſo inſtruct me in the night ſeaſons] Job 33. 15. Night after night; for the word is, nights, In which time thou doeſt, by ſecret inſpirations, inſtruct me, Pſal 51. 6. Or, my inward thoughts or affections direct me to praiſe God. It is certain, that according to the Scripture phraſe, or rather, Hebrew dialect, and idiotiſme, the reins are often put for the heart: or at leaſt, the ſame adſcribed to the one, as is to the other. So God as he is ſaid to ſearch the heart, ſo the reines, often: and ſo joy, as to the heart, Prov. 23. 15. my heart ſhall rejoyce: ſo to the reines in the next verſe, yea my reines ſhall rejoyce; is aſcribed. To ſeeke a naturall reaſon, (which ſome do here) I think is not ſo neceſſary, as I think it impertinent, in any body, to require it. For common words and expreſſions, in all languages, generally, (and every language hath its proper cuſtome) go more by uſe and cuſtome, then by any reaſon grounded upon nature. Purgatis auribus, and emunctâ nare doth very well in the Latine, to expreſſe quickneſſe of ſenſe and apprehenſion: in ſome other language it would be meere nonſenſe. So, pectus ſapiens; and expectorare ſapientiam; and the like. However, it is common to all languages, to ſet out wiſdome, and counſel, by profundity, and ſecrecy, to which purpoſe the reines fit very well; beſides what may be ſaid of their reſemblance to the heart it ſelfe, obſerved by Hippocrates, and further explained by Anatomiſts. See alſo upon Pſal. 38. 7. For my loynes, &c. Now becauſe the motions of Gods Spirit, are ſecret and inviſible; and the fitteſt time for them, when we are freeſt from other objects, and moſt retired to our ſelves; which is chiefly in the night, upon our beds: therefore moſt Interpreters, by this inſtruction of the reines here mentioned, underſtand, divine inſpiration, ſanctified thoughts, ſecret inſtincts, and the like; which may receive ſome confirmation from Pſal. 51. verſe 6. Behold thou deſireſt truth in the inwardparts; and in the hidden part thou haſt made me to know wiſdome. Anatomiſts teach, that the kidneyes have two membranes; an inward, very thin, without any fat, or veines: and an outward, which is very thick of fat: inſomuch, that in groſſe bodies, the kidneyes are as it were hidden, and appear not eaſily. And therefore ſay ſome of them, to ſearch the reines, in Scripture, is as much as, to ſeek out, and to bring to light, things that are hidden, and abſtruſe. Their confidence makes me take notice of it: but if we were to diſcourſe it, ſomewhat elſe might be found, not leſſe probable and ſatisfactory, I believe; but whether more true, I know not.

V. 8. I have ſet the Lord, &c.] Act. 2. 25. Heb. equally ſet. I have looked on him without irregular affections and paſſions.

before me] In my heart, by Faith; in obedience, as my mark; in ſincerity, as my Judge; in hope, as my Rewarder and Reward.

he is at my right hand] To uphold and defend me.

right hand] Pſal. 73. 23. & 110. 5. & 121. 5.

V. 9. Therefore my heart is glad] Even in laughter the heart is ſorrowful, ſometimes: witneſſe the Wiſe man, Prov. 14. 13. That is true joy, that comes from the heart; and communicates it ſelfe to other parts; as to the tongue particularly: by which it workes, (except it be kept in of purpoſe) and ſhewes it ſelfe abroad. For out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh, Matth. 12. 34.

my glory rejoyceth] Meaning his tongue, Pſal. 30. 12. & 57. 8. Act. 2. 26. Gen. 49. 6. according to ſome tranſlations. For mans tongue is the inſtrument of glorifying God, and mans glory above the beaſts, that have tongues and ſpeak not.

my fleſh alſo ſhall reſt in hope] In hope of reſurrection, when it is in the grave, ver. 10.

reſt in hope] Heb. dwell confidently.

V. 10. For thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, neither, &c. Act. 2. 31. & 13. 35.

For thou wilt not leave] This is meant of Chriſt, who raiſed himſelfe, having not ſeen corruption, and will raiſe all his to glory.

my ſoul in hell] Or, me in the grave, Pſal. 3. 2. & 11. 1. as Lev. 22. 4. or rather, my body in the grave. So it ſuits beſt with that which followes, and with Peters proof of Chriſts reſurrection, Act. 2. 27, 31. ſoul, for dead body, Lev. 21. 1. Num. 6. 6. the other word is put for the grave, Gen. 37. 35.

V. 11. In thy preſence is fulneſſe of joy] Rather, Thou wilt ſhew me fulneſſe of joy with thy countenance; for ſo it is interpreted, Act. 2. 28. Except we ſhould follow their tranſlation, who there alſo tranſlate the Greek, μετὰ τοῦ προσώπου σου: in tui conſpectu; that is, in thy preſence; as Beza doth: and this tranſlation fits better to the purpoſe of the Apoſtle there, ſpeaking of the reſurrection.

at thy right hand, &c.] Or, by thy right hand thou wilt ſhew me pleaſures for evermore, Act. 2. 33. If ſo be that the Apoſtle there did intend theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, which is not likely: neither was that their proper place, if he had intended them, but ver. 28. It is more likely that Chriſt did allude to theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Mat. 25. 33, 34. where by the right hand of God, is plainly meant, eternal life. So expreſſed in the 46. verſe.

PSAL. XVII.

Verſ. 1. HEar the right] My plea for my righteous cauſe.

not out of feigned lips] Heb. without lips of deciet. The deceitfulneſſe of the heart, is often adſcribed unto the lips, becauſe the lips and tongue are the uſual inſtruments of deceit. So the Iſraelites, in their adverſity, they ſought unto God, with diligence and earneſtneſſe, Pſal. 78. 34. When he ſlew them, &c. but it followes there; Neverthele ſſe, they did flatter him with their mouth; and they lyed unto him with their tongues. For their heart was not right with him: neither were they ſtedfaſt in his Covenant, 36, 37. It ſhould be our firſt care, before we put up our prayers unto God, to take ſome time, to examine our hearts, and conſciences, whether all be right there; and ſo may we pray with confidence.

V. 2. Let my ſentence come forth from thy preſence] Make it known that I have a juſt cauſe.

V. 3. in the night] When none but thou couldſt ſee me, and my ſoul free from buſineſſe, was in its own poſture.

thou haſt tryed me] Strictly examined me, as gold is tryed by fire.

ſhalt finde nothing: I am purpoſed that my mouth ſhall not tranſgreſſe] Or, haſt found nothing: I did purpoſe that my mouth ſhould not tranſgreſſe.

I am purpoſed that my mouth ſhall not tranſgreſſe. 4. Concerning, &c.] The words in the Original Hebrew, if taken by themſelves, are all plain enough, but the conſtruction and connexion of them is very intricate and obſcure. Some of the moſt accurate, tranſlate the former words: Quod cogito, non tranſgredietur os meum. Or, quod cogitavi, non tranſivit os meum; which they expound to this purpoſe, as if he profeſſed, that he was no hypocrite or diſſembler; but that what his heart conceived, his mouth uttered, and no other. Though we cannot finde fault with this tranſlation of the words, neither with the ſence, or ſentence (if conſidered in it ſelf) that they gather out of it; yet how to gather that ſence from thoſe words, I do not well ſee. The ſame tranſlation leaving out the quod, which they adde to the Text, to make that ſence they would have, will afford this ſence alſo, which we have here approved of by ſome of the beſt: and I ſhould think Pſal. 39. 1. I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſin not with my tongue: I will keep, &c. if nothing elſe ſhould put it quite out of doubt. There is more difficulty in the next words, how to connect them either with that before, or that which follows. But muſt follow this ſence, as if he intended to profeſſe his innocency in matter both of words, and workes. Concerning words, thus; I am purpoſed, &c. as it is in the former verſe. Concerning matter of works, and life, (that is, in his expreſſion; Concerning the works of men) By the word of thy lips, &c. that is, ſay they, being guided and directed by thy word, I have kept my ſelf, &c. Pſal. 52. if well conſidered, may much confirm this expoſition, where proud words, and violent works (here ſtyled, the paths of the deſtroyer) are interchangeably ſet out, and condemned. Yea, Pſal. 140. 11. a man of tongue, and the violent (איש לשון and איש חמס) are put together in one verſe. Such a one the Greeks in one word expreſſe, μεγαλήγορον. If this will ſatisfie, it is well. But becauſe divers are not ſatisfied with it; neither indeed doth the coherence ſo cleerly appear, which breeds new conjectures, and expoſitions; I ſhall further adde; Firſt, that theſe former words, Quod cogito, non tranſgredietur os meum: may very well, from Pſal. 39. 1, 2. be rendred: what I think; (or, What thoughts ſoever ariſe in me; yet) I will not offend with my tongue: I will be ſilent. Then ſecondly, that thoſe words immediately following, which here begin a new verſe, to wit, Concerning the works of men, may as well, if not in verſe, yet in ſentence be joyned to the former: as if he ſaid, What I think; or, What is in my heart, concerning the works of men, ſhall not paſſe my mouth; that is, Though I ſee the proſperity of the wicked, and what many godly ſuffer in this world, and thereupon my heart within me is moved often with indignation; yet I will take heed that I offend not with my tongue; no man ſhall hear me murmure againſt God, or queſtion his providence therefore. Then, By the word of thy lips, &c. that is; Neither ſhall I be tempted (being better inſtructed by the Word of God) by the ſucceſſe of the wicked and violent, to follow their example. Beſt Interpreters agree, that the proſperity of the wicked is here ſpoken of by David: which is alſo confirmed by Pſal. 73. which treats wholly of that ſubject, where we finde ſome of theſe expreſſions, as ver. 2. My feet were almoſt gone; my feet were well nigh ſlipt; as here, verſe following, Hold up my goings in thy pathes, that my footſteps ſlip not. And as here, I am purpoſed, that my mouth ſhall not offend: So there, verſe 15. If I ſay, I will ſpeak thus; behold I ſhould offend, &c. Neither is it a bold thing to queſtion the truth or fitneſſe of thoſe diviſions into Chapters and verſes, which is done by divers upon occaſion, and may be done by any without offence, ſince that it is not authentick, but of later (as all men agree) inſtitution or invention.

V. 5. Hold up my goings] I obſerved thy word as my circle, that I might walk uprightly by keeping within it.

Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footſteeps ſlip not] Heb. To uphold my goings in thy paths, that my footſteps might not ſlip.

ſlip not] Heb. be not moved.

V. 6. for thou wilt hear me] Becauſe thou uſeſt to hear me, I believe thou wilt hear me now, Pſal. 116. 2.

V. 7. Shew thy marvelous loving kindneſſe] Pſal. 31. 21.

that ſaveſt by thy right hand, &c.] Or, that ſaveſt them which truſt in thee from thoſe that riſe up againſt thy right hand; that is, againſt thy power; to fruſtrate thy counſel.

V. 15. As for me, I will behold thy face in righteouſneſſe] I will not live wickedly, as they do, but righteouſly, and then I ſhall enjoy thy favour here, and heaven hereafter, Matth. 5. 8. 1 Cor. 13. 12. Some think by all this, are onely meant thoſe inward joyes and comforts, ariſing from a ſenſe of Gods favour, and certain confidence of his love, proper to the godly in their greateſt croſſes and afflictions; theſe to be meant by the face of God here; and by his likeneſſe. But if they reſtrain thoſe joyes, to preſent ſenſe and feeling onely, and make not things future, and hoped for, to be their chief object; David having yielded in the former verſe ſo fully the comforts of this world to worldly men; I do not ſee where the ſtrength of the antitheſis (As for me, &c) doth lie, if he alſo looked no further. It is true, theſe ſpiritual joyes are incomparably greater, and ſweeter then any temporal can be; but as the earneſt, or firſt fruits of that which we expect to be perfected in heaven, in the perfect injoyment of God, face to face, &c. So the Apoſtle teſtifies of Moſes, that he deſpiſed the treaſures of Egypt, &c. becauſe he had a regard to the recompence of the reward, Heb. 11. 26. And might not David as well? Beſides this, the words themſelves, of themſelves, ſeem to import as much: and it was not perchance without ſome alluſion to them, that in the New Teſtament, to ſee God, Heb. 12. 14. and to ſee the face of God, Revel. 22. 4. is taken for eternal life. As for the word תמונה tranſlated, likeneſs: Saint John might perchance allude to it, 1 Epiſt. 3. 2. We know that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him. This expreſſion: the likeneſſe of God, we find alſo Numb. 12. 8. where Moſes is ſaid to have ſeen the ſimilitude, or likeneſſe (it is the ſame word, as is here) of God; by which moſt underſtand, the glory: and ſo is the word tranſlated there by the Septuagint; as here alſo, δόξα in both places: and becauſe we find the tranſlation of the Septuagint often retained in the New Teſtament, it is poſſible there might be ſome alluſion to this place, where the Kingdom of heaven, or eternal life, is expreſſed by this word, either δόξα alone, or, δόξα θεῦ; as Rom. 5. 2, & 8. 18. and elſewhere. From all which, I conclude that David, in theſe words, had a further aim, then this world, and things preſent; whether ſpiritual, or temporal.

Title.

ſervant of the Lord] Pſal. 36. 1.

this ſong in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, &c.] 2 Sam. 22.

from the hand Saul] Eſpecially of Saul, his greateſt enemy, Mark 16. 7.

This ἐπινίκιον, or pſalm of victory, we finde inferred in the Hiſtory of the Kings 2 Sam. 22. but not without ſome, though to the ſubſtance of the Pſalm not very material, yet obſervable variations and differences of words: which how they hapned, is not ſo eaſie to reſolve, as they are conſpicuous. The chiefeſt are, ſome additions and omiſſions; if we may ſo call, what is more in the one, then we finde in the other: an addition, where it is found: an omiſſion, where it is not. Which nevertheleſſe muſt be underſtood with ſobriety, not as though there were any thing in either, abſolutely and ſimply, either abounding or wanting; but onely comparatively. Beſides the firſt verſe here, which is not in Samuel, ſuch differences of ſmall additions, or omiſſions may be obſerved in the ſecond verſe, compared with 1 Sam. 21. 3. and in the 13. compared with the 14. of that Chapter in Samuel; and again in the 14. compared with the 15. and in the 35. compared with 26. Now the cauſe of theſe differences; though not any can be given perchance of which we can be confident, yet it is probable, that they were found in Copies written with Davids own hands; or that they were ſo fitted, (either by David himſelfe, or with his approbation,) to different inſtruments of muſick, or different parts, in concords. As for differences in ſingle words, thoſe that proceed from a bare metatheſis, or tranſpoſition of letters, as עברו, and בערו in the 12. verſe, compared with 13. in Samuel; and תתפתל in the 26. compared with the 27. in Samuel; and the like, if any other be of that nature: as alſo thoſe, where the difference is of one letter onely, as ידא, and ירא in the 10. verſe, compared with the 11. in Samuel: and one or two more, of the like nature: in all theſe, Interpreters needed not for one ſuch letters difference, or tranſpoſition, to have made a difference of ſence, or interpretation, ſince that in divers other places of Scripture, ſuch tranſpoſitions, and changes of ſingle letters in ſome words are found, which nevertheleſſe are taken for the ſame, and make no difference at all in the tranſlation. The Maſorah of the Hebrews will afford ſtore of examples in this kind, to them that are acquainted with it.

Verſ. 1. I Will love thee] Heb. ארחמך that is, intimately, as a mother loves her childe that comes out of her womb.

V. 2. The Lord is my Rock, &c.] He uſeth this diverſity of names, to ſhew the greatneſſe of his confidence in God, a great ground of his deliverance. See upon Pſal. 16. 1. In thee do I put my truſt. As alſo to declare, that he aſcribed his deliverance unto God onely.

V. 3. I will call] Or, I called.

V. 4. The ſorrowes of death compaſſed me] Pſal. 116. 3. The better to ſet out the greatneſſe of his deliverance, he doth amplifie by Rhetorical metaphors the greatneſſe of his danger, and diſtreſſe. When the danger is once over, many men are apt to forget what they have eſcaped, whereby the vigour of their thankfulneſſe is much abated. See Pſal. 22. 22. I will declare, &c.

hell] Or, the grave.

the ſnares of death prevented me] Deadly ſnares, or engines ſet for my death, Eccleſ. 9. 12. Prov. 13. 14. and 14. 27.

V. 7. Then the earth ſhook and trembled] This and what follows to the 15. verſe, (incluſivè, as we uſe to ſpeak,) is not to be taken as a ſimple or hiſtorical relation of what happened, but as a Poetical deſcription of Gods preſence and (in his powerful help and aſſiſtance,) concurrence, in Davids conqueſts. The Scripture, even where no Poetry otherwiſe is ſuſpected, is full of ſuch Poetical, or to ſpeak more properly, ſublime deſcriptions and expreſſions, far above the ſtrain of the moſt ſublime either Poets, or Orators. So the Prophets ſpeak often of Chriſt, the Son of God, his coming into the world: a high ſubject indeed, and well deſerving higheſt expreſſions; though in the manner of the execution to outward appearance, a very myſtery of humiliation. So upon divers other occaſions. This not underſtood by the Jewes, hath been a great occaſion (and ſo of divers others, beſides them,) of their infidelity.

V. 8. out of his] Heb. by his.

V. 9. He bowed the heavens alſo and came down] Pſal. 144. 5.

wings of the winde] Pſal. 104. 3.

V. 13. The Lord alſo thundred in the Heavens, &c.] What is here ſpoken of, of thunder, and lightnings, &c. in this and the next verſe; and of hailſtones in the former, whereby great Armies have been overthrown, and the victory by heaven caſt upon the weaker party, hath really happened more then once. Beſides what we read Joſh. 10. to that purpoſe, Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories tell us of the very like that happened under ſeveral Emperours; and of a certain Romane Legion from thence (becauſe at their prayers obtained) called κεραυνοβόλος. However, we do not read of any ſuch thing that hapned in Davids Wars, or time; and therefore, as was ſaid before upon the former verſe, conceive this to be rather a poetical expreſſion, and acknowledgement of Gods help and favour to David, as though he had been viſibly ſeen; with alluſion alſo to what had happened in former times, as Joſh. 10. and elſewhere. So is Iſa. 29. 6. alſo by the moſt, as allegorically ſpoken: but by ſome, taken literally.

the Higheſt gave his voice] Thundred, lightened, and hailed, Job 37. 2, 4. Pſal. 29. 3.

V. 14. he ſent out his arrowes] His lightnings.

V. 16. he drew me out of many waters] Out of ſundry and great dangers.

many waters] Or, great waters.

V. 17. From my ſtrong enemy] To wit, Saul.

they were too ſtrong for me] Therefore God ſent me ſuccour.

V. 18. but the Lord was my ſtay] My ſtaffe, to keep me from falling.

V. 19. large place] Pſal. 118. 5.

becauſe he delighted in me.] He delighteth not, &c. The Lord taketh pleaſure in them that feare him ; in thoſe that hope in his mercy, Pſal. 147. 10, 11.

V. 20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſſe, &c.] Some would have David by this, and all that followes to the 25. and 26. verſes, to have no further aim or meaning: then to aſſert the juſtneſſe of his cauſe againſt Saul, and others, that had oppoſed him. And I make no queſtion but his words have a more ſpecial reference to his carriage in that buſineſſe. But nevertheleſſe, they are more general, then to be reſtrained to that onely. Yet we muſt not think, that he intended by theſe words to juſtifie himſelfe before God abſolutely, as in ſtrictneſſe of Law, blameleſſe and innocent, which himſelfe (Pſal. 143. 2. And enter not into judgement with thy ſervant, &c. Pſal. 130. 3. If thou Lord ſhouldſt mark iniquity, &c. and elſewhere often) doth openly, and clearly diſclaim ; but onely to profeſſe a general deſire and indeavour to ſerve God, and to keep his Commandements : which, if true and ſincere, will in any man beget a religious (ſo far as man is capable) and innocent life. Such a life and reſolution, out of Gods bounty and goodneſſe, having promiſes of Gods favour and protection, David might well lay claim to it, (a good evidence of his faith and truſt in God,) and deſire God to reward him accordingly, though not for the merits of the works themſelves ; which is another thing.

V. 22. I did not put away his ſtatutes from me] No danger could keep him from obeying God.

V. 23. before] Heb. with.

from mine iniquity] From following my corrupt affections, to the ſin I was moſt enclined unto.

V. 24. in his eye-ſight] Heb. before his eyes.

V. 25. With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thy ſelfe merciful] He ſpeaketh of God, according to our capacity, who ſheweth mercy to his, and puniſheth the wicked, Levit. 26. 21, 24, 27, 28.

V. 26. thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſelfe froward] There is an ἀντανάκλασις, as they call it, in this, and the former words : that is, when the ſame word is repeated in a ſentence, but in a different ſence ; as periiſem, niſi periiſem ; and the like. Frowardneſſe in man, or ſpoken of man, is a vice oppoſed to truth and ſincerity. It may import alſo, ſtubborneſſe and perverſneſſe. Spoken of God, it imports no more, then that God will meet with them that are ſuch in their own way, and make them reap the fruits of their own doings. Much to the ſame purpoſe as that of Job, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſſe : and the counſel of the froward is carried headlong, Job 5. 13. However, the words in the Original Hebrew, are different in this place : yet is the tranſlation by the ſame word, ſufficiently warranted, both by what goes before, and by what we find elſewhere in the ſame kinde ; as Levit. 26. 27, 28. If you will not for all this hearken unto me, but walke contrary unto me : Then will I walk contrary unto you alſo, So in the Engliſh there : but moſt tranſlate it, Si vos perverſè ; (vel, temerè) ego viciſſim perverſè, (vel, temerè) contra vos. So Prov. 3. 34. he ſcorneth the ſcorners, &c. and Deut. 32. 5. both words עקש & פתל (written there, in forma reduplicativa, פתלתל) are uſed, and put together for one thing. Theſe words 1 Sam. 22. 27. are tranſlated, and with the froward, thou wilt ſhew thy ſelfe unſavory. So in the Text : in the margin, wreſtle. But there is no reaſon at all for this difference. For it is the ſame word in the Hebrew : here, full, תתפתל : there, contracted, תתפל : ſo of purpoſe contracted ; (as is well obſerved by ſome of the Rabbins) for the ſound of the ear, that it might agree with the former (by which the oratio is made multo concinnior, as the Maſters of the Rhetorick ſpeak) תתבר and תתמם.

V. 27. but wilt bring down high looks] When their ſin is come to the full meaſure, Gen, 15. 16.

high looks] Iſai. 2. 11. & 5. 15.

V. 28. light my candle] Thou art he that doſt reſtore me from adverſity to proſperity : that turneſt my mourning, and my heavineſſe into joy. Thus is the word candle, or lamp, often taken metaphorically in the Scriptures : The light of the righteous rejoyceth, but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out, Prov. 13. 9. and elſewhere often. See Job 29. 2, 3, 4. It may be underſtood of ſpiritual illumination alſo ; as, The word is a lamp unto my feet, Pſal. 119. 105. but not ſo properly in this place.

V. 29. For by thee I have run thorow a troop] He attributeth it to God, that he both gat the victory in the field, and alſo deſtroyed the Cities of his enemies.

run] Or, broken.

V. 30. the word of the Lord is tryed] Pſal. 12. 6. & 119. 140. Prov. 30. 5. Be the dangers never ſo many or great, yet Gods promiſe muſt take effect.

tryed] Or, refined.

V. 31. For who is God, ſave the Lord ?] Deut. 32. 39. 1 Sam. 2. 2. Pſal. 86. 8. Iſa. 45. 5.

V. 32. girdeth me with ſtrength] Pſal. 93. 1.

and maketh my way perfect] Takes away all lets, and gives me victory in my wars.

V. 33. like hindes feet] He made me ſpeedily to take the forts of the enemies, Deut. 32. 13. & 33. 29.

upon my high places] It is commonly expounded of the ſtrong holds and caſtles of the enemies, built on high, as the faſhion was ; which David calls his, becauſe (as ſome would have it) he had a right unto them ; and was warranted by God for what he did : but rather, as others, his, becauſe he had taken them, otherwiſe thought impregnable. Mine, therefore emphatically. Or, my high places, ſuch high places or thoſe particular holds, as David had to do with : as we ſay, mine enemy, &c. But when I conſider, Hab. 3. 19. & 1 Sam. 9. 13. I rather incline to believe, that my high places, or, his high places, were words proverbially uſed, importing, whatever it be that we moſt truſt too, and wherein we think our ſelves moſt ſecure. So murus aheneus, in Latine, much to that purpoſe. So Eſay 33. 15, 16. He that walketh righteouſly, &c. He ſhall dwell on high : his place of defence ſhall be the munition of rocks, &c. Hence alſo, Pſal. 20. v. 2. the Name of Jacob defend thee : in the Text : for which the margin more literally, Set thee on a high place.

V. 34. He teacheth my hand to war] Pſal. 144. 1.

V. 35. Thou haſt alſo given me the ſhield of thy ſalvation] To defend me from dangers.

thy gentleneſſe hath made me great] Or, with thy meekneſſe thou haſt multiplied me. He attributeth the beginning, continuance, and increaſe of his good ſucceſſe to Gods favour.

V. 36. Thou haſt enlarged my ſteps] God gives me free room to walk, by removing my enemies, ſo that I need not tremble to make my feet ſlide under.

my feet] Heb. mine ancles.

V. 39. ſubdued] Heb. cauſed to bow.

V. 42. They cryed —— even unto the Lord] A great aggravation of their wickedneſſe, that God ſhould not hear them, when they cryed unto him in their extremity. The Pſalmiſt would have us to think otherwiſe of God, and therefore doth ſo often inculcate it, Pſal. 107. 6, 13, 19, 28. and which is more ſtrange, he ſpeaks there, not of them onely that called upon the true God, known unto the Iſraelites onely ; but of others alſo, who, in their diſtreſſes, called unto ſuch as they knew. But of that ſee more there. See Prov. 15. 29. Pſal. 34. 17, 18. and 145. 18.

V. 43. thou haſt made me the head of the heathen] Which dwell round about me.

a people whom I have not known ſhall ſerve me] Although this and what followeth, verſe 44, 45. in ſome ſence, if underſtood of ſeveral neighbouring nations, (not taken in the largeſt ſence) ſubdued by David, 2 Sam. 8. and made tributary, as is intimated in the laſt verſe of the Chapter, may belong unto David too : Yet it is very probable, that his pen was ſo directed by the Holy Ghoſt, that the ſame might have a more proper application to, and accompliſhment in Chriſt, who was of the ſeed of David, and whoſe type David was. Concerning Chriſt indeed, there be many propheſies to this purpoſe, of the gathering of the Gentiles unto him, and of his univerſal dominion. The Prophets are full of ſuch. The laſt verſes of this Pſalm, the Apoſtle Saint Paul doth expound of Chriſt, Rom. 15. 9.

V. 44. Aſſoon as they hear of me] Not ſo eaſily appliable unto David, though we read ſomewhat in the Hiſtory that may be drawn to it ; but to Chriſt moſt properly, and emphatically, if the words be verbatim tranſlated, (as in the margine) At the hearing of the ear ; that is, by the preaching of the Goſpel.

the ſtrangers ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto] Or, lie. Signifying ſubjection conſtrained, and not voluntary, as ſome would have it. But if thoſe ſeveral places where the word is found in this ſence, as Deut. 33. 29. Pſal 66. 3. and Pſal. 81. 15. be well conſidered of, it will appear, that it ſignifies ſubjection in general, whether forced, or voluntary : but more properly, ſuch a degree of ſubjection, as is very low and ſervile ; the reaſon of this metonymia (as they call it) being, not a ſuppoſed reluctancy : or as others would have it, contrariety of the minde and outward profeſſion ; but a ſuppoſed inclination in them, that are ſo low and ſervile, to lye, or flatter ; which includes lying. So in Latine vernilitas, is taken for baſe flattery, from verna, a bondſlave, or ſervant : adulatio from δοῦλος, a ſervant ; and many like in all languages. See more upon Pſal. 66. 3. ſubmit.

V. 50. and to his ſeed forevermore] This did not properly appertain to Solomon, but to Jeſus Chriſt.

PSAL. XIX.

Verſ. 1. THe Heavens &c.] The intention of the Pſalmiſt in this Pſalm is, to praiſe God for thoſe means, whether ordinary, or extraordinary; natural, or ſupernatural, by which men come to the knowledge of God; or to ſpeak more properly, to the acknowledgement of a Deity. Thoſe meanes are, the natural, and common to all men, the conſideration of Gods works, and among them, of the Heavens; and in them, of the Sun, as moſt eminent and conſpicuous: of which kind of meanes in general, the Apoſtle alſo ſpeaketh, Rom. 1. 20. and Heb. 11. 3. and the Pſalmiſt before in the 8. Pſalm. The ſupernatural, not common at that time, but of a ſpecial grace and favour, indulged unto the ſeed of Abraham, the Nation of the Hebrews; the Word of God, here called, the Law. And it is obſervable, that one word is uſed in the Scripture to expreſſe the courſe of nature (as we ſpeak commonly) as well in heaven as ſublunary things; and the precepts or ordinances of the Law; which word is חק: of which, as it had particular reference unto David, ſee before, upon Pſal. 2. 7, I will declare, &c. Beſides places there quoted, Job 38. 33. Knoweſt thou the ordinances of heaven, חקות שמים, The Latines alſo, when they ſpeak of the courſe of Nature, uſe often, (as the Grecians, νόμος) the word Lex; and more particularly, of the courſe and revolutions of Sun and Moon, and other particulars of heaven, Qui lege moveri Sidera, &c.

V. 2. Day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and night, &c.] The viciſſitude, or continual ſucceſſion of night and day, ſo conſtant, and ſo beneficial, and neceſſary, (there being no leſſe neceſſity of the night in its kind, then of the day) is a very conſiderable effect of the Suns courſe, or converſion: the due conſideration whereof might well incite a natural man to praiſe the Author of ſo great a work, and benefit. And ſo it did, this in particular, among other things of that nature. Tum viciſſitudines dierum atque noctium, &c. and Quem vero aſtrorum ordines; quem dierum noctiumque viciſſitudines, &c. So Tully in his Tuſculans; and in his De Legibus: not to mention others.

V. 3. There is no ſpeech nor language, where their voice is not heard] Heb. אין אמר ואין דברים בלי נשמע קולם To keep then to the words of the Original preciſely, it would be, No ſpeech; and no (or, nor) words: their voice is not heard. Or, (becauſe the particle בלי may be tranſlated either non, or, ſine,) without (theſe to be underſtood) their voice is heard; as here in our Engliſh margin. The former, non auditur vox eorum, is embraced by Bucer. The onely objection againſt it is, that the Pſalmiſt would commit a great tautology, repeating the ſame thing three times. Well, if that be all, it might eaſily be anſwered. But becauſe I like of the latter well enough, it ſhall not need. It is that (this latter I mean) which Junius and Tremellius in their Tranſlation; and ſince them, learned Grotius, in his late Notes, commend unto us; the moſt genuine, and every way moſt probable, as I conceive. The meaning then will be, that although the heavens cannot ſpeak (properly) nor uſe any language, yet their voyce is heard. Their voice; as Exod. 4. 8. And it ſhall come to paſſe, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the firſt ſign; that they will believe the voice of the latter ſign. Neither is the expreſſion leſſe emphatical, then that of our Saviours; if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out. Luke 19. 40. or that of the Apoſtles, being dead, yet ſpeaketh Heb. 11. 4. or this, that τὰ ἀόρατα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the inviſible things of God (that is, the inviſible God) καθορᾶται, are ſeen, or made viſible. by his workes, Rom. 1. 20. A thing that might very well be inſiſted upon, and preſſed by iteration of words, (without any fear tautology) to tell men, whom God hath endowed with ſpeech and language, to that very end, to glorifie him; of thoſe things that have neither ſpeech nor language in them, and yet ceaſe not to glorifie God, and to declare his power and greatneſſe, yea and goodneſſe, all the world over. This conceit (what ever others may think of it) pleaſed David ſo well, it ſeems, that not content with ordinary expreſſion, he thought good to vary it by apt metaphors of babes and ſucklings, as we underſtand him, Pſal. 8. 2. whereof ſee more there. Theſe two places compared do much illuſtrate one another, and the right underſtanding of this, confirms much what had been ſaid upon the other.

V. 4. Their line is gone out] Some by line, underſtand their curious frame and ſtructure, made as it were, ad amuſſim by line and rule, Zach. 1. 16. and a line ſhall be ſtretched over Jeruſalem; but rather Job 38. 5. Who hath laid the meaſures thereof, if thou knoweſt? or who hath ſtretched the line upon it? being ſpoken of the Creation. But that which immediately followeth, and their words, which according to the Scripture ſtile, ſeemes to be a further explication or proſecution of what went before, makes their interpretation more probable, who by קו (as Iſa. 28. 10. precept upon precept, line upon line) underſtand a line, or verſe (as anciently they called it) of writing: and ſo the Pſalmiſt makes the heavens to write, as well to ſpeak: to have a pen, as well as a tongue. Liber naturæ, and liber cœli, hath been uſed by divers, to this purpoſe. And in very deed, the heavens (as is well obſerved by ſome here) are more like unto a book, which we may read, looking upon it with our eyes; then to a preacher, who calls for our eares. The word was by the Septuagint rendred in Greek Φθόγγος, as if it had been קולם, or for ſome other reaſon. However, the difference is not great, and to the maine purpoſe, it comes all to one. The Apoſtle therefore, Rom. 10. 18. quoting this place of the Pſalmiſt, contents himſelfe with the Septuagint Tranſlation of the word, as writing to them, to whom it was beſt known, and ordinary. But to what purpoſe theſe words of the Pſalmiſt are there quoted by St. Paul, and how by him applied, will more concern us to know, becauſe ſome miſtaking the Apoſtles aim there, have alſo been led to a miſunderſtanding of this Pſalm (ſo far as the Sun and the effects of it are ſpoken of) as though all were to be underſtood allegorically, and no other thing had been intended by the Pſalmiſt. Moſt think that the Apoſtle applies theſe words to the ſound, or preaching of the Goſpel; which indeed was even then gone very far; but hardly ſo far, as well to bear this application. But to let that paſſe, if the ſcope of the Apoſtle in that Chapter, be well weighed, the coherence of the words, his ſeveral objections, and anſwers, and cloſe inferences, all well obſerved, (a thing otherwiſe not ſo obvious and eaſie to every body, becauſe of the conciſeneſs of his ſpeech in this whole Chapter) it will appear, that the Apoſtle had no other aim by this allegation, then to prove that God of old had revealed himſelfe to other Nations, (though not in the ſame manner, or degree) as well as to the Jewes: and therefore that they had no reaſon to be now ſo extremly ſcandalized, or offended, that the Goſpel of Chriſt ſhould be preached unto them alſo. For further proof, let Calvin be read, both here upon this Pſalm; and in his Commentaries upon that Epiſtle: whoſe reaſons are inanſwerable: approved alſo (though tacito nomine) by Vatablus upon this Pſalme.

in them hath he ſet] In the heavens before ſpoken of, ver. 1. The heavens, &c. what followeth of day and night, is no interruption of the firſt ſubject, becauſe he mentions them onely as effects of the Suns revolution. How the Sun is ſaid to have a tabernacle, who is in perpetual motion (except a man ſhould underſtand it of the Zodiack, which I do not think was Davids meaning) ſee upon the fifth verſe, out of his chamber.

V. 5. Which as a Bridegroom] Marriages among the Hebrews were performed with extraordinary publick rejoycings, and great ſolemnities; as may be gathered from the parable of the ten Virgins, Mat. 25. and what by way of compariſon is written of the children of the bridegroom, Mat. 9. 15. and Joh. 3. 29. See alſo Iſa. 61. 10. and 62. 5. Among other rites and ſolemnities then in uſe, one was it ſeemes, and is yet after a ſort, (as Buxtorf. in his Synagoga Jud. tells us) that a fair Tent, or Canopy, was pitched abroad in the open air, (whether field, or garden) where the Bride and Bridegroom did meet; and there the Bride being delivered to the Bridegroom; upon their comming forth (not without the long expectation of them that were without) being ſet out with all the pomp and bravery that could be deviſed, there was wonderous joy and exultation. So doth the Sun when he riſeth in a morning, after the darkneſſe of the night appear to us; very glorious to our eyes, and very welcome to moſt; whence proceeded that acclamation, uſed afterwards proverbially among the ancient Grecians, ἔξεχε φίλ᾽ ἥλιε: Exorere Chare Sol.

out of his chamber] Heb. מחפתו. Some render it, de umbraculo ſuo; in reference to that cuſtome we have ſpoken of, of a Tent, or Canopy pitcht, &c. The word, of it ſelf, may ſignifie any covering, that is for a ſhelter, in general. But of a Brides chamber (or tent) as here of a Bridegroomes, it is properly uſed Joel 2. 16. and therefore by moſt is here rendred by Thalamus. Now this of the Sun here, is not ſpoken according to Aſtronomical exactneſſe, no more then many other things in Scripture: but according to outward appearance, and vulgar judgements. Though therefore the motion or converſion of it (if Aſtronomically conſidered) be equal and conſtant: yet to us, when he firſt appears, he ſeemes then firſt to riſe and come abroad, which preſuppoſeth a reſting place; if not a new birth, as ſome heretofore were of opinion.

as a ſtrong man to run a race] The antient Grecians, we know, had their λαμπαδοδρομίας, which were publick exerciſes, and matches in running, performed among them with great ſolemnity. Now the cuſtome was, that they that did run, bare a burning torch in their hand, from whence came the Greek word λαμπαδοδρομία; and the Latine Proverb, lampada tradere. If any ſuch cuſtome were among the Hebrews; (for the Grecians might have it from them) or in caſe this cuſtome of the Grecians were but known to the Hebrews, as well as it was to the Latines, though not in uſe among them; there were no queſtion to be made, but that theſe words did allude unto it. But we have no certainty of either, and therefore can conclude nothing. The Romanes way of running (publickly and with ſolemnity) was moſt upon chariots, called bigæ, or quadrigæ: and they were ſaid abſolutely currere, to run, though carried. To which of theſe kinds of running, with the legs, or upon horſes and chariots, as the Sun is ordinarily repreſented upon a chariot) David here doth allude, I know not: the alluſion will be proper enough to either kind.

V. 7. The Law of the Lord, &c.] What here followeth in commendation of the Law, might all, or the greateſt part, be interpreted with ſome reference or alluſion to the Sun ſpoken of before; and its proprieties: as when he ſayes of it, that it is pure, that it inlightens, that it cauſeth joy, &c. But I do not find that any Interpreters go about it, and I will rather imitate their ſobriety, then be an example unto any of too much ſubtilty. Of the coherence in generall, ſee before upon verſe firſt.

But beſides, what is there ſaid of it, which I account chiefeſt, having St. Paul himſelf for our warrant, as is ſhewed upon the fourth verſe; there is other coherence to be found, very plauſible, and well inſiſted upon by ſome of the learndeſt Expoſitors. As firſt: Having commended the Sun, and ſet out his glory: which, upon this very ground of its glorious appearance to the eyes of men, had been turned by moſt men into an object of Idolatry, and was worſhipped for a God: yea by not a few, as the only God: leſt he might ſeem to ſay any thing that might unadviſedly be drawn that way, either as allowing, or excuſing that practiſe: he immediatly, and abruply (as to the words, and obvious conſtruction) falls into commendation of the Law of God, by which, as all Idolatry is ſtrictly and frequently forbidden; call this particularly the worſhipping of the Sun, and Moon, and Stars; grounded upon contemplation of their glorious luſter and beauty: as in theſe words of Moſes, in Deuter. And leſt thou lift up thine eyes into heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, &c. Deut. 4. 19. where alſo it is obſervable that a little before this caution concerning the Sun, &c. Moſes had remembered them of Gods mercy and parcicular favour towards them in giving them the Law; Statutes and judgements: as it is there; verſe fourteenth. Beſides, there may be ground of cohetance in this, that as the Sun is the light of our eyes, and the chief comfort of our naturall lives, &c. we might gather from this oppoſition, or paralell of praiſes, that what the Sun is to the body, the Law and word of God is to the ſoul; the only true light and life of it, without which it is in darkneſſe, and deſtitute of life.

V. 12. Who can underſtand his errors, &c] So much in commendation of the Law, that it is juſt, pure, perfect, (perfect in it ſelf, and requiring perfection from thoſe under it;) and the like; without any reflection at all upon his own infirmities, might argue ſome kind of preſumption, in David. He therefore now in the concluſion, makes his confeſſion to God, and at the ſame time craves his gracious aſſiſtance againſt ſins of ignorance, in the 12. and ſins of wilfulneſſe, or preſumption, in the 13. verſe: intimating alſo thereby the diſability of the Law, how pure and perfect ſoever in it ſelf, to bring man (in this ſtate of natural corruption) to happineſſe; and the neceſſity of another Covenant; to wit, the Covenant of grace, in Jeſus Chriſt: implicitely here included, or aymed at.

Who can underſtand his errours?] Then there is no reward of duty, but of grace, Rom. 4. 4. for where ſin is, there death is the reward, Rom. 6. 23. This interrogation hath the force of an affirmation. Who can? no man; not the moſt perfect and innocent. So St. Paul of himſelf, 1 Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified. And though all ſins in generall are ſometimes called errors, Hebr. 9. 7. and elſewhere: yet here, that ſins of ignorance are particularly intended, appears by the oppoſition, v. 13. from preſumptuous ſins. See Numb. 15. 27. through ignorance, &c. and v. 30. preſumptuouſly, &c. which place it is very likely that the Pſalmiſt had in his thoughts.

V. 14. and the meditation of my heart] That I may obey thee in thought, word, and deed.

PSAL. XX.

Title.

Of David] Compoſed by David himſelf, as a Prophet, for a publick form of prayer, to be uſed by the people for himſelf, their King. Hence it is, that he ſpeaks of himſelf in the third perſon. The particular occaſion, upon which, as is by moſt conceived, this pſalm was firſt penned, was Davids war againſt the Ammonites, and Syrians; of which we read 2 Sam. 10. & 1 Chron. 19. This conjecture is chiefly grounded on the 7. verſe, Some thruſt in charets. and ſome in horſes: becauſe particular mention is made in the Hiſtory (if both places be looked upon and compared) of great number of charets and horſemen, taken and ſlain in that War. As for that ſeeming contradiction, that is obſerved by moſt in that relation, in the number of the charets and horſemen: we will not meddle with it here, as not ſo neceſſary to this place.

Verſ. 1. T*He name of the God*] That is, the God. See upon Pſal. 9. 10, that know thy Name. of the God of Iacob] As pſal. 46. 7. 11. & 81. 1, 4. and elſewhere. In which places either Iacob is put for Iſrael; and ſo the God of Iacob, is as much as of the Iſraelites: or, Iacob particularly, as, the God of Abraham, and the fear of Iſaac, Gen. 31. 42. But a more particular, and not improbable reaſon is given by ſome of this compellation of God in this place, by the name of the God of Iacob, becauſe they are Jacobs very words that are uſed here in the beginning, Gen. [illegible]. 3.

defend th[illegible] Heb. ſet thee on an high place. Set thee in an high place, ſafe from thine adverſaries. See upon Pſal. 18. 33. upon my high places.

V. 2. thee help] Heb. thy help.

ſtrengthen thee] Heb. ſupport thee.

ſtrengthen thee out of Zion] For the battel, that thou mayeſt overcome thy foes. See Pſal. 13. 7. out of Zion.

V. 3. Remember] Part of the meat-offering was to be burnt on the altar for a memorial, Lev. 2. 2. that God might remember to do good to the offerer.

all thy offerings] David before he went to War, offered ſacrifices.

accept] Heb. turn to aſhes. or, make fat.

accept thy burnt ſacrifice] Burn to aſhes by fire from heaven, as an extraordinary token of acceptation, Lev. 9. 24. Judg. 6. 21. 1 King. 18. 38. 1 Chron. 21. 26. 2 Chron. 7. 1. But it is not likely, that David would require of God ſuch an extraordinary ſign, which being done without ſome ſpecial warrant from God himſelf, is a kind of tempting of God: neither is it likely, if any ſuch thing had happened, but that it would have been recorded in the Hiſtory. Although therefore the word properly ſignifie to turn into aſhes; (or, to make fat) yet becauſe that miraculous turning into aſhes, or conſuming of the ſacrifices by a fire from heaven, was a certain token of Gods acceptation; by an ordinary trope of the effect for the cauſe, it may ſignifie no more here, then, to accept, in general; as it is well rendred in the Text.

This commemoration of Davids ſacrifices, is not to this end, as though the oblation of ſuch things was of it ſelf pleaſing unto God, or meritorious with him: as the idolatrous heathens did beleeve of their Gods, (though reprooved for it by divers of their own Philoſophers:) and therefore made bold in their addreſſes unto them by prayer and ſupplication, to put them in mind of their coſt and charges in their oblations, whereof we have an example in the very firſt of Homer his Iliads, in Chryſes, Apollo's Prieſt, his prayer to Apollo: God himſelf doth often profeſſe to the contrary: as particularly, Pſal. 50. 8, 9, 10. &c. I will not reprove thee, &c. the drift and ſcope of this commemoration here is but this, to ſet out David his piety and feare of God, by thoſe outward ſolemne performances, appointed then by the Law of God, and in reference to his commandement and inſtitution, not to be omitted, but performed with all reverence and devotion. And becauſe they did pray at the ſame time, Davids prayers which he made are alſo included in the mention of theſe ſacrifices, as if he had ſaid, Remember thy prayers, &c.

V. 5. We will rejoyce in thy ſalvation] Safety and deliverance granted to the King, in whoſe weal our felicity ſtandeth.

we will ſet up our banners] In token of victory.

V. 6. Now know I, that the Lord ſaveth his anointed] Moſt Interpreters take theſe words as ſpoken by way of thankſgiving, after the victory obtained. If ſo, then was not this pſalm made at one time, nor theſe two parts ſo fitly joyned into one. More likely therefore, that they are words of a more then ordinary confidence only, as though they had already obtained what they prayed for: which kind of confidence, if well grounded, is often times very available, to the obtaining of requeſts: and there be examples of it elſewhere. But that theſe words were uſed by or intended for the prieſt alone, when he offered, as ſome here are of opinion, I know not upon what ground it can be ſaid.

V. 8. They are brought down] The words; according to the Hebrew idiotiſme often uſing preterits for futures, and futures for preterits, (as upon this very place Vatablus,) may alſo be tranſlated, They ſhall be brought down and fall; but we ſhall riſe and ſtand upright. However, preterits of purpoſe here might be uſed for futures, to ſhew their confidence; whereof ſee upon the ſixt verſe.

V. 9. Save Lord, let the King hear us] All acknowledge, the Hebrew words might as well be tranſlated; Save Lord the King, hear us when we call: but that there is a diſtinction in the Hebrew Text, after Save Lord. It is true, there is a diſtinction of a colon, which they call athnach; but if occaſion were, we could ſhew that no Interpreters ſo preciſely bind themſelves to theſe diſtinctions, but that ſometimes, if occaſion be, they can diſpenſe with themſelves. But we will not except againſt this tranſlation, ſince there is no need.

Let the King hear us] Moſt underſtand, God, or the Meſſias. Calvin would have David himſelf (as any other King in the like caſe, that repreſents the Perſon of God) to be meant. To which purpoſe he quotes Lam. 4. 23. & Mic. 2. 13. to which may be added, 1 Sam. 8. 20.

PSAL. XXI.

Title.

A Pſalm of David.] There is no queſtion to be made of it, though ſome upon weak grounds, would have it otherwiſe, but that David himſelf was the author. The reaſon why he ſpeaks of himſelf in the third perſon is, becauſe it was intended by him for a form of a ſolemn thankſgiving, as the form of a prayer, to be uſed publick by the people; in which caſe the third perſon would fit better then the firſt.

Verſ. 1. SHall he rejoyce] The future is here put for the preſent, not excluding preſent joy, but the better to ſet out the greatneſſe of the benefit; the memory whereof was to continue long, and with the memory, the joy: with the joy, the praiſe. Though preſent joyes be ſtronger, perchance; yet in our remembrance, is our chiefeſt thankfulneſſe; and to remember, in the Scripture, is as much ſometimes, as to be thankful.

V. 2. his hearts deſire] The wicked boaſteth of his hearts deſire,] Pſal. 10. 3. It is a judgement to him, that he hath his will, that ſo encouraged by ſucceſſe, he may proceed in his iniquity, untill he be ripe for utter deſtruction. But God, whom he favours, he takes care of them, and prepares their hearts, that they ſhould not deſire any thing hurtfull to themſelves, or diſpleaſing to him. Or if he ſuffer them, (as in his infinite wiſdom he knows beſt, how to order all things for the beſt, according to every mans particular caſe, temper, and diſpoſition,) yet he grants it not unto them. A man that ſhall carefully obſerve it, ſhall in the courſe of his life find occaſion enough to thank God, as well for thoſe things that God hath not, as for thoſe that he hath granted. See alſo upon Pſal. 57. 2. performeth all things.

V. 3. a crown of pure gold on his head] Some think this to have a particular reference to the ſtory. 2 Sam. 12. 30. And he took their Kings crown from off his head, (the weight whereof was a talent of gold, with the precious ſtones) and it was ſet on Davids head. &c. But it is not likely that David, a King, would value ſo much the worth of that particular crown, ſo literally taken, though precious otherwiſe, as to make ſuch ſolemn mention of it in this his publick thankſgiving. As therefore a crown (in ordinary uſe) is taken metaphorically for a Kingdom; ſo muſt a crown of pure gold, be here taken metaphorically, for a choyce Kingdom: ſuch as was the Kingdom of Iſrael, not onely in reſpect of the land and people, and divers other prerogatives; but alſo as it comprehended divers leſſe Kingdomes, yet of good credit in thoſe times; as we read more at large in the hiſtory of the Iſraelites firſt conqueſts, and of after times.

V. 4. He asked life of thee] I conceive (which is the opinion of ſome others alſo, though not ſo fully ſet out and explained by any I know) that there is an antitheſis, not in the words of this verſe only, but between this and the former verſe alſo: by which antitheſis the goodneſſe of God, and the humility of David is more fully and movingly ſet out unto us, and expreſſed. Life, though the chiefeſt of temporall bleſſings in ſome reſpect, (as in point of price and valuation; for what would not a man give, or forgo, for life?) yet as it is the foundation of all others, alwayes to be preſuppoſed before any other can be asked or granted, (for what can any man enjoy in this world, if he have not life?) ſo it is the meaneſt and loweſt of all others. This antitheſis is uſed by God himſelf, in that anſwer he made to Baruch, by the mouth of Jeremy, Jer. 45. 4, 5. Behold that which I have built, I will break down, &c. And ſeekeſt thou great things for thy ſelf? ſeek them not; for behold I will bring evill upon all fleſh, ſaith the Lord: but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goeſt. Whereas therefore David in the midſt of his many dangers and adverſities, though he found God very gracious unto him, and might preſume upon his favour as much as any; yet in great humility deſired of God no more then bare life, as we ſay; that God would but let him live, &c, God in his great mercy, and favour towards him, did not only grant unto him that which he deſired, the meaneſt of requeſts, life; but with it, the higheſt of temporal bleſſings, a crown, a Kingdom; and that too, not an ordinary Crown, or Kingdom; but a crown of pure gold; of which words more hath been ſaid upon the former verſe.

length of dayes for ever and ever] Though the Hebrew words עולם ועד here tranſlated for ever and ever, do not ſo preciſely import abſolute eternity, but that they may, and are uſed to expreſſe the long continuance of ſeverall things in their kind; and ſo might here alſo be underſtood of a life ſtretched out beyond ordinary computation; yet becauſe we neither find that the period of Davids life was ſo over-long above what is ordinary: nor that he had any direct promiſe from God by any revelation, or otherwiſe, that he ſhould live ſo long as he did; it is more probable that this is to be underſtood of his living, or ſurviving in his poſterity, by a continued ſucceſſion of Kings and Princes that came out of his loynes, to divers ages after himſelf. Plato, that ſo much admired Philoſopher among the Heathens, ſaith, that marriage is a remedy againſt mortality; as not accounting them altogether dead, that ſurvived in their poſterity. Since him, others have ſaid it; yea and before him too. For Ocellus Lucanus, a Pythagorean Philoſopher of very great antiquity, hath in effect the ſame. And this is it, according to beſt Interpreters, that Chriſt himſelf aimed at, Luk. 21. 35, 36. where he gives the reaſon, why the bleſſed, or as it is there, thoſe that are accounted worthy of that world, and of the reſurrection of the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; becauſe they cannot dye any more; as if he have ſaid, that being now immortal, they ſtand in no further need of that help, or antidote againſt mortality. However, becauſe even that life that David lived in his Royal poſterity, to the laſt that ſate upon his Throne, was not of ſo long continuance, as will ſo well ſtand with ſo ſolemn a promiſe and propheſie, and becauſe it is certain, that other like promiſes made unto David, of his poſterities enduring as long as Sun and Moon, Pſal. 89. 29, &c. and the like, muſt of neceſſity be underſtood of Chriſt (the Son of David) his ſpiritual Kingdome, truly and properly, both univerſal and eternal: I like well, that this alſo ſhould more eſpecially be referred unto Chriſt, either his eternal Kingdome, or eternal life, by his reſurrection from the dead: according to that of the Apoſtles, Chriſt being raiſed from death, dyeth no more, &c. Rom. 6. 9. and, ever liveth, Heb. 7. 25. We may alſo very literally (which is the moſt generally received interpretation) underſtand it of the aſſurance David had from God of his ſalvation and eternal life; as in all probability he had. See alſo Pſal. 61. 6, 7. Thou wilt prolong, &c.

V. 6. Thou haſt made him moſt bleſſed for ever] Heb. bleſſings. That is, moſt bleſſed in himſelf; and an inſtrument of bleſſing others, Gen. 12. 2. Ezek. 34. 26. Pſal. 72. 17.

made him moſt bleſſed] Heb. ſet him to be bleſſings.

made him exceeding glad] Heb. gladded him with joy.

V. 8. Thine hand ſhall find out all thine enemies] Thine hand, O King: for they had named him, ver. 7. and his enemies they mention, verſe 11. and Gods aſſiſting him to deſtroy them, ver. 9.

V. 9. them] Or, for them.

the Lord ſhall ſwallow them up in his wrath] This teacheth us patiently to endure the croſſe, till God deſtroy the adverſaries: whom he conſumeth as fuel in an oven, Mal. 4. 1. Eſay 26. 11.

V. 11. For they intended evill againſt thee] Thy adverſaries intended to deſtroy thee, O King. See notes on ver. 8.

which they are not able to perform] Heb. He is not. That is, their leader, who brought them to deſtroy David.

V. 12. ſhalt thou make them turn their back] Or, thou ſhalt ſet them as a butt.

make ready thine arrows upon thy ſtrings] Pſal. 7. 12, 13.

V. 13. in thine own ſtrength] Shew thy power in upholding King and State, that we may praiſe thee.

Title.

Aijeleth Shahar] There is not any Title that admits of more variety of Interpretations and conjectures; nor of more uncertainty, in all that variety. Bucer and Mollerus will afford moſt of them; whom it were an eaſie thing to Engliſh, if to as much purpoſe, as the labour would be eaſie. But when all is done, I ſhall only ſet down variety of phanſies; nothing that I can pitch upon with any probability. If any thing; this ſeems to be moſt probable, that this was the beginning of ſome known ſong or canticle in thoſe days, to the tune of which this alſo was appointed to be ſung.

Though moſt Pſalmes, (in ſome parts and paſſages, at leaſt,) have reference, more or leſſe, and are applyable to Chriſt; yet this difference is obſervable, that whereas the moſt, literally belong unto David, or ſome other; and allegorically, or metaphorically to Chriſt: ſome there be, (in part at leaſt, as we ſaid before,) that are literally applyable to Chriſt; to him more, than to any other. Of which kind, this is; as may appear by the 8, 16, & 17. verſes; beſides all in the end, from the 26. verſe; which all men confeſs, more properly and literally to belong unto Chriſt and his Kingdome, then to David, or any of his poſterity, beſides Chriſt. It will be therefore our task in ſuch, to take notice eſpecially of the main, and moſt proper ſcope: that is, to conſider them, as principally intended of Chriſt.

Verſ. 1. MY God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?] Theſe words were uttered by Chriſt upon the Croſs, and though not the very laſt, yet among the laſt that he ſpake there, before he gave up the Ghoſt. They are very conſiderable words, in divers reſpects; as ſhall appear afterwards: though I allow not of that reaſon that is given by ſome, who think the Evangeliſts, S. Matthew, and St. Mark, to have recorded them, not tranſlated only, in that tongue they wrote in, to wit, the Greek; as is uſual with them upon other like occaſions; but in the very language and ſyllabes they were uttered in by Chriſt; that is, the Syriack; a dialect of the Hebrew, then in common uſe among the Jews; of purpoſe, as they think, that we might take the more notice of them. Whereas the true reaſon is, becauſe if theſe very words that Chriſt uſed, had not been recorded; none, but very skilful in the Hebrew, or Syriack, could have underſtood the ground of that bitter mock and deriſion of ſome then ſpectators, who becauſe Chriſt had ſaid Eli, Eli, (or, according to the Syriack pronuntiation, Eloi, Eloi;) that is in Engliſh, My God, my God: hence took occaſion to mock, (or rather indeed, to ſlander him; for it would have been a very odious thing in thoſe dayes, to hear a dying man call upon any other then God:) as though he had called upon, or for Elias, Matth. 27. 47. But now to come to the ſenſe of the words; they are words at which divers have been not a little ſcandalized, as either arguing ſome kind of deſpair, or at leaſt much impatience: whence it is, that divers gloſſes and conſtructions have been deviſed, to turn the ſcope and ſenſe of them another way, then in ordinary conſtruction they ſeem to run. Some have been bold to ſay, that what Chriſt ſpake, was but fainedly, not out of any real ſenſe, or meaning: not to expreſſe his own thoughts, but the better to conform himſelf to the common opinion. But this is too abſurd, as to need any confutation. If there were any appearance of evil in theſe words, as it ſeems they conceive, that are ſo much offended at them; they might have conſidered, that we are to forbear, not only that which is evil in it ſelf, but even that (where no indiſpenſable duty doth bind, nor conſideration of a greater good doth preponderate; neither of which can be ſaid of theſe words, by them that are offended at them;) which hath the appearance of evil. But this conceit is not ſo abſurd, but theirs (though not more true, perchance;) may be accounted as witty, who would have Chriſt to have repeated this whole Pſalm, hanging upon the Croſs, or a good part of it, and ſo to have uttered theſe words (which only are mentioned by the Evangeliſts, they ſay, becauſe they are the firſt of the Pſalm, as is uſual in quotations;) no otherwiſe then by way of repetition or meditation. I would not ſay, what ſome do, that it is not likely Chriſt would repeat ſo long a Pſalm, at the Croſs: I have read of divers Martyrs that have repeated the whole Te Deum at the ſtake, or going to it; which is not much leſs in length. But the words of the Evangeliſts, if looked upon, are a ſufficient confutation of this opinion; who ſay not, (neither of them that record them;) that Chriſt ſpake, or repeated; but, cryed with a loud voyce. Many of the antients have ſaid, that Chriſt ſpake theſe words, not in his own perſon, properly, but in the perſon of whole mankind. Which indeed is true enough, in ſome ſenſe; but in that ſenſe they mean, to free Chriſt in uttering of them, from all trouble of mind, or ſenſe of grief, or fear, I cannot allow of it. They might as well ſay, becauſe he ſuffered not for himſelf, but for mankind, therefore he felt no pain. Yet this is more tolerable by far, then to ſay, that the Deity of Chriſt, did withdraw it ſelf at that time, ſo that there was a real ſeparation; and from that ſeparation, this confuſion of the humanity left to it ſelf. By theſe, and divers other expoſitions that we wil paſſe by, doth appear what men have thought of the literal ſenſe of theſe words, which they have been ſo ſolicitous to avoyd. But now let us ſee what is ſaid, or can be ſaid to take away the offence, and yet to preſerve the literal ſenſe. That Chriſt, as man, (though God and man ſtill, but the Divine nature by a ſpecial providence and diſpenſation withdrawing or ſuſpending its influence for a while;) did ſuffer partly in his body, and partly in his ſoul, (but more in his ſoul, then body) more then can either be expreſſed by man, or imagined, I do not ſee how any reaſonable man can queſtion, that reads the ſtory of his paſſion, from his bloody ſweat, unto the end; and conſiders Chriſt his own expreſſions; recorded unto us to that very end, that we might know how much he hath ſuffered for us. I will not ſay, that there was a neceſſity he ſhould ſuffer ſo much, juſt ſo much, both in body and ſoul, to make his ſufferings available to our redemption, both of our bodies, and of our ſoules. This I dare not ſay, becauſe I have no warrant for it in Scripture; and bare humane ratiocination in theſe things, is meere folly and madneſs: It is enough for me to know, that God had appointed it ſo, and in humility to adore beyond what I can underſtand. But that Chriſt did actually ſuffer very much, even beyond what can be conceived: I believe, as I believe the Scriptures. If then his ſufferings were extraordinary; why ſhould not his expreſſions be ſo, by which we might underſtand (ſo far as can be conceived by man) the greatneſs of his pangs and agonies? In this caſe, ſuch words as theſe, My God, my God, &c. were words of ſenſe, not infidelity. Neither are ſuch expreſſions inconſiſtent with a perfect ſecurity of Gods love and favour, at the ſame time. There may be a contradiction in the language of ſenſe, and that of faith, if in themſelves conſidered; but no ſuch inconſiſtence in the nature of the things, from which that variety doth flow, but that they may meet in one. Doth not Eccleſiaſtes in the ſame clauſe, and with the ſame breath ſay, Though a ſinner do evil, and his dayes be prolonged; yet I know he ſhall not prolong his dayes, Eccl. 8. 12. and the Prophet Habakkuk, of his viſion, though it tary, it will not tary? (Hab. 2. 3.) And even Plato, a heathen Philoſopher, among them that were led by ſenſe and reaſon only, of greateſt account, in one of his Dialogues called Phædon, towards the end of it, tell us that at the ſame time a man may believe, and not believe? And why not a man in ſuch an extremity expoſtulate with God that he hath forſaken him; though his heart and faith tell him at the ſame time, that God hath not, will not, forſake him? And indeed, if we mark it, (it is obſerved by moſt Interpreters) the very words imply as much, and interpret themſelves. For at the ſame time that he ſaith, God hath forſaken him, which his ſenſe, and the violence of his pangs expreſſed from him; he calls him his God, (My God, my God:) an argument of his faith: to which agrees well that of David in another place, But I truſted in thee, O Lord: I ſaid, thou art my God, Pſal. 31. 14. And if this be not ſatisfactory, conſider we the words, firſt as ſpoken by David; and there we finde in the ſame Pſalme, (verſe 24.) For he hath not deſpiſed, nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him, but when he cried unto him he heard. Again, conſider them (which is our chiefeſt buſineſs here) as ſpoken by Chriſt, (though it may be ſuppoſed, that he ſpake them in no other ſenſe then David did:) and you ſhall hear him ſoon after, (as in Saint Luke we finde) ſaying, Father, into thine hands I commend my ſpirit, Luk. 23. 46. Why then ſhould any offence be taken at the words? But becauſe Chriſt was no ordinary man, and that to bear any pain or griefe; without any ſigne of commotion, hath been thought by many to belong to perfect magnanimity, and height of ſpirit; beſides what hath already been ſaid, that what Chriſt did ſuffer, was quite of another kind, ſo far above the meaſure of ordinary ſufferings, as himſelf was above ordinary men; we further briefly ſay, that Chriſt was pleaſed to yield to ſenſe (or feeling:) ſo far, 1. That he might ſhew himſelf a perfect true man; (a thing not eaſily believed, as appeares by the multitude of hereſies about his nature, that ſprang up ſoon after the firſt plantation of the Chriſtian faith,) there being no greater evidence, to ordinary judgment, at leaſt, of his perfect humanity, then his being ſubject to the common infirmities of man, ſin only excepted. 2. For our ſakes, to keep us from utter fainting, and deſpair in our greateſt trialls, combats, and afflictions, whether ſpiritual, or corporal, when God ſeems to forget us, withdrawing the comforts of his grace, and the benefit of his help, as ſometimes he doth, even from the beſt, and his beſt beloved for a while; that then remembring what Chriſt himſelf, ſo neer and dear unto him, was put to, we might have comfort. And although this of Chriſts ſufferings were an extraordinary caſe, not liable to the rules of ordinary humane ratiocination; yet for them that think a Stoical apathie, or unpaſſionatneſs, to be the greateſt evidence, or character of true magnanimity, I ſhall commend unto them the diſputes of two famous Philoſophers, recorded by Aulus Gellius, a known ancient Writer, in the 19. book of his Noctes Atticæ, (ſo called) cap. 1. & 12. There be that tranſlate theſe words, למה עזבתני not, quare dereliquiſti: Why haſt thou forſaken me? but, quouſque deſeres me: how long wilt thou forſake me? which the Hebrew will bear well enough. And perchance this, though neither can juſtly, would leſſe offend, becauſe, Why haſt thou? ſounds more like an abſolute deſertion: how long? hath, or may ſeem to have in it an intimation of a confidence, that it will be but for a time.

from helping me] Heb. from my ſalvation.

from the words of my roarings] Being tormented with extreme anguiſh, Pſal. 32. 3.

V. 2. am not ſilent] Heb. there is no ſilence to me.

V. 3. But thou art holy] Some think that by theſe words Gods eternity and immutability, is here oppoſed to mans ſhort continuance, and perpetual mutability, which makes his condition, if well weighed, ſo inconſiderable, (take it at the beſt) in this world. Which opinion is not without ſome ground; for ſo we finde it, Pſal. 90. and elſewhere. However, their opinion likes me better, who by holy, here underſtand gracious, and propitious: in which ſenſe we know the Latin word Pius, is often aſcribed to God, by Ancient Chriſtian Writers. The ground of this ſignification might be, from the place where the Ark, and propiatory, or Mercy ſeat, (the covering of the Ark) ſtood, which was called the holy of holies. This being the place from whence God gave anſwers, and towards which men turned themſelves, that made their prayers to God, he was commonly ſaid to inhabit there, and to hear the prayers of men, and grant their requeſt from thence.

O thou that inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael] Some render it, But thou continueſt holy, the praiſes, (or, O thou that art the praiſes) of Iſrael. But, following the moſt approved tranſlation, O thou that inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael: that is, thou that dwelleſt in the place, (the Temple, in generall; or more particularly, the Ark:) where all the people of Iſrael are perpetually putting up their petitions unto thee, according to their ſeverall wants and neceſſities; and praiſing thee for thy mercy towards them, in granting them their requeſts; according to that, Pſal. 50. 14, 15. Offer unto God thankſgiving, and pay thy vowes unto the moſt High: And call upon me in the day of trouble and thou ſhalt praiſe me, as in the former Engliſh; or, glorifie me, as in the laſt tranſlation. By this the Pſalmiſt doth very pathetically exaggerate his own pitifull condition, that whereas God was ſo eaſie to be found by others; and ſo ready to grant them their requeſts, for which praiſes were daily, by all manner of people, returned unto him: he onele and his prayers, were excluded from the benefit of his preſence; he onely, not regarded: as more plainly follows in the next verſes.

V. Our fathers truſted in thee] He doth modeſtly inſinuat, that God was in ſome manner bound to hear, becauſe there was the ſame reaſon for him, now; as there was heretofore for his forefathers. They truſted, they cryed, ſo doth he. And he inſiſteth upon this as a preſſing argument: or motive: making alſo profeſſion of his faith and conſtancy, that although he did not in his own particular (as yet at leſt) find it ſo: yet he did not for all that, (which ſome weaker profeſſors in that caſe would be apt enough to do) doubt of the truth of thoſe deliverances in former times. Gideon might ſeem to aime at ſome ſuch thing, and where be all his miracles which our fathers told us of, ſaying, Did not the Lord, &c. Jud. 6. 13. I beleeve he means no otherwiſe then as David here, though his words are not ſo full. Now as David by mentioning, with reiteration, what God had done in former times, profeſſeth his faith and conſtancy; ſo, rather then he will ſeeme to charge God with any partiality, or inconſtancy; he ſeemeth (obſcurely though; for his words may have another ayme too, by ſetting the deſpicableneſſe of his preſent condition among men, the more powerfully to provoke Gods compaſſion to his releaſe, as Jerem. 30. 17. For I will reſtore health, becauſe they called thee an outcaſt, &c.) to anſwer for God, in the 4. verſe, But I am a worm, &c. intimating thereby, that he had not the ſame reaſon, to expect that God ſhould do for him, as he had done for them, becauſe of the inconſiderableneſſe of his perſon, in compariſon of them, &c.

V. 5. and were not confounded] Heb. aſhamed; to wit, as men fruſtrated of their hope, Rom. 5. 5. & 9. 33. but tryumphed over all calamities.

V. 6. But I am a worm] A deſpicable creature trampled under foot, Job. 25. 6. Eſay 41. 14. Thus Chriſt alſo was abaſed for us, which ſhews Gods infinite love to us. See more upon verſe 4. Our fathers, &c.

He truſted on the Lord] Heb. He rolled himſelf on the Lord; as Pſal. 37. 5. See upon Pſal. 114. 7. Tremble thou earth.

let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighteth in him] See before Pſal. 18. 19. he delivered me, becauſe he delighted in me. The Hebrew word חפץ ſignifies to will; and alſo, to delight, or, take pleaſure in a thing. The Septuagint deſirous (as in many other places) to keep to the Hebrew as cloſe as they could, rendered it by the Greek θέλειν, intending thereby doubtleſſe the ſame ſenſe, to delight, or take pleaſure; though the Greek word of it ſelf, according to the propriety of the Greek tongue, ſignifieth, to will, onely. It is well known that there are infinite Greek words, uſed by the Greek tranſlatours, in another ſenſe, or notion, then that which is proper unto them: which as they are uſed by them, are commonly called helleniſticall words. Now the Evangeliſts we know, uſed for the moſt part, the tranſlation of the Septuagint, as that which was then commonly received among the Jews; and which they were ſo uſed unto, that their Greek often hath more of the Hebraiſme, then it hath of the Greek, that was accounted true Greek in thoſe dayes. Theſe things conſidered Mat. 27. 43. where this paſſage of the Pſalmiſt is uſed, εἰ θέλει αὐτὸν, ſhould not have been tranſlated, if he will have him, which doth much obſcure both the ſenſe, in it ſelf, and the reference the words have unto this place: but, as it is here, ſeeing he delighted in him, or, as it is in the margin, if he delight in him.

V. 9. But thou art he] This alternation of expreſſions, ſome tending as it were to deſpair; others to hope and confidence, often uſed in this pſalme; doth ſet out very lively the Pſalmiſt his conflict (and in him, every godly mans in the like caſe) between ſenſe and faith: and makes the whole Pſalme, by this mixture of ſeverall paſſions and affections, the more patheticall, and poeticall too.

that took me out of the womb, &c.] It is generally believed, that Davids aim here is, to comfort and incourage himſelf by remembring the wonderfull power and providence of God toward infants, even whileſt they are ſhut up in the womb; and afterwards, in bringing them forth into the world; in their nurſing, and preſervation, whileſt ſo tender and helpleſſe of themſelves: in all which it cannot be denied, but the power and providence of God doth ſingularly appear in divers particulars, as any man in ſome meaſure, if he be not very ſtupid, may underſtand; and is acknowledged by moſt accurate Anatomiſts and Phyſitians, as well heathens, as others. The very opening and ſhutting again of the body, when the child is to be born, and to come forth into the world, is a thing ſo incomprehenſible to Naturaliſts, that they acknowledge (ſome of them at leaſt) the immediate hand and power of God in it; becauſe they ſee not by what power of nature (though that alſo be the power of God, the author of nature,) it is brought to paſſe. And there be many queſtions propoſed about it, which no man can reſolve, or ſcarce any doth take upon himſelf to reſolve, as to give any ſatisfaction. Neverthele ſſe, this being in general a providence, not extending to men, or mankind onely, (though more particularly belonging to them, becauſe they onely are capable by nature to underſtand it, and to praiſe God for it:) but even to brutes, (more or leſſe,) of all ſorts; it ſeems to me more probable, that David had a more particular aim in theſe words; as either to remember ſome particular providence of God, towards him, even in the womb yet; or ſince that, in his infancy; in ſome extraordinary deliverance, or the like; as it hath hapned, and doth daily unto many: or that he intended to ſay, (which he might have good reaſon to believe, and muſt needs, if he did believe it, breed great confidence,) that God even from the womb had ſeparated him, that is, among many others, by a particular, or ſpecial providence, had called him out, and deſigned him to ſome particular work, or miniſtery, and therefore had, and would have, in reference to that end and firſt election, a more particular care of him, and every thing that hapned unto him. It is acknowledged by the learned, that theſe words from the womb, were commonly uſed among the Hebrews proverbially, and hyperbolically; that is, by way of ſtronger expreſſion; as Pſal. 58. 3, 4. eſtranged from the womb, and Iſai. 48. 8. called a tranſgreſſor from the womb: and ſo of a man called by God to ſome extraordinary work, or otherwiſe eminent above the common condition of men, it was ſaid, That God had ſeparated him from the womb; as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of himſelf, Gal. 1. 14. Thus David might ſpeak of himſelf: but if the words be referred to Chriſt, to whom we have already ſaid, that this Pſalm doth more properly belong, we need not go to metaphors, and figures for application; the bare letter and hiſtory will go far beyond the hyperbole (if any there be in it) of this expreſſion. I need not inſiſt upon particulars, becauſe none, I hope, reads this, to whom the hiſtory of Chriſt is not known. It ſhall ſerve in generall to ſay, that from his firſt conception, to the laſt hour and moment of his converſation among men, nothing did happen unto him, but either was altogether miraculous, or apparently carried by a ſpeciall Divine providence and diſpenſation. There be propheſies to that purpoſe too, many, beſides the relations of the Evangeliſts: but it need no further proof.

Thou didſt make me hope] Hope is ſometimes taken for life, in the Scripture, as Job 14. 19. thou deſtroyeſt the hope of man. Or, the words may be taken (and ſo by moſt expounded) figuratively, as Job 38. laſt verſe, (not Pſal. 147. 9. to which moſt referre, for there is nothing there in the Originall text, of the Ravens, but what is literally true: to wit, that they cry.) Who provideth for the ravens food, when his young ones cry unto God: and Pſal. 104. 21. of young lions, that they ſeek their meat from God; and verſe 27. that they wait upon God. The words may alſo be tranſlated, (as is here in our Engliſh margine) thou didſt keep me in ſafety, or, ſecurity. So Prov. 10. 9. הולך בתום יולך בטח (there is a ſweet alluſion in the Original words, which is loſt in the tranſlation, He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely; or, ſecurely; that is, ſhall be ſafe.

didſt make me hope] Or, keptſt me in ſafety.

V. 16. they pierced my hands and my feet] Much ado there is about theſe words, as between Jewes and Chriſtians; in general; ſo between Chriſtians among themſelves Papiſts and Proteſtants. That the ground of the quarrel (of no great conſequence indeed) on both ſides may be underſtood, thus it is, כרו caru in Hebrew, ſignifies, foderunt, they have pierced: כארי caari, ſicut leo; as a lyon; the כ in the firſt, being a radical letter; in the ſecond, a ſervil prefixe; as Hebrew Grammarians are wont to ſpeak. Now our Hebrew Bibles, all that ever were printed, (one or two editions, as I take it, excepted) bear, not כרו foderunt, which is our Tranſlation, and is of all Chriſtians, generally; but כארי ſicut Leo. This therefore the Jewes lay to our charge, as a corruption of the Bible. But we anſwer, that though all Hebrew Copies, of late ages, have it ſo indeed, as it is commonly printed: yet ſome ancient Copies, as by their own teſtimony is proved, had it כארו (with a Vau) not כארי (with a Jod,) as it is now. כרו and כארו is all one in ſenſe; all the difference is but of one vacant Aleph, which in many places of Scripture beſides this, is added to words, without any alteration of ſenſe at all; as the Jewes themſelves, muſt, and do acknowledge. So that if there be any wilful corruption, it muſt lie upon their ſcore, and not ours, who tranſlate according to the reading of the moſt ancient Copies; followed alſo, and expreſſed by the Greek Tranſlation, called the Septuagint; a Tranſlation of great credit and antiquity: as uſed and received among the Jewes before Chriſts time. They render it ὤρυξαν; that is, foderunt, they have pierced. Of this the Papiſts (ſome of them, not all: Genebrard upon this place, ſaith plainly, Nec tamen propterea locum corruptum dixerim, ſed variæ eſſe lectionis; that is, Yet I would not ſay, that the place is corrupted, but of different reading onely) take hold againſt us Proteſtants, to prove that the Hebrew Text hath been corrupted. To them we anſwer; Firſt, that there is no direct corruption of the Text, as long as the true reading may, by good authority of ancient Copies, and the teſtimony of the Jewes themſelves, and their Maſorithes, whoſe great work and task hath been, to preſerve the integrity of it, be aſſerted and vindicated. Secondly, neither doth it appear, that any ſuch corruption was ever intended by the Jews, in general; or that the alteration that hath hapned, did at firſt proceed from any ſuch intention or purpoſe, either of Jew, or any other. Some Learned men have thought that the aſcititious (or א Aleph) might be the occaſion; at which, as they conceive, ſome ignorant ſcribe (becauſe not ordinary) ſtumbling, and not knowing what to make of the word, to make ſome ſenſe, changed ignorantly (thinking it ſhould have been ſo) the final ו (or Vau) into a final י (or Jod:) and ſo the errour from one Copy to another, as uſually in ſuch caſes, was propagated. This, as it is here propoſed, is probable enough; but all things well conſidered that is ſaid concerning this matter, by either Jewes or others, (all which to ſet down here at large, I doubt would be too tedious and impertinent) well weighed and conſidered, I think their opinion not leſſe, if not more probable, who think that כארי, as the Jewes, and our ordinary Bibles read it, to be the true and genuine reading; but not in the ſence that the Jewes of thoſe dayes would have it: but כארי for כרו or כארו; ſo that the ſence ſhall be the ſame ſtill, (foderunt, they have pierced) Though the writing be ſomewhat different. Now that there ſhould be a Jod at the end; inſtead of a Vau, it is an anomalie indeed, but not without example. So נשאי for נשאו, Ezra 10. laſt verſe, and elſewhere in many places, which ſome have gathered together. But however we read the word, of the ſence there can be no queſtion at all, is out of Jewiſh writings of beſt account in this kinde, as I have already ſaid, eaſily to be proved and aſſerted. So that here we have a clear teſtimony for the croſſe of Chriſt, which the more offenſive it hath alwayes been, both to Jewes and Gentiles, (as indeed what can be more repugnant to ſence, then a crucified God; the moſt vile and ignominious of all puniſhments?) the more we ought to make of ſuch teſtimonies; the beſt (though not onely) and ſureſt evidence, [as Saint Peter tells us, 2 Pet. 1. 19.) of our Chriſtian faith. Piercing of hands and feet, was one of the chiefeſt circumſtances of crucifixion. Now to David, the words can have no application, but metaphorical: and ſo too, we ſhall be put to it, to ſhew how. I know not any Expoſiter that doth. But thus it may be perchance: Fodere, may be put, (in this metaphorical ſence) for pungere; in Latine it is often, I am ſure. Now, the hands and feet being, (according to the cuſtome of thoſe times and places, where moſt went barefooted) the naked places of the bodies, moſt expoſed to the injuries of thorns and bryars; to pierce ones hands and feet, might be a proverbial kinde of ſpeech, taken from the ſimilitude of thorns, and other like annoyances of thoſe bare parts, to expreſſe any other ſmart and ſticking vexation, whether of body or minde.

V. 17. I may tell all my bones] Becauſe of leanneſſe.

V. 18. They part my garments] Luke 23. 34. Joh. 19. 24. Of David it muſt be underſtood metaphorically, as if he ſaid, They divide my goods, whether lands or others; moveable, or immoveable, among themſelves. They make a prey of all I have. The Latines alſo ſay, ſpoliare; whereas ſpolium, properly and originally, ſignifieth a garment.

for thou haſt heard me from the hornes of the unicornes] In the Hebrew, ומקרני רסים עניתני by all, that I have ſeen, but this one Engliſh, tranſlated, and from the hornes of the unicorne hear me, or anſwer me: by ſome, hearing me; and thou haſt anſwered me. But the firſt is moſt ordinary: Which to make good firſt, the Hebrew preterit עניתני by a double enalage, as they call it, muſt be put for the future; and then the future for an imparative; which is not ordinary. I think therefore, that this tranſlation here ought to be preferred, as more literal, according to the words; (for as for the ve, or u. in the beginning, commonly rendred and, to be taken for the illative, or cauſal, for, is ordinary enough) ſo to the ſence, not inferiour. So David himſelfe elſewhere, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the Lyon, and out of the paw of the Bear, he will deliver me out of the hands of this Phyliſtine, 1 Sam. 17. 37. So alſo, Pſal. 56. 13. For thou haſt delivered my ſoul, &c. and what is there noted. And Pſal. 63. 6, 7. When I remember upon my bed, &c. And Pſal. 85. 1, 2, 3, &c. It is the ſame argument, and it fits here very well in this Pſalm, where David, as hath been ſaid, interchangeably complaineth, and comforteth himſelfe, as preſent ſence on the one ſide, and a lively faith, on the other, did prompt him. As for the Unicorne here mentioned in the tranſlation, certain it is that the Hebrew word ראם is the name of a wild beaſt, approaching to the nature of a Rhinoceros; but different from it, as moſt conceive; deſcribed, Job 39. 9. &c. But what creature it ſhould be, is not certainly known. Mention indeed is made by Pliny, and ſome other ancients of Monoceros, (that is, Unicorn) which is commonly taken for the ראם, not here onely, but often mentioned in Scripture. And yet whether there be any ſuch creature indeed, as that which we commonly call the Unicorn, with that ſhape, and thoſe properties, as are commonly aſcribed unto it, is much doubted, and by not a few, both travellers and others, decried. The Unicorns horne alſo, ſo much in eſteem, is by many thought a meer miſtake, or impoſture. It may ſuffice us to know, leaving the further ſearch of this to Naturaliſts, that ראם, undoubtedly is the name, (by what name ſoever it be, or may be called in Engliſh, or Latine) of a wild beaſt, very fierce and furious, and of great ſtrength; an apt emblem of unjuſt, violent, tyrannical men or Princes.

V. 22. I will declare thy Name unto my brethren] Heb. 2. 12. Here at this verſe begins the ſecond part of the Pſalme, all that followes afterwards to the end of the Pſalme, containing matter of thanks and praiſes for deliverances. Now, if as is generally believed, David made this Pſalme in the time of his diſtreſſe, then it muſt be conceived that he wrote this part by a propheticall Spirit foreſeeing the iſſue, which we know he doth in ſome other Pſalmes. However, the opinion of others is not leſſe probable, that this Pſalme was compoſed by David after his deliverance. It is true, he doth ſet out his condition, which makes the greateſt part of the Pſalme, ſo amply and ſo pathetically, that a man would not think he could write ſo, that was now out of all ſenſe of danger, or paine: and in preſent poſſeſſion and enjoyment of a bleſſed eſtate. But this might be done of him purpoſely, as for ſome other cauſes, ſo particularly, to ſtir himſelfe up to a more vigorous annd full apprehenſion of Gods mercy, in delivering of him from ſuch and ſuch woes, that gave him occaſion thus and thus to bemoane himſelfe. However, ſuppoſing that the writing of this Pſalme, were after David was delivered, and at eaſe; yet it is to be believed, that what he relateth here of his thoughts, or words, is truely and punctually related as his very thoughts and words, in the time of his ſufferance. And it were well, if thoſe that have had any experience of woes and ſorrows, did often in time of their eaſe and proſperity, call to minde, what their thoughts, and purpoſes were, when in affliction. It was the judgement of a learned Heathen, that men needed no other teaching, or Philoſophy (that is his word) then affliction, ſickneſſe, and the like: but ſo, Si tales eſſe ſani perſeveramus, quales nos futuros profitemur infirmi, that is; if we practice when we are in health, and proſperity, what we do purpoſe and reſolve, when we are in miſery. See upon Pſal. 18. 4. The ſorrowes, &c.

V. 23. Yea that fear the Lord, praiſe him] He exhorteth the Church by his example to praiſe God.

V. 24. nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted] The poor afflicted are comforted by the example of David, and Chriſt.

I will pay my vows before them that fear him] Pſal. 116. 14, 18. Which were ſacrifices of thankſgiving, which they offered by Gods commandement, when they were delivered out of any great danger, Pſal. 66. 13, 14. & 116. 18. Iſa. 19. 21.

V. 26. The meek ſhall eat and be ſatisfied] Moſt tranſlate it, the poor ſhall eat, &c. The Hebrew word will bear either. It was the faſhion in thoſe dayes, (not among the Jewes onely, but Gentiles alſo) that when they did ſacrifice, they did feaſt alſo: (from whence aroſe that controverſie in the Apoſtles time, ſo largely handled and agitated by St. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, about things offered to Idols: hence alſo it is, that this word feaſt, which properly ſignifieth a holy day, a day of oblations, and other religious Ceremonies; came to ſignifie a ſolemnity of eating together:) and the greater was the ſacrifice, and the number of beaſts offered, as upon occaſion on any vow, victory, or the like; the greater was alſo the ſolemnity of feaſting and eating. Now becauſe David in the former verſe ſpeaks of vowes to be payed; it is generally conceived by all Interpreters, (as many as inſiſt upon the literal ſenſe: for ſome paſſe it by, and take no notice of it at all;) I have ſeen, not any excepted, that David doth here promiſe great relief to the poor, to be bid by him, and plentifully fed at his ſolmne offerings. And this being the literal ſenſe, it is by the ſame Interpreters myſtically and ſpiritually expounded of the calling of the poor and contemptible (for ſuch were they, for the moſt part, that were firſt called) by the preaching of the Goſpel; and particularly, of the Sacramentall receiving of the bleſſed body and blood of our Lord and Saviour, by which our ſoules (if received with Faith, and other due conditions and circumſtances) are feaſted and nouriſhed unto eternall life. This interpretation, (the literal I mean, of the poor to be fed and feaſted) though I do not, were it but for the number and authority of them that follow it, altogether reject; yet it doth not ſeem to me very probable, that David in ſuch a Pſalm would make ſo ſolemne a commemoration under ſuch general termes, of a thing not to laſt above one day: or if two perchance, yet the utmoſt that can be made of it, is but one good meal, or two. And then granting that this, even this relieving of the poor for one good meal or two, were a thing ſo conſiderable, (as in very deed, the feeding and relieving of the poor, and the like deeds of charity, in general, we acknowledge to be a maine point of Religion, Luk. 11. 41. Jam. 1. laſt verſe, Pure Religion, &c.) as to be ſo ſolemnly mentioned; yet how comes the rich alſo to be ſpoken of, as follows in the 29. verſe, All they that be fat upon earth, &c. is it likely that David would make ſuch a matter of it, and in ſuch general termes? But if not this; what then ſhall the literal (for of the ſpiritual, there will be no controverſie) ſenſe be? Here I would have remembred what was ſaid at the beginning of this Pſalm, that there be divers paſſages, which literally cannot be expounded of David, but figuratively onely; but of Chriſt, literally. The moſt plauſible and literal application to David that I can phanſie, is, that piety and godlineſſe (as in a good meaſure it was:) ſhall be eſtabliſhed in his dayes; and with piety, plenty, and ſecurity: all his Kingdom over. By eating, and being ſatisfied, an eaſie life, may be underſtood; as by eating and drinking, Jer. 22. 15. whereof ſee before, upon Pſal. 14. 4. who eat my people, &c. To eat and rejoyce, (where, by eating, that drinking alſo is comprehended, appears by the context;) was a command of the Law, and an expreſſion of great temporal happineſſe, Deut, 14. 26. and elſewhere. Which makes the Pſalmiſt to inſiſt upon it the longer; That the poor, (or, meek) ſhall eat; here in this verſe: and the rich, (or, thoſe ſhall be fat;) ſhall eat; but with a limitation in both places, (elſe it might ſeem to reliſh of Epicuriſme;) that ſo eating, they ſhall praiſe the Lord; in this: they ſhall worſhip, in the 29. verſe; that is in general, that both rich and poor, great and ſmall, ſhall live at eaſe, and want nothing: as it is, Pſal. 24. 10. The young Lyons (to which the meek are here oppoſed) do lack, and ſuffer hunger; but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing. This I conceive to be the ſenſe of the words, in reference to David. To Chriſt and the Goſpel by him preached the application is eaſie. Of the generality of men, of all ſorts, profeſſions, and conditions, (here included by rich and poor, and they that go down to the duſt, &c. of which more there,) to be called by him, the Prophets are full, to which agree the relations, and teſtimonies of fact, in the Goſpel. Of the poor particularly, becauſe twice here mentioned, in this, and the 29. verſe; the words of the Prophet Eſay are very conſiderable, and fit to be compared with theſe, Eſay 55. 1, 2. Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money: come ye, buy and eat; yea come buy wine and milke without money and without price. 2. Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your ſoul delight its ſelfe in fatneſſe. Of the rich, ſee a notable Propheſie, Eſay 49. 23. And Kings ſhall be thy nurſing fathers, and their Queens, &c. Of the firſt Diſciples of Chriſt, in general, (not without ſome reference to this very place, perchance;) it is recorded, Act. 2. 46, 47. that they did eat their meat with gladneſſe and ſingleneſſe of heart; praiſing God, and having favour with all the people. Now if we will go higher, and expound the words, (which ſome of our moſt approved Interpreters pitch upon as the onely ſenſe;) of that ſublime Sacrament of Chriſt his bleſſed body and blood, by that worthy participation whereof man (whether rich or poor: the rich having no prerogative above the poor in this ineſtimable benefit;) is elevated to the higheſt degree of honour and glory, that ever was enjoyed by mortal man in this world: the words will bear it very well, and no other ſenſe can fit the place better. Nevertheleſſe, the words may alſo be taken more generally of all ſpiritual gifts and graces; in the Goſpel alſo, Joh, 6. figured unto us, by eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood, of the Son of man, verſe 53. &c. Of which, the words of the Prophet Eſay 25. 6. are by moſt underſtood, And in this Mountain ſhall the Lord of hoſts make unto all people a feaſt of fat things, &c.

V. 27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord] Pſal. 2. 8. & 72. 11. & 86. 9.

V. 29. All they that be fat upon earth, ſhall eat and worſhip] That is, rich men, Deut. 31. 20. See before upon verſe 26. The meeke, &c.

all they that go down to the duſt ſhall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own ſoul.] The moſt literal tranſlation of the laſt words, which ſeem to be moſt obſcure, is, & qui animam ſuam non vivificat; (or, vivificavit,) that is, and he that quickeneth not, (or, hath not quickened) his own ſoul: and that moſt followed interpretation both of theſe words, and thoſe before, that go down to the duſt; is, to underſtand by this deſcription, poor wretched people, ſuch as (whether for want of neceſſary nouriſhment, or through any other griefe and miſery;) are not able to hold out, or to keep life any longer, but are at the very point of death: ſaid alſo proverbially, to go down to the duſt; or, to ſit in the duſt, Pſal. 113. 7. &c. And though there will be no great inconvenience in it, if we make the Pſalmiſt to ſay the ſame thing twice, becauſe we had the ſame already in 26. verſe according to moſt tranſlations, as was there ſaid: yet it may be ſo much the better perchance, if we keep the Engliſh there as we find it, (ſo Junius hath it too:) the meek; that ſo what was there delivered in general, (for by the meek, all that have the knowledge and fear of God, are included:) may here more particularly be expreſſed, both rich and poor; be they never ſo rich, or ſo poor. This is the common interpretation, which I cannot except againſt. Yet becauſe it is an obſcure paſſage, (as to thoſe laſt words I mean:) I will not paſſe by (ſome others I do, becauſe too violent:) two other expoſitions, neither of them much improbable, or inconſiſtent with either words, or ſcope. By them that go down to the duſt, that have not kept their ſouls alive, ſome underſtand plainly and literally, thoſe that be dead: and conceive that the ſame is here meant, as is (with ſome alluſion to this very place, ſome think;) expreſſed by the Apoſtle; in theſe words; That at the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhould bow, of things in Heaven, and things in Earth, and things under the Earth, and by the Author of the Apocalypſe, in theſe; And every creature which is in Heaven, and on the Earth, and under the Earth, &c. Rev. 5. 13. The ſecond is, qui animam ſuam in vita non conſervaverit: (ſo are the words tranſlated by Junius, and in him it is that I finde this other expoſition:) that is, Qui ultro flagrans ſtudio gloriæ Dei, abjecerit vitam ſuam, &c. He that out of an honeſt zeal to Gods glory ſhall caſt away (or neglect) his own life, and renounce unto himſelfe for his ſervice: the beſt argument or evidence of a free voluntary people.

bow before him] Phil. 2. 10.

and none can keep] Or, and he that cannot keep: or, though he cannot keep.

V. 30. A ſeed ſhall ſerve him] That we might not think, that all that hath been ſaid, ſhould be the happineſſe of one age onely; by theſe words and thoſe that follow, a perpetuity as in thoſe things which from age to age by generation are propagated, is promiſed unto the Church. Some tranſlate it, Semen eorum: their ſeed; which comes all to one.

it ſhall be accounted unto the Lord for a generation] The Hebrew דור ſignifieth either age, or generation; which diverſity of ſignification hath produced a different tranſlation. For ſome render it, accerſebitur Domino in quaque ætate, that is, It ſhall be accounted the Lords in every age. But it makes no variety of ſenſe, as to the main ſcope, the perpetuity of the Church.

V. 31. and ſhall declare his righteouſneſſe] That is, his goodneſſe and mercy; as the word is often taken both in the old and new Teſtament: whence it is that as the צדקה righteouſneſſe, or juſtice properly, is often tranſlated by the Septuagint ἔλεος and ἐλεημοσύνη: (that alms, charity, mercy:) ſo is the word חסד mercy, properly, as often rendred, by them δικαιοσύνη. So Matth. 1. 19 of Joſeph, δίκαιος ὢν might better be rendred, being a merciful man: or becauſe he was a merciful good man.

For as a juſt man, beleeving her as he did, he might and ought by the law, have dealt with her otherwiſe. See alſo upon Pſal. 71. 2. righteouſneſſe. However, if we take righteouſneſſe here (as ſome do) for the righteouſneſſe of God, whereby we are juſtified before him; or for that meaſure of righteouſneſſe and ſanctification, wherewith, by the operation of Gods Spirit, we are endowed in this life, wholly to be aſcribed unto him, as his gift and grace: ſo we ſhall not need that former interpretation, but keep the word in its more proper and uſual notion.

unto a people that ſhall be born] That ſhall be to poſterity, that is; and after-ages. And here the means of the Churches perpetuity, or of perpetuating the Church of God in this world, are ſet down, and commended unto us; (as is by ſome well obſerved) that is, diligent preaching, and all other good means, whereby the manifold goodneſſe and mercy of God may publikely be declared, and carefully tranſmitted to poſterity. Or, that ſhall be born, that is, that ſhall by the means of preaching be converted and regenerated. See Pſal. 87. 4, 5, 6.

that he hath done this] The glory of it muſt be given to God only: and he hath done it, with great might and power: no mean, or ordinary thing; but full of miraculous events and providences.

V. 3. He reſtoreth my ſoul] He heals me, as a ſhepherd doth the ſick ſheep, that elſe would dye.

he leadeth me in the paths of righteouſneſſe for his Names ſake] מעגלי־צרק Semitæ juſtitiæ, properly paths of righteouſneſſe, is by moſt Interpreters of our ſide taken here, for ſtraight wayes: that is, ſmooth, and even: not rugged, or crooked, or mountainous, as they further explain it. I am not againſt it: yet I wiſh that they that are ſo eager for it, (as ſome are) had produced ſome other parallel place of Scripture, to confirm this interpretation. For my part, I do not remember, or find, upon ſeeking, any ſuch place elſewhere, where thoſe two words ſo are joyned: nor any, where the word צרק is ſo uſed, for plain, or ſmooth. Yet I do not deny but it may be ſo taken: and the rather, becauſe I find Joel 11.23. מורה לצרקה that is, (taking the word מורה here for rain: which alſo, and more frequently, ſignifieth a teacher: as Eſ. 30. 11. 20. And though the Lord give you, &c. twice, in that one verſe. and Job 36. 22. Behold, God exalteth, &c. and except, it be in this place of Joel, where it is twice; but controverted in one of the places: and Pſal. 84.6. Who paſſing through, &c. where it is alſo queſtioned by ſome: is not found in that other ſenſe for raine, any where:) rain of righteonſneſs, or, rain according to righteouſneſſe, that is, moderat raine: according to moſt accurate Expoſitors, though ſome to uphold the authority of the Vulgar Latin, are againſt it, and prefer that other ſenſe, a teacher of righteouſneſſe. As therefore in Joel, a rain of righteouſneſſe, &c. So I confeſſe that here paths of righteouſneſſe, may be taken, (as to the words) for good, plain paths. See alſo upon Pſal. 51. 19. ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe. But why there ſhould be any abſurdity conceited (as ſome are bold to cenſure) in that other ſenſe and tranſlation, embraſed by ſome others, I ſee not ſufficient reaſon. The queſtion is not, whether this whole Pſalme may be interpreted myſtically, and applied to Chriſt, the great Shepherd of ſouls, &c. whereof I think there is no queſtion at all to be made; ſince it is generally granted, that all or moſt Pſalmes, beſides the literall or hiſtoricall ſenſe, may after a more ſublime way, either wholly, or in part, be applied to Chriſt, the end of the Law, Rom. 10. 4. not of the Prophets and Pſalmes only, but almoſt of all that is written, and conteined in the Old Teſtament. And ſince we find Chriſt by himſelf and his Apoſtles, ſo often ſet out unto us as a ſhepherd; it were very ſtrange, that any man ſhould queſtion the myſticall or allegoricall application of theſe words, and expreſſions, unto him. The queſtion is, whether in theſe particular words the word צרק may be tranſlated in its proper ſignification, juſtice, or, righteouſneſſe: and this to be taken for the proper and literall ſenſe of the words. He reſtoreth, (or, converteth, or bringeth back, as others;) my ſoul, he leadeth me in paths of right. this to be underſtood ſpiritually, of the guydance of Gods Spirit. as, or much to that purpoſe, Pſalm. 119. laſt verſe: I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep; ſeek thy ſervant, &c. For why ſhould it be unlikely, that having ſpoken of temporall and momentany bleſſings, ſuch as belong to this life; he ſhould proceed to the chiefeſt, thoſe of the ſoul, the fruit whereof is eternall? This, we know, is done elſewhere frequently. But it is objected, neither is there any other objection againſt it, that I know of; that it cannot be here, becauſe he doth even after this, go on in the ſame metaphore of an ordinary ſhepherd, as at the beginning: thy rod and thy ſtaffe, &c. I do not conceive this ſo great an objection, as it is apprehended by the Party that objects it: and beſides what examples common Authors might afford, I finde this rule ſet down by very learned Commentators, and well skilled in the Idiotiſmes of the Scripture: that Solet ſape Scriptura non ſemper eandem ſervare metaphoram, ſed paululum ab eâ divertere ac mox redire: (Ribera in Joel c. v. p. 47.) whereof this example among others is given; Ezek. 16. 13. and thou didſt proſper into a Kingdom: literally and properly to be underſtood of the Jewiſh Common-wealth; which, both before and afterwards in the ſame Chapter, in the verſes immediately following, is ſpoken of figuratively under the type of a woman. According then to this ſenſe, and tranſlation: he leadeth me in the paths of righteouſneſſe: that is, he taketh care of me, to frame me to all goodneſſe and vertue, whereby my perſon may be acceptable unto him, and I ſecured of a better life, an eternal inheritance hereafter in heaven, after I have run out my courſe upon earth, According to that of the Apoſtle: Neverthe leſſe the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeale; the Lord knoweth them that are his: And let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity.

of righteouſneſſe] Juſtice, or, righteouſneſs, is often taken in the Scriptures in a large ſence, and comprehends all manner of goodneſſe: and not in the Scriptures onely, but in the writings of ancient Philoſophes alſo. I ſhall ſet down ſome of their words, that Chriſtians may bluſh, if their righteouſneſſe (for according to the opinion a man holdeth, ſo is his practice commonly:) come ſhort of the righteouſneſſe of heathens, that were led by natural reaſon onely. It is defined by one of them: Animi affectio ſuum cuique tribuens: &c. that is, A certain temper, or diſpoſition of the mind, affording to every man what is his own, and ſtudious of the preſervation of humane ſociety by bounty (to his power) and equitableneſſe: From which cannot be ſeparated, (his own words:) pietas, bonitas, liberalitas, benignitas, comitas. And the ſame Author, in another Book, maintaineth, and partly proveth, that no man can truely and conſtantly be juſt, or good; qui mortem, qui dolorem, &c. that is, who feareth either death, or pain, or baniſhment. or poverty: or who doth prize life, wealth, honour, and the like, more then right, or a good conſcience? A further confirmation of this interpretation of the word righteouſneſſe in this place, we may fetch from Pſal. 5. 8. Lead me O Lord, in thy righteouſneſſe, &c, and Prov. 8. 20. I lead in the way of righteouſneſſe, &c. Let the phraſes be compared, and there will appear great affinity, if not identity.

V 4. thorow the valley of the ſhadow of death] Though he were in danger of death, as the ſheep that wandereth in the dark valley without his ſhepherd. Yea, and though he ſhould be in the very middeſt of greateſt evils, and calamities that can befall a man. For ſo the ſhadow of death is taken in Scripture; as Pſal. 44. 19. Though thou haſt ſore broken us in the place of Dragons, and covered us with the ſhadow of death. And Pſal. 107. verſe 10. and 14. Such as ſit in darkneſſe, &c. Neither is it the intent of the Pſalmiſt by theſe words to ſet out his confidence, as though he believed that no evil ſhould, or could happen unto him: but no ſuch evil, as ſhould take him from his confidence in his God: What that? that Gods judgements are right; that in very faithfulneſſe: Pſal. 119. 75. for his good: verſe 71. 61. and Rom. 8. 28. He doth afflict him: in a word, from that confidence, wherein St. Paul, that ſuffered ſo much for Chriſt, who daily did encounter with ſo many terrours, ſet out at large by himſelſe in divers places of his Epiſtles, as no man ever did with more; doth ſo rejoyce and glory in; and which he propoſeth unto all true Chriſtians, as matter of higheſt comfort; Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt &c? Verſ. 1. E*Arth is the Lords*] Deut. 10. 14. Job 41. 11. Pſal. 50. 12. 1 Cor. 10. 26, 28.

and the fulneſſe thereof] Before he ſpeaks of the Church and people of God particularly, which he doth afterwards, he firſt begins with the generality of Gods ſoveraignty over all the world, and over all men, as Creator of all : to let us know ; Firſt, that although the Church of God hath a particular relation unto him, to be called his people, &c. yet God is the God of all men, and hath a care of all. Secondly, that although God, by right of Creation, Adminiſtration, Suſtentation, &c. be the God of all men in general : yet there is a ſelect people, (called the Church) who have a more particular right to, and intereſt in his love, favour, and protection ; whom he deſcribes by certain marks and proprieties, external and viſible : And becauſe therein the happineſſe of man chiefly conſiſteth to be of this number, that thus belong unto God more particularly ; he therefore invites in the end all people and nations of the World joyfully to receive and entertain him, (by ſeeking to him, as verſe 6. and conforming themſelves to his Doctrine, in their life and converſation; which preſuppoſeth a right knowledge of him) that ſo they may be partakers of the ſame happineſſe. Some make the coherence of the words to be ; that being to ſpeak of the Church of God, then included in Iſrael, the better to ſet out the mercy of God, in chuſing to himſelfe a peculiar people and nation, to own it for his after a ſpecial manner : He firſt begins with the generality of all mens relation unto God, as a Creator, and in that reſpect, the God of all, equally ; and then upon mention of Sion, (called here, the hill of the Lord) leſt all Jewes ſhould think themſelves as Jewes, meerly, true members of the Church, (as indeed many did ;) he ſets down ſome marks and tokens whereby a true Iſraelite might be known, and diſcovered from one that is ſo by name and outward profeſſion onely. And then for the latter verſes, how thoſe alſo are by ſome made to cohere, differently from what was ſhewed before, we ſhall ſee there. Moreover, theſe firſt words contain a tacit propheſie concerning the future calling of the Gentiles, and generality of the Church, to conſiſt of all people and nations of the World ; upon this ground, that God is the God and Creator of all men, as well as of the Jews and Iſraelites. The Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 10. 25, 28. citeth theſe words to confirm his doctrine there, that we ought not to be ſcrupulous about meats, becauſe, if all Gods, (as made by him) then all theirs alſo, (for their uſe, &c.) that belong unto God ; or, whoſe God is ; as ſome there : or rather; becauſe none bad or evil in themſelves, as created all by God, and all owned by him, for his. But I think it more likely that the Apoſtle in citing thoſe words had reſpect unto Pſal. 50. 12. where we have the ſame words again. The context there hath more affinity with Saint Pauls his ſcope in that place, then the context here.

upon the ſeas] The Water, in the order of the Elements, and by its nature, as at firſt created, is above the Earth, and ſhould cover the earth, but that by the power and providence of Almighty God, to the end that the earth might become habitable, it was driven down lower then the earth : then that part of the earth, at leaſt, which was uſeful and neceſſary to man : which may in a general ſence be termed the earth abſolutely. It is very likely that the Pſalmiſt doth allude to, and Rhetorically ſet out this peculiar ordinance and providence of God for man : wherein as much as in any thing, his great and ſoveraigne power over all things doth appeare. Founded therefore, not with regard to the nature of the Element of water, or firſt order of God in the creation : but founded, as it doth now appear to our eyes : elegantly and rhetorically to ſet out the power of God. It is the greateſt care of humane architects, to lay their foundations upon things very firme and ſteady ; as rocks, and the like ; eſpecially the foundations of great and bulky ſtructures : but behold, here is an architect that hath founded ſuch a Structure as the whole Earth, upon the waters, and yet it ſtandeth. See upon Pſal. 103. 3. Who laieth the beames, &c. And yet who knoweth what may be in and about the Center of the Earth ? We read in the Scripture, Gen. 1. 6, 7. Pſal. 148. 4. of waters in or above the Heavens, where though by Heavens, ordinary Expoſitors underſtand the Aire, the lower Region of it ; yet there be very learned men that are not ſatisfied with that interpretation ; and chooſe rather to acknowledge their ignorance, then abſolutely to determine where they ſee juſt cauſe of further conſideration.

V. 3. Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord] Pſal. 15. 1. See there.

V. 4. He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart] Iſai. 33. 15, 16. and Rom. 12. 14. Follow peace with all men, and holineſſe, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord. Clean hands, not by external ablution ; which being done, not for outward cleanlineſſe, or bare legal ceremony ; but with an opinion of holineſſe and ſanctity, was reproved by our Saviour ; Marke 7. 2. And when they ſaw ſome of his Diſciples, &c. to verſe 24. And from thence, &c. Clean hands, and a pure heart : that is, innocent actions, that proceed from a ſincere heart, actions that are both materially and formally good and godly : without any fraud, diſſimulation, and hypocriſie. Again, clean hands; and a pure heart : that is, innocent, not onely from doing, but even from thinking, intending, projecting, contriving, or wiſhing any thing that is evil. Let the wicked man forſake his way, and the unrighteous man (or, man of iniquity ; that is, wicked, as before :) his thoughts, Eſay 55. 7. This the very Heathen by the light of nature, could teach : Nam ſcelus intra ſe tacitum qui cogitat ullum, Facti crimen habet. No wonder then if our Saviour require it of Chriſtians : Ye have heard that it was ſaid, &c. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh on a woman, &c.

He that hath clean hands] Heb. the clean of hands.

who hath not lift up his ſoul unto vanity] That hath not his affections ſet upon wealth, honour, pleaſures, Jer. 22. 27. But about the right interpretation or tranſlation of the Original word, there's no ſmall controverſie among the Rabbins, or Jewiſh Doctors. The reading of moſt Hebrew Copies is not נפשו his ſoul ; but נפשי my ſoul. This being the moſt received reading of the two, hence the Rabbins infer, that it is God himſelfe that ſpeaketh ; and would have ſwearing by God, or by the ſoul of God to be intended. The verb נשא will fit well enough for that purpoſe, we grant. And Jerem. 51. 14 Amos 6. 6. we read of Gods ſwearing by his (own) ſoul. Yet we do not finde that it was a cuſtome among the Jewes, ſo to ſwear, by the life, or ſoul of God ; which this interpretation preſuppoſeth. But of ſwearing neverthelеſſe, though not by Gods, yet by a mans own ſoul, according to the other reading, his ſoul ; the words may be taken, and are indeed, by moſt accurate Interpreters : who make the following words, nor ſworne deceitfuly, but an Epexegeſis, or further interpretation, and confirmation of theſe. This, becauſe it pleaſeth men of ſuch worth and judgement ; and is warrantable by the Original words, I cannot but like. However, this that we had before being no leſſe warrantable, need not be rejected. And certain it is, that there is nothing that more provokes a man often to ſwear, then to ſet his affection upon worldly things.

thy face, O Jacob] There is no more in the Hebrew then bare Jacob, without any O, which either ſhould not be added, or with it ſomewhat elſe to make the ſenſe perfect ; as in the margin, O God of Jacob. But by others, it is otherwiſe ſupplied ; as, the generation of Jacob ; by ſome : by others, that ſeek thy face in Jacob. There be that leave Jacob alone in the Text ; and read by it ſelfe, Jacob ; as if he had ſaid, Who are (thoſe that ſeek thy face, &c ? as before) the onely true poſterity of Jacob ; or, true Iſraelites. See the like, Pſal. 68. 26. from the fountain of Iſrael ; or as in the margin there, ye that are of the fountain, &c.

V. 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates] It was the faſhion in ancient times, when they would ſolemnize the entrance of any Prince, or other, that had well deſerved of the publick, or by way of flattery perchance, and more out of fear then good will ; to breake down the wals, and pull off the gates of the City : partly, that the party in his triumphant Chariot, with all his train, might have the more free entrance ; and partly, as profeſſing by that ceremony, that their City needed no wals nor gates, as long as it had ſuch a Guardian and Protectour within it. It is likely that David by theſe words, doth allude to ſome ſuch cuſtom.

ye everlaſting doors] Heb. פתחי עולם ſome tranſlate it, Portæ ſeculi ; or, mundi : that is, you doors ; or gates of the World : as if he directed his ſpeech to all the Nations of the World ; to the great ones, Princes and Potentates of the World, eſpecially : all whom (according to this tranſlation) the Pſalmiſt doth invite, readily, and chearfully to embrace the truth of God, and ſo to become members of his Church. Of this ſomewhat hath been ſaid before, at the beginning. But the more generally (and more warrantably) followed tranſlation, is that we have here ; according to which, the more literal ſenſe is ſuppoſed to be this : David in great zeal intended a magnificent Houſe to the God of Iſrael, and made preparations for it. He did not build it himſelfe we know ; but yet he knew that his ſon after him ſhould, and therein according to his zeal much rejoycing and chearing himſelfe with the very thought of it, he ſung this triumphant and gratulatory Ode. He cals them (the doors of this intended Holy Houſe ;) everlaſting : partly in reference to Gods promiſe, expreſſed Pſal. 132. 14. of his eternal abode there ; (of which ſee more upon Pſal. 68. 16.) and partly in oppoſition to the former Tabernacle, now upon the building of this Temple, to ceaſe ; and to the condition of the Ark, which in former times had been removed from place to place, till it was ſettled in this Houſe, from whence it never ſtirred afterwards, till the deſtruction of the Temple it ſelfe. Some conceive this to have been ſung by David, when the Ark was brought in by him to the place that he had prepared for it ; as Pſal. 47. and 68. where ſee more. In a more myſtical ſenſe, by theſe gates and doors here are underſtood the ſouls of the faithful ; or of men in general, which are here exhorted to prepare themſelves for the due entertainment of Chriſt, and his Goſpel : to which not much unlike is that of the Prophet, Iſa. 40. 3. applyed to Chriſt coming in the fleſh, whereof the Ark was a type, Luke 3. 4, 5. The voice of one crying in the wilderneſſe, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight.

ſtraight. Every valley ſhall be filled, and every mountain and hill ſhall be brought low, &c. And again, in a myſtical too, but different ſence, the words by others, are applyed unto Chriſt, as directed to him after his reſurrection, and glorious conqueſt of hell and the grave; now ready to aſcend into Heaven: by gates, underſtanding the gates of Heaven.

V. 10. mercy and truth] All good we have comes from Gods mercy, and conſtancy in keeping his word, Pſal. 40. 11. & 100. 5. Gen. 24. 27. The words may bear this ſence alſo, that to ſuch as apply themſelves to the practice of godlineſſe, and keeping of Gods Commandements, the goodneſſe, mercy, and truth of God in all his wayes is made known, upon which the love of God (the very life of true religion and godlineſſe) is chiefly grounded. I ſay upon a full apprehenſion, and approved experience of Gods goodneſſe, mercy, and truth. With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thy ſelfe (ἐμφανίσω: a word uſed by Chriſt upon this occaſion, Joh. 14. 21.) merciful, &c. and with the froward, thou wilt ſhew thy ſelfe froward, Pſal. 18. 25, 26. I think the words will bear this too, as well as that other more obvious ſence, and more proper to the place, of which we have ſpoken there: (Pſal. 18. 24, 25.) But ſee more upon verſe 14. The ſecret of the Lord.

V. 14. The ſecret of the Lord] This phraſe, the ſecret of the Lord, is not alwayes uſed in one ſence; for when Job 29. 4. ſaith, that the ſecret of God was upon his Tabernacle, he meaneth it of his ſecret favour, and providence towards him in things temporal, bleſſing the works of his hands and whatſoever belonged to him; whereby many inſenſibly thrive in this world, as to the admiration of others, ſo beyond their own expectation; yea, and knowledge too: Of which the Wiſe man hath this obſervation, There is that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth; and there is that withholdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth to poverty, Prov. 11. 24. See alſo Prov. 3. 32, 33. For the froward, &c. This cannot be the meaning here. Some underſtand by it, a particular aſſurance of Gods favour, whereby happineſſe is ſecured to us, both preſent and future. But this doth not ſeeme ſo well to agree with the ſcope of the words, neither here, nor elſewhere, where this expreſſion is uſed. Beſides, it is a doctrine ſubject to many reſtrictions and limitations, without which, many are deceived by it, or rather deceive themſelves. Others therefore underſtand by it, the doctrine of God, as particularly, before Chriſt, the Law; a ſecret, not unto all Nations of the world onely, beſides the Jewes; but even among the Jewes, though commonly profeſſed, yet hidden, but to the godly, who earneſtly applied themſelves to the ſearch and ſtudy of it: which made David elſewhere to pray; Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy Law: Pſal. 119. 18. and ſo highly to prize the knowledge of it, as he doth in that Pſalme, and elſewhere often. Before Chriſt, then, the Law, ſince Chriſt, the Goſpel; of which Chriſt ſaid unto his Diſciples, Unto you it is given to know the myſteries of the Kingdom of heaven, but unto them it is not given, Matth. 13. 11. And Joh. 7. 17. If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine, &c. And the Apoſtle, that if any man love God, the ſame (ἔγνωσται: edoctus fuit, Beza;) is taught by him: 1 Cor. 8. 3. All this granted as pertinent and probable, yet I conceive by the ſecret of the Lord, (both here, and Prov. 3. 32. if we take verſes 31, 32. together, and begin a new Paragraph at 33. as it is in our Engliſh Bibles: otherwiſe, joyning verſes 32. and 33. then ſecret here, as we have ſaid before:) more particularly to be underſtood of a certain knowledge and acknowledgement of Gods providence, and manifold diſpenſations not obvious to carnal, yea many times contrary to humane judgement, which they, who in all humility fear God, and heartily deſire and endeavour in all things to ſubmit unto him, by long obſervation, and Gods ſpecial favour, in time attain unto. Of which the Pſalmiſt elſewhere ſpeaketh. Whoſo is wiſe, and will obſerve theſe things, &c. Pſal. 107. laſt verſe; and the Prophet Jerem. 9. 23, 24. Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, &c. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me, &c. As alſo the Prophet Hoſ. laſt Chapter, laſt verſe, (not to mention others) in theſe words, Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things; prudent, and he ſhall know them; for the wayes of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in them: but the tranſgreſſours ſhall fall therein.

V. 21. Let integrity and uprightneſſe preſerve me] Foraſmuch as I have behaved my ſelfe uprightly towards mine enemies, let them know that thou art the defender of my juſt cauſe.

THIS Pſalme (which I put here at the end, of purpoſe, as a thing not very pertinent to the matter of the Pſalme, nor for every ones reading:) is one of thoſe, which we may call Alphabetical Pſalms, becauſe both for the number, and order, (but in different kinds) they follow the Hebrew Alphabet, which doth conſiſt of 22. letters. Of this kinde be, beſides this, the 34. Pſalme, which beginneth, I will bleſſe the Lord at all times, &c. the 37. Fret not thy ſelfe becauſe of evil doers, &c. the 111. I will praiſe the Lord with my whole heart, &c. and 112. Bleſſed is the man, &c. For, Praiſe ye the Lord, in this and the foregoing 111. Pſalme, is rather the title, then the beginning of the Pſalme; and ſhould rather be put over, (as it is by many:) then at the beginning. The 119. Bleſſed are the undefiled in the way, &c. And laſtly, the 145. which beginneth, I will extol thee my God O King, &c. All theſe, as I ſaid, be Alphabetical, but not exactly all, nor after one kinde. In this, the firſt in this kinde, every verſe (with ſome exception, of which more, by and by;) doth begin with a letter, according to the order of letters in the Alphabet, Aleph, Beth, Gimel, &c. So in the 34. and the 145. Pſalmes: but, as I ſaid, with ſome exceptions, and diverſities, in every one of theſe. For in this, there be three letters, or verſes, (according to the order of the Alphabet) deficient; Beth, Vau, and Kuph: and inſtead of theſe, three redundant, Beth, Peh, (whereof one is at the end,) and Reſh, being all double. It is true indeed, that the ſecond word of the ſecond Aleph, begins with a Beth; and the third word of the verſe He, (or, fifth verſe,) begins with a Vau; which is obſerved by ſome, as though thoſe letters there ſhould ſupply the want of two of the 3. verſes that are wanting. But there is little likelihood in that conceit; eſpecially, ſince we finde nothing, in the ſame kinde, to ſupply the defect of the Kuph. And yet I ſhould like of this better, then of their conceit, (too bold to be admitted) who would have the verſes ſo divided, that that Beth and that Vau which we have ſpoken of, the one the ſecond; the other the third; (as now divided:) might be the firſt words of the verſes: and would have a word (קום) added to the 18. verſe, to make it begin with a Kuph. And then for the Peh at the end, they make that to be part of the foregoing verſe. But ſuppoſing this would do here, yet we ſhall ſtill be to ſeek in other Pſalmes, of the ſame kinde, where the like anomalies, or deficiences are to be found. For not to ſpeake of the 34. where at the end we finde a ſupernumerary Peh, (or verſe beginning with the letter Peh:) as it is here: in the 145. Pſalme, of the very ſame kind of Alphabetical diſpoſition as this, there is a Nun wanting, which cannot be ſupplied but by ſupplying a whole verſe, (by the vulgar Greek and Latine indeed, out of the 17. verſe of the ſame, with alteration of one word or two, I know not how rightly ſupplied:) which would be of dangerous conſequence. Though there be, even of our ſide, ſome, (Mollerus for one by name) who make no great matter of it, and plainly deliver their opinion, that they believe one verſe, librariorum incuriâ, by the negligence of the Scribes, to be wanting. But the Rabbines there, ſome of them, make a great myſtery of it, as though David in his meditations had ſeen that dreadful נפלה afterwards expreſſed by the Prophet Eſay, Chap. 24. 20. and had, of purpoſe, paſſed it over, to haſten to the contrary and more comfortable סומך, which there begins the 14. verſe. But of theſe conceits, or what may more ſafely be anſwered, more ſhall be ſaid, when we have done with the reſt, already mentioned, which we called Alphabetical Pſalmes. The next therefore is, the 37. Pſalme, differing from the former in this, that every letter, beſides the Alphabetical, hath one verſe more belonging to it, not tyed to any letter, but free for any, as in other Pſalmes. So indeed we finde it in the greateſt part of it, by far; ſo that à majore parte, we call it Alphabetical. But otherwiſe it hath many anomalies, and exorbitances. For beſides that ſome letters (as the Daleth, and the Caph:) have but one verſe, there is no Gnajin to be found: no, nor Peh neither; not in its due place, at leaſt: but after the Tſade, there is a Peh indeed: but that, not Alphabetical, as I conceive, but meerly caſual, and belonging to the Tſade. Except we ſhall allow of their conjecture, which I confeſſe, all things well conſidered, is not altogether to be rejected, who would have a new verſe to begin at thoſe words of the 28. verſe, (as now divided) לעולם נשמרו, and עולם read for לעולם, ſo that we may have a Gnajin to begin with. But this laſt of the Lamed to be put away, they might well have ſpared, and would, I believe, if they had conſidered, that this ſervile Lamed can be no hinderance, but that the verſe may be thought to begin with a Gnajin; no more then the Vau before the Thau, (ותשועת) at the end of the Pſalm: at which haply ſome might ſtumble; but they need not; for in this caſe, it is not conſiderable: and if not the Vau, then neither the Lamed before the Gnajin. But to go on in the general veiw of theſe Alphabetical Pſalmes: The two next, the 111. and the 112. are both in their Alphabetical way contrary to this laſt. For whereas the 37. as we have ſaid, hath two verſes belonging to one letter: theſe two, have two letters belonging to each verſe. Neither is there any conſiderable anomalie in either of them; ſo that we ſhall need to ſay no more of them. The laſt is the 119. Pſalme, which conſiſts of 22. octonaries, each letter of the Alphabet in order making 8. verſes, all which 8. begin with one letter: and though this be a very long Pſalme, yet I do not finde any thing amiſſe, or out of order, in this neither. Now to conclude concerning theſe defects, or anomilies in general; although I am not of opinion, that if it were granted that incuriâ librariorum (as Mollerus ſpake before) ſome have hapned, much can be concluded from thence againſt the integrity of the Hebrew Text, which doth not conſiſt in ſuch petty things, neither would Beza have made ſo bold with the new Teſtament, if he had thought ſo: yet conſidering the number of them, and variety, I do rather joyn with them that believe ſuch defects, or anomilies, (or however to be called) to have proceeded from the author himſelfe, who did not think himſelfe bound to ſuch niceties, but followed the intention of his minde, wholly bent upon the matter, where the words did not offer themſelves; there being no other reaſon to be given of this Alphabetical diſpoſition, or invention, but to help the memory; a thing not ſo conſiderable, as to make a buſineſſe of it.

V. 3. For thy loving kindneſſe is before mine eyes]. He ſheweth what ſtaid him that he did not recompence evil for evil. Or, becauſe thy loving kindneſſe is before mine eyes, therefore have I walked in thy truth; that is, in the way of thy Commandements, therefore have I applied my ſelf faithfully to perform, what thou haſt commanded. Yea though I meet with many diſcouragements, many croſſes, oppoſitions, and perſecutions for thy ſake, Yet becauſe thy loving kindneſs, &c. So of Moſes the Apoſtle, that he refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter: Chuſing rather, to ſuffer affliction, &c. Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt &c. Why? becauſe he had reſpect unto the recompence of the reward. And 1 Tim. 4. 9, 10. This is a faithful ſaying, &c. For therefore we both labour and ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, &c. and 1 Cor. 15. laſt verſe, after a long diſputation and aſſertion of the reſurrection of the dead, Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye ſtedfaſt, immovable, &c. for as much as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord. The Scripture is full of ſuch places. That doctrine therefore that paſſeth ordinarily for very plauſible, that we ought not to ſerve God for hope of reward: and that ſo to do is but mercenary, not ingenuous and acceptable ſervice; whether it be as true and conſonant to the word of God, as it is commonly delivered and received, I make a queſtion. I am ſure that I find Chriſt himſelf propoſed unto us as an example, who for the joy that was ſet before him endured the croſſe deſpiſed the ſhame, & is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. Hebr. 12. 2. I know of the ἀντὶ, for, how to be expounded, there is variety of opinions. But the doctrine however to be ſound, may further be aſſerted by St. Paul, who ſticks not to conclude and ſay, That if there be no reſurrection of the dead, it is beſt for us, to eat and drink, (that is, as I take it, and all men underſtand it, to take our pleaſures of the world, whileſt we may) for to morrow we dye, 1 Cor. 15. 32. See more upon Pſal. 130. 4. But there is forgiveneſſe with thee, that thou mayeſt be feared.

V. 4. I have not ſate with vain perſons] Pſal. 1. 1. See the Notes there, by comparing of which paſſages, (the firſt verſe there, with 4, and 5. here) both verbes, to ſit, to go, &c. and ſubſtantives, ungodly, ſinners, ſcornfull there; with the verbes and ſubſtantives, here: and their order: it may probally be inferred, that the Pſalmiſt had no direct aim to any formall gradation, but put the words together, as they offered themſelves, having no other intention, then to make full and ſolemn profeſſion (as of great conſequence, to godlineſſe and piety:) that he did avoid the company of wicked ungodly men, as much as he could poſſibly. I know that a man affecting oſtentation of wit and ſubtilty, might find ſomewhat even here, in the order, variety, repetition of the words, whereupon to ground ſome notable (in his own judgement) obſervation. For my part, I will not attempt it; not becauſe I deſpaire of finding ſomewhat that might pleaſe ſuch palats; but becauſe it is againſt my judgement; if not conſcience. Yet there is no great hurt (ſince many are much taken with them:) in ſuch obſervations, ſo that they be not much preſſed; nor concluſions of conſequence in controverted matters, raiſed from them. But now to the matter of the words; the avoiding of evil company: Out of all queſtion it is that wherein great part of that circumſpect walking, required of all Chriſtians, and without which, we can have little ground of aſſurance, that we are not going in the broad way of eternal deſtruction: great part, I ſay, of our circumſpect walking in the world, doth conſiſt. For good men, are more apt (ſuch is the corruption of nature) to be corrupted by evil company, (according to that of the Apoſtles; or rather of an ancient Comick Poet, cited and comfirmed by the Apoſtle, that evil communications corrupt good manners: 1 Cor. 15. 33. than evil men to be benefited by good and godly company. It is incredible, but to them that obſerve it with care; what power evill examples in dayly converſation have, to inſinuat themſelves ſecretly and inſenſibly, (wherein is greateſt danger) ſo that even the beſt, and beſt rooted in godlineſſe, have occaſion enough to feare, and to be aware. However, we muſt make difference of evil communications; evil in the very communication it ſelf: and communication, or communications with evill men. For ſome bad men, though bad in their private and more ſecret communication, and converſation, yet out of ſome civill reſpect, or otherwiſe, are inoffenſive in their ordinary converſation. Others, as they are in their lives, and ordinary practiſe; ſo in all companies, (except they be reſtrained by ſome feare) offenſive and ſcandalous: as by frequent ſwearing, curſing, ranck diſcourſe, and the like. We ſhould not upon any termes (if we can avoid it) endure the company of men, though it be with no danger to our ſelves, ſcandalous in their communication, and ordinary talke: except we may take the liberty to reproove them, and that it may probably do them good: ſo far at leaſt, as to ſhew our diſlike and juſt offence. Elſe, men become guilty (though innocent our ſelves) of that diſhonour that is done unto God, by ſuch evil communication. Beſides, we muſt diſtinguiſh between men, ſuſpected, but not convicted; and ſtill having a form of godlineſſe; and, open profane, ſcandalous offendors. According to the Apoſtles rule, and direction (though it be not altogether the ſame caſe now; becauſe we have no profeſt heathens, or atheiſts among us: not publickly allowed of, at leſt; I wiſh I could ſay, nor tolerated) 1 Cor. 5. I wrote unto you in an Epiſtle, &c. 9, 10. to the end of the chapter: we ſhould, as to matter of ſcandall, moſt avoid or endeavour to avoid their company being ſcandalous in their lives, who are neereſt unto us: as of the ſame houſe, or pariſh, and the like. Others, that we have no relation to, if we light upon them by chance, as our occaſions do lead us, we need not be ſo ſcrupulous. But this of avoiding the neareſt, &c. muſt be underſtood, where we are not obliged by any duty: for we may not caſt off obedience, and naturall obligations, in the performance of which the very life of godlineſſe is intereſſed, under colour of religion. So much of evil company here upon this place, where we find it by ſuch variation of words inculcated and inſiſted upon, may ſerve for divers other places, where it is again, whether more largely, or breefly ſpoken of.

Others, I will compaſſe; that is, cauſe to be compaſſed with the company of ſingers and Quire-men. of all them that are about him. His meaning by this expreſſion in general is, that he will be very ſtudious and diligent in the publick worſhip of God; and all duties belonging thereunto. But it may be David more particularly might intend by theſe words to profeſſe his charity towards his enemies, whom, though much wronged and cruelly perſecuted by them, yet he did not deſire to requite, nor had any evil deſign againſt. Which might ſeem rather Evangelical, then Legal innocency, or perfection: (at leaſt, if that collection of the Phariſees were true, Thou ſhalt love the neighbour, and hate thine enemy, Matth. 5. 43. But it was not. The Law (not to inſiſt in other particulars, not a few;) was directly againſt it; Thou ſhalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge againſt the children of thy people; but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: I am the Lord, Lev. 19. 18. And when Eſay (or God rather by his Prophet) ſaid, which comes neereſt to Davids words, When you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood, Eſay 1. 15. it is not to be conceived, that by hands full of blood, he meant their hands onely, that ſhed innocent blood; but theirs alſo, who thirſted after the blood of thoſe that had done them wrong, and were ſet upon revenge. It was not therefore altogether an Evangelical counſel, or conſtitution, (as ſome would have it) which our Saviour Matth. 5. 23, 24. (which haply might have ſome reference to theſe very words of David, we are now upon) enjoyneth; Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, Leave there thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way: firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Which I take to be rather a confirmation, or further declaration and vindication of the Law againſt the falſe gloſſes and collections of the Scribes and Phariſees; then a new conſtitution. It might have done there well: but becauſe I find it here, upon this verſe, I will give it place here. I find a queſtion here propoſed by a very learned man, and very zealous againſt all Superſtition, and Popiſh ceremonies. It is wiſhed by many, he had uſed more moderation ſometimes, to have ſeriouſly conſidered, which may truly be ſo deemed, (becauſe idle and ſuperſtitious:) and which not, becauſe both ancient, and uſeful. That is, Although I confeſſe that the caſe now is farre different of what, it was in the time of the Fathers, (that is, in Davids time:) *Yet becauſe even now God doth not keep together his people without ſome external order, and doth yet bring men unto him by earthly rudiments; I deny not our Churches that Beauty, which ſhould raviſh, or draw to it ſelfe, the wiſhes and affections of godly people. However if ſuch, lawfully ordained and put in, miſlead, they that are miſled, may have ſomewhat to plead for themſelves: The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes ſeat. All therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve: &c. Matth. 23. 2, 3. Nevertheleſſe, godly people muſt not ſo farre truſt to their Mininiſters, but that, they that are of abilities, muſt embrace all good opportunities further to ſatisfie themſelves, when occaſion is; as thoſe noble Beroeans did: who are commended for it, Acts 17. 11.

V. 8. ſeek ye my face, my heart ſaid unto thee] In the Original, word for word, thus; To thee my heart ſaid, Seek ye my face; Thy face, Lord will I ſeek. Which words, as all agree, are ſomewhat defective; that is, ſomewhat muſt be ſupplied to make the ſenſe perfect: and beſides, they are, not miſplaced, we may not ſay; (for ſuch trajections to beſt authors are ordinary enough; and we have examples of them in divers other places of Scripture) but, not placed in due order of ordinary conſtruction: Through this defect, and diſplacing together, great liberty is left to Interpreters; and tranſlated they are by divers, diverſly: yet ſo, that this variety of tranſlations, (the vulgar Greek and Latine, who read them otherwiſe then we do, excepted) comes all to one purpoſe in point of ſenſe, or ſentence: neither is there any (to my beſt judgement) that either ſupplies, or places the words better, then this our Engliſh here. So that more need not to be ſaid of the words. And as for the ſenſe, it ſeems plain enough; ſo plain indeed, (in my judgement) that the very plainneſſe makes me ſuſpect, that there is ſomewhat more in it, then hath been yet obſerved by any that I have ſeen; Thou ſaidſt, Seek ye my face; my heart ſaid unto thee, Thy face Lord will I ſeek. That is, As thou haſt commanded, that we ſhould ſeek thy face, ſo I do. That is the ſumme of what is ſaid. But where commanded? Or, why this command of God, ſo expreſly, by a kind of Proſopopaia, more then any other, in that kind elſewhere, here ſet down? I would ſay at leaſt, which would put ſome more life, or emphaſis in the words; that this command of ſeeking God, being more particularly, by God, laid upon the heart of man, (as may appear, Deut. 4. 19. to which ſome refer us; But if from thence thou ſhalt ſeek the Lord thy God, thou ſhalt finde him, if thou ſeek him with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul:) David in great confidence of his hearty performance, doth here appeal to God, himſelfe the ſearcher of the hearts, remembring him (to ſpeak the more movingly) of his own words, and immediately anſwering, as his own heart ſuggeſted unto him. But this would have been more plain, I muſt confeſſe, if the heart had been mentioned here in the command, as well as it is in the anſwer. And beſides, if my face, had been in the command, Deut. 4. 19. (the onely place we finde, that David could allude unto) ſo directly expreſſed, as it is here in this ſuppoſed repetition, or citation. That therefore which I do more incline unto, is this. It is a common obſervation, that in beſt Writers, ſometimes one and the ſelf-ſame word, not in the ſame Book onely, but even within the compaſſe of one or two verſes, or ſo, is uſed in a different ſence. So the word מורה Job 2. 23. Be glad then ye children of Sion, &c. twice repeated, by the Chaldee paraphraſe, and moſt Rabbines, as likewiſe by our Engliſh margin there, (to which many other tranſlations agree) is taken in the firſt place for a Teacher; in the ſecond, for Rain. In the New Teſtament it is very frequent, according to beſt Interpreters, who commonly call it (where one word, or phraſe doth occurre in two different ſenſes) an ἀντανάκλασις, or πλοκή. Now to applly this to our preſent occaſion: There never was man (I think) either Prince or other, that ever ſhewed more zeal to Gods outward worſhip and ſervice (as eſtabliſhed in thoſe dayes) then David did. Of his inward affection, there is no queſtion to be made; elſe his outward carriage and profeſſion would but little have availed with God: but that is not to our purpoſe here. Although therefore a man, (even in thoſe dayes) that had the knowledge of the true God, might be religious, and ſerve God out of Judea, as we know by Jobs example,and divers others ſince; yet was it Davids delight, and his earneſt deſire, yea, his chiefeſt happineſſe in this world, and the greateſt comfort of his life, to be neer where the Ark of God was, the place of his reſidence among men, in thoſe dayes; where the Tabernacle, or Altars were, where daily ſacrifices were offered, and other religious ſervices, by Prieſts and Levites performed, and divers feaſts and ſolemnities kept and obſerved. Beſides what we have here in this Pſalme to that purpoſe, read, Pſal. 65, 4. but eſpecially, Pſal. 84. How amiable are thy Tabernacles, O Lord of Hoſts? My ſoul longeth, &c. And Pſal. 42. As the Hart panteth after the water brooks, &c. And beſides his own teſtimony in the Pſalmes, we may learn as much from divers paſſages of the Hiſtory of his life. When the Ark was brought unto Sion, to be placed in that Tabernacle which he had prepared for it; how was he then tranſported with joy, even to the ſcorn and contempt of his own wife, 2 Sam. 6. 20, 21. &c. And in one of his flights from Saul, how bitterly doth he expoſtulate his caſe with Saul? If the Lord have ſtirred thee up againſt me let him accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, curſed be they before the Lord: for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord; ſaying, Go ſerve other gods, 1 Sam. 26. 19. Now to ſeek the face of God,may be underſtood two wayes. More generally taken, it comprehends whatſoever is of the ſubſtance of true Religion: So we had it before,This is the generation of them that ſeek him, that ſeek thy face, O God of Jacob, Pſal.24.6. And Hoſ.5.15. I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and ſeek my face: in their affliction they will ſeek me early. In this general ſence, to ſeek the face of God, is no more, then what is more uſually ſaid; to ſeek God; as Iſa. 45. 19. I ſaid not unto the ſeed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain: I the Lord ſpeak righteouſneſſe, I declare things that are right. A very common Scripture phraſe it is, as cannot be unknown to them that are verſed in it. In a more ſtrict ſence, by the face of God, is meant the Ark of God, the place of his reſidence, and where (by ſome outward ſigns and evidences) he was wont, upon occaſion, to make himſelf viſible. So Pſal. 42. 2. My ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God: when ſhall I come and ſee the face of God? or, appear before the face of God. So Moller,Bucer,Calvin,tranſlate the words; (not as we there, who leave out the word face, in many places, indeed, ſufficiently enough included in the word before; but in this place, a word of great pregnancy and importance,and therefore not to have been omitted) and ſo expound them directly, as intended by David, of the Ark and Sanctuary. See alſo Vatablus upon that verſe, and upon the ſixth verſe of the ſame Pſalm; where he tacitly retracts his own tranſlation, (apparebo coram Domino; unadviſedly followed by ours) and makes it, Quando veniam & apparebo ante faciem Domini? It is well obſerved by one upon that place, (a very exact obſerver of Scripture words and phraſes) that what 1 Chron. 13. 10. is, before God; in 2 Sam. 6. 7. is, with the Ark of God. My opinion therefore is, that David at this time, when he wrote this, being deprived of this ineſtimabe benefit (as he valued it) of Gods preſence in his Sanctuary; (as it was with him when he wrote Pſalme 42. and divers others) in the ardency of his zeale, preſſing God with all motives and arguments that he could frame or think of, that God would reſtore him to that happineſſe, he ſo wanted and longed for; among others, he preſſeth God with his own words, in joyning all men (in that ſence we have ſhewed) to ſeek his face; that is, to inform themſelves diligently concerning his will; to apply themſelves to his ſervice; to truſt in him, to depend of him, &c. a precept (in this general ſence) in all places, and at all times, equally binding: but David, as though he could not ſerve God as he ſhould,whileſt excluded from this neerer approach; (as his words ſeem to imply, 1 Sam.26. 19. which have already been ſpoken of) and by conſequence, not perform what he required: He therefore retorts upon him(as it were)his own words, and preſſes him for performance on his ſide. So the words (and that without any violence,or far fetcht conſtruction) become very pregnant, and emphatical; which otherwiſe ſeem but flat and dilute. According to this interpretation, the words would rather be thus ſupplied; Thou haſt ſaid, (it is thine own word and ſpeech) Seek ye my face: my heart ſaith unto thee, (it is the deſire of my ſoul; thy command is become my requeſt) Thy face, Lord, will I ſeek.

V. 9. put not thy ſervant away in anger] As angry maſters uſe to do,for every ſlight offence.

V. 10. When my father and my mother forſake me] He magnifieth Gods love towards his, which far paſſeth the moſt tender love of parents towards their children, Iſai. 49. 15. The ground of ſuch emphatical expreſſions, of truſt and confidence in God, ſee upon Pſal. 16. 1. for in thee do I put my truſt. The words might have been tranſlated, Though my father, &c. as well as When my father,&c. but that is not very material; neither can any man infer from this, that David was forſaken, or that he was afraid when he ſo wrote, that he ſhould be forſaken by his parents. For this is but a ſuppoſition; and ſuch a ſuppoſition, as is not grounded upon any probability of the thing; but onely ſerving to ſet out more emphatically Davids confidence in Gods love, and the greatneſs withal of that love in God,ſo far tranſcending all humane love. As when the Apoſtle ſaith; Though an Angel from heaven: Gal. 1. 8. nay we ought rather to infer (if we muſt one of the two) that David did not think it poſſible; at leaſt, that he had no ſuſpicion at all that his father and mother would forſake him: and therefore doth uſe this ſimilitude, the better to ſet out the greatneſſe of his confidence. Some Hebrew Interpreters expound the words of David his father and mother,their natural deaths; as if he intended to ſay; that God would be inſtead of a father and a mother unto him.Indeed we find God ſtyled elſewhere, a Father of the fatherleſs: as Pſal. 68. 5. and a helper of the fatherleſs, Pſal.10.14. but this is not ſo proper to this place, and takes off a great deal of the emphaſis.

leſt if thou be ſilent to me]. Pſal. 83. 1. It is noted here by ſome Expoſiters, that in ſilence, forbearance of acting, or helping, is ſometimes included. See Judg. 18. 9. and are ye ſilent? (ſtill, there in the Engliſh) and 1 King. 22. 3. Know ye that Ramoth, &c. and ſo elſewhere. But this granted, I think it might have been obſerved withal, as not improbable, that David might here, by this expreſſion, allude to the name of the Oracle, by him particularly mentioned in the very next verſe; When I lift up my hands towards thy holy Oracle: or, the Oracle of thy Sanctuary. It was called דביר, (which is the word here:) as if you ſhould ſay, The place of ſpeaking: from the verb דבר which ſignifieth, to ſpeak. As for Gods being ſilent, when we call again and again: it is either becauſe our prayers are not acceptable unto him, which may proceed from divers occaſions; as 1 Sam. 8. 18. And ye ſhall cry out, &c. and James 4. 3. Ye ask and receive not, &c. Or becauſe he hath a further aime for our good, and his glory: as, to make us examples of patience unto others; and the like. And whatſoever fleſh and blood; that is, natural ſenſe and judgement, ſuggeſt unto us, that God is μακροθυμεῖν, long, very long ſometimes, before he heare us, and execute juſtice: yet the Scripture ſaith poſitively, he will do it, ἐν τάχει, ſpeedily, Luke 18. 7, 8. becauſe many yeares are but as a moment of time,to eternity: which therefore ſhould alwayes,in our ſharpeſt extremities,or longeſt trials;to prevent the aſſaults of impatience upon our faith and confidence;be in our thoughts,and before our eyes.

V. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c.] As the words have particular reference unto David his caſe,ſo, the works of the Lord, and the operations of his hands, muſt be underſtood of Gods counſel and purpoſe, to bring David to the Crown; manifeſted and brought about by many notable events, and particular providences and diſpenſations; as may appear by the ſtory: which they that took no notice of at all, ſhewed themſelves (the proper temper, for the moſt part, of profane men and Epicures) very ſupine and negligent in things of high moment: they that did, and did not therein acknowledge the hand of God, ſhewed themſelves very obſtinate, and inflexible; which kind of men are properly ſaid, θεομαχεῖν, to fight againſt God; as oppoſing to the manifeſtation of his Will, and cleare demonſtrations of his Divine diſpenſation, the counſels of humane wit and policy. To this purpoſe we read of Moſes, Act. 7. 25. For he ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood, how that God by his hand would deliver them, but they underſtood not. In a more general ſence, they are ſaid, (as Eſay 5. 12.) not to regard the work of the Lord, nor to conſider the operations of his hands: who being taken up with other cares, as the ambitious and covetous; or excluding all care from themſelves, and therein placing greateſt happineſſe; neither of what happens to themſelves, in the courſe of their lives; nor what happens unto others, either publickly, or privately thereby to underſtand the wayes of God, and of his providence, make any obſervation at all; Who neither in adverſity, nor proſperity, go beyond nature and common chance: ſo they live, and ſo they die. They alſo more particularly may be charged with thoſe words, who are altogether for the preſent, and judge of men generally as good or bad, in favour, or out of favour with God, from their preſent condition, and what happens unto them in this World. Whereas it is a myſtery of providence, to husband our ſalvation by contraries; and to let them have their wills in this World moſt, that have leaſt of Gods Favour. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of it, as of a great myſtery, O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep. A bruitiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a foole underſtand this: When the wicked ſpring as the graſſe, and when all the workers of iniquity flouriſh; it is, that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever, Pſal. 92. 4, 6, 7. And again, They that ſow in tears, ſhall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious ſeed; ſhall doubtleſſe come again with rejoycing, bringing his ſheaves with him, Pſal. 126. 5, 6. But of Gods judgements alſo, which by a ſudden alteration oft fall upon the wicked, even in this world, to the great aſtoniſhment and confuſion of the beholders on the one ſide, and as great comfort and edification of others on the other ſide, the words may likewiſe be underſtood. For theſe alſo, thoſe viſible palpable temporal Judgements are called the work of God, So Pſal. 64. 9. And all men ſhall fear, and declare the work of God; for they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doing. And ſo Prov. 21. 12. The righteous man wiſely conſidereth the houſe of the wicked: but (or, for) God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedneſſe. See alſo Pſal. 66. 5. Come and ſee.

O ye mighty] Heb. ye ſons of the mighty. He exhorteth the proud tyrants to humble themſelves under Gods hand, and not to have ſuch an opinion of their own power and greatneſſe, as moſt men in high places have. This expoſition I like very well, and ſomewhat the better, for that we read of ſo many great Princes, both good and bad, but bad and cruel eſpecially that have been very fearful of thunder, the ſubject of this pſalme: as Auguſtus, Caligula, and divers others. But it will be objected; How then doth David invite ſuch to worſhip God in the beauty of holineſſe: (that is, in his Temple, his Sanctuary, at Jeruſalem:) as in the next verſe? Yea very well, if we take the words as an invitation not ſo much to ſolemne ſervice in his Temple; as to the knowledge and acknowledgement of the God of that Temple, and of his divine Service, there performed: to which Temple and ſervice ſuch Kings and Princes as had knowledge of the God of his Iſrael, were wont to ſend great preſents every year, and performed ſome duties by their deputies, in acknowledgement of his Soveraingty. However, the greater part of Interpreters, by, ſons of the mighty, underſtand, ſome, the Iſraelites in general, ſo ſtiled becauſe of Abraham, Iſaak, and Jacob: men of famous memory, to poſterity; of great power in their lives, and of great credit with God, both living, and dead: others, the Angels, as Pſal. 89. 76. For who in the heavens, &c. who among the ſonnes of the mighty, &c. and ſome, the Stars of Heaven, as Job 38. 7, When the morning Stars ſang together, and all the ſonnes of God (בני אלהים there, חני אלים here, in the Pſamiſt: which may be underſtod of the ſame, becauſe אל is often uſed for God:) ſhouted for joy. All things well weighed, it is not eaſie to determine, which interpretation is moſt genuine. If Angels, (according to the Chaldee paraphraſe, and divers others) be ſpoken unto; by the beauty of holineſſe, (which is not ſo uſual) we muſt underſtand the heavens. But to the general ſcope of the Pſalmiſt, to ſet out the power and majeſty of God, and to aſſert his providence, (whereof ſee upon the third verſe, The voice of the Lord:) any of theſe expoſitions may ſerve well enough.

V. 2. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name] 1 Cha. 16. 29.

the glory due unto his name] Heb. the honour of his name.

in the beauty of holineſs] Or, in his glorious Sanctuary, Pſal. 96. 9. See upon Pſal. 110. 3. in the beauty of holineſſe.

V. 3. The voice of the Lord] It was one of Epicurus his arguments againſt a God, and a providence ordering and diſpoſing all things both in Heaven and Earth; that many things, which commonly are aſcribed unto God, (as particularly thunder and lightning,) proceeded from natural cauſes. Hereupon his concluſion was, (as it was iudeed the main end of all his Philoſophy, which in theſe Atheiſtical times is by ſome much endeavoured to be revived, though never was any thing, in the judgement of ancient wiſe Heathens, more fooliſh and ſenſeleſſe:) that all fear of God, and all Religion, was a groundleſſe thing; Cætera quæ fieri in terris, cæloque tuentur Mortales, pavidis cum pendent mentibus ſæpe Efficiunt animos humiles formidine Divum, &c. So doth Lucretius the Poet, (a great abetter of Epicurus his doctrine) preface to his long diſcourſe of the cauſe of thunder and lightning: and repeats it often, and therefore men ſhould not fear, becauſe it is an effect of nature. Which is, in very deed, a very ſenſeleſſe argument. For why may not the ſame things be aſcribed unto God, as ſupreme; and yet acknowledged, to have more immediate and ſecondary (but ſubordinate unto the ſupreme) cauſes? And if, God as we teach, and the more ſober heathens believed, be the Author of nature; why leſſe powerful, or leſſe to be feared, in natural cauſes, or events, then in thoſe things, that he bringeth to paſſe by a more immediate power? Although therefore if we ſhould take time to conſider well of all particulars, there might ſomewhat be found perchance in the effects of thunder and lightning, that would poſe a wiſer man then Epicurus, or any that have written for him, to ſhew a natural reaſon for;) though I do not hence conclude, that there is no natural cauſe, becauſe not underſtood:) but however, granting that it is a work of nature, and that the cauſe is not hidden; yet neverthleſſe it doth not follow, but that thunder after a more ſublime way of contemplation, (by Anaxagoras, an ancient Philoſopher, of good account; and by Plato after him, much commended:) without any reſpect to the natural and ſecondary cauſes, may be aſcribed to God abſolutely, and ſtyled, The voice of the Lord, or, of God: as it is here; The noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth, Job 37. 2. The voice of the Almighty God, when he ſpeaketh, Eſay 10. 5. There is no queſtion, but that Thunder and Lightning, though in that order and courſe of nature, (or ſeries and connexion of natural cauſes the one depending of the other) by Him at firſt eſtabliſhed, it hath its place and time; was nevertheleſſe among other ends, to this end intended and appointed by God, to repreſſe the inſolencies of ſome, and to awaken the conſciences of others, (of all, I do not ſay: God hath his end in that too,) whom the conſideration of his other works, and daily providence, cannot move to the feare, or acknowledgement of a Superiour Power and Deity. A very fit expreſſion therefore it is of the Thunder, to call it the voice of God: and it were not amiſſe, (ſuch is the dulneſſe of moſt) if all natural things, had the Name of God (ſome ſuch way as the name of God is added by the Hebrews to all great things, as, a tree of God, a City of God, &c. that is, a great tree, a great City, &c. and ſo in the New Teſtament, ἀστεῖος τῷ θεῷ, exceeding fair, Act. 7. 20.) inſcribed, it being the chief end of all natural things, to put us in minde of God. The Grecians alſo for ſome ſuch reaſon, called all extraordinary great tempeſts, Διοσημίας. And the ancient Romans were wont to ſay; Deus tonat, Deus fulgurat, &c. for which afterwards (as now it uſeth) by an ellipſis, as they call it, of the Nominative, for more brevity was ſaid, tonat, (for, Deus tonat.) fulgurat, &c. Yet the Hebrews have a more proper word too, for Thunder: whence Boanerges, in the New Teſtament (according to the Greek pronunciation, for B*enerehem*,) is interpreted, The ſons of Thunder. Mark 3. 17. As for that other argument of Epicurus, (which whether he borrowed of the ſtage, or the ſtage from him, I know not: but an argument, it ſeems, among the profane atheiſtical rabble, of old, in great requeſt;) Quod ſi Jupiter, atque alii fulgentia divi Terrifico quatiunt ſonitu cæleſtia templa, Et jaciunt ignes, quo ducit quemque voluptas: Cur quibus incautum ſcelus averſabile cumque eſt, Non faciunt, &c. that is, in effect, that if the gods had any thing to do with the Thunder, &c. they ſhould make uſe of it againſt ſacrilegious perjured perſons, and the like; and their habitations; and not ſuffer either any good and godly men to be ſtruck, or their own Tempels to be battered or inflamed by it: this is no more then what the Scripture, in another caſe, teacheth; to wit, that the ſword devoureth one as well as another, (and in Uriahs caſe it ſo fell out indeed:) 2 Sam. 11. 25. which if we were to treat here of providence at large, we could ſhew, no wayes repugnant to providence, but very ſuitable to that Order by God at firſt, ſince the fall of men, eſtabliſhed in the world; by which all things in this kinde, muſt and ought to be tryed: and nothing deemed contrary to providence, that is not contrary to that firſt Order. But enough hath been ſaid, to ſerve for this place; and more we may have occaſion to ſay hereafter. See upon Pſal. 37.

many waters] Or. great waters.

V. 4. powerful] Heb. in power.

full of majeſty] Heb. in majeſty.

V. 5. The voyce of the Lord] The thunder-bolt breaketh the moſt tall and ſtrong trees, and ſhall men think their power to be able to reſiſt God?

V. 6. Sirion like a young unicorn] Deut. 3. 9. Called alſo Hermon. He means, the trees that grew on thoſe hills, for thunder moves not hills, but an earth-quake. So ver. 8, 9. the wilderneſs, for, the beaſts there.

V. 7. divideth] Heb. cutteth out.

divideth the flames of fire] It cauſeth the lightnings to ſhoot, and glide.

V. 8. of Kadeſh] In places moſt deſolate, where God ſeems not to be preſent, ſuch as Kadeſh was, Num. 13. 26.

V. 9. maketh the hindes to calve] The thunder makes the hindes to calve ſuddenly for fear, though at other times they do it with difficulty. See notes on Job 39. 1.

to calve] Or, to be in pain.

diſcovereth the forreſts] Maketh the trees bare of leaves, or pierceth the moſt ſecret places, or makes the beaſts flee into their dens, and ſo the wood is bare of them, or, without them.

in his Temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory] The words of themſelves, are plain enough: but the coherence is not ſo plain. David in the beginning of the Pſalme, doth exhort all men to glorifie God, in general: and particularly, to glorifie him in the beauty of Holineſſe, (or, in the glorious ſanctuary; as the margin there:) that is, in his Sanctuary. Now in the concluſion he remembers the Temple again; (ſee upon Pſal. 5. 7.) whereby he may be thought to invite all men to become Jews, or Proſelytes. Some conceive that this Pſalme was appointed by David to be ſung in the Church, (Temple, or Tabernacle) in time of great Tempeſts and Thunders; which is not unlikely. The Letanies uſed of old in Chriſtian Churches, had ſuch a beginning. But in reference to the words immediately before, part of this very verſe; and diſcovereth the foreſts,) the Temple having ſome relation to the foreſt, (as built, in part, out of it, Pſal. 74. 5.) it may be thought that David having ſaid that God glorifies himſelf by the terrible effects (among others) of the thunder among the trees of the Foreſt; he preſently adds, that God is glorified in his Temple, by the voices of men: as deprecating that former way of glorification, upon it. He might alſo allude to the loud inſtruments of Muſick, (imitating,) in ſome manner, the voice of the thunder) uſed in the Temple to praiſe God with, mentioned by David in many other places.

doth every one ſpeak] Or, every whit of it uttereth, &c.

V. 10. The Lord ſitteth upon the flood] To moderate the rage of the tempeſts and waters, that they deſtroy not all. Others think that he alludes to the flood in Noahs time.

PSAL. XXX.

Title.

A Pſalm and ſong] Where the muſical inſtruments went before the voice, a Pſalm and Song, (as it is here) in the inſcription: where the voices of men went before the Inſtruments, then a ſong and Pſalme. This is the deviſe of ſome Rabbins upon this title. But other Rabbins plainly confeſſe they know no ground of this aſſertion, or which ſhould be the cauſe of this difference. Indeed this obſervation concerning the different placing of the words, ſeemes to be a meere querck. But that the adding of the word ſong, (שיר) whether before or after, to the uſuall word Pſalm, may imply ſomewhat of mens voyces more then was uſuall and ordinary, is not improbable. And here it might well be ſaid that שיר is added of purpoſe (A Pſalm: a canticle) to intimat, that this Pſalme was made upon an extraordinary occaſion of publick joy. which ſeemeth to be the moſt proper uſe and ſignification of the word שיר according to that of the Prophet: And I will turn the feaſts into mourning, and all your ſongs (השיליכם) into lamentation, Amos 8. 10. and before in the ſame chapter, verſe 3. And the ſongs (שירות) of the Temple (ſo I write it, Temple, not Temples, becauſe I find it ſo in the originall Hebrew: all Engliſh Bibles of the laſt tranſlation, as many as I have ſeen, upon what ground I know not, exhibit it, Temples) ſhall howl: that is, ſhall be turned into howling. But becauſe this will not hold alwayes, though it would here very well, I dare not much rely upon it. The ſafeſt will be, with thoſe Rabbins to acknowledge our ignorance.

at the dedication of the houſe of David] Either when he firſt dwelt in it, Deut. 20. 5. or, after Abſalom had polluted it, which is more probable, more properly therefore a purification, then dedication: but that that purification of it, was a kind of new dedication.

verſ. 1. T*Hou haſt lifted me up*] Drawn me out of afflictions, as out of a pit.

for thou haſt lifted] This thankfull return of praiſes unto God, for deliverances, and other benefits received, how acceptable unto Him; himſelf, by the Pſalmiſt, profeſſeth: Offer unto God, &c. And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie mee, Pſal. 50. 14. 15. And the Pſalmiſt elſewhere earneſtly calls upon all men for it: O that men would prayſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and for his wonderfull works unto the children of men, Pſal. 107. v. 8. 15. 21. 31. It is his principall aime in all that Pſalme, and therefore he often repeates it. So this for here of the Pſalmiſt, muſt be underſtood, as a declaration of the ground, and ſubject of his preſent thanks, and exaltation, or extolling of God: not as a generall ground, as if we were not bound to praiſe and extoll him, but when he doth us good: or rather, (for when is it, that he doth not: ſince we live, move, and have our being in Him: Acts 17. 28. and injoy dayly the benefite of his light, and the like) plyeth us with extraordinary occaſions. All men, the very worſt and atheiſticall of men, are mooved (by meer inſtincts of nature) to lift up their hearts, and hands, (though they acquit themſelves of it but very ſuperficially, or ſuperſtitiouſly) for preſent mercies, and ſucceſſes. But in time of diſtreſſe and diſcouragement, to continue zealous (upon our former principles; and not in baſe complyance, for our advantage) in Gods ſervice; to bleſſe God for all, as well unpleaſing, as pleaſing; is the very touchſtone of rooted and well-grounded religion, whereby God is moſt glorified.

haſt not made my foes to rejoyce over me] Thou haſt not given me into their hands, for then they would have triumphed over me: and in triumphing over me, would alſo reproach thee, as ſaying, where is now thy God? and, He truſted in God, &c. to the great prejudice of my righteous cauſe, and great ſcandall of the godly. Though the inſulting of an inſolent enemy may go to the heart of a good and godly man, ſuch a one as David was; and ſo very lawfull for us (even for our own ſakes,) to pray, that God will not give them cauſe; yet that which in theſe caſes we are bound moſt tenderly to prevent, is, the diſhonour that is done to God, and the prevailing of impiety thereby.

V. 3. from the grave] Meaning, that he eſcaped death moſt narrowly.

V. 4. O ye Saints of his] חסידיו The word ſignifieth them that ſhew mercy liberally unto others. See more upon Pſal. 86. 2. for I am holy.

at the remembrance] Or, to the memorial.

at the remembrance of his holineſſe] Before his tabernacle.

V. 5. For his anger endureth but a moment] Heb. there is but a moment in his anger. His corrections laſt but a while, but his favour laſts all our life long, Eſay 54. 7, 8. But how doth David ſay here, that Gods anger endureth but a moment? which may ſeem ſo contrary both to what he teſtifieth of himſelf in divers places, (as where he ſaith, I am afflicted and ready to dye from my youth up, &c. Pſal. 88. 15, 16. and elſewhere, that his terrours have been upon him all his life time, or to that purpoſe: and in the very next Pſalm, that his life is ſpent with greef, and his years with ſighing, Pſal. 31. 10.) and what both he, and other ſacred authors do write of the generality of men, and of Gods people in particular, For all our dayes are paſſed away in thy wrath; we ſpend our years as a tale that is told: Moſes in his Song, Pſalm 90. 9, 10. &c. as Job, and others, to the ſame purpoſe? It may be ſaid, that David ſpake this rhetorically, the better to ſet out the greatneſſe of his joy. For ſo our Saviour compareth the ſorrowes and afflictions of godly people in this world, to a womans travell in child-birth. A woman when ſhe is in travell, hath ſorrow, becauſe her hour (or time of ſuffering) is come: but aſſoon as ſhe is delivered of the child, ſhe remembreth no more the anguiſh, for joy that a man is born into the world, Joh. 16. 20. 24. What is it to forget, but to think ſo little of it, whether for length of time, or preſent ſenſe of greef, as if it were nothing in compariſon? So Jacobs ſeven yeares ſervice ſeemed but as a few dayes unto him, ſaith the Scripture, for the love that he had unto her, Gen. 29. 20. David therefore might ſpeak it not rhetorically only, but really, according to preſent ſenſe and judgement, through exceſſe of joy. And it ſhewes withall the gentleneſſe, humilitie, and ingenuity of his diſpoſition, prone to make the moſt of Gods favours, and to judge of his ſevereſt chaſtiſements with moderation: contrary to the courſe of profeſſed Atheiſts, and Atheiſticall men, who carefully obſerve and ſet out with advantage whatſoever can with any colour be objected againſt all providence, (whence is that wicked and maligne judgement of Tacitus in a place, that the gods regard not the piety, or integrity of men, to reward it; but take good notice of their wickedneſſe, to puniſh it) but paſſe by ſo many obvious arguments, and evidences of it. If we might underſtand David of inward ſpiritual comforts, ſuch as God by his holy preſence doth afford oftentimes, (for alwayes he doth not) to his people in their greateſt troubles and extremities, (of which ſee Eſa. 57. 15. 16. &c. For thus ſaith the High and lofty one, &c.) there would be leſſe difficulty in the words, becauſe it is not likely that David, ſo godly a man as he was in his life and converſation, and ſo deare unto God, (though not without experience of ſome ſpiritual deſertions, (as to preſent ſenſe) as when he made Pſal. 51. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, &c. where he ſo earneſtly prayeth for his reſtitution:) yet not likely, I ſay, that he was in his life time either long, or often out of ſenſe and fruition of Gods love: which he could not but priſe above all worldly comforts and proſperities. But however, if this was not his chiefeſt aime, and moſt immediat ſenſe, yet certainly in delivering this generall ſentence, he could not but have a reſpect, not only to thoſe ſpiritual joyes and comforts of a pious ſoul, even in this world, which we have ſpoken of: but alſo to thoſe future, and eternal, whereof he ſpeaketh Pſal. 17. 15. As for me, I will behold thy face, &c. and Pſal. 49. 17. But God will redeem my ſoul, &c. To which alſo the Apoſtle doth referre us for comfort in affliction, in words that have much reſemblance to theſe of Davids, and may help well to give light unto them. For our light affliction, ſaith he, which is but for a moment, (ſo David here, but a moment :) worketh for us a farre more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. To which purpoſe, to confirme this ſenſe of the words, the words of our Saviour, of which we have already ſpoken, are very pertinent. For that joy, which he promiſeth there unto his diſciples, which ſhould make them (ſo great and ſo powerful it would be) to forget all former ſorrowes, though it began after his reſurrection, yet it was not to be fulfilled here, but in Heaven : and even that joy which they enjoyed here, what was it, a great part of it, but an anticipation, through faith and hope, of that heavenly ? as St. Peter teacheth at large, Bleſſed be the God and Father, &c. VVherein ye greatly rejoyce, though now for a ſeaſon if need be, ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations. 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4, 5, 6.

weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning] Joy is aſcribed to the morning, as adverſity to the night; becauſe the morning is, as it were, the reviving time after the death of ſleep: and becauſe it brings the light again (the emblem of joy) after darkneſſe. So the Poet; Spes igitur ſupereſt, &c. Hoc utinam nitidi Solis praenuncius ortus Afferat, admiſſo Lucifer albus equo. It may be alſo; becauſe the morning is the chief time of prayer; as Pſal. 5. 3. My voyce ſhalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and wil look up. So alſo Pſal. 46. 5. & 143. 8.

But this righteouſneſs of God muſt not be confined to this preſent world : 2 Theſſal. 1. 5, 6, 7, 8. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, &c. We might alſo, take righteouſneſs here, for mercie : as the word is often uſed in Scripture : both in the Old, and New Teſtament. In different reſpects, the ſame act may be an act of mercy, and of juſtice. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins. To forgive, is an act of mercy : but to forgive, as it hath relation to Gods promiſe, and Chriſts ſatisfaction, an act of juſtice.

We may therefore commit and commend our bodies unto God, who taketh care of them too : but our ſoules, or ſpirits, eſpecially : They are Gods chiefeſt care, and ſhould be ours upon all accaſions : Wherefore let them that ſuffer, commit the keepinp of their ſoules, as a faithful Creator. 1 Pet. 4. 9. but eſpecially then, when at the point of death, ready to give up our ghoſt : according to Chriſts example : Luke 23. 46.

V. 7. thou haſt known my ſoul in adverſitiee] Taken notice of it, and care for it, Pſal. 1. 6. as a true friend. Theſe words may have relation to ſundry deliverances afforded by God unto David, from which David might inferre by the iſſue, that God did think of him, when he was in trouble, becauſe he delivered him; and ſo by remembring what he had found before, might have better ground to hope wel now; and his thankful acknowledgment of it, might be ſome motive to God to haſten to his preſent deliverance : O, relation to theſe inward comforts, by which God did uphold him in his miſeries : or may be an expreſſion of Davids confidence in God (an argument of greateſt faith and generoſity; anſwerable to that of Job : though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. Job. 13. 15.) in his greateſt extremities, when God (as to preſent ſenſe and ſight :) might ſeen utterly to have forgotten, and forſaken him, as when he ſaid : But I am poor and needy : yet the Lord thinketh upon me : Pſal. 40. 17. a broken veſſel] Heb. a veſſel that periſheth. or, periſhing; that is, very apt to be broken, both by its conſtitution, being very brittle; and for the little account, that men make ordinarily of ſuch ware. A proverbial ſpeech : Vas teſtaceum : For a thing of little worth, and eaſily deſtroyed. The precious ſonnes of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they eſteemed as earthen pitchers, the worke of the hands of the Potter. Lament 4. 2. I doubt therefore whether Vas perditum, as divers : or, a broken veſſel, as we have it here, be ſo right to the ſenſe of the original words; which rather import, a veſſel eaſy to be broken. St. Paul (to whom ſome referre, for illuſtration :) his σκεύη κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν, or, veſſels fitted to deſtruction, is upon another conſiderotion : to wit, of the different uſe : ſome, to honour; others, to diſhonour : but, of the ſame lumpe of clay, both : and the ſame Potters : whereas, potters veſſels; or, earthen veſſels, here in general, from the matter, (brittle earth) is proverbial, for baſe, and contemptible.

which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee] As men lay up treaſures ſafe, ſo doth God lay up good things for his children, though they do not alwayes enjoy them here, 2 Tim. 4 8. Some interpret this laying up, as implying, that thoſe good things are not alwayes to be ſeen, and diſcerned by vulgar worldly men, who often by the troubles and croſſes they ſee good and righteous men to undergo in this world, deem them to be out of Gods favour; wretched and miſerable altogether, but laid up though, to be diſpenſed and revealed in due time : 1 Cor. 2. 9. Eye hath not ſeen, nor eare heard, &c. This was the caſe of the elder ſonne, in the Parable: Lu. 15. 25. 26. &c. who never offended his Father, and had reaſon to expect a greater ſhare in his favour : yet himſelf thought otherwiſe, and was much troubled, when he ſaw how much his younger Brother (in outward ſhew :) was made of. The Fathers anſwer then, tends to this, that his reward is laid up : he may be ſure of it, may he but have patience : with which anſwer, he was ſatisfied. See more upon the next words.

before the ſons of men] That their innocency may appear by thy miraculous deliverance of them. Some think that Davids words here, of what God hath laid up, &c. by adding of theſe, before the children of men, are ſo farre reſtrained to this life, that without violence they cannot be extended to eternal rewards. But I think that addition needed not be ſo farre ſtretched : it is enough if it be granted, as the literal meaning of the words, (according to the condition of thoſe times, and meaſure of light:) is of things temporal and viſible. But his principal aime, (as I take it) was to ſet out the fulnes and certainty of the reward, which godly men might expect at the hands of God : to which end, this clauſe, or addition, before the ſons of men, is very proper and emphatical. No ſlight, imaginary, momentary buſineſs : but ſuch as all men ſhall take good notice of, not therefore, againſt the principal aime, to expound the words of eternal bleſſedneſs, which alone can ſatisfie, and theſe very words, (though I preſſe it not:) before the ſons of men, may be expounded of that other world too : according to our Saviours expreſſion : Luke 13. 28. When ye ſhall ſee Abraham. &c. V. 22. For I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off from before thine eyes.] 1 Sam. 23. 26. we read, And David made haſte to get away for fear of Saul. The word in the Original, for made haſte, is נחפז : the very word (there, a verb; here, a Noun ſubſtantive,) that we have here : בחפזי in trepidatione, (vel feſtinatione) mea; in my haſte. So that it is very probable, as by divers is obſerved, that David his words here have reference unto that time and occaſion. But the word at large, in præcipitatione mea; for, in the haſte and ſuddenneſſe of my thoughts, occaſioned by the greatneſſe of my preſent danger, (as it was with him at that time, and at other times, more then once) I do not conceive that Davids purpoſe in theſe words, was ſo much to confeſſe his ſin, for which (as ſome would have it:) he derſerved, by reaſon of his diffidence, or want of Faith, utterly to be rejected by God, and forſaken : as to exaggerate or amplifie the goodneſs of God towards him, who when he was in ſuch extremity of danger, as in the eyes of man he could expect nothing but utter ruine; and in the greateſt confuſions of his ſoul; looked upon his diſtreſſe, heard his cryes, and beyond all probability, delivered him. What, though God had paſſed his promiſe unto him, which he knew, as to God, or on Gods part, could not fail : yet ſince moſt promiſes of God, in this kind, are conditional, (ſee 1 Sam. 2. 30. Wherefore the Lord God of Iſrael ſaith, I ſaid indeed, &c. and Ezek. 33. 13. When I ſhall ſay to the righteous, that he ſhall ſurely live. &c.) why might not he in his humility miſtruſt ſometimes, that he had made himſelf unworthy and uncapable? So 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26. the ſame David, when perſecuted by his ſon Abſolom, and forſaken by moſt of his people; Carry back the Ark of God into the City, ſaid he; If I ſhall find favour in the Lord, he will bring me again, and ſhew me both it and his habitation. But if he thus ſay; I have no delight in thee : Behold, here am I, let him do to me, as ſeemeth good unto him. I do not read that David offended God with this humility; neither do I believe that he did. And perchance it was more ſeaſonable, and more pleaſing to God, then ſecure confidence would have been. And yet it doth not follow, but that he had good hopes, even whiles he thus expreſſed his diffidence. Neither would the ſame Apoſtle, I think, have exhorted us to work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling, Phil. 2. 12. and yet to hold faſt our confidence unto the end, Heb. 3. 6. & 14. if fear and confidence (in ſome degree) had been altogether inconſiſtent. But without any ſuch deliberate conſideration, take the words (if he uttered any ſuch : for, I ſaid, here, may as well, according to the Hebrew idiotiſme, be expounded of his bare thoughts) as ſuddenly, and not without ſome paſſion, uttered by David in his extremity; yet even ſo, and in ſuch a caſe, they may be excuſable words. See before, upon Pſal. 22. 1. My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? I do not know that St. Paul intended the acknowledgment of any great ſin, when he ſaith of himſelf, 2 Cor. 1. 8, 9. that he deſpaired even of life, and had the ſentence of death in himſelf : though St. Paul otherwiſe at that very time might have ground enough to believe, yea and to be ſure too, that God had a further uſe of him, and therefore though his danger in appearance were never ſo great, yet that he ſhould eſcape it. PSAL. XXXII.

Title.

Maſchil] Heb. inſtructer, Verſ. 8. To give inſtruction out of his own experience, concerning remiſſion of ſins, and a godly life, verſe 1, 8, 9. This is the common interpretation. But becauſe this is a common Title to many other Pſalmes, where this interpretation (the doctrine of this Pſalm being of extraordinary conſequence, and very needful to all that aſpire to true happineſſe,) will not fit ſo well as it doth here; it is therefore the opinion of ſome others, which may be as probable, though not ſo commonly received, that this word Maſchil, is the name of ſome peculiar harmony, to which this Pſalm was fitted; or of ſome Muſicall inſtrument.

Verſ. 1. B*Leſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven*, &c.] Theſe two firſt verſes are cited by the Apoſtle, Rom. 4. 7, 8. and it is upon a ſpecial occaſion, to comfirm a doctrine of great conſequence, by him delivered, to wit, that a man is not juſtified by works, but by Faith. Even as David alſo, ſaith he, deſcribeth the bleſſedneſſe of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works; ſaying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered. Bleſſed is that man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin. But might it not have been replyed, that David as he doth here deſcribe the bleſſedneſſe of man, unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſſe without works; ſo elſewhere the ſame David deſcribeth the bleſſedneſſe of the man, that walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly, Pſal. 1. 1. &c. and, That is undefiled in the way; who walks in the Law of the Lord, Pſal. 119. 1. where alſo this Bleſſed, as here in the words alledged by St. Paul, is twice repeated to the ſame purpoſe, Bleſſed are they that keep his teſtimonies, &c. and what is all this, but to deſcribe the bleſſedneſſe, according to St. Pauls inference, of him that worketh? It will be ſaid, perchance, that Davids purpoſe was to deſcribe, as in thoſe words alledged by St. Paul, Evangelical, ſo in theſe, Legal bleſſedneſſe : herein differing, becauſe the one grounded upon Faith; and the other, upon Works. But this though we allow of it, in due place; yet that David by thoſe words intended the deſcription of different bleſſedneſſes, we cannot allow. Our reaſon is, becauſe this difference of words may be obſerved in St. Paul alſo, whoſe aim certainly was not to eſtabliſh divers, ſometimes Legal, and ſometimes Evangelical, but one, and the ſame bleſſedneſſe. What can be more plain, then what is at large, and with much vigour of expreſſion delivered by him upon this ſubject, Rom. 2. 6, 7. &c. That, God will render to every man according to his deeds : To them who by patient continuance in well doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life : But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſſe, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh, &c. as followes there, verſ. 9. and 10. Store of other places there is, to the ſame purpoſe, which I forbear, becauſe obvious enough. Hence we conclude, that it was not St. Pauls purpoſe abſolutely to deny, that bleſſedneſſe came by good works alſo, which both David and himſelf elſewhere ſo clearly teach : but his aim here being to ſhew the formal cauſe of bleſſedneſſe; from this bleſſedneſſe; or, to ſpeak more properly, from this conſideration of bleſſedneſſe, he excludes works; faith and works being in this caſe oppoſite, which otherwiſe, in point of bleſſedneſſe abſolutely conſidered, are inſeparable. And becauſe as David deſcribes bleſſedneſs by righteouſneſſe, and holineſſe of life; ſo alſo, by mere imputation of righteouſneſſe; upon which might plauſibly be grounded this diſtinction of the formal, or efficient; and the inſtrumental cauſe of bleſſedneſſe : he makes uſe of that paſſage which was to his preſent purpoſe, leaving it to his reader, by comparing of differing places, to diſtinguiſh, as we have done, and ſo to reconcile both (both David, and himſelf) unto themſelves. We might alſo diſtinguiſh of works, which may be conſidered either as our own, that is, iſſuing from the power of our free wills, ſuch as is left us ſince Adams fall; to which certainly no bleſſedneſſe doth belong : or, as the works of grace, and the effects of our ſpiritual regeneration : which properly be Gods works, becauſe wrought in us, ſo far as good, by his Spirit; rather then ours : and in this ſenſe the Apoſtle might well ſay, and that too, well according to Davids mind; that bleſſedneſs comes by faith, without works : as he there ſpeaketh. To this purpoſe he explains himſelf, Eph. 2. 8, 9, 10. For by grace are ye ſaved through faith, &c. in which words he both excludes works, and yet ſaith, that we are created unto good works, in Chriſt Jeſus. Some Learned men are of opinion, that this Pſalme was made of purpoſe, to be uſed as a formula of a general confeſſion of ſins, on the ſolemn day of Expiation, appointed Levit. 16. a day of great and publick humiliation, as we read there. That it might fit well, upon ſuch a day, and perchance was uſed afterwards, I will eaſily grant : but can hardly believe, by the tenor of the Pſalm it ſelf, that at firſt it was made for a publick occaſion. And the Jewes tell us of other formes of prayer, which were uſed on that day. Some of them may be ſeen in Fagius.

V. 3. When I kept ſilence, my bones waxed old] While I hid my ſin, I roared through pangs of conſcience, verſe 5. Pſalme 22. 1.

V. 4. drought] Heb. droughts.

V. 5. I ſaid, I will confeſſe my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord] Prov. 28. 13. Eſay 65. 24. 1 Joh. 1. 9. Theſe words ſeem to import a very ſpeedy deliverance, or quick return from God, upon Davids humiliation, and ſincere repentance : I acknowledged my ſin : I ſaid, I will confeſſe, &c. as if he meant to ſay, that he no ſooner had made his confeſſion to God, and humbled himſelf, &c. but he ſomed the benefit of his humiliation : ἅμ᾽ ἔπος, ἅμ᾽ ἔργον, (Si- mul dictum, ſimul & factum :) as the Grecians were wont to ſay. And ſo indeed it doth often happen unto others too : God ſometimes is pleaſed to heare, and to grant, aſſoon as we have faith and zeale to call. So ſometimes ; but it is not ſo alwayes : neither muſt we expect it, See upon Pſal. 38. 13. For I will declare my iniquity.

V. 6. For this ſhall every one that is godly, pray unto thee] Becauſe thou haſt pardoned my ſins, upon my acknowledgement.

pray unto thee in a time when thou maiſt be found] Some render it, tempore ſupplicationis; and expound it, de ſolennibus & precandi horis, of ſolemn ſtanding prayers, both in the Morning and Evening. Whereof, ſee more in Bucer, and others. So of Cornelius in the Acts, it is noted particularly, that at the ninth hour of the day, that is, at the hour of publike Evening ſervice. (ſee Act. 3. 1.) an Angel of God appeared unto him : And ſo of divers others we ſhall find it, that at thoſe ſolemn times eſpecially, God hath been pleaſed to diſpenſe his favours unto many. But however we expound it, or apply it ; yet certain, it is that in the original, the word is more general לעת מצא, tempore inveniendi; that is, in a time of finding, or, when thou maiſt be found, as we have it here.

ſurely in the floods of great waters] By waters, great tribulations and calamities are often ſet out in the Scripture. So Pſal. 69. 2. I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me. And again, verſ. 14. 15. Let not the water-flood overflow me, &c. and Pſal. 42. 7. Deepe c. after d. The meaning, according to moſt Expoſiters ſhould be, that in time of greateſt danger, and moſt threatning deſtruction, whether publike or private, no evill ſhall reach them, that flye unto God by devout prayer for ſuccour. See Pſal. 91. 2, 3, 4. &c. But the Hebrew word, רק here tranſlated, ſurely, is properly adverſativa, as they call it, particula; importing ſome excluſion, or exception, extenuation, or limitation of, or from what hath been ſaid before. And ſo here it is rendered by πλὴν, by the Septuagint ; and accordingly, the words are expounded by ſome (which in very deed is a probable expoſition) to this purpoſe ; That there is a time, (expreſſed here by floods of great waters) when God will not be found ; in oppoſition to that which went before, (in the ſame verſe) in a time when thou maiſt be found. The ſame words afford this ſenſe, as naturally, as that which is more commonly followed : all the difference, is, in the different application of the relatives, they; that is, the floods, according to the ordinary expoſition : but every one that prayes, according to this : ſhall not come nigh unto him : to the godly that prayes, that is, as commonly expounded : or, to him; that is, to God ; as others, whom we now take into our conſideration. Neither is the expoſition, as we have already ſaid, leſſe plauſible or warrantable, then the tranſlation is. For that there is a time when God will not hear, though men cry, we are often told in the Scripture. See 1 Sam. 8. 18. Iſai 59. 2. and 55. 6. Jer. 11. 14. not to mention other places. And if the word godly be preſſed ; though that need not : for the ſenſe will be perfect enough, if no more be made of the words then thus: That as David in his diſtreſſe, whether temporal or ſpiritual, betook himſelf to prayer, and was heard ; ſo may every godly man in the like caſe, encouraged by Davids example and experience, hope to ſpeed ; but provided, they come in due time : for for in the floods of great waters, when haply extremity of diſtreſs, (or what ever elſe it be) may drive the moſt ſlack and obdurate, even againſt their wils, to that duty ; then will praying be to no purpoſe ; God (at ſuch a time, and upon ſuch an occaſion merely) will not be found. They that embrace this interpretation, by floods of great waters, (a proverbial ſpeech, as all agree) think the day of judgement, whether general or particular ; and more particularly, the hour of death, or the laſt and worſt dayes of our lives, (of which Eccleſiaſtes, Remember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, while the evil dayes come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them, Eccl. 12. 1.) to be meant : or any ſuch article of our lives, when a concurrence of ſeveral croſſes and calamities (incidental to any) ſhall make us moſt uncapable of ſerious and hearty repentance. But however, granting that the word godly, muſt here alſo be ſupplyed and underſtood ; there may be a time found for them alſo; I mean a time, when God (in this ſenſe, at leaſt, in point of deliverance from temporal affliction) will not, even by the godly, be found. Of which ſee upon Pſal. 11. 3. If the foundations be deſtroyed, what ſhall the righteous do?

V. 8. I will inſtruct thee] David promiſeth to make others partakers of his knowledge, and that he will diligently look, and take care to direct them in the way of ſalvation. See v. 1. Pſal. 51. 13.

I will guide thee with my eye] Heb. I will counſell thee, mine eye ſhall be upon thee.

V. 9. Be ye not as the horſe, or as the mule] The one noted for his laſciviouſneſs, and ſtubbornneſs, the other, for his ſtupor and dulneſs : or in generall, be not as Brutes. The horſe and mule, known beaſts among men, and of common uſe ; and therefore, ſay Interpreters, rather named then any other. But here is an objection; the Jewes were forbidden by the Law, to couple together creatures of different kind, Levit. 19. 19. Thou ſhalt not let thy cattel gender with a divers kind. How then came mules of themſelves, and among themſelves, as Naturaliſts and experience teach, ſterile ; to to be known, or uſed among them ? For that they were uſed, appeares, 1 Kings 2. 33. where we read of Davids own mule. It is anſwered, out of Ariſtotle, and Plinie, that there was a kind of mules in Syria, neer Paleſtina, and ſometime including Paleſtina alſo,) which contrary to the nature of ordinary mules were fertile. But this is doubted by ſome, who think it was but in ſhew ; or that if any ſuch thing hapned, it hapned rather as a prodigie, then by courſe of nature. But if the Jewiſh Gloſſe upon the law, be true, and warrantable, and will agree with nature, it might be anſwered otherwiſe too : For they teach, that beaſts that are bred of divers kinds, if their damms be of one kind, it is lawful to let them gender together. As a mule, ſay they, whoſe damme is an aſſe, it is lawfull to let him gender with a ſhee mule, if her damme be an aſſe. So that though the firſt invention, or contrivance of this kind of creatures (if I may ſo ſpeak ; for it is conceived they never were created :) noted in the Scripture, Gen. 36. 24. were unlawfull ; yet the propagation of them (if any ſuch be) in this kind, would be lawfull.

leaſt they come neer unto thee] To kick, or to bite, that is. But the words, as is acknowledged, might as well be tranſlated, Whoſe mouth except it be held with bitt and bridle, they will not come nigh unto thee, That is, thou ſhalt not have the ruling of them, they will not be ſubject unto thee. Some think בל קרב אליך is put here for בל קרב עליך (as indeed על and אל are often put one for another :) and becauſe קרב, a noun ſubſtantive, is taken for pugna, prælium; they would have the verb alſo to bear that ſignification, and tranſlate it, leſt they fight, or reſiſt. But the ſenſe will be all one ſtill, and therefore we ſhall leave it free to the Reader, to follow what tranſlation he likes beſt.

V. 10. Many ſorrowes ſhall be to the wicked] Yea, and to the righteous too, Pſal. 34. 19. but of divers effects, and to different ends : See more there.

V. 11. Be glad in the Lord] Pſal. 64. 10. Becauſe God doth compaſſe his with mercy, verſ. 10.

Or, there is nothing that better becomes a godly man, then to ſet forth the praiſes of God, the Creator of all things, preſerver, life, and vigor : to ſeek all occaſions of it, at home, and abroad ; for particular, and for publick mercies : temporall, and ſpirituall.

goodneſſe] or, mercy.

V. 6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made] Gen. 1. 6, 7. The Pſalmiſt in divers hymnes of this argument, wherein he doth endeavour to ſet forth the praiſes of God, he falls upon the conſideration of nature, and of the creature, as the moſt generally convincing argument againſt Atheiſts, who by reaſon of ſuch confuſions as appear often in worldly matters, and affaires, between man and man, denying Gods providence in the adminiſtration of the world : yea ſome, that he had created the world : ſome, the very being of a God. But though Providence may be obſerved ſome times, by ſuch events in the world, as may ſeem contrary to humane reaſon, yea and to principles of faith, if men be not well grounded and experienced in the wayes of God ; yet ſtill we have the light of heaven and earth ; and in them the variety of ſo many objects both to delight and amaze our eyes, that wee need not other evidence, if not extreme dull and ſtupid, to ſecure us, what diſorders ſoever we ſee among men upon earth, that there is a God in heaven, by whoſe infinit power, wiſdome, and goodneſs, all theſe things were ſo made and conſtituted, both for the inſtruction, and neceſſary uſe of man. Upon this foundation, we may afterwards more eaſily (the weaker ſort of men I ſpeake of) and by degrees admit other points of our beliefe, which are lyable, (to weak judgements) to more objections. See Rom. 1. 10. For the inviſible things, &c. and Acts 14. 17. Nevertheleſs, he left not himſelf without witneſs, &c. See alſo Pſal. 74. 16. The day is thine, &c.

V. 7. He gathereth the waters of the ſea together] He layes up the waters in deep places, that they may not drown the earth, Gen. 1. 9. Job. 26. 10. & 38. 8, 16. Prov. 8. 28, 29. See before upon Pſal. 24. 2. upon the Seas.

he layeth up the depth in ſtore-houſes] Or, he layeth them up in the ſtore-houſes of the deeps.

V. 8. Let all the earth fear the Lord) Great reaſon, which even common ſenſe will prompt, that all people and nations ſhould not only praiſe, and glorifie; but alſo fear, and worſhip him, whoſe eternal power, wiſdome, Majeſty, and goodneſs doth ſo clearly appear by his workes, both in themſelves conſidered, and with reference to mankind. Hear now this O fooliſh people, &c. Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord, &c. V. 11. The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever] Prov. 19. 21. Eſay 46. 10. Shall take effect, whatſoever men plot to the contrary, Eſay 14. 24, 27. See Acts, 5. 38. 39. for if this counſel be of men, &c. But if it be of God, &c. where alſo they are termed θεομάχοι, Gods rebels, or open enemies, who endeavour by humane policy, or power, to fruſtrate his known counſel. But to know what is Gods counſel, Gods revealed word muſt be our direction: in all ſuch caſes, at leaſt, and cauſes, that can be determined by it. In ſome extraordinary caſes, that have no known rule, nor reducible to ſuch, we may adſcribe ſomewhat to humane wiſdome, and to external proofes, and evidences; ſo ſtill care be taken, that nothing be admitted againſt Gods revealed will. In this caſe, they that pretend to new lights, and new directions (contrary to what is revealed in the word:) by private inſpirations, are no better than profeſts Atheiſts, that openly ſet themſelves againſt God, and his ſacred word.

V. 13. The Lord looketh from heaven] And 2 Chron. 16. 9. For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, &c. From theſe and other like places may their error be reprooved, who as though God himſelf tooke no notice of the actions of men, of particular men at leſt, would have Angels, or ſome ſuch inferior powers to diſcharge that office, and to be as it were Gods informers in worldly buſineſſes. Ancient heathens, both Philoſophers, and others (Plautus at large, in one of his Prologues:) have written much to that purpoſe: And this alſo, or much to this purpoſe, to have been the opinion of the ancients long before Chriſt, both Jewes and others, Mercerus upon Job. 33. 23. If there be a meſſenger with him, &c. would have us to believe: nay that it is the doctrine of the Scripture it ſelf. I would do him no wrong: neither to him, nor any other, by miſtaking or mis-relating: but not to him eſpecially, to whoſe great labours upon the Scriptures, to make them more plaine and intelligible unto us, we are ſo much beholding. His words are: Solet Deus Angelorum miniſterio ad hanc rem uti, qui hominem preces & negotia ad ſe referant & perferant. That God doth uſe frequently the miniſtery of Angels, to carry his meſſage unto men, and for executioners of his will, in general, is ſure enough by Scripture evidence: but that he uſeth generally, (as his words ſeem to import) the miniſtery of Angels to conveigh unto himſelf their prayers, and to make report of their actions, I think is not agreable to the Scriptures. Somewhat perchance may be drawn from ſome one place or two, to ſhew that it is done ſometimes: but that it is Gods ordinary practice (if we may ſo ſpeake) and ſettled courſe to do ſo, is contrary, as I conceive, to the tenor of the Scriptures: and particularly, very contrary to Davids opinion, as may appear by ſo many paſſages in theſe his Pſalmes. But I will not inſiſt longer upon it here. It may much abate of our zeal to God by immediat addreſſes, (wherein a godly mans comfort doth mainly conſiſt:) and diſpoſe us to ſuperſtition, (in ſeeking to Saints and Angels, if we be not fully perſwaded, that God doth immediately both hear and ſee. See alſo upon Pſal. 38. 9. Lord all my deſire, &c.

V. 15. He faſhioneth their hearts alike] He that made all their hearts, knowes all their wicked enterpriſes. Pſal. 94. 9, 10, 11. See more there.

V. 16. There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt] The intention of the Pſalmiſt is not to deny, but that the iſſues of warres prove often according to ſecondary meanes and cauſes: which common experience doth approve, and upon which, human providence grounding, ſeemeth rather to be allowed, than reproved by our Saviour, Luke, 14. 31. Or what King going to make warre, &c. We know that David himſelf, when occaſion was, made preparations for warre, as other Kings are wont in the like caſe; and made uſe of ſecondary meanes, according to the rules of human prudence: which if he had not; (without a ſpecial warrant and commiſſion from God, to that purpoſe; whereof we have divers examples in Scripture:) his confidence world have proved rather a tempting of God, than a godly confidence. All he intends is but this, that no ſecondary meanes; no multitude of men, or horſes, and the like, can do any thing, where God hath otherwiſe determined it: and therefore that though meanes be uſed, and had, as good as may be; yet it is God, that muſt be truſted and thought upon for the iſſue: and in caſe meanes cannot be had, ſuch as our preſent caſe may ſeem to require, and there be a neceſſity of fighting; then we ſhould, (but without preſumption) truſt to God, and the goodneſs of our cauſe; to God, I ſay, who can ſave with few, as well as with many: as well without, (if he pleaſe) as with meanes. It is the manner of the Scriptures, to utter many things abſolutely, for the greater emphaſis; which muſt be underſtood comparatively, or conditionaly; as for example, For I deſired mercy, and not ſacrifice, that is more then ſacrifice; as in the next words is expreſſed, and the knowledge of God, more then burnt offrings. Hoſ. 6. 6. If any man came unto me, and hateth not his Father and Mother, &c. Luke 14. 26. that is: He that loveth Father or Mother more then me, &c. Math. 10. 37. See alſo upon Pſal. 38. 4. mine iniquities, &c.

PSAL. XXXIV.

Title.

Abimelech] Or, Achiſh, 1 Sam. 21. 11. His name was Achiſh; but it ſeems Abimelech was a common name to thoſe kings, as Pharaoh was to the kings of Egypt.

This is one of the Alphabetical Pſalms, of which ſee upon Pſalm 25. the firſt of that kind.

Verſ. 1. At all times] See, 2 Theſſ. 1. 3. and 2. 13, πάντοτε, alwayes; or, at all times, and ſo of prayer: Pray without ceaſing: 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. not that we ſhould do nothing, but pray: but alwayes; or, or at all times, when it ſhould be done: when the performance of it is ſenſonable, and the omiſſion, or intermiſſion of it, an effect of our want of zeale, or thankfulneſs.

V. 2. the humble ſhall hear thereof] They that are beaten down with the experience of their own evils. Or, the meeke: as the ſame word (ענוים) may as truely be tranſlated: intending thereby, the faithful. Meekeneſs how inſeparable from true piety, ſee, Luke, 18. 2. &c. Jeſus called a little child, &c. and, Lam. 13, 14. &c. to the end, Where is a wiſe man, and endued with knowledg among you, &c. They are called, poore in ſpirit: Math. 5. 3. Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of God. and thoſe there, called Meeke, (verſe, 5. Bleſſed are the meeke, for they ſhall inherite the earth:) are meant, the gentle, & peaceable (in their ordinary converſation: not violent, or contentions: ſuch as are deſcribed v. 12. 13, 14. of this Pſalm: What man is he, &c. Such, (though they be not very Religious otherwiſe; but much more, if Religious:) have a particular promiſe of earthly bleſſings.

be glad] That God hath preſerved me for the kingdom.

V. 4. and delivered me from all my fears] Which I conceived, for the dangers wherein I was among the Philiſtines, Heb. 5. 7.

V. 5. They looked] Or, They ſhall look, and ſhall be enlightened, and their faces ſhall not be aſhamed: So moſt, and it is very uſual, in the Hebrew, as all know, to put Preterits for Futures.

They looked unto him] God: They ſhall dare to lift up their eyes unto God, being now revived and encouraged by his gracious dealing with me, Pſal. 40. 12. innumerable evils have compaſſed me—I am not able to look up. Or, they ſhall look unto him, that is, David Fimſelf, ſpeaking of himſelf in the third perſon: as elſewhere, ſomtimes. Aſpicient eum. They ſhall ſee him; how God hath dealt with him. So Pſal. 107. 42. The righteous ſhall ſee it, and rejoyce. See on the next verſe, Iſa. 60. 5.

were lightened] The proper ſignification of the word (נהרו) is, They ſhall flow together. So Iſa. 2. 2. and 60. 5. They ſhall ſee, and flow together &c. And becauſe they that flow together, uſe to make haſt, ſome render, feſtinabunt, accelerabunt: but what need? The ſenſe here followed, were lightened, is taken from the Chaldaick uſe of the word. The ſenſe is good, ſo too: but we need it not here, ſince the more proper will do us well, and is embraced by moſt.

V. 6. This poor man cryed] Theſe are the words of the humble raiſing themſelves up by the conſideration of Gods favour ſhewed to David.

V. 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him] It is well obſerved here by ſome, that it is an idiotiſme of the Hebrew tongue (though the like may be obſerved in other tongues too, ſomtimes:) to put ſingulars for plurals: as tree, for trees: Pſal. 105. 33. brake the trees (Hebr. tree:) of their coaſt. So, frog; caterpiller, locuſt, Pſal. 78. 45, 46. for frogs, &c. and Pſal. 8. 8. the ſoul of the aire, and the fiſh of the Sea. Here therefore, becauſe encamping in ordinary conſtruction, doth preſuppoſe a multitude; it is very likely that by Angel, an hoaſt of Angels is intended. We have it in the plural, Pſal. 99. 11. For he ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, &c. Though Gods power be ſufficient to govern us, yet, for mans infirmity, he appointeth his Angels to watch over us, as ſouldiers encamped about us, Pſal. 91. 11. Heb. 1. 14.

O fear the Lord ye his Saints] Pſal. 31. 23.

V. 10. The young Lyons do lack] The Godly that truſt to God, even the poor and needy, may promiſe themſelves more content (which is accounted great riches:) in their eſtate, what ever it be, then great men, that truſt in their wealth. For not by bread only, &c. Deut. 8. 3. & Math. 4. 4. And, The ſleep of a labouring man, &c. Eccleſ. 5. 12.

I will teach you the fear of the Lord] Their whole duty to God, v. 9. Eccl. 12. 13.

V. 12. What man is he that deſireth life] 1 Pet. 3. 10. Seeing all men naturally deſire life and felicity, but of the right meanes, to true ſolid happineſs, is the queſtion. It is that, that hath exerciſed wiſe men and Philoſophers in all ages. But they could never agree in their opinions; ſome maintaining one thing, and ſome another. It is the word of God alone that can reſolve the queſtion. See more upon Pſal. 1. upon the inſcription of it, Pſalm firſt.

to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth] Gods anger not only deſtroyes the wicked, but alſo aboliſheth their name for ever, Pſal. 37. 35, 36. Prov. 10. 7.

V. 17. The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth] Spoken of, v. 15. And if the ſixteenth verſe had a parentheſis about it, it might be read, they cry: or, the broken-hearted cry, verſ. 18. for ſo the antecedent is taken out of the verſe following, Pſal. 87. 1, 2.

and the Lord heareth] See upon Pſal. 38. 18. For I will declare, and Pſal. 41. 1. The Lord will deliver him.

V. 18. unto them that are of a broken heart] Pſal. 51. 17. Iſai. 57. 15. Heb. to the broken of heart.

that are of a broken heart] When they ſeem to be ſwallowed up with afflictions, then God is at hand to deliver them.

ſuch as be of a contrite ſpirit] Heb. contrite of ſpirit.

V. 19. Many are the afflictions of the righteous] And of the wicked too, Pſal. 32. 10. The difference is; God ſends them to the righteous, and them he takes more ſpecial care of, as either cures, or preſervatives from ſpititual evils, which would occaſion far greater miſchief. For ſuch is the nature of man; ſo frail, ſo fickle and mutable, even in the beſt, that without this continual diſcipline, or exerciſing, by outward croſſes, and ſometimes inward temptations and trials, it is apt to degenerate, and to do worſe. See Heb. 12. 6, 7, 8, &c. And it makes alſo to the purpoſe, that ancient Grecians called intemperate, incontinent men; ἀκολάστους; as if a man ſhould ſay, undiſciplined, or unchaſtiſed men, as the word is expounded by Ariſtotle in his Ethicks. David himſelf found it ſo, and ingenuouſly doth acknowledg it, Pſal. 119. 67. Before I was afflicted, &c. and verſ. 71. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, &c. Therefore Saint James would have us to rejoyce when we fall into many temptations, or trials, Jam. 1. 2. which nevertheleſſe we ought, (as taught by Chriſt) to pray againſt, becauſe as we muſt not confide in our own ſtrength, ſo neither preſume (which were to tempt God) upon the help of God. Pride and ſecurity, are the worſt of evils. So that the joy required and enjoyned, muſt be rather when it is paſt and over, then in the time of ſuffering, Heb. 12. 11. though, even then, not without ſome ſpiritual joy and comfort, Iſai. 57. 15. As for the wicked, or ungodly, it is otherwiſe; becauſe they have no ſuch opinion of God, nor are acquainted with the myſteries of his divine diſpenſations, their afflictions prove right afflictions, and either make them, through impatience, to murmur and repine: or if through a kinde of natural ſtoutneſſe and fortitude, they bear them patiently, they are apt to grow proud thereupon, and ſelf-conceited: a worſe diſeaſe then the afflictions themſelves. But however they be born, either more or leſſe patiently, (for we know of ſome heathens, that have boaſted, and made ſhew of joy in their miſery:) without reference to the end, eternal happineſs in another world; and the good uſe that is to be made of them to that end; it is not the conceit of man, that can change the nature of the thing,

V. 20. He keepeth all his bones] And, as Chriſt ſaith, all the hairs of his head, Luk. 11. 6, 7.

bones] Joh. 19. 36.

V. 21. Evil ſhall ſlay the wicked] Evil of puniſhment ſhall deſtroy wicked men, though not good men, verſ. 20. or they ſhal periſh for their ſins, Pſal. 94. 23. & 145. 20.

ſhall be deſolate] Or, ſhall be guilty.

V. 22. the Lord redeemeth the ſoul of his ſervants] When they ſeem to be overcome with great dangers, then God delivereth them.

and none of them that truſt in him, ſhall be deſolate] Or, ſhall be guilty; as verſe before, in the margin. Elſewhere it is, and more commonly ſo; ſhall not be aſhamed: as Pſal. 25. 2. and Eſay 49. 23. Sometimes, to be aſhamed and confounded, are put together, as Pſal. 35. 26. and 40. 14. I note this variety, becauſe Eſay 28. 16. where we have it, He that believeth, ſhall not make haſte: Some would have יבוש (ſhall be aſhamed) as Eſay 49. 23. to be the true reading, and not יחיש, as there tranſlated Which ſeemeth the more plauſible, becauſe of the affinity of the Original words, being both, as equal in number of letters; ſo, almoſt, of one ſound. But by comparing ſeveral places, as we have done, it appeareth, that the ſame ſenſe, or ſentence, (as to the main ſubſtance) is ſometimes ſet out in the Scripture with ſome variety; and that bare affinity of words, is no ſufficient ground, to make us ſuſpect a place. For though it may be ſaid of Eſay 49. 23. and 28. 17. that there is great affinity in the Original words; yet the ſame cannot be ſaid of this, and other like places, where there is no ſuch affinity of words, though no leſſe variation of ſenſe.

PSAL. XXXV.

Verſ. 1. P*Lead my cauſe*] Pſal. 43. 1. & 119. 154. Lam. 3. 58. He deſireth God to undertake his cauſe, againſt them that did perſecute him, & to plead it with the ſword, as 1 Sam. 25. 38, 39.

V. 2. Take hold of ſhield] Albeit God can with his breath deſtroy all our enemies, yet the holy Ghoſt attributeth unto him theſe outward weapons, to aſſure us of his preſent power.

V. 3. ſay unto my ſoul] Aſſure me that thou wilt deliver me out of theſe troubles.

V. 4. Let them be confounded and put to ſhame that ſeek after my ſoul]. From this verſe, divers Imprecations follow; and there be divers Pſalms of the ſame argument, where David not content with ordinary termes, as, let them be confounded, &c. which with a little help of a charitable conſtruction might paſſe: but with exquiſite formes and ſpeeches, (the like whereof are to be found in profane writings alſo) doth devote his enemies to the utmoſt of miſery that his phanſie could reach. Of all theſe in general, ſomewhat ſhall now be ſaid; once here for all. Whether private revenge were forbidden by the law or not, divers have been the conceits and apprehenſions of men about it. But firſt of all, to cleer the terms that we are to uſe: by private revenge we do not underſtand a legal proſecution of ones right, againſt unjuſt uſurpation, or oppreſſion; which indeed ſeems, even this alſo, to be forbidden to Chriſtians; but ſeems onely, as by Learned Expoſitors is ſufficiently cleared: by private revenge, we underſtand an alienation of minde, or bearing of malice, watching any oppertunity to do miſchiefe by way of requital; upon ſuppoſition, whether true. or imaginary, of an injury done to us. That private revenge in this ſenſe, and ſuch a malicious vindicative mind, was forbidden by the law, though, of old, otherwiſe interpreted by the Jewes, hath already been ſaid and ſhewed, upon Pſalm 26. 6. ſo will I compaſſe thine altar. Which may be further confirmed by that of Job, where he profeſſeth his innocency from ſins of an high nature, as idolatry, &c. If I rejoyced, ſaith he, at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or lift up my ſoule when evil found him, Job 31. 29. See upon Plal. 41. 10. that I may requite them. Not to ſpeak of Prov. 22. 22. and other places there to that purpoſe, becauſe written, or at leaſt collected, ſince David. Neither is the law of God, contrary to the law of Nature herein, if rightly conſidered. The way that ſome ancient Philoſophers have gone, to prove that revenge was againſt Nature, is by ſhewing that it is againſt the common good; which they hold every man, as he is a rational ſociable man, is naturally bound to prefer before his own. But this is of an higher contemplation. In a more plain way, among chriſtians, at leaſt, as I conceive, the ſame may be done. For granting that every man, by nature, is to love himſelf beſt, and to prefer his own good, before any others: (wherein religion & reaſon agree well enough, if in the word love there be no miſtake; that is, that we take not love of the body, and of this preſent world, for love of the ſoul, and of eternity) and that abſolutely, or generally; it is lawful, as it hath alwayes been held a dictate of nature, Vim vi repellere; and by conſequence, to requite evil for evil, leſt by bearing one injury, we expoſe our ſelves to a ſecond: yet this muſt be granted alſo, and it neceſſarily followes upon that firſt principle, That E duobus malis minimum: of two evils nature doth prompt to make choice of the leaſt. Upon this very principle of nature, the Epicureans (as may be ſeen in Dio. Laertius, and others) who pretended nature in all things, taught that we ſhould forbear many pleaſures, to which nature doth lead; not as pleaſures, but as the cauſe of greater evils. Hereupon it will follow, that as many as believe, that there is a reward of good to them that keep the Commandements of God, either in this, or after this life, of far more valuable conſideration, then the pleaſure, or profit of revenge can be; as alſo a reward of evil to them that do not, much more to be feared, then any evil, or inconveniency that can come to us, by neglect of revenge, and forgiving of injuries: it will, I ſay, upon theſe grounds of nature neceſſarily follow, that ſuch as love their own good, by nature; and as rational creatures (which is the proper nature of man, by which he differeth from bruits; reaſon) know, that they are not onely to provide for the preſent, but for the future alſo, and accordingly to make their choice, as they ſee cauſe: that ſuch, I ſay, upon grounds of reaſon and nature, muſt and will rather neglect and paſſe by injuries done to them, by men, then to incur the wrath of God, who hath (in the New Teſtament, we are ſure) ſo ſtrictly forbidden and inhibited all private revenge, and bearing of malice, upon no leſſe penalty, then the loſſe of eternal life. But how then comes David, a man of God, nay, according to Gods own heart, 1 Sam. 13. 14. and of his own temper and diſpoſition, as may be gathered by divers circumſtances, meek and mild; ſo freely to indulge to paſſion (a man would think) even to dreadful curſes and imprecations? It is commonly ſaid; that what he uttereth in this kind, was uttered by him rather as a Prophet, and Gods Miniſter, then as a party, and out of any private paſſion. Again, that David had not a reſpect to himſelf ſo much, if at all, as to the glory of God: the puniſhment of the wicked much conducing to the promoting of religion, and repreſſing of wickedneſſe and vice among men. That David uttered many of theſe imprecations as a Prophet, immediately moved by God, without any reſpect to himſelf, but with a reſpect to God, and his glory, I verily believe it. Certainly, many of thoſe imprecations, with ſome alteration of the tenſes, (which in the Hebrew tongue is ordinary enough) for the Optative, or Imperative, being put in the Future; of imprecations would become meer propheſies. And ſo we find ſome ſome of them expreſſed, as Pſal. 21. 8, 9. Thine hand ſhall find out, &c. Thou ſhalt make them as a fiery oven, &c. But whether all, without any mixture of any humane paſſion, or any reſpect to himſelfe at all, (as is commonly affirmed) I cannot ſo eaſily be perſwaded. This I obſerve, that David, in moſt of thoſe imprecations, pitches upon one kind of men, of all men in the world, both to God and men, moſt hateful: rather Devils, indeed, then men; for whom whether it be lawful, or no, to pray, I almoſt make a queſtion: not that I think their ſin to be the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; but of all ſins, the moſt inhumane, and againſt common nature, and which by God himſelf (as ſhall appear) uſeth to be reſented and puniſhed in a peculiar manner. It is the ſin of uncompaſſionate, or irrelenting cruelty, when men taking the advantage of others miſery, purſue vengeance to the utmoſt, and ſtill the lower their enemy is, and the more uncapable to reſiſt, the more their rage and malice increaſeth againſt him. This is much; but there is a degree beyond this, when a man doth this to another, not out of any revenge, or provoked by any wrong or injury, either reall, or imaginary: but of pure cruelty, and pleaſure that he takes in doing miſchief, and to ſee others in miſery. And yet beyond this too, there is a degree, when a man doth this, not to his enemy; nor to them, who have done him no wrong; but to his quondam friend, yea and benefactor. But let us hear David himſelf, how he deſcribes them. In the 99. Pſalme, after dreadful imprecations, as any be in the whole Book, Becauſe, ſaith he, that he remembred not to ſhew mercy, but perſecuted the poor and needy man; that he might even ſlay the broken in heart. So Pſal. 69. 23. Let their eyes be darkned, &c. 24. Pour out thine indignation upon them, &c. Let their habitation be deſolate, &c. For they perſecute him whom thou haſt ſmitten; and they talke to the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded, verſe 26. See alſo upon Pſal 55. 19. becauſe they have no changes. And is it not ſo here in this Pſalm we are now upon? ver. 12, &c. They rewarded me evil for good, to the ſpoiling of my ſoul. But as for me, &c. But in mine adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together, &c. A man would wonder, that the nature of man ſhould be capable of ſuch ſavagneſſe: Though if Poets may be credited, they are but the baſeſt of wilde beaſts neither, that are of that nature. Corpora magnanimo ſatis eſt proſtraſſe leoni, &c. At lupus, & turpes inſtant morientibus urſi: Et quæcunque minor nobilitate fera eſt. And again, Nec mala te reddunt mitem, placidumque jacenti Noſtra quibus poſſunt illachrimare feræ? But the experience of all ages is above all reaſoning. But let us ſee what God himſelf doth think of ſuch, and what account, He whoſe judgement muſt be our rule and warrant, would have us to make of them. I will paſs by divers paſſages of the Prophets where dreadful judgements are denounced againſt ſeveral nations for this one thing, (though not in that only ſinful, it is likely) becauſe they inſulted without mercy, at the fall and ruine of their enemies. There be divers in that kind. I will ground my obſervation upon wiſe Solomon his words and obſervation to this purpoſe, which well deſerves to be conſidered of. He gives counſel how a wiſe man ſhould carry himſelf, when his enemy is brought low, if not quite loſt, by the hand of God. Rejoyce not, ſaith he, when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he ſtumbleth. Leſt the Lord ſee it, and it diſpleaſe him, and he turn away his wrath from him, Prov. 24. 17, 18. In which words, the oppoſite term, in te, (from him, upon thee) muſt of neceſſity be ſupplied, as it is well ſupplied by ſome Tranſlators in the very Text; (as Junius for one) and by ſome Rabbins, in their Annotations upon the place. It muſt be ſo, except a man can think, that Solomons intention was, to give counſel, how to prevent, leſt by our meanes the wrath of God againſt our enemies ſhould be allayed: which to think, were as abſurd, as it is uncharitable. See alſo upon Prov. 25. 21, 22. If thine enemy be hungry, &c. where we ſhall ſhew how much ſome are miſtaken in the ſenſe of thoſe words. Now if Solomon were in the right, and miſtook not in his judgement of Gods nature, let any body judge what a ſin this muſt be in the eyes of God, this inſulting, this rejoycing, at the calamity of the diſtreſſed and afflicted, which alone can make an innocent of a ſinner, and ſinner of an innocent; by making him an object of compaſſion, who before was an object of wrath; and him an object of wrath, who before, but for this unmerciful inſulting, was of favour? I know not whence they had it, but this I know, that ancient wiſe heathens had the very ſame apprehenſions of Gods nature, in this particular, as wiſe Solomon here expreſſes: and that they ſpeak of it in the very ſame termes almoſt, as Solomon doth. Since therefore, both by the teſtimony of Solomon, and by the common apprehenſion of men, none are more ſubject to the curſe of God, none more deteſtable to him, then ſuch kind of men; there is leſſe offence to be taken at theſe curſes of David againſt ſuch; and the more likely it is, (beſides what we are bound to believe of it, upon another conſideration) that the glory of God was his aim, in curſing thoſe, that he knew to God, of all men, the moſt accurſed: and in the puniſhment of whom, God he knew would be moſt glorified. But that he uttered theſe curſes without any paſſion at all, (taking paſſion in the better ſenſe, as an effect of nature, from which no natural man is altogether exempt) is more then I think my ſelfe bound to believe. Ancient Greek Philoſophers tell us of a certain πάθος, which they call Ἡρωϊκὸν πάθος: the proper paſſion of Heroes, or Heroick men. It is, as they deſcribe it, an illimited or unbounded liberty of language, in point of reproof and reprehenſion, not tied to circumſtances either of time, or of place. And this they make the priviledge of Heroick men, becauſe of their tranſcendent virtue above other men. Certainly, had David as a meer man, (not inſpired I mean) uſed theſe imprecations, yet we were bound to believe, that a man of ſuch extraordinary parts, and otherwiſe ſo meek and ſo charitable, had good reaſon for what he did; though we have no warrant at all, either from Reaſon, or Scripture, to imitate him therein, or to take the ſame liberty. How theſe imprecations ſhould be read and underſtood by godly people in their daily devotions, ſee upon Pſal. 143. 3. For the enemy hath perſecuted my ſoul, &c.

Yet there be, that would have מעוג to ſignifie, idle, or merry talk, alſo. But ſtill, to one purpoſe; whether ſo, or ſo; ſo that we may be the more indifferent. There is an alluſion in the words alſo, which makes them the more pleaſantly (whence alſo we may probably conjecture that they were uſed proverbially :) to run in the Original, מעוג לעג but in the tranſlation, not obſerveable.

Title.

the ſervant of the Lord] In governing the Kingdome under God, and according to his Will, Pſal. 18. tit.

Verſ. 1. T*He tranſgreſſion of the wicked ſaith, within my heart*] The order of the words in the Original Hebrew, is ſomewhat perplexd, and intricate ; which makes Interpreters to vary much in their tranſlations, though they agree well enough about the main ſcope. There be that expound it thus ; Tranſgreſſion, (or cuſtom of ſinning, or, inbred corruption :) ſaith to the wicked ; that is, prompts and perſwades him, (within my heart ; that is, in my conſcience it is ſo : I verily believe it ;) to put away all fear of God from before his eyes. Certain it is, that a looſe licentious life, breeds in a man, though better perſwaded before, ſooner or later, atheiſtical opinions ; nothing more : as a religious life diſpoſes and prepares a man, as much as any thing to embrace the truth of God. But the more received expoſition is, (whether, as here we read it, The tranſgreſſion of the wicked, ſaith, &c. or, as ſome, Tranſgreſſion ſaith of the wicked, &c.) That as the tree may be known by the fruit ; ſo an atheiſt, by his life and converſation. Within my heart, ſaith David ; that is, as before, I verily believe it. Or, perchance he oppoſeth the ſecret thoughts and ſuggeſtions of his heart, to open and confident aſſeveration. For many things we may believe, upon good grounds, and probabilities ; which yet to ſpeak openly and publickly, were both undiſcreet, and uncharitable. There is no queſtion, but according to the phraſe and doctrine of the Scriptures, all men that live irreligiouſly, may be called and accounted infidels and atheiſts : but a legal formal atheiſt is another thing. Many things ſhould be conſidered and known, before we take upon us, openly and peremptorily, to charge any man of atheiſme.

not good] Or, very evil, 1 Sam. 2. 24. Prov. 24. 23.

V. 5. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens] Having ſpoken of the wickedneſſe, both in matter of life and opinion, of men ; he falls into a conſideration of the goodneſſe and mercy of God ; who notwithſtanding ſuch daily provocations of the profane, perjured, ſacrilegious, and the like, ſuffers them nevertheleſſe to live, and enjoy the bleſſings of this World ; Making his Sun to riſe upon the unjuſt, as well as upon the juſt, &c. as we read in the Goſpel. But from Gods goodneſſe and mercy, in general, in the 5, 6, & 7. verſes, he proceeds to his more particular goodneſſe and mercy to them wards, whom he hath inlightned with his word, and called to be members of his Church. See before, upon Pſal. 24. The earth is the Lords, &c.

V. 6. Thy righteouſneſſe is like the great mountains] For eminency and ſtableneſſe.

V. 11. Let not the foot of pride come againſt me] Let not the proud advance himſelfe againſt me, neither the power of the wicked drive me away.

V. 12. There are the workers of iniquity fallen] Wicked men have fallen while they ſought to deſtroy good men, and ſo, I hope, ſhall theſe.

There are the workers of iniquity fallen : they are caſt down, and ſhall not be able to riſe] Or, There have the workers of iniquity fallen; they have been caſt down, and have not been able to riſe.

PSAL. XXXVII.

Verſ. 1. F*Ret not thy ſelfe becauſe of evil doers*, &c.] The argument of this Pſalme, is a beaten argument ; a vindication of Gods providence concerning the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the godly in this world. It is an argument that hath been handled by many Philoſophers of old ; by Seneca, a Latine Philoſopher, Cur bonis male ſit, &c. among the reſt, to the utmoſt of what could be ſaid by a heathen, ſingularly well : and ſince that, by many Chriſtians. There is not any ſubject indeed, of either more conſequence, or profundity : and could all ſcruples and doubts be well reſolved, to the ſatisfaction of common capacities, as well as of others ; it would make a great alteration in the world, and lives of men ; vice would not be ſo predominant, and virtue more in requeſt. Yet among Chriſtians, throughly and really poſſeſt with the principles of faith, as of the immortality of the ſoul, a reſurrection of the body, a day of judgement, and the like ; the matter is of no difficult reſolution : if any ſo principled, are much ſcandalized, it is not ſo much becauſe they cannot be ſatisfied, as becauſe they will not take the pains, or allow themſelves time to conſider of it ſeriouſly. Many alſo cannot be ſatisfied, not through any defect, either of information, or underſtanding, but of a godly mind and life. Lewdneſſe and profanneſſe, when once they poſſeſſe the heart, they either put out the light of the underſtanding, or at leaſt hinder the fruit and operation of it. But we are not here to treat of providence in general, but onely to conſider what David ſaith of it, what againſt it, and what for it. He handles the point in another whole Pſalme, beſides this : the 73. Truly God is good to Iſrael, &c. if that Pſalme be Davids, as I think it is, though by ſome aſcribed unto Aſaph, becauſe of his name there before it. And again, but more obſcurely, in the 49. Pſalm, Hear this all ye people, &c. and more briefly, Pſalm 90. 5, 6, 7. O Lord how great are thy works, &c. Divers Chapters in Job are of this ſubject; as 24. 27. and ſome others: it is one of the chiefeſt ſubjects of that Book. In Jeremy alſo, and Habakkuk; the 12. of the one, and the firſt Chapter of the other, there is ſomewhat. All whom I mention the more willingly, becauſe they go much one way, both of expoſtulation and anſwer. The main of the anſwer is, which we therefore are the more particularly to weigh and examine, firſt; that though the proſperity of the wicked be great, yet their overthrow is as ſuddain and terrible: and more generally, that their proſperity is but a ſeeming proſperity; not really and truely what it ſeemeth. Why ſo? Becauſe their life is but a blaſt, their pleaſures ſoon over and forgotten: for their very brevity, not conſiderable. But is it not ſo with the temporal proſperity of the religious and godly too? Is not their time, generally, as ſhort; and their pleaſures, or worldly goods, as paſſing and tranſitory? If thoſe very places, where they ſpeak of the proſperity of the wicked, particularly, do not tell us ſo; yet there be other places of Scripture, many, that do; as fully, and in as expreſſe terms, as where they ſpeak of thoſe before; whereof ſee before upon Pſal. 1. 3. And he ſhall be, &c. Here, in few words, the matter might have been anſwered and cleared: that the righteous and religious, how they fare in this life, is not to them conſiderable, becauſe they do not expect their reward in this life: their happineſs therefore, not to be meaſured, by what they enjoy in this world. And what is a man profited if he ſhall gain the whole world, and yet looſe his ſoul? Matth. 16. 26. What need more; to men that are rational, and know how to put a difference between a moment of time, and eternity? Surely Plato the heathen Philoſopher had it not from Chriſt, and much leſſe Chriſt, though many ages after, from Plato: Yet reaſon and common ſenſe prompted this notion unto Plato; and his very expreſſion comes very neer to that of Chriſts; Ἄλλα μέντοι ἔγωγε τῆς σῆς ψυχῆς οὐδ᾽ ἂν τὴν πάντων Ἑλλήνων καὶ Βαρβάρων, &c. He ſpeaks unto noble Alcibiades, and ſaith, I am confident thou wouldſt not for all Greece and all Barbary, (that is in their language, for all the whole world,) exchange thy ſoul, or, think them a ſufficient recompence for thy ſoul. And as for thoſe words of Chriſt, wherewith he begins this ſentence, τί γὰρ ὠφελεῖται ἄνθρωπος; What is a man profited; Plato hath them alſo upon this very occaſion, in the ſixth, as I remember, of his Politicks; οὐδὲν ἡμῖν ὄφελος, &c. And why ſhould we wonder that Plato, ſo learned and judicious a Philoſopher, ſhould ſay it; when Homer, a Poet, ſaith no leſſe? but that in him ψυχῆς muſt be tranſlated life, and not ſoul. Ὀυ γάρ ἐμοὶ ψυχῆς ἀντάξιον, &c. Iliad. 10. Though there be, who even in Chriſt his words would have ψυχὴ to be tranſlated life, not ſoul. Which if it were granted, yet they themſelves ſhew well, that by good and neceſſary collection, the ſame ſenſe may be made of it. For if a ſhort temporary life be worth ſo much, how much more eternal life? But I cannot be of their opinion; were it but for Chriſt his words, much to the ſame effect, Matth. 10. 28. Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul: but rather, &c. where I think what by ſoul is to be underſtood, no queſtion at all can be made. If then this, or any thing equivalent (as there is choice enough in the new Teſtament) to this, had been anſwered, an Infidel, or a Jew perchance (not a Chriſtian) might have required farther ſatisfaction, concerning the immortality of the ſoul, &c. but this granted; of Gods providence, in reference to ungodly mens worldly proſperity, there would have been no further queſtion. But that time was not yet come, The Church was yet in its infancy; and the full revelation of the myſteries of Heaven and eternity, was reſerved for another time. This was a myſtery of Gods diſpenſation: and by what degrees that light was diſpenſed by God unto his people, Learned men have enquired, and ſhewed that Daniel was the firſt, who clearly ſpake of the reſurrection; and that as the ſufferings, and perſecutions of the Church under Antiochus, and others, increaſed; ſo did that light ſpread more and more, and the Kingdom of Heaven every day more talked of among the Jews, then before. Therefore is Chriſt ſaid, to have brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 10. and Matth. 11. 11. that he that is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven, is greater then John the Baptiſt. Not but that of old, long before that time, there was ſomewhat intimated in the Law and Prophets; and talked of among the godly Jews to that purpoſe; but not any thing clearly, nor with any certainty: of the wicked eſpecially, that they alſo ſhould riſe again, and give an account of their lives, and accordingly be rewarded; this was a thing not known then, but the contrary rather believed; as at this day among the Jews. However, that ſuch a one as David, ſo godly, and ſo beloved, had a far greater knowledge of theſe things, then ordinary Jewes; and in ſome reſpect, then ordinary Chriſtians, perchance; I make no queſtion. But what he knew or believed, is one thing; and what he thought fit for common knowledge, another. However ſome places there be, that ſeem to me, though there be that do not apprehend them ſo, very cleer; as Pſal. 17. 14, 15. From men which are thy hand, O Lord; from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whoſe belly thou doſt fill, &c. As for me, I will behold thy face in righteouſneſs: I ſhall be ſatisfied when I awake with thy likeneſſe. See more there. And again Pſal. 49. 6. They that truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches, &c. 12. Like ſheep they are laid in the grave, death ſhall feed on them, &c. 17. But God will redeem my ſoul from the power of the grave, for he ſhall receive me. Theſe places ſeem to me very full and ſatisfactory, in this point, of vindicating of Gods providence againſt all Objections. But there be other places, I muſt confeſſe, in number more, by far, not in the Pſalmes onely, but in Job, and elſewhere; where the queſtion is otherwiſe reſolved, and the goods and bleſſings of this life abſolutely annexed and aſſerted to godlineſſe; to which, as I conceive, eſpecially, the Apoſtle (whoſe main work elſewhere, is to prepare true Chriſtians for croſſes and tribulations in this world) alluding, ſaith this, Godlineſſe hath the promiſes, both of this life, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Now the reſolution or deciſion of the queſtion upon that ground of temporal happineſs annexed to godlineſs, without any expreſs mention of another life, is that which perplexes the matter more, (in ſight) then if nothing had been ſaid at all. I will eaſily grant, there might be ſome difference between the times under the Law; and thoſe, ſince the Goſpel, and that improvement of knowledge, which hath been by Chriſt: that the goods of this world, wealth, long life, &c. were then diſpenſed with more equality, to the juſt and unjuſt, according to the merits of either. But that there were any times, when thoſe things, that either in this, and the 112. Pſalm, or in Job, Chap. 20, 21. and 27. are pronounced at large concerning the condition of the juſt and unjuſt upon earth (yea though we allow a poetical or rhetorical amplification) had a literal fulfilling, there is neither authority of any Scripture Hiſtory, nor records of ancient times that are come to our hands, nor any experience of our times, that can induce us to believe. That it ſo falls out ſometimes, we grant, and know; but ſo often to the contrary too, as how to make a general rule of it, or to ground a ſatisfactory anſwer to this objection againſt providence, upon it; we do not ſee how it can be done. Of ſome of theſe general aſſeverations that may ſeem moſt ſtrange, we ſhall particularly conſider of, as they ſhall offer themſelvs to us. In the mean time, what in general to ſay more of them, I know not but this: God having paſſed his promiſe, (as in the Law often) that it ſhould be well with them that feared him, and kept his Commandenents: and denounced heavie judgements againſt them that ſhould not; which, according to the ſtile and condition of thoſe dayes, though literally by the moſt (and often ſo approved by the event) underſtood, had a further reach and meaning: thoſe holy men that wrote ſince of the ſame ſubject, being fully perſwaded (and moved to by the Holy Ghoſt) of the truth of Gods promiſes, that it ſhould be well with the godly, &c. and either not fully underſtanding themſelves, or having no warrant from God to declare unto others the particulars, wherein the happineſſe of the one, or unhappineſs of the other, chiefly conſiſted: they thought good to ſet out both the one and the other, in the ordinary formes and expreſſions, (according to the vulgar apprehenſions of thoſe times) with much confidence (as themſelves were fully perſwaded) reiterated aſſeverations and amplifications, to work upon others the more powerfully, whom it ſo much concerned to be fully perſwaded of this Truth, that the godly ſhall be bleſſed, and do well; and evil ſhould be the portion of the unrighteous and profane. Such a conflict between full perſwaſion, (grounded upon Gods Word) on the one ſide, and common experience on the other, we may ſee in the very expreſſions of Eccleſiaſtes, where he ſaith, Though a ſinner do evil an hundred times, and his dayes be prolonged; yet ſurely I know that it will be well with them that fear God; which fear before him. But it ſhall not be well with the wicked, neither ſhall he prolong his dayes, which are as a ſhadow, becauſe he feareth not before God, Eccleſ. 7. 12, 13. It was a ſtrange device of Plato's (a man once in requeſt among heathens, as much as ever man was, both he, and his ſayings) and for the ſublimity of it, not unworthy to be related in this place; who after a long diſpute, to prove that there is more bleſſedneſs in the practice of righteouſneſs and virtue, then any could be in the contrary: comes at laſt to this concluſion, That whether it were ſo or no, yet he would not have it lawful (yea liable to a great penalty) for any man, Poet or other, to ſay or write, that there was more pleaſure to be found in wickedneſs, then in virtue: and that all men of authority, Lawmakers, and others, ſhould be bound, upon all occaſions, to avouch it for a truth, that good men were happy men, and wicked men unhappy: adding, That if it were ever lawful, or laudible, for a man upon any occaſion to lye (which elſewhere he ſhewes and maintains, that it is not:) it was upon this occaſion. And whereas it is there objected, that well men might write, or ſpeak ſo; but it could not be ſo eaſie to perſwade: he takes upon him to maintaine, that if the matter were carried as it might be, it was feacible enough to perſwade men, that it is ſo indeed. And in very deed, his reaſons and allegations to that purpoſe, are very pregnant and pertinent: and Ariſtotle, one of his diſciples, that wrote ſince him, ſeems to confirme it, ſpeaking in a place of the power that Lawmakers have, to perſwade men even what they would themſelves, though of it ſelfe never ſo falſe or prodigious. In which words, it is very likely, that he had ſome reſpect to this his maſters diſpute. All this you ſhall finde in the ſecond book of his Lawes; beſides what he hath elſewhere to that purpoſe. I do not alledge this (God forbid) bid) to make any application of it: I have ſaid before, and I am fully perſwaded, that neither David, nor any others I have named, ever wrote concerning this matter, but what they verily believed, and were aſſured of. I mention it to this purpoſe onely, to ſhew, that although all that have been written either by David or others, upon this ſubject, will not (as I apprehend it, at leaſt) hold, in the literal and obvious ſence: yet ſuch expreſſions might do good, nevertheleſſe to this end, that they whoſe thoughts cannot eaſily aſcend above, and beyond this preſent life, might believe this truth (a truth of ſo much conſequence, and ſuch neceſſity by all men to be believed) as they are able to apprehend it; though they apprehend it not to the fulneſſe, or exactneſſe of truth. And ſo much of this matter in general, ſhall ſerve. What elſe we ſhall ſay of it, ſhall be, as particulars ſhall offer themſelves.

V. 2. For they ſhall ſoon be cut down like the graſſe] Theſe words may be taken either of the ſudden fall and deſtruction of the wicked, in their greateſt height and proſperity; as Pſal. 73. 18, 19. or more generally, of the inſtability, and tranſitorineſſe of all humane felicity, compared to graſſe, as here, Eſay 40. 6. and Pſal. 90. 6. See before upon Pſal. 1. 3. And he ſhall be, &c. But if ſo, then how is the matter anſwered, if both of the juſt and unjuſt mans proſperity the ſame thing may be ſaid, and both come to one end? Of this we have ſpoken before upon the former verſe: to this purpoſe; that ſuch anſwers are grounded upon a difference implyed, though for certain reaſons there mentiond, not expreſſed: which is, that whereas the wicked hath this world onely to truſt to; the happineſſe of the righteous is to laſt for ever. But how for ever? That is, ſucceſſively, continued in their poſterity. So indeed we find it expreſt in ſome places, as in this very Pſalme ver. 28. For the Lord loveth judgement, and forſaketh not his Saints; they are preſerved for ever: (what is meant by this for ever, appears by the oppoſite member) but the ſeed of the wicked ſhall be cut off; and it doth ſo fall out ſometimes. But eternal life is the thing (as hath been ſaid) that muſt make the words generally true; which though not expreſſed, often, (how, and where hath been ſhewed) yet even in this Pſalme is obſcurely intimated. For by theſe words ſo often repeated, to dwell in the land; to inherit the land, or, the earth, ver. 3, 9, 11, 22, 29, 34. yea for evermore, ver. 18, 27. is properly and literally intended not every land, but the land of Canaan, which was a type of the Kingdom of heaven. Whence it is, that in the New Teſtament we are ſaid to inherit eternal life, or, the Kingdom of Heaven; as alſo, to enter it; words borrowed from the uſual expreſſions of the Old Teſtament, concerning the land of Canaan. See more upon the 36. verſe.

V. 3. Truſt in the Lord] To truſt in God, and do according to his Will, are ſure tokens that his providence will never fail us.

ſo ſhalt thou dwell in the Land] The Original Hebr. goes by Imperatives, dwell in the land, &c. Whereupon ſome would have it to be meant, Deſert not thine own ſtation. Keep thy place, &c. But I take it to be a promiſe, (and ſo the future more proper) rather then a command. It is often repeated. See upon the former verſe.

and verily thou ſhalt be fed] In the Heb. ורעה אמונה properly, and feed truth (as ſome render it) or, be fed with truth. Study to improve thy faith and confidence in God: Strengthen thy ſelfe with faith, or truth; as the Chaldee Paraphraſt expreſſeth it. So Jer. 3. 15. And I will give you Paſtours according to mine heart, which ſhall feed you with knowledge and underſtanding. The words will bear this alſo; and the ſence is good. But that which we have here in our Engliſh, I conceive (as moſt others) more proper to the place. Some render it, proventuque fideliter reſpondente frueris; that is, and thou ſhalt have a good increaſe: to wit, of thy ſeed, and labour, whatever it be. Whatſoever thou doſt put thine hand unto, ſhall proſper. This too, the words (if any like it better) will bear well enough.

V. 4. and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thine heart.] See before upon Pſal. 21. 2. his hearts deſire.

who proſpereth in his way] When God ſuffereth the wicked to proſper, it ſeemeth to the fleſh that he favoureth their doings, Job 21. 7. &c. Pſal. 50. 21.

V. 8. fret not thy ſelfe in any wiſe to do evil] In the Hebr. אל תתחר אך להרע Ne ſuccenſeas (or, movearis) veruntamen ad malefaciendum. Others, ſaltem ad malefaciendum. Others, utiq; ad peccandum. ὥστε πονηρεύεσθαι: as the Septuagint. From whence this double ſenſe doth ariſe. Firſt, Be not angry (or fret not) in any wiſe to do evil. Anger is the cauſe of many evils; and he that gives way to anger, is not maſter of himſelf, and his actions. Therefore is anger abſolutely forbidden; Let all anger be put away, Eph. 4. 31. For the wrath of man (ὀργὴ ἀνδρὸς; it is the ſame word in the Original) worketh not the righteouſneſſe of God. But on the other ſide, Moderate anger upon a juſt occaſion, is not thought unlawful. Altogether to be without paſſions, ſome think as much againſt Reaſon, as Nature. Seaſonable paſſion may be the occaſion of good; as well as unſeaſonable, of evil. Where no paſſion is, zeal (for the moſt part) is but cold. But when he had looked round about on them with anger: it is ſpoken of Chriſt, Mar. 3. 5. The Apoſtle therefore Epheſ. 4. 26. reſolving this negative here, into an affirmative, expreſſeth it; Be angry, and ſin not. He might have this place in his minde alſo. However, the words he takes from Pſal. 4. 4. Stand in awe, &c. as hath been ſhewed there.

V. 9. For all evil doers ſhall be cut off] Pſal. 55. 23.

V. 11. But the meek ſhall inherit the earth) Mat. 5. 5.

V. 12. The wicked plotteth againſt the juſt] The godly are aſſured that the power and craft of the wicked ſhall not prevail againſt them, but fall on their necks, and therefore ought patiently to abide Gods time, and in the mean while bewail their ſins, and offer up their tears as a ſacrifice of their obedience.

V. 13. The Lord ſhall laugh at him] Pſal. 2. 4.

V. 14. ſuch as be of upright converſation] Heb. the upright of way.

V. 15. Their ſword ſhall enter into their own heart] Their plots ſhall hurt themſelves, and not others, whom they ſought to hurt.

V. 16. A little that a righteous man hath] This is the way that many ancient Philoſophers have gone, and after them ſome ancient Fathers, in vindication of the Divine Providence, ſhewing with much wit, and eloquence, that happineſſe doth not conſiſt in abundance, nor greatneſſe; or any thing elſe that ordinary men moſt gaze upon with greateſt admiration, or hunt after, with equal thirſt and greedineſſe; but in moderation, and a contented mind: which a mean fortune, as they argue and prove at large, is more likely to afford, then a great. So that in very deed, he is not rich properly, that hath riches; nor he happy, that hath the outwards of happineſſe; but he both rich and happy, truely and really, that enjoyes himſelf, in what condition ſoever, with competent comfort and a thankful heart. See Prov. 15. 16. & 16. 8. and again, 10. 22. & Eccleſ. 5. 19. & 6. 2. But all this granted as true, and pertinent; yet becauſe it is certain, that there be many rich wicked men, that enjoy their means, even to the laſt, not a few, with contentment enough; and many, good and godly, oppreſſed with poverty, and other evils, who though in their greateſt extremities, they ſubmit in heart and will to God, yet are, otherwiſe, very ſenſible of their wants, and miſeries; it will not therefore ſerve for an abſolute, or general anſwer, to meet with all objections, in this point of providence.

V. 17. For the arms of the wicked ſhall be broken] Pſal. 10. 15. All their ſtrength to do hurt withal, Ezek. 30. 24.

the Lord upholdeth the righteous] Though they be weak.

V. 18. The Lord knoweth the dayes of the upright] God knoweth what dangers hang over his, and by what meanes to deliver them. See ver. 23, &c.

V. 19. They ſhall be ſatisfied] For God will give them contented minds, and that which ſhall be neceſſary, Pſal. 33. 19.

V. 20. as the fat of lambs] They ſhall vaniſh away ſuddenly and eternally; for they are fed for the day of ſlaughter. In the Hebrew כיקר כרים, which by ſome is tranſlated, velut precioſum camporum: which alſo is followed by ſome Rabbines. It is ſure enough, that the word כרים, as it ſignifies agnos, (rams or lambs;) ſo alſo, fields and paſtures. So precioſum camporum, or, the preciousneſſe of the fields, would be the flower of the field; (to which the life of man is elſewhere compared:) precious for the beauty, though not for the uſe. Some think that, יקר, by a metathesis, may be taken for ירק; and then it would be plainly, the graſſe of the field. Some of the Rabbines expounded it of the morning light, which ſoon paſſeth away. But our tranſlation is the moſt received, and as warrantable as any. In the expreſſion, there is a tacite alluſion to the ſacrifices of the Law: in which, by expreſſe Law, Lev. 3. (often repeated in that Chapter,) the fat of beaſts offered was to be burned upon the Altar, and ſo to conſume in ſmoke.

V. 21. borrowed] Deut. 28. 44.

V. 25. I have been young, and now am old, &c.] The words are very expreſſe and emphatical; and out of doubt, literally intended, as they ſound: though there be, who becauſe they could not phanſie the literal, have deviſed a ſpiritual ſenſe, who would have this bread here mentioned, to be meant of ſpiritual, not material bread, or food: and others would make it an hyperbolical ſpeech. But neither the tenour of the words, being ſo expreſſe, as I have ſaid, will bear the one; nor the ratio contextûs, or general ſcope and drift of the words, the other. David therefore ſpake this; according to his own experience; and if other mens experience doth not agree with his, in this particular, it is no wonder. Which is a way of reconciling many different, yea contrary ſpeeches and aſſertions, to truth; becauſe as the experience of men in divers things, is divers, ſo their opinions; and as their opinions, ſo their words. Varia circa hæc opinio, ex ingenio cujuſque vel caſu: ſaith Pliny very well in a place, ſpeaking of a much controverted matter. In this very point of providence, of the happineſſe or unhapineſſe of the righteous, &c. in this world, men of good judgement and experience, ſpeak very differently, differently deciding the matter according to their own experience, which according to variety of times and places (beſides other circumſtances) may vary very much. But in general, to make the obſervation as general as it can be made; it muſt in the firſt place be obſerved, that all ſuch, either ſpeeches, or promiſes, muſt alwayes be underſtood with an exception of times of general calamities, and inundations, as it were: for then (in point of ſuffering) all men, both juſt and unjuſt, even innocent children, as others, are (for the moſt part) equally involved. See before upon Pſal. 11. 3. If the foundations be deſtroyed. &c. Secondly, by his ſeed, may be underſtood they onely, that follow the ſteps of their fathers, in treading paths of holineſſe and piety. If they degenerate, that may alter the caſe. Thirdly, by צריק (tranſlated here, the juſt,) may properly be underſtood the merciful, and charitable; as the word is ſometimes taken: whence it is, that צרקה is ordinarily taken among the Jewes, for almes. Now, though he deſerve not the title of a righteous man in general, that is unmerciful; yet there be degrees of goodneſſe and mercy, in point of almes and relieving of the poor. And of a more peculiar promiſe made to the merciful, ſee Prov. 19. 17. & Pſal. 41. 1, &c. according to ſome tranſlations.

V. 26. ever] Heb. all the day.

his ſeed is bleſſed] Though the juſt man be liberal in his life, yet God bleſſeth his poſterity, that they want not. This David ſpeaks, of that which himſelfe had obſerved.

V. 34. keep his way] Pſal. 18. 21.

V. 35. a green bay-tree] In the margin, a green tree, that groweth in his own ſoil: which agreeth better with the propriety of the Hebrew word אזרח, indigena, properly. And it ſtands with reaſon, that a tree ſo growing, ſhould be more flouriſhing, and laſting, then thoſe that grow in a ground that is not natural to them. Some would have a bay-tree particularly meant; and ſome, a cedar.

V. 36. Yet he paſſed away, and lo he was not] The tranſitorineſs and vaniſhing condition of wicked proſpering men, as here by David, and elſewhere; ſo by Job (by them that ſpeak there in Job I mean) is largely preſſed and inſiſted upon, Job 20. and elſewhere. Now this tranſitorineſſe being, for the moſt part, as true of the proſperity of the juſt, as of the unjuſt, why here more particularly applied to theſe, ſee before upon the firſt and ſecond verſes. Here alſo, in further confirmation of the ſame, it may be obſerved, that the very word here uſed, to paſſe away, is the word both by St. Paul, and St. John, uſed to ſet out the vanity of all worldly pomp and glory, in general. A very proper word indeed it is to that purpoſe, as any that can be thought of. St. Pauls words, 1 Cor. 7. 31. are, For the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. Where the word σχῆμα, or faſhion, is to the ſame purpoſe, a very pregnant and emphatical word, as by Greek Interpreters is excellently well ſhewed. St. Johns words, are not leſſe emphatical, 1 Joh. 2. 15, 16, 17. Love not the world, &c, For all that is in the world, &c. And the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: it follows, But he that doth the will of God, abideth for ever. Where we have that antitheſis, which (upon the firſt and ſecond verſes) we have ſpoken of, of the different condition of the juſt from the unjuſt, in point of worldly proſperity, (which by David and other Writers of the Old Teſtament is ſometimes altogether omitted; ſometimes obſcurely pointed at, as by dwelling in the land for ever, verſe 29. of this Pſalm: or the like,) cleerly expreſſed. See alſo upon Pſal. 73. 20. When thou awakeſt, &c.

V. 37. Marke the perfect man] He exhorteth the faithful to mark diligently the examples of Gods mercies, and alſo of his judgments, and aſſures them they ſhall not loſe their labour.

V. 38. end of the wicked ſhall be cut off] The Hebrew word אחרית, ſignifies poſterity likewiſe; but that ſignification is not ſo proper here, becauſe it is more likely that as it is in the former verſe, ſo here alſo it muſt be taken. But there, (the end of that man is peace,) it would be very improper to take it ſo; no reaſon therefore that we ſhould ſeek a new interpretation here, which the ſenſe requireth not; and would make the coherence worſe. The ſame word אחרית, ſignifies alſo reward, as Prov. 23. 18. For ſurely there is an end, and thine expectation ſhall not be cut off. So there in the Text; but in the margin, reward: as by others alſo it is expounded. And ſo τέλος in the New Teſtament is taken ſometimes. This I note the rather, not that the difference it ſelfe, whether end, or reward, is much conſiderable; but the better to compare theſe words of David, with a parallel place of St. Pauls; taking the next verſe alſo, (part of it; But the ſalvation of the righteous is from the Lord;) as part: The words of St. Paul are theſe; For the wages of ſin, is death: (here, the end of the wicked ſhall be cut off:) But the gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. See alſo upon Pſal. 55. 23. bloody and deceitful men.

V. 39. But the ſalvation of the righteous is of the Lord] He ſheweth, that the patient hope of the godly is never in vain, but in the end, hath good ſucceſſe, though for a time God prove them with ſundry tentations.

PSAL. XXXVIII.

Title.

to bring to remembrance] Pſal. 70. 1. To put himſelfe and others in minde of Gods chaſtiſement on him for his ſin, that the fruit of it might continue by frequent remembrance. So ſome learned men here, who though they pleaſe themſelves in it, and would not by no meanes that להזכיר here ſhould be the beginning of ſome known Song, as elſewhere in divers other titles other words, according to common opinion, which themſelves are not againſt: Yet I know no ground they have for it, but their own conceit: to which if we may indulge here, why may not others upon other titles? which moſt of beſt Interpreters diſlike: as before hath been ſaid, more then once, upon divers titles. But they that ſend us to 1 Chron. 16. 4. Exod. 30. 10. as, beſides that accurat Engliſh Examiner of words, and Scripture phraſes; I finde learned Diod. doth, (but that his quotations are miſprinted in the late Folio edition, and would trouble a man that had no other help:) they may well be thought to ſpeak to the purpoſe, and upon good ground, as I conceive. For firſt in that firſt place, 1 Chron. 16. 4. And he appointed certain of the Levites to miniſter before the Arke of the Lord, and to record (ולהזכיר) and to thank, and to praiſe the Lord God of Iſrael: there we have the very word, that is here; engliſhed (and ſo it might have done here well: or this that is here, there: for the help and benefit of them, that cannot have recourſe to the Original Text:) to record. Whereby it doth appear that, as to thank and praiſe; ſo to record, was a particular Head, for which (as in all probability the words ſeem to import,) certain Songs, Pſalmes, Hymnes, or Prayers, were appointed. If any ſuch; why not thoſe, (but two in all, in the whole book; this, and pſal. 70. Make haſt O God, &c.) that bear that title? I do not ſay, thoſe onely; ſince we finde but two: but thoſe, certainly, that have that inſcription. But this granted, that this title hath reference to that place; yet it may further be doubted, what is the effect and purpoſe of the words, to record; or, to bring to remembrance. We are told it is a phraſe taken from ſacrifices, wherein there were certain offerings named of memorial. So indeed, Exod. 30. 10. Levit. 2. 2. and 9. and elſewhere. This is likely: But then here again we meet with new doubts, why thoſe offerings were called, a memorial. Some ſay, becauſe it called into Gods remembrance (ſpeaking this by allowance, according to men) his covenant, to accept the ſervice of faith, which his people offer to him by Chriſt. Much more is ſaid to the ſame purpoſe, grounded upon allegorical interpretations, of the oyle and frank-incenſe, mentioned Levit. 2. 2. But not much to be collected from thence, that can be very pertinent here. The words of the Angel to Cornelius, Acts 10. 4. may be as much, or more perchance, to our purpoſe: Thy prayers and thine almes are come up for a memorial before God. There alſo interpreters agree, that alluſion is made to thoſe offerings: To ſay, that this is the title of a pſalme compoſed by David to put God in minde, that he may help him, &c. as ſome do hence: I conceive this to be too general. There is no queſtion but there is ſomewhat in it more then ſo. It is an expreſſion of ſome great confidence, certainly; or of ſome preſſing motive, in great extremity; but upon what eſpecially grounded, is not eaſie to determine. By comparing divers Scripture places and phraſes, eſpecially pſal. 20. 3. Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt ſacrifice: (יזכר there too, from the ſame זכר to remember:) I think it very probable, that David by this word and title, in this his extremity (which is conceived to have been ſome great ſickneſſe,) doth put God in minde of his conſtant zeale to his ſervice, and more particularly of ſome things done by him in relation to it, which he was confident God had taken ſpecial notice of. Somewhat to this purpoſe we have in Hezekiah his prayer (and that too, upon occaſion of ſickneſſe, and danger of immenent death) Remember now, O Lord, I beſeech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a prefect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight, Eſay 38. 3. Lord remember David, and all his afflictions: How he ſware unto the Lord, &c. Pſal. 132. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. that too, very pertinent, as I conceive, to this purpoſe. See more there.

Verſ. 1. R*Ebuke me not in thy wrath*] He deſireth not to be exempted from Gods rod, but that he would ſo moderate his hand, that he might be able to bear it, Pſal. 6. 1. Jer 10. 24. Of Gods wrath, how to be underſtood, ſee upon Pſal. 90. 11. Even according to thy feare, ſo is thy wrath.

V. 2. thine arrowes ſtick faſt in me] The diſeaſes thou haſt inflicted upon me, Job 6. 4.

V. 3. reſt] Heb. peace or, health.

becauſe of my ſin] Here David goes the right way to obtain his deſire, and to make his prayers availeable, when he reflects upon himſelfe, aſcribing the cauſe of his miſery, to his ſins. Job 33. 23. If there be a meſſenger with him, &c. and verſe 27. if any ſay, I have ſinned, &c. We may be ſure, that God afflicts no man, but for ſin; though there may be other concurrent cauſes for particular afflictions, as Gods Glory, or the like; and ſometimes, ſome bleſſing intended to the patient himſelfe, as the conſequent (as it doth fall out ſometimes: Periſſem, niſi periiſſem, &c.) of that affliction; or the avoiding of ſome greater evil. When therefore our Saviour ſaith of the blind man, ſo borne; that neither for his, nor his parents ſins (John 9. 3.) that had hapned unto him: it muſt be underſtood comparatively, not unto him, rather, to others, becauſe of his, (he could not be guilty of any, but original ſin; common unto all:) or his parents ſins greater then others: but that God, &c. as elſewhere in the caſe of them upon whom the Tower in Siloe fell, &c. our Saviour doth expound himſelfe, Luke 13. 1, 2, &c.

V. 4. mine iniquities are gone over mine head] They flow over my head like waters ready to drown me, Pſal. 42. 7.

V. 5. becauſe of my fooliſhneſſe] It is ordinary to the Scripture, to comprehend any ſin under the name of folly. See upon Pal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c. More particularly, ſuch as bring diſeaſes upon themſelves through their exceſſes and tranſgreſſions, may be called fooles; (Fooles becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquity, are afflicted. Their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat, &c. Pſal. 107. 17, 18.) becauſe diſeaſes are properly the rod of the Lord, and, the rod for the fooles back, ſeemes to have been a proverb among the Jewes, Prov. 26. 3. & 10. 13.

V. 6. troubled] Heb. wryed.

go mourning all the day long] Job 30. 28. Pſal. 35. 14. and 42. 9.

V. 7. For my loynes are filled with a loathſome diſeaſe] The Original word נקלה might as well (as by divers other Interpreters,) have been tranſlated, with ſcorching, or vehement heat, (ardore:) thoſe parts being ſubject to divers inflammations, and ſharpe paines, as Nephritis, and the like: and ſo the impertinency of ſome Expoſitors (and more Readers, perchance) might have been prevented, which would have David here to complain of ſome diſeaſe, (quod verecundè non poſſit nominari:) which cannot modeſtly be named: more immodeſt they that can entertaine any ſuch ſuſpicion, upon ſo light a cauſe. Whether any outward corporal diſeaſe, (whatever it was,) was the occaſion of this Pſalme, as moſt ſuſpect, and divers words in this, and other verſes of it ſeem to import; I will not take upon me abſolutely to determine. I am the more inclineable to believe it, becauſe of the Title. See there. However, it muſt be confeſſed, that there be no words in the whole Pſalme, but may admit of a metaphorical interpretation, warrantable by other places of Scripture, where the miſerable condition of a ſinner is ſet out by corporal diſeaſes: as particularly, Eſay 1. 5, 6. The whole head is ſick: and the whole heart faint. From the ſole of the foot, ---but wounds and bruiſes, and putrifying ſores, &c. But whatever we judge of the reſt, ſome whereof (as before is ſaid) ſeeme very literally to import a corporal diſeaſe: this particular verſe may very well admit a metaphorical ſenſe: and to that purpoſe the Greek tranſlation (αἱ ψόαι μου ἐπλήσθησαν ἐμπαιγμάτων) my loynes are filled with illuſions, or contempt: ſince that too, the Original will bear, would not perchance be much amiſſe. A very like metaphorical expreſſion to this (if we like to make a metaphor of it) we have Lament. 3. 13, 14. He hath cauſed the arrowes of his quiver to enter into my reines. I was a deriſion to all my people, &c.

V. 8. I have roared by reaſon of the diſquietneſſe of my heart] This example warneth us never to deſpair, be the torment never ſo great, but alwayes to cry unto God with ſure truſt, for deliverance, Pſal. 32. 3.

V. 9. Lord all my deſire is before thee. and my groaning is not hid from thee] A great argument of a well-grounded faith, and a ſpecial comfort in affliction, to be confident, whileſt we groan uuder miſery, and have done ſo a long time; yet ſtill to be confident, that God doth behold and ſee: takes notice of our ſufferings, our patience, our teares, our ſighs: in a word, is preſent with us, as a witneſſe, and ſpectator; when as a helper, and deliverer, he ſeemeth furtheſt off. It doth adde much courage and valour to a Souldier, that is not a very raskal; even to put him upon extraordinary enterpriſes, and to endure more then can reaſonably be expected; if his General or Captain be preſent, and takes notice of what he doth. Now from this, and other like places (ſee alſo upon Pſal. 33. 13. The Lord looketh) we may conclude, when David, as frequently, doth expoſtulate with God, why he is abſent; ſtandeth farre; hideth himſelfe, and the like; how he is to be underſtood: There is no queſtion, but he believed, when he ſo ſpake; as he did here: but here ſpeaketh ſimply and poſitively, as he believed; there, by a double figure, (ἀνθρωποπάθεια, and a metalepſis:) as common uſe, and language ſuggeſted. It is not poſſible that men (eſpecially, in any paſſion, or affliction) ſhould ſpeak unto God, or of God, but in the language of men: and God doth allow of it: for Himſelfe (by a divine condeſcenſion) uſeth ſo to ſpeak unto men: yet ſuch expreſſions have been the occaſion of many groſſe miſtakes.

V. 10. My heart panteth] Heb. runneth about, or, is toſſed to and fro: meaning, that he was deſtitute of all help and counſel.

it alſo is gone from me] In the Hebrew it is הם, not הוא: they alſo are not with me; or, are gone from me: as the words are tranſlated by others; meaning his eyes; which, he ſaith, were not with him, becauſe he had loſt the uſe of them. The ſenſe is the ſame.

is gone from me] Heb. is not with me.

V. 11. ſore.] Heb. ſtroke.

my kinſmen] Or, my neighbours.

my kinſmen ſtand afar off] Partly for fear, and partly for pride, they denyed all duty and friendſhip, pſal. 31. 11.

V. 12. lay ſnares for me] To trouble me further, who was ſick already.

V. 13. But I, as a deaf man, heard not] For I can have no audience before men; and therefore patiently wait for the help of God, pſal. 39. 9. 2 Sam. 16. 9, 10.

V. 15. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope] He ſheweth a reaſon of his ſilence, becauſe he expected help from God.

in thee, O Lord, do I hope] Or, thee do I wait for.

here] Or, anſwer.

V. 16. For I ſaid, Hear me, leſt otherwiſe they ſhould rejoyce over me] David uſeth here a very preſſing motive, as may be gathered from Proverbs 24. 17, 18. of which, ſee before upon pſal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c. Much like to this, is that expreſſion, in Gods own perſon, Deut. 32. 27. Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, leſt their adverſaries ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangly; that is, ſhould be inſolent, ſhould inſult, and magnifie themſelves; as the Chaldee there, and pſal. 40. 8. or unmercifully rejoyce without any ſenſe of humanity, forgetting what relation all men have to one another by nature.

when my foot ſlippeth, they magnifie themſelves againſt me] That is, if they ſee that thou ſuccour me not in time, they will mock and triumph, as though thou hadſt forſaken me.

V. 17. For I am ready to halt] I am without hope to recover my ſtrength. See pſal. 35. 15. and Jerem. 20. 10. All my familiars, &c.

to halt] Heb. for halting.

V. 18. For I will declare mine iniquity] Prov. 28. 13. He that covereth his ſins ſhall not proſper; but whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy. But ſome Interpreters would not have iniquity, and ſin, taken here properly, as pſal. 32. 5. I acknowledged, &c. but, as often elſewhere, for the puniſhment of ſin and iniquity: as intending to ſay, that whileſt he freely bemoaned himſelfe, and ſadly deplored his lamentable condition, ſhewing himſelfe thereby throughly ſenſible of Gods heavy wrath & indignation againſt him; (a thing which all men upon ſuch occaſions are not alwayes very prone to do; ſome rather, through height of ſpirit, affecting to conceal part of their ſufferings, as wel as they can; then to abaſe themſelves, as they interpret it, to ſuch low complaints, and acknowledgements:) his enemies, &c. This ſenſe may be allowed of, I grant: yet I rather prefer the former, as more literal, and not leſſe proper to the coherence. But whereas it is here rendred in the future; I would have it (with moſt Interpreters) in the preſent, or preterit: I declare; and, I am ſorry: (or, I have declared, &c.) the words ſo taken affording a doctrine very conſiderable and uſeful: to wit, that a man, a godly man, ſuch a one as David was, may confeſſe, and be ſorry for his ſins, and do whatſoever elſe doth belong to true repentance, and yet for all that finde no eaſe or amendment; (as to the particular grief:) either not at all, whileſt he liveth; which probably, might be St. Pauls own caſe, 2 Cor. 12. 8, 9. For this thing I ſought the Lord thrice, &c. but is certainly, and hath been at all times, the caſe of many truly godly and religious: or not preſently; ſome being put off longer, for months, or years perchance; ſome, not ſo long, yet not ſo ſoon delivered, as from the ſincerity of their repentance and converſion unto God, (if not well prepared and practiced in this point:) they might expect, and promiſe themſelves: which ſeemeth to have been Davids caſe here. He had found it otherwiſe, at other times: as when he ſaid, I acknowledged my ſin, &c. pſal. 32. 5. but now the caſe was altered. And yet, all for the beſt, doubtleſſe: as David himſelf might finde and acknowledge afterwards. Where therefore God ſaith, Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, &c. pſal. 50. 15. it muſt be underſtood with due limitation, except God have a further ſpecial end in our ſufferings, rings beſides our chaſtiſement: which nevertheleſſe is not without a reſpect to ſome particular good to accrue to our ſelves thereby; for which it is our duty, as ſubmiſſive children, to truſt God as a Father, though we diſcern not, at preſent, wherein, or how.

V. 19. But mine enemies are lively] In my greateſt weakneſs they were ſtrongeſt.

are lively] Heb. being living, are ſtrong.

they that hate me wrongfully are multiplyed] Pſal. 64. 4.

V. 20. render evill for good] Pſal.35. 12. & 109. 5.

becauſe I follow the thing that good is] 1 Joh.3.12. He had rather have the hatred of all the world for his piety, then fail in any part of his duty to God-ward. And again, becauſe I follow the thing that good is: not to commend, but to comfort himſelf, in his ſufferings, becauſe he ſuffered for a good cauſe, and for God. For it otherwiſe, he had had no reaſon to complain. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye take it patiently? But if when ye do well, &c. 1 Pet. 2. 20.

V. 22. to help] Heb. for my help.

O Lord my ſalvation] Which uſeſt to deliver me, and I look to be delivered by thee now.

PSAL. XXXIX.

Title.

Jeduthun] 1 Chr. 25. 1.

Verſe 1. I Said I will take heed to my wayes] This Pſalme, if in things equally ſacred and divine, compariſon may be made without offence, well deſerveth to have place among the chiefeſt and choiceſt of the whole book, as containing inſtruction of ſpeciall uſe, and comprehending in few words, but very pithily and loftily too, the chiefeſt motives unto godlineſſe, and that which being well pondered, and underſtood, may ſuffice unto any man, without any further perſwaſion, or exhortation; to bring him to Heaven. It is therefore very ſtrange to me, that ſome Expoſitors (of beſt account) ſhould ſo miſtake the drift of the Pſalmiſt, as if his intention had been to make confeſſion unto God of his ſin, a ſin of impatience, and ovet-bold expoſtulation with God; and that ſo punctually and particulaly, that his very words which he had uſed unadviſedly, might ſtand upon record to all ages. A thing not very probable, I think; eſpecially being many; except they had told us to what uſe, or end. But the ground of their miſtake, as doth appear, is this: David, as he profeſſeth at the beginning of the Pſalme, had propoſed to himſelf to take heed, that he might not offend with his tongue. But not being able to hold, burſt out at laſt, & ſpake, as himſelf relateth. Upon which they infer, that what himſelf makes himſelf to have ſpoken, muſt needs be ſuch, as ſhould not have been ſpoken: and thereupon they ſeek out interpretations, of his words, to fit their purpoſe, which have no ground at all of any truth, or probability; as may eaſily appear by comparing them (an eaſie taske) with other like places of Scripture. A very great miſtake, as I hope we ſhall make clear; whether more reproachfull to David himſelf, or prejudiciall to the Reader, who by their falſe gloſſes is bereaved of the fruit of his doctrine; I know not: What the aime of the Pſalmiſt was in this Pſalm, will more certainly appear, if we compare it with Pſalme 49. Hear this all ye people. That too, a moſt heavenly Pſalm, and of ſpeciall uſe: as of one ſubject, ſo of one method, both. Firſt they begin with a pretty large Preface, to make the matter more ſolemn aud conſiderable: as the manner of all Orientall writers upon extraordinary ſubjects and occaſions, hath been, and is to this day. Then, they ſet out moſt emphatically and pithily, the vanity of all worldly things, the brevity of this our mortal life: ſo ſhort, ſo brittle, ſo ſoon forgotten, that no wiſe man, be he never ſo rich, or ſo great, can promiſe himſelf any ſolid happineſſe in this world. Upon this concluſion, that this preſent life is nothing but meer wretchedneſs and vanity; the uſe, or inference in both Pſalmes is the ſame, that they that would be happy, muſt look further then this world, and truſt to God for future good, which may have the truth and reality, of good, or happineſſe; all mens ayme, and deſire. But this is more fully expreſſed in the 49. Pſalm, But God will redeem my ſoul from the power of the grave, for he ſhall receive me: Selah: (ſee there the note) than it is here, (and yet here, plainly enough, according to the condition of thoſe times, and meaſure of light; whereof ſee upon Pſal.37.1. Fret not thy ſelf:) And now Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in thee: verſe 7. See there. See alſo upon the laſt words, before I go hence and be no more. When therfore the Pſalmiſt ſaith here in the Preface, that he purpoſed to take heed, that he might not ſin with his tongue, &c. It tends but to this, (in this place:) to make his Reader the more attentive, and to raiſe an expectation of what he was to ſay. For if he that had made a vow of ſilence, as it were, accounting it great wiſdom (as it hath always bin by wiſe men) that he could hold his peace, even when he might have ſpoken ſeaſonably perchance; yet even then exerciſed himſelf, as a man voyd of all ambition, and oſtentation of wit, ſelf-conceit, and the like; to hold his peace; in great humility ſuſpecting himſelf, leſt he might offend: if nevertheleſs after long ſilence, and command of himſelf, he was forced by a violent inward flame (that is, by divine inſtinct, and inſpiration:) to open his mouth, and publickly to vent his thoughts: ſurely we may well expect, that it is no ordinary petty thing, that he will ſpeak: but ſomewhat that may both argue his wiſdom, and be of ſome conſequence to the hearer. Much to this purpoſe, but much longer, is the Preface of Elihu, in Job, Chapter 32.6,7.&c. And Elihu the ſon of Barakel the Buzite anſwered and ſaid; I am young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, &c. and verſe 18.19. For I am full of matter, the ſpirit within me conſtraineth me: behold my belly is as wine, which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt, &c. After his Preface our Pſalmiſt his firſt words are: Lord make me to know mine end, and the meaſure of my dayes, what it is: that I may know how frail I am: verſe 4. Are theſe words of impatient murmuring againſt God, as ſome make them? Why more theſe, then ſo many in the Scripture, as plaine and peremptory to that end? But what then is the drift? what is it, that the Pſalmiſt doth aim at, by theſe words? If the context of the words do not; (which I think it doth:) ſufficiently import, we may learn from Moſes Song, Pſ.90. where Moſes having in very high terms inſiſted upon the vanity of man; he proceedeth in the 12. verſe, in theſe words: So teach us to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdome. And this is the way ſo much commended and inſiſted upon by ancient Philoſophers and Wiſe men, in their diſputations and commentations of mans ſummum bonum; or, true happineſſe, wherein it conſiſteth: ſhewing very well, and with much evidence of reaſon, as well as eloquence, that it cannot be, that it ſhould be found in the injoyment of worldly goods: but in this, groſly miſtaking, moſt of them; that inſtead of going to God for it, in his beatifical Viſion in another World: they place it in the ſoul of man, (terminativè:) and in the natural conſtitution of it; endowed with ſuch and ſuch qualities; making a very god of it: which to make good, ſo much hath been written by ſo many men of excellent parts, with ſo much eloquence, and ſubtilty, as indeed cannot be read without admiration of their parts; and yet to very little purpoſe, as to finding of any thing, that can really ſatisfie the ſoul of man, in the purſuite of ſolid happineſſe.

I will keep my mouth with a bridle] As a beaſt is muzzled. Corruption muſt be kept in by violence, Jam. 1. 26.

keep my mouth with a bridle] Heb. Keep the bridle to my mouth.

my mouth with a bridle] Heb. a bridle, or muzzle for my mouth.

V. 2. I was dumb with ſilence] Though he thought to have kept ſilence in the preſence of the wicked, yet his ſorrow cauſed him to change his minde.

I held my peace even from good] Some think he might mean, that in great humility he did forbear in his affliction, to ſpeak to his own juſtification, by telling ſome of his good deeds, or the like. But if it were humility in him, to forbear the mention of ſuch, in his ſufferings; it would relliſh of too much arrogancy, now to tell God, or men, of this his forbearing. Except this good, have reference to his enemies onely, againſt whom he might juſtifie himſelfe, as unjuſtly, and unthankfully too, perchance, perſecuted by them; though at the ſame time he might accuſe himſelf before God. But the moſt approved ſenſe is, that he did altogether forbear to ſpeak, if that which was good, much more that which was bad, and offenſive. Such an expreſſion we have (which will much cleer this) Gen. 31. 29. Take thou heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or evil. It is apparent enough from the context, that there was no intention to forbid Eſau to uſe his brother kindly, either by words or deeds; but onely, that he ſhould not meddle with him to hurt him. So Numb. 23. 25. And Balach ſaid unto Balaam, Neither curſe them at all, (which yet, as appears by the context, he did extremly deſire, and earneſtly endeavour) nor bleſſe them at all. The obſervation of ſuch idiotiſmes, or peculiar expreſſions, doth often bring great light to obſcure places, at which many are not a little puzzled.

and knoweth not who ſhall gather them] Whether his children or ſtrangers; and this troubles him, Eccl. 2. 18, 19.

V. 7. And now, Lord, what wait I for? my hope] A hope, of immortality, certainly: or full of immortality, as the Author of Wiſdome ſpeaketh, 3. 4. See upon Pſal. 73. 1, 2. See Eph. 2. 12. having no hope, of immortality; that is: as appears, 1 Theſ. 4. 13. that ye ſorrow not, even as others whch have no hope. See alſo ver. 12. for I am a ſtranger with thee, &c. compared with Heb. 11.13, 14, 15, 16. Theſe all died in faith, and confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that ſay ſuch things, &c. See alſo upon Prov. 10. 28, The hope of the righteous.

V. 8. make me not the reproach of the fooliſh] Of the wicked, in general, ſee upon Pſal. 31. 5. & 14. 1. but here (fooliſh) more particularly, ſuch, who by what happens unto men in this world, judge of mens merits, and Gods love, or anger, towards them. Of whom the Pſalmiſt elſewhere, A brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a foole underſtand this: When the wicked ſpring as the graſſe, &c.

V. 9. I was

V. 9. I was dumb] I do not conceive that theſe words have relation to thoſe in the Preface, I was dumb with ſilence, &c. for ſo, beſides other reaſons from the matter it ſelf, he ſhould contradict himſelf: for how dumb here again, after he had ſaid, that he did ſpeak, &c. I know it may be interpreted of a renewed reſolution of ſilence, and ſubmiſſion, upon better thoughts, &c. but I have ſaid enough already upon the firſt verſe, in oppoſition to the main ground of this interpretation. Theſe words therefore muſt be referred to thoſe in the ſeventh verſe. And now Lord what wait I for? my hope is in thee: as a conſequent of that hope. For what more available, to make a man to bear any worldly croſs or affliction patiently, then to have hope in God, after this life? For which cauſe we faint not; ſaith the Apoſtle: why? For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, &c. While we look not at the things which are ſeen, &c. 2 Cor. 4. 16, 17, 18. Should not we take all things patiently at his hands in this world (becauſe thou didſt it,] in this momentarie life; from whom we expect ſo much good, ſuch laſting joyes in another world?

was] Or, am.

opened] Or, open.

V. 10. blow] Heb. conflict.

V. 11. Thou makeſt] Though thy open plagues light not upon him, yet thy ſecret curſe continually fretteth them.

like a moth] Suddenly, os a moth is cruſhed, Job 4. 19. or, inſenſibly, as a moth devours a garment, Job 13. 28. Hoſ. 5. 12.

ſurely every man is vanity] Though in a natural courſe man diſcerns not himſelf to be vanity, yet when Gods anger lays hold on him, it appears what he is. He alludes to the names of Adam and Abel; as alſo, Pſal. 144. 4.

V. 12. for I am a ſtranger] Lev. 25. 23. 1 Chr. 29. 15. Pſal 119. 19. Heb. 11. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 11. I have but a while to ſtay, and flee to thy protection, therefore ſpare me, Pſal. 102. 23, 24. and 119. 84. See before on v. 7. And now Lord, &c.

as all my fathers were] Protect me, as thou haſt done my fathers, being ſtrangers as I am, Gen. 47. 9.

V. 13. before I go hence] He ſhews that he ſhould die quickly, unleſs God gave him eaſe.

and be no more] Some body may be ſcandalized at this expreſſion, as an intimation of utter aboliſhment. God forbid. The original word, very elegant, (ואינני that is, verbatim, & non ego.) might have born a more favourable tranſlation, and be no more ſeen, or found; to wit, among men. So of Enoch, Gen. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not: (Heb. ואיננו & non ille: οὐχ εὑρίσκετο: was not found: Heb. 11. 5.) for God took him. I hope it is cleer enough, that a man may be ſaid, not to be, or to be no more, according to this tranſlation, that yet hath a better being elſewhere. The ſame phraſe is uſed by Daniel, concerning the Meſſias: but we need no more proof.

Verſe 1. I Waited patiently] Heb. In waiting I waited. Though God deferred his help, yet he patiently abode, till he was heard, Pſal 37, 7. See alſo upon Pſal. 70. 1. make haſte to help.

V. 2. out of an horrible pit] He hath delivered me from moſt great dangers. The word ſignifies, a dungeon, which eccho's and reſounds with dreadful noiſes.

and horrible pit] Heb. a pit of noiſe.

miry clay] Pſal. 69. 2. Jer. 38. 6. Zech. 9. 11.

V. 3. a new ſong] That is, a ſpecial occaſion to praiſe him: for Gods benefits are ſo many occaſions for us to praiſe his Name.

V. 4. and reſpecteth not the proud] To follow their example; which he muſt needs do, that truſteth not onely in the LORD.

V. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wounderful works] The coherence of theſe words, with the following verſes, is generally conceived to be this; Firſt David inſiſteth upon ſome particular mercy and deliverance, (the ſubject and occaſion this Pſalm) of which being very ſenſible, he proceedeth to a more general conſideration of Gods infinite goodneſs and mercy towards mankind with great admiration, which he doth here ſet out by way of exclamation, and being deſirous to approve to God his thankful heart to the utmoſt of his power, he falls into a conſideration of that worſhip and ſervice, which he conceives would be to God moſt acceptable: not oblations and ſacrifices, which moſt Jews of thoſe times, as well hypocrites, as others, upon ſuch extraordinary occaſions, were ready enough to offer; but ſincere and abſolute obedience, &c. This as I do not reject, but rather commend to others as probable and warrantable enough: So I conceive another reaſon may be given of the coherence, though not ſo obvious, yet perchance not leſs pertinent: which is thus; David being to ſay, (as he doth in the following verſes) there was a way to ſerve God without the oblations and ſacrifices appointed by the Law, by yielding (ſo far as corrupt nature is capable) perfect obedience to the moral Law; that is, in effect, by holineſs of life and converſation; upon which followes, that in all Nations they that feared God, and did that which is right and juſt before God, to the utmoſt of their power (or, as S. Peter that work righteouſneſs) are accepted with him, Act. 10. 35. a ſecret of Gods diſpenſation not ſo fully revealed in thoſe days; nor among ordinary Jews very readily entertained, when it was afterwards more fully divulged by the Goſpel; David, therefore as a Prophet, partly; and partly as one, who for his extraordinary piety, and degree of favour, and acceptation with God, was made privy to the counſel and waies of God far above other men; before he deliver this doctrine, with admiration he begins with a contemplation of Gods wiſdom and goodneſs in ordering the means of mens ſalvation: like as in the 50 Pſalm alſo, being to treat of the ſame matter, he begins with a veey ſolemn preface, ſutable to the nature of the thing. See the application of theſe words of David, made by the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. &c. Yet for the words that are here uſed, thoſe Pſal. 139, 17, 18. how precious, alſo, are thy thoughts unto me, O God, &c. though ſpoken upon another occaſion (but that too, Gods power and providence towards men, but in another kind) come neereſt nnto them.

they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee] Or, none can order them unto thee.

V. 6. mine ears haſt thou opened] It paſſeth for currant among all Expoſitors of our times, both of this and the former age, that David by theſe words, doth allude to the law concerning ſervants Exod. 21. 6. and his maſter ſhall bore his ear through with an awl, and he ſhall ſerve him for ever. One onely (but of the moſt conſiderable) I find, who calls it coactam argutiam. True it is, that the law ſpeaketh but of one ear to be bored; and here we have the plural, ears. Whence we may well infer, to which the very context doth alſo lead, that David had a further aim and meaning, of Gods fitting him for hearing, (ſince by hearing, eſpecially comes believing, &c. Rom. 10. 14, 17.) by opening, not one of the two, but both his ears: to which purpoſe is that in Job alſo, Then he openeth, (or revealeth, or uncovereth) the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction, Job 33. 16. yet ſince obedience and conformity to the will of God (I delight to thy will, O my God, &c.) is not alſo, only; but immediately ſpoken of and mentioned; it doth not follow but that he might, and is very probable that he did allude to that Law and Cuſtome alſo. Beſides that rite of boring there expreſſed, I would have thoſe words alſo conſidered. And if that ſervant ſhall plainly ſay. I love my maſter, &c. to which the word delight here might have ſome reference. And as for that obſervation of ear in the ſingular, in the Law; and of ears, plural, or dual rather here; we might perchance retort upon the author of it his own words of coacta argutia, ſince that we had before out of Job in the dual, is afterwards repeated in the ſingular, chap. 36. 10. He openeth alſo their ear to diſcipline; and ver. 15. of the ſame chapter, He delivereth the poor in his affliction, and openeth their ear (Heb. אזנם as in the tenth verſe; though here tranſlated, or at leaſt printed, ears) in oppreſſion. Theſe words of the Pſalmiſt are cited by the Apoſtle in his Epiſtle to the Heb. 10. 5. but there tranſlated, a body thou haſt prepared (or, fitted) me. Whence and how came this difference, is a great queſtion. Some of great account have thought it probable, that this alteration was made by the Greek Tranſlators (whoſe Tranſlation, becauſe commonly then received, is often followed by the Apoſtles, and Evangeliſts, though varying from the Hebrew) of purpoſe, that the Gentiles, at whoſe requeſt it was firſt undertaken, unacquainted with this cuſtome of boring the ear of ſervants, might not be offended. And becauſe it was the faſhion of the ſaid Gentiles, to print ſome marks upon the bodies of their ſlaves; they think the word of body was put inſtead of ear, to fit the expreſſion better to their cuſtom. But if offence were the thing that was feared, I do not ſee that this alteration could much help the matter, but rather make it worſe; ſince that I do not read that ſuch prints were wont to be made, but upon the bodies of rogues and fugitives, by way of ignominy and puniſhment; and not as fitting, or preparing the body for ſervice. But we need not trouble our ſelves much abont this alteration. For firſt (as the moſt learned of late have well obſerved) it came not from the Septuagint, it being a thing certain by the teſtimony of ſome antients, and the vulgar Latine, (expreſſed out of the Greek, as all know) to this day, that ancient Greek Copies of the Pſalms had it ὦτια, ears, (as in the Hebrew) and not σῶμα, a body. And there be that ſay as much (ſome that have written upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes) of that paſſage of the Apoſtles, that in ſome antient Copies it is found to this day ὦτια, and not σῶμα. But however, it is moſt probable to me, as to others of late, that this alteration was made by the Apoſtle himſelf; neither is it any alteration of ſenſe, but onely the expreſſion made a little more general, and eaſier to be apprehended by them that ſhould not be acquainted with that particular of the Law, of boring the ear of Servants. The Hebrewes, of one that was called (or at leaſt, thought ſo) by God to ſome extraordinary duty, or action, were wont to ſay, (as before hath been ſaid) that he was, ſo and ſo, (as ſeparated, in Saint Paul, of himſelf) from the womb. See before upon Pſalm 22. 9. that took me out of the womb. It may be this alteration might have ſome reference to that ordinary ſpeech. But it may be more conſiderable to us, aud of more neceſſity for the right underſtanding of this Pſalme, to conſider of the words the Apoſtle uſeth, in citing this paſſage; Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he ſaith; Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body, &c. When he cometh into the world, that is, when David repreſents (by the figure called Proſopopeia) the Son of God, as now come into the world; and ſo the Apoſtle expreſſes himſelf elſewhere, where to the ſame purpoſe he ſaith; And again, when he bringeth in the firſt born into the world, he ſaith; &c. Heb. 1. 6. So that the Apoſtle takes theſe words, and thoſe that follow, as many as are cited by him, to be ſpoken, and intended by David, not of himſelf, but of Chriſt. So ſome argue from thoſe words of the Apoſtles. Of Chriſt indeed, eſpecially; ſo much we would willingly grant: but that David himſelf ſhould altogether be excluded, will not follow, by any neceſſary conſequence from thoſe words of the Apoſtles. But they preſs us further, That the words themſelves will not bear it, becauſe David could not ſay (they think) as of himſelf, and in his own perſon, Burnt-offering and ſin-offering haſt thou not required. For, ſay they, God had commanded them, and David, living under the Law, was obliged as much as any. But if this be all, the matter may be anſwered; and is indeed, by Mollerus upon this place, and others; though it ſeems their anſwers were not thought ſatisfactory. But what then (for it would be too long, to enter upon the queſtion of legal ſacrifices, and their end, and to anſwer all objections) will they make of Jer. 7. 22? For I ſpake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or ſacrifices: But this thing commanded I them, ſaying, Obey my voice, &c. and of Hoſea, For I deſired mercy, and not ſacrifice, Hoſ. 6. 6. But we need go no further for an anſwer, then this very place of Hoſea. For it follows: and the knowledge of God, more than burnt-offerings: ſo that in one, and the ſame verſe, what in the firſt member is expreſſed by an abſolute negative, is in the ſecond, comparatively only rejected, to let us know how to interpret and underſtand the former alſo. And not only there it is ſo, but alſo Pro. 21. 3. To do juſtice and judgement, is more acceptable to the Lord than ſacrifice. And ſo (to inſtance in another example of the ſame nature) Luke 14. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren and ſiſters, yea and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple. It might well ſeem ſtrange, that he that elſewhere ſo ſtrictly injoineth to love our enemies, ſhould now bind us to hate them, whom nature it ſelf teacheth not Chriſtians onely, but even godleſs heathens, to love and to reverence. But Mat. 10. 37. clears the buſineſs where that expreſſion is: He that loveth father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me; and he that loveth ſon or daughter more then me, is not worthy of me. So here then; thou didſt not deſire; thou haſt not required; that is, comparatively: true obedience and ſpiritual worſhip, is that only worſhip which God for it ſelf, and abſolutely, requires or regards: Not any oblations, or ſacrifices, nor any thing at all, meerly external, in compariſon of that. The objection therefore is not unanſwerable but that David alſo (well underſtood) might ſpeak the words. It would trouble a man more to apply this Pſalm, (if wholly intended of him, as ſome have thought) unto Chriſt, by reaſon of theſe words in v. 12. For innumerable evils have compaſſed me about, mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, &c. But that alſo may receive a commodious interpretation, ſince עונותי may be tranſlated, pœna mea, or ærumna; as well as iniquitates; (as learned men, upon that of the Hebrews, have obſerved) and that there is no neceſſity at all if one part of a Pſalm be intended of Chriſt, that all the reſt, or the whole Pſalm ſhould. See more upon Pſalm 69, 5. O God thou knoweſt, &c.

V. 7. Then ſaid I, Lo I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me.] There is not ſo much queſtion of the meaning of the former verſe, as there is of this; and not without reaſon; the words of this being of themſelves, much obſcurer. It would be a long work to gather all that hath been ſaid; which nevertheleſs, upon ſuch an extraordinary occaſion, we ſhould the more willingly do, were it not that at the laſt, as we verily believe, the right meaning hath been found; which to make plain here, and confirm, we conceive will be more to purpoſe, then to confute what hath been ſaid by others. Yet of that too, ſomewhat; that the Reader may the better be ſatisfied. This, well tranſlated here, (and ſo by all others, upon this place) in the volume of the book; is by the LXX. rendred, ἐν κεφαλίδι βιβλίου: (by the vulgar Latine, in capite Libri:) which tranſlation being retained by the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 7. it hath much obſcured the place, putting men to a ſearch, what particular place or chap. in the beginning of the Bible, was intended, where Chriſt was mentioned to this purpoſe, here inſiſted upon by the Pſalmiſt. Divers have been thought of, but not any found, generally ſatisfactory. But tranſlating the Hebrew words במגלת ספר, in the volume of the book (which is their proper ſignification) and taking this volume of the book, (ſo called from the old faſhion of foulding books into ſcrols or rols, both among Jews and other nations) κατ᾽ ἐξοχὴν, for the Bible, or Old Teſtament at large, (ſo much of it, as was then extant) there ſhall we find indeed, in many places, ſerious exhortations and injunctions to all men in general, pretending to piety and religion, for conforming to the Will of God, and keeping of his commandments: but for any that concern either Chriſt, or David particularly, to which thoſe words may probably relate, we are yet to ſeek. It is true that Chriſt indeed is the chief object both of the Law and the Prophets; and that his paſſion in this book of Pſalms, and in the Prophets, is ſpoken of, to which this obedience may be referred. But of his obedience or ſufferings, I know nothing in the Law, but typically; and what is in the reſt, to this purpoſe, is of a later date. And then for David, what ſhall be ſaid of him? Somewhat is ſaid, I know, to this purpoſe; That although the precepts of the Law be general, yet every godly man hath a particular intereſt in them, and may appropriate them to himſelf: which in ſome ſenſe I know may be ſaid; but how to be applied to theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, ſo expreſs and ſo emphatical in the deſignation of a particular perſon, (in the volume of the book it is written of me, &c.) I do not ſee. The firſt therefore, that began to ſee the right, (if we fail not in our judgement our ſelves) are thoſe, who by this volume of the book, underſtand a ſcroll or catalogue, wherein ſouldiers names were regiſtred: Porro libri nomine Legem intelligi, &c. [That by the volume of the book, the Law of God, which preſcribes to all men how to live godlily, (or, which is the rule of godlineſs unto all men,) ſhould be underſtood, I do not think abſurd. But nevertheleſs I take this to be the more genuine expoſition, that David ſhould profeſs himſelf in eorum catalogo cenſeri, to be of their number, enrolled by name, who yield obedience unto God:] So judicious Calvin upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. Now this once granted, that by מגלת ספר there is no neceſſity the Scripture ſhould be underſtood, the words of themſelves being general, which may as well be tranſlated, in a volume of a book, as, in the volume of the book: and that by ספר any writings, evidences, bills, Court-rolls, &c. may be underſtood, as Deut. 24. 1, and in divers other places; as no man makes any queſtion, then I ſee nothing why this ſhould not be thought the moſt literal and convenient interpretation, that David ſhould make here a ſolemn proteſtation of his purpoſed abſolute obedience unto God, as one that were legally bound and obliged, by a written and regiſtred covenant, or engagement. In inſtrumento (inquit) inter nos facto ſcriptum eſt, me facturum quicquid vis. Sic gladiatores auctorationem faciebant uri, ſcindi, ferro necari. More to that purpoſe, in confirmation of this interpretation, you may finde in learned Grotius his Annotations both upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and upon the Pſalms. Neither is it unuſual to the Scripture, by mention of a book, to intimate the certainty and irrevocableneſs of things; as alſo to deliver things with more ſolemnity. Beſides Gods Book, Exod. 32. 32, 33. called the book of the living, Pſal. 69. 28. and the like: ſee Job 19. 23, &c. Pſal. 139. 16. Neither will this interpretation of the words make the Apoſtles citation of them, or application leſs pertinent; if David (as his type) be underſtood to ſpeak in Chriſts perſon. So the words may be aſcribed to Chriſt, as well as to David; which is all can be made of that quotation, and is ordinary.

So S. Paul in his farewel ſpeech to thoſe of Epheſus: For I have not ſhunned to declare unto you all the counſel of God, Act. 20. 27. The expreſſion may ſeem contrary, though there be no contrariety of ſenſe, to Pſal. 119. 11. Thy word have I hid in mine heart; to what purpoſe, appears by the words following, that I might not ſin againſt thee. As publick men, in relation to other mens ſalvation, we muſt not hide the word: as private men, in relation to our own, we muſt. Or to ſpeak yet more diſtinctly and properly; In the firſt expreſſion, to hide, is to conceal; that muſt not be: it is a fault in any man. In the ſecond, to hide, is to cheriſh; often to think of, and ruminate upon: that which Latine Philoſophers ſay, in interiorem animi partem, or, ima præcordia admittere: which muſt be done by all men, who make any uſe of the word of God, to their own ſalvation. Both expreſſions, proper in their kinde we ſee: ſo that ſometimes there may be both in the words and actions of men, an appearance of contrariety, where both the ſenſe and purpoſe is the ſame.

PSAL. XLI.

Verſ. 1. B*Leſſed is he that conſidereth the poor*] This Tranſlation is defective משכיל is not ſimply, that conſidereth; but that wiſely conſidereth: qui prudenter judicat: as Mollerus, Calvin, and others, here: and this very Tranſlation, Pſal. 64. 9. And all men ſhall fear, and ſhall declare the works of God; for they ſhall wiſely conſider (השכילו prudenter conſiderabunt, vel, expendent: as ſome there] of his doing. Neither is it, that conſidereth the poor; but, אל־דל ſuper egeno: concerning the poor; that is, (according to beſt Expoſitors) that judgeth not raſhly of his caſe, that he is poor and afflicted, becauſe wicked and hated of God. This (the ſufferings and calamities of good and godly men in this world) is a myſtery of Gods providence, which they that do not underſtand, are much ſcandalized at, and either conclude that there is no God, or they not godly, that are afflicted. But wiſe men make very good uſe of it. For knowing even by ſenſe, (by the ſight of his works) that there is a God; and if a God, in common ſenſe and reaſon, that he muſt be a juſt and a good God: (all which even by ordinary heathens and Philoſophers hath been acknowledged) hence their faith of a future Judgement, and another world after this, is further confirmed, becauſe they ſee not, that in this world, either bad or good fare according to their deſerts, and according to the dictates of ordinary juſtice and providence. the poor] Or, the weak, or ſick.

the Lord will deliver him] Not him, that conſidereth (though of him too, it is true enough, That he that judgeth of others in their miſeries charitably, may expect charitable judgement both at the hands of God and men, Mat. 7, 1.) but him, that is, the poor, and afflicted. So beſt Interpreters. So that Davids aim in theſe words is to comfort the afflicted (whether himſelf, or any other) and to profeſſe his faith and confidence in that particular, of Gods merciful dealing towards them that ſuffer, in crowning their ſufferings with a joyful and glorious iſſue. And beſides, it is a good motive to others, to induce them to judge charitably, that God, in due time, will raiſe and reſtore them, whom for a while he hath caſt down. Which nevertheleſs is to be underſtood of Gods ordinary providence, and manner of dealing (in thoſe times eſpecially) for the moſt part: not to extend to extraordinary caſes and examples, when God for hidden reaſons, prolongs the afflictions of the afflicted, even to the laſt; providing them a proportionable reward after this life. In this caſe, Gods deliverance muſt be underſtood of that, more then ordinary, patience, (of all worldly bleſſings, in the judgement of many antient Philoſophers, the beſt and choiceſt) and thoſe ſpiritual comforts, which God doth vouchſafe to them that are ſo tryed and put to it, to be examples of patience unto others. V. 10. That I may requite them] This open profeſſion of David, of his intended revenge, hath troubled Interpreters, both Jews and Chriſtians. Jewiſh interpreters; though for the moſt part they allow of revenge, nay think it a vertue; yet they are troubled how to reconcile theſe words with thoſe Pſal. 7. 4. If I have rewarded evil, &c. They have deviſed many waies of reconciliation, avoiding the literal ſenſe; nay gathering a quite contrary, that I may requite them: that is, ſay they: that I may render unto them good for evil: which indeed may be deemed a good and godly mans way of revenge: commended unto us, nay commanded by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; and even by ſome antient heathens much approved. I find, that ſome very learned Chriſtian Expoſitors profeſs themſelves very willing to embrace this ſenſe: yet ſo, as a man may ſee by their very words, that it is rather their good will, than their judgement: or if it be, then (to ſay nothing of their willingneſs, againſt their own light, if it ſhould be ſo: which of the two may be the worſt, and more derogatory to the Scriptures) I muſt profeſs againſt it. The tenour of the words is againſt it, beſides what may be objected from other like places in the Pſalmes; and the conſent of all other Interpeters. Neither is it a hard thing to reconcile David to himſelf. For he might be the ſame man, and yet not alwaies deal, at all times, and with all ſorts of enemies, and upon all kinds of offences and provocations, in the ſame kind. The obſervation of circumſtances is a main point of juſtice, neither is our juſtice only to be guided by it, but our mercy alſo: elſe, mercy may prove rigor ſometimes, as well as rigor (a thing obſerved, and amply declared by antient philoſophers) mercy. But what if David were not the ſame man neither, in point of execution; and yet ſtill the ſame in his own mind, and merciful inclination? that is; a private man before, wholly to be guided, as rigor, or mercie ſhould prevail, by private intereſts, and conſiderations: and now, a publick man, a magiſtrate, a King, a miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil: Rom. 13. 4. So that neither Jews nor Chriſtians, need to take offence at theſe words, if we ſay that David ſpeaketh here as a King not as a private man. But it is added, that he ſpeaketh alſo as a Prophet, by a particular warrant from God himſelf. But after all this, it muſt be added, that though private revenge was even by the Old Law declared againſt, (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 26. 6. So I will compaſs, &c. and Pſal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c. to which may be added, Deut. 32. 35. To me belongeth vengeance, &c. as expounded and applyed by St. Paul, Rom. 12. 19. and Heb. 10. 30.) and forbidden: Yet not ſo clearly and generally forbidden, as to us Chriſtians, by Chriſt our Lawgiver. As we have no reaſon therefore to expect ſuch preciſeneſs of words in this caſe, from them that lived under the Law; ſo neither can we draw any conſequents from their examples, if ſuch offer themſelves unto us, that can juſtifie us, or excuſe us, againſt the cleer dictates and deciſions of the Goſpel, without doing great injury to the Name, whereby we are called, and for which, if we rightly underſtand the worth of it, nothing ſhould be hard, or grievous unto us.

V. 10. By this I know that thou favoureſt me] Pſal. 86. 17. ſhew me a token, &c.

By this I know that thou favoureſt me, becauſe mine enemy] This had need as much caution, as the words before, now laſt ſpoken of: or rather more. We muſt take heed therefore that we take them not as abſolutely delivered, and make a general doctrine of them, which are intended here by David in reference to his particular caſe at that time: and not without reſpect perchance (as ſome chief Interpreters are of opinion:) to ſome particular promiſe, which God had made unto him, upon the accompliſhment whereof, after long and anxious expectation, he might well infer, that now he knew that God in very deed, according to his promiſe, did favour him, &c. For otherwiſe we know, that it was once Chriſts own caſe, to be delivered into the hands of his enemies, and to hear the revilings and reproaches of profane people, He truſted in God: let him deliver him, if he delighteth (ſo ought the words to have been rendred: ſee on Pſal. 22. 8) in him: Matth. 27. 43. from whence, (laying the myſtery of our redemption by Chriſts death aſide, ſince that, as he ſuffered for our juſtication, ſo for our example too:) we learn that it may be the caſe of the moſt religious, whether Prince or Prelate in the world, to fall into the hands of his enemies, and by them to be entreated at their pleaſure, even unto all extremity either of pain, or of ignominy. Now on the other ſide, if any ſhall make this an argument of Gods favor, To prevail againſt an enemy, and to be ſucceſsful in enterpriſes; without any further conſideration either of the cauſe, or of the perſons, and their condition; and this upon warrant of theſe words of David: let them remember where they be, who by David elſewhere are ſaid, To boaſt of their hearts deſire, Pſal. 10. 3. not to inſiſt (becauſe obvious enough) upon other like expreſſions and teſtimonies either of Davids, or any others of equal authority. But of ſucceſſes in war particularly, ſee Habakkuk his expoſtulation with God, Hab. 1. 13, 14, &c.

V. 12. Thou upholdeſt me in mine integrity] Either in proſperity of life, or in the true fear of God againſt all temptations.

and ſetteſt me before thy face for ever] Shewing me evident ſigns of thy fatherly providence.

V. 13. Amen, and amen] Here ends the firſt book of the Pſalms. Of which diviſion ſee before, upon the firſt Pſalm. Some take no notice of it. Others do, who prefix (as Junius, Bucer, &c.) a new title before the nexr Pſalm, Secundus liber, &c. and ſo after the 72. Tertius liber, &c. The word, Amen, at the end of prayers, (as of bleſſings and curſes, Num. 5. 22. and elſewhere) implies a concurrence of wiſhes and affections; and is alſo an expreſſion of a confidence, that it ſhall come to paſs ccordingly. Twice repeated, as here, it makes the ſpeech more pathetical. But at the beginning of ſentences, as Mat. 24. 47. and elſewhere, it ſtands for an aſſeveration, and is as much as, verily, verily.

V. 4. for I had gone with the multitude] It would be plainer, for I did go, or, was wont to go. He remembers his former happineſs, when he had the benefit of religious aſſemblies, and of Gods preſence in his Church or Sanctuary: which how much he valued ſee, as before, upon Pſalm 27, 8. by comparing thoſe bleſſed times with his preſent condition, being then either by Saul, or his ſon Abſolom, driven away, and far out of ſight of the Sanctuary, &c. he bemoans himſelf. I pour out my ſoul in me, ſaith he. Which ſome refer to that which follows of his happineſs in former times: as if he intended to ſay, that his joy in thoſe ſacred aſſemblies and ſolemnities, was wont to be ſo tranſcendent, as that through exceſs he was almoſt beſides himſelf: as in great extremities of either joy or ſorrow doth happen ſometimes. Either of the two, joy or ſorrow, if tranſcendent, may produce the ſame effects. But it is more probable, that he expreſſeth his preſent exceſſive grief by thoſe words. from the land of Jordan] Theſe words admit of a different, yea contrary ſenſe. From the land. ſay ſome; that is, concerning; as it was in the old Engliſh Tranſlation. As if he deſired to be reſtored to his Country, mentioning ſome particular places of it, Iordan, and the mount Hermon; and the little hill, (as it is here in the margin) that is, Sion; little in point of greatneſs, if compared to others: but in eſteem, becauſe of the place and ſituation, (and afterwards of the Temple, there ſeated) in Jeruſalem, greater to him, than the greateſt. In which reſpect alſo it is ſaid in Iſai. That the mountain of the Lords houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains, and ſhall be exalted above the hills, Iſa. 2. 2. As for hill Miſſar, there is none ſuch elſewhere mentioned, or known to the Jews. Thus ſome, and not improbably. But others, more in number, would have David to mention theſe places, as places of his baniſhment: from, as it is here; and not concerning: and by the little hill, they underſtand the lower parts of mount Hermon: or think that he ſpeaks it in ſcorn of that mountain; which though much greater, yet he made little reckoning of, in compariſon of thoſe neer, and about Jeruſalem. Quod mihi coactum videtur, ſaith one; (and ſo it ſeems to me) though he alſo go the common way.

V. 7. Deep calleth unto deep] Afflictions come ſo thick upon me, that I felt my ſelf as it were, overwhelmed, as with a ſtorm at Sea, Pſal. 88. 7.

Or, afflictions follow ſo cloſe the one upon the neck of the other, that they might ſeem to invite one another; as is commonly obſerved of the waves of the Sea, and elegantly expreſſed by one of the Latine Poets; Sed ut unda pellitur unda, Urgeturque eadem veniens, urgetque priorem. Which doth much illuſtrate the metaphor here uſed by the Pſalmiſt.

at the noiſe of the water ſpouts] By water ſpouts, or cataracts, he underſtands the clouds, from which (at ſuch times) the water falleth upon the earth with great violence and precipitancy: as it uſeth to run from great water ſpouts and ſluces, where the current of it ſelf, is ſtrong; and the fall, great. By noyſe, the cracks of thunder are intended, which break forth out of the clouds, and are followed uſually with fierce and mighty ſhoures. Now whether by deep, in the words before, he intends theſe ſhowres and ſtorms from the clouds; Or the billowes and rowlings of the ſea in great tempeſts, is not eaſie to determine. The word תהום abyſſus, is more proper of the Sea, and ſuch ſecret receptacles of water, as are conceived to be under the earth. The other ſenſe ſeems the more proper to the coherence. But to the main matter; either, is indifferent: the one as proper as the other. If by deep, we underſtand great thunder ſhowres, there will be (which will make the whole the more acute and elegant) ſome reference between calleth, and noyſe; thoſe ſhowres that conſecutively (as it often falls falls out) follow one another after every thunder clap, being as it were called for by the noiſe of the thunder.

V. 10. As with a ſword in my bones] That is, I am moſt grievouſly tormented. There is ſome difference of reading in the Originall, as is acknowledged: ברצח in ſome Copes; in others כרצח; The one hath a nota inſtrumentalis prefixed; and the other, a note of ſimilitude. But the ſenſe is one: The Engliſh here hath expreſſed both; which I think better then to leave both out, as ſome do.

V. 11 Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul] This repetition doth declare, that David did not overcome at once; to teach us to be conſtant, foraſmuch as God will certainly deliver his.

the health of my countenance, and my God] In Hebrew ואלהי ישועת פני. But becauſe in the fifth verſe, it is, ישועת פניו with a Vau more at the end; which produceth a different ſenſe, the health of his countenance, (ſo it ſhould be, and perchance ſo it is, in more correct Engliſh copies, not as I find it in my Copies, help for health: for it is the ſame word in the original, both in the 5. and 11. verſes; as alſo in the fifth verſe of the next Pſalme: except it was altered of purpoſe, becauſe the health of his countenance, being ſpoken of God, did not ſound ſo well; though even in that conſideration, I ſhould have thought, the ſalvation of his countenance, might have done better: But I am the more ſuſpitious, becauſe I find that in the eleventh verſe alſo, ſome Copies printed A.D. 1625. have it, who is the help of my countenance, and my God;) there; the health of my countenance, here, and verſe 5. of the next Pſalm, where the ſame words are repeated: This difference hath made ſome expoſitors of beſt credit to ſuſpect ſomewhat; Neſcitur autem an deſit in hoc loco litera, quæ tertiam perſonam conſtituit; ſaith Calvin upon this verſe. But certainly if any ſuch thing may he ſuſpected, (ſee upon Pſal. 25. in the end, concerning Alphabeticall Pſalms, Mollerus his opinion there, &c.) It is much more probable, that the fifth verſe hath ſuffered, and ſhould be mended by the eleventh of this; and the fifth of the next Pſalm; then that theſe two ſhould be corrected by that one. And thus it may be, without any addition of any letter: Whereas the ſixth verſe begins, (as now divided) אלהי, allow that word to the end of the former verſe; and the ו there at the end of פניו to be prefixed before אלהי: it will be, as in thoſe two other verſes, (this here, and that other of the next Pſalm;) ישועת פני ואלהי, that is, the health of my countenance, and my God. So ſhall all the verſes be reconciled to one another, as in probability (being but an intercalary verſe, as they call them, thrice repeated) they were made. Though this by the way; that it is not without example, that an intercalarie verſe ſhould be repeated with ſome alteration of ſome words. So we ſhall find it Pſa. 107. where theſe words, Then they cryed unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their diſtreſſes: being often repeated, (verſes 6, 13, 19, 28.) are not alwaies repeated in the very ſame words, though indeed without any alteration of ſenſe. However, that which makes the matter more probable here is, becauſe both in the Septuagint, and Vulgar Latine, thoſe three verſes agree, (σωτήριον τȣ̃ προσώπȣ μȣ, καὶ ὁ θεός μȣ : ſalutare vultûs mei, & Deus meus :) and that the reconciliation offers it ſelf in ſo ready and plauſible a way.

V. 3. O ſend out thy light] When God (as often, though for juſt and good alwaies; yet hidden and unſearchable cauſes and ends, he doth :) doth ſuffer wicked men to prevail in a bad cauſe, than the light of his providence and care of men, by which moſt are led to the acknowledgement of God (for God is known by the judgements which he executeth Pſal. 9. 16.) and the truth of his promiſes either general, to the godly in general; or particular, to ſome upon particular occaſions, is, as it were, ecclipſed : both which are reſtored, or renewed again; when God doth return to his ordinary courſe, and way of adminiſtration. And David doth here inveſt Gods cauſe with his particular intereſt, not as a pious man only, more ſolicitous for God, than himſelf; but alſo to make his prayer the more conſiderable. This, or to this purpoſe, will be the ſenſe of the words, if we take (which the coherence doth here require) the words following holy hill, and tabernacles, &c. literally and materially. So alſo upon Pſal. 58. 11. So that a man ſhall ſay. If we follow the ſpiritual ſenſe, which he that inſpired David for the benefit and inſtruction of others after David, might aym at, though himſelf at that time, extended his thoughts no further than to the literal, and to his preſent occaſion; according to that the ſenſe will be, that no man can come to the Church of God, to be a lively member of it, in this world : Nor hereafter be admitted to that ſight and fruition of God, wherein eternal happineſs conſiſteth; except both his underſtanding be enlightned, and his heart ſanctified and purified by the ſpirit of God. V. 9. But thou haſt caſt off, &c.] Hitherto the mercies of God, and his goodneſs to his people, have been ſet out and acknowledged. And this but as a preface or introduction to a freer expoſtulation, which now follows to the end of the Pſalm. This holy method of expoſtulating with God, upon grounds of his former love and favour, (upon which a tacite inference, that God will not utterly caſt them off, to whom he hath been ſo good and gracious, is to be preſuppoſed) you may obſerve elſwhere alſo; as Pſal.89. where, to verſe 38. Gods love and gracious promiſes to David, his people and poſterity, are largely ſet out : then follows, as here, a large expoſtulation concerning their preſent eſtate, contrary to thoſe former favours and promiſes. Thus godly people ſtirre up themſelves in their extremities, to hope againſt hope : and beſides, it becomes them well, in ſuch caſes, not ſo abruptly to begin with complaints, which might ſavour of murmuring; but after ſuch inſinuative expreſſions, as might ſhew their intereſt in God, and Gods in them.

V. 15. My confuſion is continually before me] I dare not lift up my head for ſhame.

V. 16. and avenger] Meaning the proud and cruel tyrant, Pſal.8.2. See there : It might be alſo, that this term might be given to a common oppreſſor of Gods people, as Gods hand, (Pſal.17. 14.) to puniſh them for their ſins, and to execute his juſt judgments upon them. This title might be given to ſuch a one, thereby the better to make publick acknowledgement (a neceſſary circumſtance of our humiliation before God in ſuch caſes) of Gods juſtice, and their deſerved puniſhment. O Lord thou haſt ordained them for judgement, &c. Hab.1.12.

V. 17. All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgot] What is here ſpoken, in this and ſome following verſes, muſt not be underſtood as intended for a juſtification of themſelves by a general profeſſion of their innocency; which whether more falſe and ridiculous to imagine (as being ſpoken of the generality of the people, which certainly, when at beſt, were not without faults that might deſerve judgements;) or whether more impious (as implying a charging of God with injuſtice) I know not. That which they intended by the words, is, to juſtifie themſelves from the heinous ſin of Idolatry : profeſſing, that notwithſtanding God might ſeem in a manner to have forſaken them, having delivered them into the hands of Idolaters, from whom they ſuffered all manner of perſecution; yet they had not forſaken him in that kinde, as to prove Idolaters, but rather ſubmitted to all manner of torments and cruel deaths, then to be drawn unto it. And this is it, which both by Joſephus the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, by S. Jerome, and divers others, is obſerved, (being indeed well worth our obſervation) that the Jews, ſince the return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, never ſince relapſed (to which before that they had been ſo obnoxious) to Idolatry. It doth alſo appear by the New Teſtament, that they were not guilty of any ſuch thing in thoſe dayes; for neither is it charged upon them by Chriſt, or his Apoſtles, any where. It is very likely that this Pſalm hath reference to thoſe times and things related in the Macchabees, where much is recorded of the ſufferings of the Jews for their Religion. It ſeemeth then, that a Nation may be guilty before God, and deſerve dreadful judgements, yea deſtruction, for other crimes then Idolatry : a thing which many in theſe dayes would little think, who if they can acquit themſelves of Superſtition and Idolatry, or that which they call Superſtition and Idolatry (which ſometimes is more in their imagination, to which they are extremely addicted, then where they would have it thought, by lamentable, but groundleſs outcries) make themſelves ſure enough of Gods favour, though guilty of many foul vices, as Pride, Perjury, Covetouſneſs, (which is Idolatry, Col.3. 5. that is, as bad before God, as Idolatry it ſelf; nay, and very near to Idolatry in its nature, Job 31.24,25,&c.) Extortion, Uncleanneſs, Malice, and the like : beſides Sacriledge, which alone doth counterpoiſe (in point of abomination before God) groſſeſt Idolatry, Rom.2.22.

V. 18. ſteps] Or, goings.

V. 19. in the place of dragons] Into deſolate places, Eſay 34.13. & 35.7. Or, of whales, that is, as into the bottom of the Sea, where we may be ſunk or devoured, Jon.2.3. See the power of faith, which can be overcome by no perils.

dragons] Or, whales, as Gen.1.21. Pſal.73.13.

V. 21. Shall not God ſearch this out ?) They take God to witneſs, to make their proteſtation of their innocency in this kinde, the more ſolemn and conſiderable. And ſo we may ſafely, without fear of taking Gods holy Name in vain, when it is in a matter of conſequence, and that we may do it with a clear conſcience : which doth preſuppoſe a ſerious examination of our own hearts, which otherwiſe are apt enough to deceive us, or the Devil, rather, them, if great care be not taken. But in point of Idolatry, this appealing to God, the ſearcher of the hearts, is the more ſeaſonable, becauſe we reade in the Law of a twofold Idolatry, publick and apparent, ſet down, with the puniſhment of it, Deut.13.12,13,14 &

&c. If thou hear ſay in one of thy cities, &c. and private, or ſecret Idolatry, lyable not to the Law (as long as ſecret) but to thoſe ſolemn curſes, (that is, to the immediate judgment of God) pronounced upon Mount Ebal, Deut. 27. 15. Curſed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, &c. and putteth it in a ſecret place, &c. See alſo 2 Kings 17. 9. And the children of Iſrael did ſecretly thoſe things that were not right, &c. But how ſecretly, ſince it is ſaid th t :, that they ſet them up images and groves in every high hill, &c. It is likely, that they began with ſecret Idolatry, coloured with many plauſible pretences, before they proceeded unto publick. But this by the way onely, ſo farre as may concern us here. But the words of Ezekiel are very pertinent, which ſhall here be ſet down, for further confirmation of the ſeaſonableneſſe of this interpoſing of God as a witneſſe, in this ſolemn proteſtation againſt Idolatry: Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, haſt thou ſeen what the ancients of the houſe of Iſrael do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? For they ſay, The Lord ſeeth us not, the Lord hath forſaken the earth, Ezek. 8. 12. It is not for nothing then, that they not onely call to God for witneſſe here, but profeſs alſo to believe, that he knoweth the ſecrets of the hearts.

for thy ſake are we killed] The faithful make this their comfort, That the wicked puniſh them not for their ſins, but for Gods cauſe, Mat. 5 10. 1Pet.4.14.

V.23. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou O Lord?] Pſal. 7. 6. & 35. 23. & 59. 4. & 78. 65. There is no hope of recovery, except thou put to thine hand, and raiſe us up.

PSAL. XLV.

Title.

Shoſhannim] An inſtrument of ſix ſtrings; as ſome would have it: as others, the beginning of ſome known ſong. The word properly ſignifieth lillies, or roſes: which might have ſome reference to the argument of this Pſalm, as ſome are of opinion. But concerning theſe Titles, all is uncertain, as often hath been ſaid. See upon former Pſalms, 7, &c.

Maſchil] Or, of inſtruction.

A ſong of loves] Of the love betwixt Solomon and Pharaohs daughter, typifying the love of Chriſt and the Church; or, of the beloved ones, kings daughters attending on the bride, ver. 9. In the Hebrew it is שיר ידידות and becauſe Solomon was called Jedidiah, as we read 2 Sam. 12. 25. ſome Rabbines, and others, have thought that Solomon might be intended by this word. This is certain, that many ſuch alluſions, with ſome little alteration in the proper names, are to be found in the Scripture. See before upon Pſal. 7. upon thoſe words of the Title there, Cuſh the Benjamite; and upon the Title of the 9. Pſalm. But whatever we think of that word in the Title, a greater queſtion is made concerning the argument of the Pſalm it ſelf; which ſome are ſo far from yielding that it was compoſed upon Solomons marriage, and immediately applyable to him, (though chiefly intended of Chriſt, as all Chriſtians maintain) that they think it great impiety for any man to think ſo. The Genevenſes by name are charged by Genebrard: Impii, ut Genevenſes, de Solomone hunc Pſalmum exponunt, ſaith he. Now his reaſons why it cannot be ſo; the firſt is, becauſe the ſons of Chore, the authors of this Pſalm, as he takes for granted, did propheſie in the time of Moſes, many ages before Solomon. And though Prophets, yet that God would have Solomon an object of their propheſie, rather then David, or any other, I confeſs is not very likely, except we had more aſſurance of it. But what can Genebrard ſay to us, why we ſhould believe, that theſe ſons of Corah here mentioned, lived in Moſes his time; whom all others conceive to have been of their poſterity in Davids, and ſince Davids time? S. Jerome by name, makes them to have been keepers of the doors, and ſeveral porches of the Tabernacle in Davids time. But this is a meer fancy of Genebrards, onely to ſerve his preſent purpoſe. 2 That the expreſſions of this Pſalm are more ſublime, then to belong unto any terreſtrial King: neither is this a ſufficient argument, ſince it is acknowledged, that Chriſt is chiefly intended, and that there be other Pſalms where as high things are ſpoken of David, immediately; though belonging to Chriſt more properly. A third argument, is, that the Apoſtles apply it to Chriſt. So they do divers other things, which nevertheleſs were literally ſpoken of others, as all grant. Their application of things to Chriſt, doth not take away the literal ſenſe. That it is againſt the ſenſe or opinion of all Chriſtians; (his fourth argument:) how falſe that is, I will appeal to Lorinus, who though he name not Genebrard, yet he names others that have ſaid as much as he, and confutes them by divers oppoſite authorities, beſides his own. Laſtly, he alledgeth the Rabbines; but that alſo not truly: or elſe S. Jerome was not in the right, who is cited by the ſame Lorinns to the contrary: though I will eaſily yield, that all Rabbines are not of one opinion about it; as neither in many other things, belonging to the Pſalms. Taking it therefore for granted, that Solomon was the immediate object, and that this Pſalm was intended to him as an Epithalamium, or Marriage-ſong; I think their interpretation very probable, and almoſt unqueſtionable, who tranſlating the words according to the moſt grammatical conſtruction, carmen dilectarum, (for it is a feminine) underſtand thereby certain choice virgins (according to the cuſtome of thoſe times) appointed to compaſs about, or accompany the bride; and to ſing this Pſalm, properly called the beloved, or, the friends, as they that waited on the bridegroom, were properly called, οἱ φίλοι τȣ͂ νυμφίȣ: the friends of the bridegroom, Joh. 3. 29. though it be there in the ſingular, ὁ φίλος, the friend; becauſe S. John Baptiſt ſpeaks of himſelf, in particular: but under that one, more may be comprehended. And Mat. 9. 15. the ſame are called in the plural, οἱ υἱοὶ τȣ͂ νυμφῶνος, the children of the bridechamber: of which ſee more there in Learned Grotius his Annotations. Thus much of the type. Now how fitly Chriſt, and his relation to his Church, were repreſented unto us under this type of a bridegroom, &c. ſee more upon Canticles.

Verſ. 1. IS enditing] Heb. boileth, or bubbleth up.

V. 2. Thou art fairer then the children of men] Solomons beauty and eloquence to win favour with his people, and his power to overcome his enemies, is here deſcribed.

grace is poured into thy lips] Power to ſpeak learnedly, and elegantly, Eſay 50. 4.

V. 4. ride proſperouſly] proſper thou, ride thou.

becauſe of truth] He alludeth to them that ride in chariots, in their triumphs; ſhewing, that the quiet ſtate of a kingdom, ſtandeth in truth, meekneſs, and juſtice, not in worldly pomp and vanity.

V. 6. Thy throne, O God] Heb. אלהים: a title often aſcribed to Judges and Magiſtrates, as all grant: but ſome, both here, and upon Heb. 1. 8. where theſe words are quoted, and applied to Chriſt, obſerved, that although אלהים (God, or Gods) be ſometimes aſcribed to men, or Angels, yet never to any one under God, ſingly, or perſonally; but to more then one, always. But I doubt whether the obſervation be ſolid: For Judg. 13. verſ. 22. it is directly, (as appears by the foregoing verſe) aſcribed to one ſingle Angel: and if to one ſingle Angel, then as well to a ſingle man, eſpecially ſuch a one as Solomon was accounted, though perchance no other examples occurre of it elſewhere.

Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever] Heb. 1. 8. Under this figure of this kingdom of juſtice, is ſet forth the everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt. See more upon the 16 verſe, whom thou mayeſt make princes, &c.

V. 7. thy God hath anointed thee] Eſay 61, 1. Hath eſtabliſhed thy kindom, as the figure of Chriſts, wherein is peace and joy.

above his fellows] Heb. 1. 9. & Joh. 3. 34. For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him: which may ſeem to be ſpoken with reference to the Pſalmiſt, expreſſed in plainer words.

V. 8. ſmell of myrrhe, and aloes, and caſſia] That the word aloes, came from the Hebrew word in the Text, there is no queſtion; and therefore we are right enough for the word: but what is the right aloes, here intended, is not ſo eaſily reſolved. However, ſomewhat odoriferous, all agree; which is more then we can ſay of the next word, which by ſome is tranſlated plicas, or angulos; the folds, or corners: A Learned Rabbine I know, is the author of that interpretation; but beſides his authority, I ſee not much for it, neither is it followed by many. A chief reaſon that moved him thereunto, it ſeems, is, the defect of an and, in the original, to joyn the word with the former. But that hath ſufficiently been anſwered, and examples produced of the like conſtruction. But yet what caſſia properly is, is not certainly known. Till we know more certainly, we may take it for a kinde of Cinamon, as moſt do.

ivory palaces] Either edifices, 1 Kings 22. 39. Cant. 7. 4. or ivory coffers, and wardrobes, whence thoſe garments were taken, and where kept.

whereby they have made thee glad] By the gift of thoſe precious things mentioned; as ſome expound it. But rather, out of which; or, from which (prodeunti ſcilicet; upon thy coming abroad, and ſolemn appearance; as Pſal. 19. 5. Which as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber: See more there) they (or thoſe that came to meet thee) have (by their applauſe and manifold congratulations) made thee glad. Some tranſlate it, more then theirs, that make thee glad; that is, as they expound it; thy garments are more odoriferous, then theirs, that make thee glad: that is, thy fellows; as verſe 7. The word מני in the Original, will bear it, even this too, well enough, which ſignifies præ, as well as de, or ex: but I do not like that ſenſe ſo well. Others, again, becauſe Minni is the name of a Province, Jerem. 51. 27. which divers underſtand to be Armeniam minorem; they make a proper name of it here too. So Jerome, and the Chalde Paraphraſe, which the Pſalterium Nebienſe doth exhibit: à palatiis quæ conſtruentur dentibus elephantorum de Armenia; are his words, as there interpreted. But after all this; why not, whereby: that is, by which odoriferous ſmells, and perfumes, or ointments: which have a natural power, both to revive, and to increaſe the ſpirits of man, as Phyſicians teach? whereof among others, ſee Marſ. Ficinus, de Sanit. l.2. c 18. De nutrimento ſpiritûs, & conſervatione vitæ per odores, out of Galen and others. And what can be more plain, or pertinent, then Prov.27.7. Ointment and perfume rejoyce the heart? This as I conceive to be the moſt literal; ſo I ſhould ſay, the onely true ſenſe, but that I have no authority for it, but mine own. I leave it therefore to the Reader, to judge. But there be, and thoſe of the moſt approved, as Diodat by name, that expound all this of Chriſt, and make that the literal, (though the expreſſion be metaphoritcal) and immediate meaning, taking no notice of any other, in reference to Solomon, and his marriage. So here, by garment, &c. they interpret, the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, which ſpread forth a moſt ſweet odour of grace and power; and out of the ivory palace, that is, ſay they, from heaven, which is Chriſts royal habitation; make thee glad, namely, with everlaſting and heavenly joy, Heb.12.2. But for my part, as I believe that Chriſt was the chief aim of the Pſalm, in general, to ſet out by it, the glory of his kingdom, and the happineſs of the Church under him, and the near relation of Chriſt to the Church, and of the Church to Chriſt: yet my opinion is, (and I ſee moſt others of ours, moſt in requeſt, go that way, who though they apply it to Chriſt alſo, ſome one way, ſome another, yet ground upon a literal ſenſe with reference to Solomon;) that all particulars are not ſo well applyable to Chriſt, except we take much liberty: as for example, the particulars of this verſe: at leaſt, that they are not ſo properly applyable to Chriſt, as to Solomon. Now if we go to allegories, and remote applications, there is great liberty left to every mans fancy, and it will be very hard to pitch upon any thing, that every body will think to be proper and ſolid. As for example, others interpret theſe garments, of the garments of ſalvation, and the robe of righteouſneſs, Eſay 61.10. wherewith Chriſt doth clothe his Church. And the fragrancy or ſweet ſmell of thoſe garments they make to be the Evangelical Doctrine concerning juſtification and remiſſion of ſins in Chriſt. And then by theſe ivory palates, ſome underſtand, not heaven, but beautiful and magnificent Churches, erected to the honour and glory of Chriſt. Thus every man may indulge to his fancies, and not exceed, perchance, the liberty of allegorical Expoſitions: but much beyond the compaſs, as I conceive, and purpoſe, of ſuch Notes as theſe.

V.13. The Kings daughter is all glorious within] Of the myſtical ſenſe, or application, either to the Church in general, oftentimes in the ſight of God and his Angels; both in its living Saints, by their holy converſation; and in its dying Martyrs, by their patient deaths and ſufferings in ſeveral kindes. Moſt glorious, when moſt oppreſſed and trampled upon by men: Or to every particular member of it, whoſe beauty and excellency is not external, but internal, in the ſeveral endowments and qualifications of the ſoul, both natural and divine, or infuſed. Of this myſtical ſenſe and application, I ſay, there is no queſtion. It is very common and ordinary, in all Writers, both ancient and late. But becauſe I make this but the ſecondary ſenſe, not immediately intended by the Prophet (whoever he was) and holy Penman, though chief in the intention of the Holy Ghoſt; we muſt inquire into the literal, of which there is more queſtion among Interpreters. Within, that is, not to be ſeen, whileſt the Bride, is yet kept cloſe, and expected abroad, by the company, with great earneſtneſs, (a good part of the ſolemnity, according to the cuſtom of thoſe times among the Hebrews. See upon Pſal.19.5. Which is as a bridegroom;) until the prefixed time of her ſolemn coming forth and appearance. So ſome. Others, by within, underſtand the ſight and preſence of the Bridegroom; in their inmoſt rooms and palaces, into which none have admittance, but the Bride alone: wherein conſiſts her chiefeſt glory and happineſs. Others again; within, ſay they; that is, not according to the faſhion of vain-glorious people, who if they make a good ſhew abroad, care not how meanly they are attired at home: but ſhe, both without, and within, and more within, then without, is ſuch and ſuch. I bring divers Expoſitors, becauſe I would be ſure not to want a literal ſenſe; which ſome becauſe they cannot readily finde, betake themſelves to the myſtical and allegorical, as the onely. But that which I like beſt, is yet behinde. How ordinary is it, even among prophane Poets and Authors, to compare mental perfections, with external beauty; and to preferre thoſe, as of themſelves more conſiderable, and more laſting? Forma bonum fragile eſt, (one of them) quantumq; accedit, &c. Jam molire animum, qui duret, &c. So this ſacred Poet, though he ſet out the external glory of this Bride, with all imaginable magnificence; yet her chiefeſt glory and beauty he doth adſcribe unto her ſoul, her better part; which comes neareſt to the myſtical, and is as proper to the literal ſenſe.

V. 16. In ſtead of thy father, ſhall be thy children] It is generally conceived, that theſe words are directed unto Solomon himſelf, not to his Bride, becauſe of the Maſculine affixes, or pronouns, in the Original: and the ſenſe to be this, that his poſterity ſhall not degenerate, but equal their fathers, in wiſdom, prudence, piety, and all true nobility. Indeed if the words be directed to Solomon, I know not what elſe to make of them. But becauſe it is not without example, that a Maſculine ſhould be put for a Feminine; as upon this very place is well obſerved by ſome; it were better, perchance, to take them as directed to the ſame, to whom the former from v.10. (moſt of them) are directed, or, at leaſt, belonging; to wit, the Bride. So the meaning would be, which I conceive would fit the place much better, to perſwade her not to take too much to heart, (which many women in this caſe of marriage are apt to do, and ſometimes it is the cauſe of much trouble to them and theirs) that ſhe is brought away from her kindred and parents, Father, Mother, &c. and that all theſe ſhe muſt now forſake; becauſe in ſtead of theſe, ſhe ſhall have children, of whom ſhe may expect as much and more comfort, then from any parents.

whom thou maiſt make Princes in all the earth] This indeed cannot be applyed unto Solomon, but as ſpoken very hyperbolically. Not but that it is lawful enough for Poets and Orators, eſpecially in ſuch an argument as this, to uſe ſuch figures: (though indeed the hyperbole was not ſo much in the firſt penning, ſince ſo much, of ſo glorious a King as Solomon was, and coming to the Crown with ſo much expectation, by way of good omen, might be ſaid well enough: we know of Kings within memory, who by marriages have had children Princes in divers parts of the earth: not in the firſt penning therefore I ſay, ſo much, as in the application of it to the event) but conſidering our Poet here, as a Prophet inſpired by God; to whom things future, were preſent; and then looking into the ſtory, how it fared with Solomons poſterity; ſo indeed we may ſay, that of Solomon it is very hard to make good the words, without the liberty of a very large hyperbole. But to Chriſt, the application is very proper and obvious: who by the preaching of his miniſters, having converted Nations and Kingdoms to his obedience, may, in that reſpect, be ſaid to have made them, and with them, thoſe that have been converted by them, Princes in all the earth. For unto all true Chriſtians, an eternal kingdom we know, is appointed and prepared by Chriſt in Heaven. So divers; of the ancients eſpecially. But in another reſpect too, and more literal, as I conceive, the words are appliable. For as many Kings and Princes, as either at the firſt were converted, or ſince that, have profeſſed Chriſtianity; as literally, they were Princes, truly and really, ſo as truly and really, though ſpiritually, Chriſt his off-ſpring. Even the ſame both Kings and Queens, who in regard of their temporals, are called Nurſing-fathers and nurſing-mothers of the Church, Eſay 49.23. And kings ſhall be thy nurſing-fathers, &c. are ſpiritually the Churches, and Chriſts children. As of theſe, ſo we may ſay of thoſe words in the firſt verſe, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c. that they belong unto Chriſt more immediately and properly then unto Solomon. But ſee more there.

Alamoth] It may be a Pſalm for the virgins to ſing at Solomons wedding; ſee Pſal.45.1. and verſe 9. of this Pſalm: or, on the virginals, inſtruments which virgins plaid on: or, to be ſung to the treble tune, 1 Chron.15.20. which is ſhrill like a virgins voice.

Verſ.1. A Very preſent help in trouble] Heb. an help in troubles found much.

in trouble] In all manner of troubles, God ſheweth his ſpeedy mercy and power in defending his.

V. 2. will we not fear, though the earth be removed] There is a provident fear, of which the Wiſe man ſpeaketh, Prov.14.16. A wiſe man feareth, &c. which elſewhere he expreſſeth, A prudent man foreſeeth, &c. Prov.22.3. And there is a natural fear, as the fear of death, and of ſudden chances, by fire, water, and the like; which things may be terrible to the beſt, and moſt reſolute, without any diſparagement, either to their courage, or to their faith. Religion doth not deſtroy nature, or take away ſenſe; which it doth, if it take away all fear in ſuch caſes. And therefore Ariſtotle, the moſt rational of meer natural men whoſe writings are come to our hands, his reſolution upon the caſe, is, that whoever doth not fear μήτε σεισμὸν, μήτε τὰ κύματα; neither earthquake, nor ſudden inundations; (or perils upon the water) is either mad, or ſenſleſs, *Ethic. Nic.*3.7. I make no queſtion, but St. Paul was afraid in that tempeſt upon the Sea, deſcribed, Act.24. which (beſides other circumſtances) may be gathered from the words of the Angel to him, Paul, fear not, ver.24. But then there is a godleſs and comfortleſs fear; when there is no hope, either of preſent deliverance, nor of future good to enſue: no ſenſe of any truſt, or confidence in his Mercy, whoſe praiſe and promiſe is, in times of greateſt danger, not utterly to forſake them, and to leave them comfortleſs, that put their truſt in him. Of this kinde of fear, thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt muſt be underſtood, not of natural fear. He that ſaid, Si fractus illabatur orbis, impavidum ferient ruinæ: ſpake finely, but ſpake onely, and no more. But whether all this, of the earth being removed, &c. be to be underſtood literally; or whether by all this, nothing elſe but troubles and commotions of Eſtates, wars, and the effects of wars; great armies, &c. metaphorically be meant: See more upon the 4. verſe.

not fear] What the Pſalmiſt here, by, not fearing; the Prophet Habakkuk doth expreſs by rejoyting: intending one thing both, that they would not ſo fear, but that they ſhould be ſenſible of ſome comfort. Hab.3.17,&c. Though the figtree, &c. So the Apoſtle forbids us to ſorrow for them that are dead, &c. 1 Theſſ. 4. 13.

the midſt of the ſea] Heb. the heart of the ſea.

V.3. Though the waters thereof roar] Matth 7.25. Pſal.93 3,4. Jer.5.22. Though afflictions be never ſo violent, yet Gods people look for help from God.

V.4 There is a river, the ſtreams whereof ſhall make glad the city of God] To the frights and fears, and confuſions of worldly men, in time of trouble and publick dangers,implyed,though not expreſſed in the former verſes, he now oppoſeth the peace and ſecurity of the Church and people of God; becauſe God is with them,in the midſt of them,&c. And ſo far the coherence is plain: but how this river comes in, whether as oppoſed to the roaring billows of the ſea, before ſpoken of; or, as any means of this peace and ſecurity, of either City, or men, inſiſted upon afterwards, is not ſo eaſily known. Neither will it ſerve to make good the coherence, that it be oppoſed to the ſea, barely; (as a ſtill river, and a roarong ſea) except it be oppoſed to it, in reference to this point of fear, and no fear, the chief ſubject of the words. Although, ſay they, all be never ſo full of rage and tumult abroad, and that Nations and Kingdoms be laid waſte; yet ſhall the City of God, in the mean time, injoy her peace and tranquillity, contenting it ſelf with her little ſtreams. But it doth not yet appear where the antitheſis doth lye, or to what purpoſe this river is mentioned. But then it is further ſaid, that great rivers are a great ſafeguard and protection to Towns, and that the Prophet Eſay doth upbraid the Jews of their infidelity, Eſay 8.6. for that they deſpiſed their own rivers, as unſafe and uſeleſs, becauſe of their ſmallneſs; and commended ſuch as Nilus and Euphrates, which for their greatneſs and ſwiftneſs could keep out an enemy, and ſecure Towns. This indeed makes the antitheſis clear: but it is a great deal, to be ſupplyed and preſuppoſed; and more indeed, then I can well gather out of that paſſage of Eſay, For as much as this people refuſeth the waters of Shiloah, that go ſoftly, and rejoyce in Rezin and Remaliahs ſon: Now therefore behold, &c. Here I finde (as beſt Interpreters there) a ſmall army, (or contemptible means in fight) compared to ſoft waters; and a great potent army, to an overflowing torrent, &c. but nothing to that purpoſe, as is alledged. It is ordinary among all men, to compare great armies to great inundations; and by an oppoſite metaphor, (which otherwiſe would be obſcure, becauſe not ſo ordinary) a leſs army, or ſtrength, is here compared to a little river. If therefore we interpret the Pſalmiſt here, from that paſſage of Eſay, (which may be, whether the author of this Pſalm wrote before Eſay, or Eſay before him, which is uncertain) then taking the former words not literally, but as an allegorical expreſſion of great ſtirs, and great armies in the world, the reaſon of the antitheſis will require, that by a river, (oppoſed to the ſea, &c.) ſmall means, and ſmall forces (in compariſon, and in appearance) ſhould be underſtood. But this upon a ſuppoſition,that the Pſalmiſt muſt be interpreted by Eſay; which is the more likely, becauſe wars are directly mentioned afterwards, and God, in relation to it, as is probable, ſtyled, The Lord of Hoſts, ver.7 & 11. But again; there may be a further antitheſis in this, that whereas the neighbourhood of the ſea, or of great waters, may be the overthrow of great mountains; mount Sion, (the type of the Church) the further it ſtood from any ſuch, the more it might be conceived out of danger. Now applying theſe things to the Church of God in general, as moſt Interpreters do, who hence infer, (and inſiſt at large upon it, ſome of them) that notwithſtanding the troubles and commotions of Kingdoms and Eſtates, the Church, by the power and providence of God, may enjoy her peace and tranquillity; this muſt be underſtood with due limitation. For otherwiſe, the ſaying of an Ancient is true, that, Non Reſpublica in Eccleſia, ſed Eccleſia in Republica; that is, That the Common-wealth is not in the Church, but the Church in the Common-wealth: and as part of it, it is like enough as to enjoy the peace; ſo to partake of the troubles and diſtempers of it.Which is one reaſon why the Church, in what ſtate ſoever collected, is injoyned to pray for the peace and proſperity of that State; For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and a peaceable life, in all godlineſs and honeſty, 1 Tim 2 2. as is well obſerved, and preſſed by the ſame ancient Author. However, it is true too, and obſerved by many,that by a ſecret power and providence of God, the Church of God, though it ſuffer for the preſent, as part; yet in proceſſe of time, it often gains and increaſes by the troubles and commotions of States and Kingdoms. This God, who can bring light out of darkneſs, can do: but it is not the way that he hath appointed for the preſervation of his Church; and we muſt pray againſt temptations, though ſometimes uſed by God, as means of our ſalvation.

V.10. Be ſtill, and know that I am God] Moſt Interpreters underſtand it as ſpoken by God to the enemies of his Church: though ſome confeſs, that it may be as well an exhortation to the faithful. And indeed I rather take it ſo; and it fits better to all that hath gone before, by which we are taught to truſt to God, though the means, in outward appearance, be never ſo deſpicable: and alſo to that which follows; ſpoken of, not, to the heathen, among which God ſaith, he will be exalted; that is, (as I conceive) by ſome great and miraculous deliverance that he will vouchſafe unto his people, in their extremity, when all viſible means ſhall fail, that his immediate hand and power may be the better ſeen and acknowledged. So Eſay 33.9,10. The earth mourneth, &c. Now will I riſe, ſaith the Lord: now will I be exalted, &c. and Joh.11.40. Said I not to thee, that if thou wouldſt believe, thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God? that is, a miracle: becauſe at ſuch times, the glory is more immediately given unto God, then when he worketh by ordinary means. Be ſtill; ſo Eſay 30 15. For thus ſaith the Lord God, the Holy One of Iſrael; In returning (Hebrew בשובה, by ſome tranſlated, in quiete; in reſt: as from ישב, not שוב:) and reſt ſhall be ſaved: in quietneſs and in confidence ſhall be your ſtrength: and ye would not. And in the 7. verſe there, Their ſtrength is to ſit ſtill. And laſtly, the word here in the Text, הרפו, is the ſame we have Pſal.37.8. הרף מאף Ceaſe from anger: which is ſpoken to the godly, exhorted there, (as here perchance) not to take too much to heart, nor be moved to impatience, when they ſee the ſucceſſe and proſperity of the wicked; and contrary events to befal the juſt and righteous. The more received and warrantable, is, tractus, clima, as here.

The joy of the whole earth is Mount Sion] The whole earth, might be taken here for the whole land; as Exod.10.15. and Mat.27.45. though ſome there out of ancient Records of Aſtrologers are of opinion, that that darkneſs extended further then Judea. But however, of Exod.10.15. there is no queſtion: and ſo it might be here too. Neither indeed do I finde, that either Judea or Jeruſalem were in ſuch eſteem among the Gentiles. But we may take the words as prophetically ſpoken, becauſe ſalvation was to come from thence to the Gentiles.

is Mount Sion, on the ſide of the North, the City of the great King.] Theſe words I finde variouſly printed in the Engliſh Copies. Some, after Mount Sion, have a colon; and ſome a ſemicolon: others, a comma onely, How it was intended by the Tranſlators, I know not. Moſt Interpreters joyn, on the ſide of the North, to Mount Sion: upon a ſuppoſition, that Mount Sion ſtood Northward of Jeruſalem; grounding upon the words in Eſay, 14. 13. I will ſit alſo upon the Mount of the Congregation in the ſides of the North. But this is much oppoſed by ſome others, who would have theſe words, on the ſide of the North, to belong to the words following, the City, &c. They bring Joſephus, and ſome others to prove, that Mount Sion ſtood in the South, and had Jeruſalem Northward: and that the chiefeſt parts of the City, were to the North. Others again, who maintain the ſame concerning the ſituation of both, yet take theſe words, Mount Sion, on the ſide of the North, together; becauſe though Sion it ſelf were Southward, as they maintain, yet it had Jeruſalem, (the chiefeſt parts of it) on the North. On the North then, not abſolutely, in regard of it ſelf; but with reference to Jeruſalem. The further diſcuſſion of this I leave to Geographers; no point of conſequence depends upon it: and the difference, as I apprehend it, is of no difficult conciliation; rather verbal, then real.

the City of the great King] The City of our God, ver.1. or, the City of God, Pſal.64.4. and ſo Chriſts words, Matth.5.35. the City of the great King, (which probably had reference to theſe of the Pſalmiſt) are expounded by very learned men. The great King, being referred to men, was the proper Title or Epithet of the Kings of Perſia.

V. 4. I will incline mine mine ear to a parable] I will deliver that which with much ſtudy and diligent attention I have got, or attained unto. No trivial ordinary matter, which every man of himſelf is capable of; but ſuch as I have received from the learned profeſſors of piety, or the Author of Wiſdom himſelf. A parable in the Scripture, and חידה too, (here tranſlated a dark ſaying) is taken ſometimes for a ſententious ſpeech, or excellent doctrine; though otherwiſe neither very obſcure, nor parabolical: as Pſal.78.2. I will open my mouth in a parable, &c. the ſubject of that Pſalm being nothing but an hiſtorical (but Poetically ſet out) commemoration of Gods mercies to his people, In ſeveral kindes; and their frequent unthankfulneſs. And ſuch is the doctrine of this Pſalm, which very well deſerves the ſolemnity of this extraordinary prefacing: a doctrine of as much comfort and conſequence to men, as any can be: delivered here more plainly, then in any other part of Scripture, till Chriſts time, Daniel excepted. The ſum is this; That we ſhould not be troubled at the proſperity of the wicked and ungodly, ſince that this world, with all its delights, are things ſo tranſitory: God having provided better things for them that live in his fear, in another world. That this doctrine was not ſo common, in thoſe days; and why, hath been ſhewed upon the 37. Pſalm: ſo that in that reſpect, though otherwiſe plainly enough delivered here, it might be ſtyled a parable, or enigma. See more there.

V. 5. when the iniquity of my heels ſhall compaſs me about] There be no leſs then 17. or 18. ſeveral (as is pretended) interpretations of theſe words; ſo many collected by Lorinus: beſides what more may be gathered by others: ſo many, but moſt of them ſo forced and impertinent, or coincident with others, as even to recite them, I conceive would be but loſs of time and labour. The chiefeſt, and almoſt onely conſiderable, are but two. Theſe will be well worth our conſideration, becauſe it is a point of high conſequence. Firſt then there be, (as moſt Ancients) who by heel, underſtand the laſt of a mans life, or the day of death, to this purpoſe; Why ſhould I commit any thing, that I ſhould ned to fear, when that dreadful day ſhall come, when ſentence, in private firſt, and in publick, afterwards, muſt be paſſed upon me. The principal cauſe of fearing, is, if it ſhould ſo fall out, that at the end and cloſe of my life I ſhould be compaſſed about with ſins; ſuch eſpecially, through which, to get wealth to my ſelf, I made no conſcience to oppreſs others. But ſince it is in my power, through Gods grace, to prevent it; or in caſe I have ſinned, through his mercy, to repent in time, and obtain pardon; why ſhould I fear ſo much? Death indeed I cannot avoid; all men are born to it: but that which onely ſhould make dreadful unto men, I may avoid. So, the words would be tranſlated; Why ſhould I fear in the evil day, that the iniquity of my heels will compaſſe me about? For the tranſlation, there is no queſtion of it to be made, but that it may be right enough, as to the Hebrew words: but to make this ſenſe of it, much muſt be ſupplyed, and yet it will hardly do. Much leſſe do I conceive what convenient ſenſe and coherence can be made, if following the tranſlation, by, the iniquity of my heels, i. e ſins of my life, or the puniſhment due unto my ſins, as ſome others would have, be underſtood. The ſecond interpretation therefore, which I reckon conſiderable, is, to take עון iniquity, for wicked men; the abſtract for the concrete: which is uſual enough; to this effect; Why ſhould I fear, &c. when wicked unjuſt men (encouraged by their ſucceſſe and worldly proſperity;) purſue me cloſe, on every ſide? Either I fear, and be diſmayed; or any other godly man, that puts his truſt in God? Why not rather conſider, that thus and thus is the caſe of the wicked; and his worldly proſperity accordingly to be valued: Whereas God will redeem my ſoul, &c. ver.15. See there They are ſaid in ſome Languages, to purſue to the heels, that purſue very cloſely, and with great animoſity. And ſo Pſal.56 7. המה עקבי ישמרו: they obſerve my heels: it is the ſame word there, as is here: and is tranſlated, calcanea mea obſervant, by ſome of beſt account.

Which ſome take to be ſpoken of Adam particularly, Adam being in honour, &c. and hence infer, that he fell the firſt day, he was created: the laſt hour of the day. But this is too high, to be ſpoken with any confidence, upon no other ground. The common and moſt warrantable interpretation is, of man in general, who abides not: that is, hath no permanent eſtate in this world. His time is ſhort; and of that ſhort time no part is ſtable, but ſubject to all manner of chances and mutabilities: in which reſpect, this whole world is ſaid, even while it laſteth, to paſſe away, 1 Joh. 2.17. in oppoſition to that reality of being, which properly belongs unto God onely; and after him in an inferiour degree, to immortal eſſences. V. 14. Like ſheep they are laid in the grave] As ſheep are gathered into the fold, ſo ſhall men be brought to the grave.

death ſhall feed on them] That is, conſume their bodies, as we do meat.

the upright ſhall have dominion over them in the morning] That is, The righteous will ſoon have the better of them, whileſt theſe remain in the power of death and the grave; and the righteous are exalted, being delivered from both, and received into heaven; as is more clearly expreſſed in the next verſe. In the morning, as before, Pſal. 46.5. God ſhall help her, and that right early. See there. Some think the reſurrection is intended by this word, which in divers reſpects may be likened unto the morning. Wherefore he ſaith, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light, Eph. 5.14.

in the grave from their dwelling] That is, their form, or beauty, ſhall conſume in the grave, being thither transferred from their dwellings: or, being forced from their ſtately houſes and palaces, to betake themſelves to the obſcurity of a grave. The Hebrew word מזבול here tranſlated, (the firſt letter of it being taken for a prepoſition) from their dwelling; may alſo be taken for habitaculum, alone; which hath produced that other Tranſlation in the margine, the grave being an habitation unto them, or, to every one of them. Either of theſe may fit well enough.

V. 15. But God will redeem my ſoul, &c. If Selah be a note (as many think; of which, ſee upon Pſa. 3.) of exaltation, or elevation of minde, I know not any place in the whole book, that better deſerves it, or more requires it. Here is a clear teſtimony for the immortality of the ſoul, and for a better life after this: without which aſſurance, we might ſay with the Apoſtle, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we muſt die, 1 Cor. 15.32. Why this doctrine was not ſo fully revealed in thoſe days, hath been ſaid upon Pſal. 37. to which we muſt often refer, that we be not forced to repeat the ſame thing often. However, divers paſſages there be, even in the Pſalms, out of which the ſame may be proved: but not any ſo clear, but that they may be, and are by the generality of Interpreters, that profeſs to be moſt literal, and eo nomine are of beſt account, if not eluded, (for it is not their purpoſe, I ſuppoſe) yet I know not how turned another way, ſo that little can be made of them, to convince a gainſayer. Even that Pſal. 17.15. As for me, I will behold thy face, &c. though the words ſeem to me as direct, as any need to be, by reaſon of the antitheſis there, as well as here; (of which ſee more there) yet there be, that have not that apprehenſion of them that we have. But, God be thanked that we finde not any ſuch oppoſition here: all men ſeem to be very well ſatiſfied, that theſe words muſt be underſtood of eternal life. Indeed the antitheſis here is ſo plain between thoſe whom death hath power over, (power over ſo far, as to end all their happineſs) and thoſe whom it hath not, who therefore comfort themſelves in that hope, and oppoſe it to all that wicked and ungodly men can boaſt of in this world: ſo plain, I ſay, that either we muſt ſay there be no words, by which this hope of eternal life can be expreſſed, or grant that it is here: Yet will I not preſs them ſo far, as to binde any man to believe, that the reſurrection of the body was hereby intended. It is the opinion of many; and it is not improbable: but I will content my ſelf with that which cannot be denied, That eternal life and happineſs is here oppoſed to the worldly proſperity of faithleſs wicked men.

from the power of the grave] Heb. from the hand of the grave.

for he ſhall receive me] So it is in the Hebrew, by the future, he ſhall, &c. but becauſe it is ordinary with them by a Future to underſtand a Preſent, ſome tranſlate the words, quia ſuſcepit me; that is, ſay they, becauſe he hath favoured me; or, taken a liking to me: and this to be the ground of his alledged hope, and confidence, Gods voluntary grace and favour. The doctrine is good: but it may do as well, to keep to the Future, for he ſhall receive me; as a further explication or proſecution of this excellent doctrine; to this effect, That whenſoever his fatal hour ſhall come, that body and ſoul muſt part, God will receive his Spirit, Act. 7.15. Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit. See alſo Pſ. 73.24. and afterwards receive me to glory.

V. 17. For when he dieth, he ſhall carry nothing away] Job 27.19.

V. 18. whiles he lived] Heb. in his life.

and men will praiſe thee] Flatterers praiſe them that live in delights and pleaſures.

V. 19. He ſhall go] Heb. The ſoul ſhall go.

He ſhall go to the generation of his fathers] And not paſs the term appointed for life, Job 14.5.

they ſhall never ſee light] Both they and their fathers ſhall go out of this world, & return no more unto it, Pſ. 56.13. Job 33.28,30.

V. 20. and underſtandeth not] This verſe agreeth with ver. 12. but that there it is, בל ילין with a Lamed: non pernoctabit: abideth not; and here, ולא יבין with a Beth: which difference is ſo ſmall, that ſome have ſuſpected, that it was at firſt alike in both places, and that the alteration hath been ſince. There might be more ground for this ſuſpicion, were all the difference in thoſe two letters onely, which indeed alone make all the difference of ſenſe; but there is a further and greater difference in the writing; בל in the 12. verſe; ולא in this: by which it appears, that that other difference did not happen by any chance. It is likely therefore, as is well obſerved by ſome, that the Pſalmiſt in the 12. verſe having abaſed the condition of man in general very low, not excluding any; that he doth of purpoſe now mitigate that harſher expreſſion, exempting thoſe, who make uſe of that reaſon and underſtanding, wherewith God hath endowed them, to improve themſelves in their better part, above the condition of brutes.

is like the beaſts that periſh] Before, in the twelfth verſe, to be like the beaſts that periſh, was, to be ſubject to mortality, as well as they: which is the condition of all men, both good and bad. Now that he hath diſtinguiſht, and ſpeaks of the wicked onely, to be like the beaſts that periſh, muſt be, to die without hope of any further good or happineſs; which is the caſe of all brutes. Or, like brutes in their life, in that they take care onely for the preſent, to fare well, and to paſs the time merrily, not conſidering what will become of their ſouls; as creatures, that had no ſouls, but what periſh with the body. But in very deed, the Pſalmiſt in this Pſalm, may ſeem to ſet out the caſe of the wicked in point of death, as no ways different from that of brutes: Like ſheep they are laid in the grave, &c. ver. 14. & 19. He ſhall go to the generation of his fathers, he ſhall never ſee light: Not that he believed ſo himſelf; but becauſe it was the common opinion then, there being no impiety in it, until the contrary was certainly and publickly revealed. See more upon Pſa. 37.1,2. Fret not thy ſelf, &c. and Pſal. 73.32. I was as a beaſt before thee.

God hath ſhined] Shewed himſelf glorious, like the ſhining ſun.

Out of Sion, the perfection of beauty] Since it hath been thought fit, that the Turkiſh (ſo called, though written in Arabick) Alcoran, a book as full of blaſphemies, in matter of Religion, as it is of ſenſleſs abſurdities, in point of humane reaſon, ſhould be communicated unto the people, in the vulgar Engliſh tongue; it will not be thought amiſs to take notice that of all the Scriptures either of the Old, or New Teſtament, there being two places eſpecially, that Mahometans take hold of, and are wont to object unto Chriſtians; this is one of them. I have lately ſeen a Letter from one of that Sect, to a Chriſtian in Rome, as I remember, (the Letter is printed) where thoſe two places are much preſſed and inſiſted upon, They quote the words of this verſe thus: God hath ſhewed out of Sion Gelilan Mahmudan; that is, a glorious, or renowned Crown. By which crown, they would have a Kingdom; and by renowned, (Mahmudan, in Arabick) Mahomet, (more properly written, Mahammed) becauſe of the affinity, or rather identity of letters, to be meant. But granting that in ſome Arabick Tranſlation of the Pſalms (which yet ſome very learned and well-verſed in theſe languages and books, having ſeen many beſides them that are printed, profeſs they have not yet met with) it were ſo found; yet what is that to the purpoſe, except in the Original Hebrew it were ſo too? where we find neither letters, nor ſenſe to that purpoſe. The words, which they preſs in the Hebrew are, מכלל־יפי In the firſt indeed, Miclal, for the letters, (but that is not it will ſerve their turn) there is affinity enough: but in the ſecond, (jophi) none at all. And yet were it ſo in very deed, even in the Original Text; what were this, to juſtifie all their impoſtures and forgeries; not to be refuted, nor maintained by caſual alluſions and affinities of bare words and letters, but by evidences of truth, reaſon, and hiſtory ?

V. 3. a fire ſhall devour before him] As when God gave his law in Mount Sinai, he appeared terrible with thunder, and tempeſt: ſo will he appear terrible to take account for the violating thereof.

or thy burnt-offerings to have been continually before me] It ſhould have been, either not to have been continually before me; that, not, being to be ſupplied here out of the firſt, I will not reprove thee, &c. according to the idiotiſm of the Hebrew, acknowledged and obſerved here by ſome of the moſt skilful in that language: or without any ſupplement at all, but to the ſame purpoſe, placing a colon after ſacrifices: thy burnt-offerings have been continually before me. Either of theſe, makes the ſenſe clear, and keeps to the propriety of the words. As for the matter it ſelf, the reproving or ſlighting of ſacrifices, and oppoſing to them. or ſubſtituting in ſtead of them, ſpiritual ſervice (the chief ſubject and aim of the whole Pſalm) See before upon Pſal.40.6. Mine ears haſt thou opened.

and caſteſt my words behinde thee] Yet he was ſaid before, to declare his ſtatutes, &c. They are therefore ſaid to caſt the words, or, the word of God, behinde them: who though they ſhew much affection to it, and love to talk of it, and will go many miles, perchance, to hear one Sermon; yet apply it not to their hearts, (which is the true uſe of it) to amend their lives by it, but pleaſe themſelves in their own conceits, as though they were the onely Elect People of God; and upon that confidence freely cenſure and condemn others, whether good or bad, (not ſparing them that are of neareſt relation, brothers, &c. verſe 20. Thou ſitteſt, &c.) becauſe they make not ſo much outward ſhew, or refuſe to joyn with them in their affected ways; though they ſhew the power of godlineſs in their lives and converſations, much more then themſelves. So Ezek.33. 30, 31, &c. Alſo thou Son of man, &c. And lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely ſong, of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not. If therefore we admit not the word of God into our hearts, (which will appear by our lives) though we go never ſo far to pleaſe our ears with it, we may truly be ſaid to hate and reject it, becauſe we make not that uſe of it, for which it is intended.

V. 18. When] Or, Seeing when.

when thou ſaweſt a thief, &c.] Though the Pſalmiſt inſiſt upon certain crimes, as Theft, and Adultery, in this; perfidiouſneſs and fraudulency, in the next; and laſtly, uncharitableneſs in judgements, and malicious detraction, in the 20. verſe; as ſigns and evidences of hypocritical hearing, or preaching: Yet we muſt not ſo underſtand him, as though thoſe particulars did all belong unto all that are ſuch. He inſiſts in theſe, exempli cauſa; as we ſay: in ſome for all, or ſome others, (whether more, or fewer to be found in one man) that are of the ſame nature. That therefore we muſt gather from his words, is; that we may know ſuch by their deeds and actions, whether theft, adultery, murther, falſe dealing, cheating, drunkenneſs, lying, ſwearing, and the like; ſo contrary to God, and all godlineſs, declared unto us by the word of God, that they that pretend to godlineſs and the word of God, and yet do ſuch things, muſt needs be thought, either wilfully, to make a mock of that which they pretend to love and honour; or to be extreamly blinded and deluded by the Devil, that they ſhould not ſee, what of it ſelf is ſo plain to be ſeen and underſtood: but this eſpecially, of open theft and adultery, mentioned in this verſe. For as for diſhoneſty, and falſe dealing in a cunning way, under pretences of love, and the like; and uncharitableneſs in cenſures and judgements; and malicious detraction: in the following verſes; theſe things are very ordinarily to be found in all, or moſt of them, that are great pretenders, (but hypocritically) to the word of God. Hitherto in the explication of theſe verſes, from ver.16. But unto the wicked, &c. I have followed Expoſitors of beſt account; (as Calvin for one) who make hypocrites, ſuch as make great ſhew of piety by external performances, (as all kinde of ceremonies in general;) but eſpecially by their zeal to Prædicationem Verbi, (that is, Sermons,) to be the men aimed at. Indeed if hypocrites in general, the words will infer, that ſuch eſpecially are intended, that make a great brag of Gods word, and ſhew much zeal that way. But when I well conſider the original words, I cannot abſolutely conclude, whether hypocrites, that make a ſhew of godlineſs, or openly profane men, are intended. Such I mean, who though they knew themſelves and their lives to be bad, neither did much hide it, or were much aſhamed of it; yet hoped well for all that, as Jews born, Abrahams children, and upon that account, having right to the Covenant of Grace; heirs of the Promiſes, viſible members of the Church, and the like. See Jer.chap. 7. 1,2,3. to ver.17. It is likely there be among Chriſtians too, too many, who though they indulge themſelves all manner of liberty, and make little or no conſcience of their ways; yet flatter themſelves that they are Chriſtians, and love the Church, and hope to finde mercy: which if they do, (without repentance and amendment) the word of God muſt be falſe, Mat.7.22,23. & 1 Cor.6. 9, 10. Be not deceived, &c. often repeated (in the ſame, or the like words) in other places. If we follow this ſenſe, to declare my ſtatutes, will be, to boaſt of my law, (by a ſpecial favour delivered unto the Jews onely, the ſeed of Abraham, not made common to all nations) and gladly to talk of any Covenant, as the Circumciſion, &c. as though that could profit thee any thing, as long as, &c. This in the Apoſtles expreſſion, (which is very elegant and proper,) is ἐπαναπαύεσθαι τῷ νόμῳ, to reſt in the law, Rom.2.17. that whole paſſage of the Apoſtle, from v.17. to 23. containing a full explication of the words of the Pſalmiſt, taken in this ſenſe.

Title.

when Nathan the Prophet came unto him] 2 Sam. 12. 1. and 11.2. To reprove him, becauſe he had committed ſo horrible ſins, and lain in the ſame ſo long without repentance.

Verſ. 1. ACcording to the multitude] He is very earneſt, as knowing, that the act of forgiving of ſins, is an act of greateſt mercy, yea and power. It was more to ſay, (to ſay it, authoritative; that is, by warrant of ones proper power and authority, and not by way of delegation, and declaration onely, as Gods Miniſters; though that too be a great power:) Son, thy ſins be forgiven thee; then to ſay, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and walk, Matth. 9. 5, 6. With that zeal therefore that we would pray (and greater, if it be poſſible) for deliverance from temporal afflictions and extremities of higheſt nature: we ſhould pray for forgivenneſs of ſins, of great ſins eſpecially; as a thing both of greater conſequence, to us; and of greater difficulty, in it ſelf, but that, to God all things are equally poſſible. But few are ſo ſenſible of their ſins, as they are of any worldly croſs; and accordingly they carry themſelves in their prayers and devotions. They have good ground to hope well of themſelves, that finde it otherwiſe in themſelves.

V. 2. Waſh me thorowly from mine iniquity] My ſins ſtick ſo faſt to me, that I have need of ſome ſingular kinde of waſhing. He alludes to the legal waſhings. He would not onely be forgiven for what is paſſed, but ſo throughly cleanſed, and ſo purified in his Soule, that he might not relapſe either unto the ſame, or any other ſins, of what kinde ſoever; to wound his conſcience before God, and to incurre his juſt wrath and judgements again. He alludes to the legal waſhings. Then may be an intimation alſo of the greatneſſe of his ſin in the word throughly; as needing more then ordinary waſhing.

V. 3. For I acknowledge my tranſgreſsions] Upon this acknowledgement, which includes a promiſe and ſerious purpoſe of amendment, he grounds his plea for mercy: becauſe He that covereth his ſins, ſhall not proſper, but whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy, Prov. 28. 13. And ſo 1 Joh. 1. 9. If we confeſſe our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſſe.

V. 4. Againſt thee, thee onely have I ſinned] Some interpret theſe words, as ſpoken by David by way of aggravation, or exaggeration of his faults; as if he intended to ſay, That it was not the judgements of the world that he ſtood upon, whether accuſing, or excuſing; but that which troubled him, was, that he had ſo grievouſly offended God; ſo good a God, whoſe juſt indignation he had incurred; and ſo juſt a God, whoſe righteous judgement, though all men ſhould acquit him, he knew he could not avoid. Others more ſimply, that he ſpeaks as a King, who though he were not, as a King, lyable to the puniſhment of the Law, yet he was accountable to God: ſo moſt ancients, and ſome modern. Others again there be, who alſo follow the ſimple meaning, but to another ſenſe; Againſt thee onely have I ſinned: becauſe I have uſed great ſecrecy in the fault, that it might not be known unto men; both in the matter of adultery, and in that of the murther; as appears by the Hiſtory. Whence it is that Nathan tells him from God, For thou didſt it ſecretly; but I will do this before all Iſrael, and before the Sun, 2 Sam. 12. 12. Nevertheleſs, it appears even by that which follows there, ver, 14. Howbeit, becauſe by this deed, thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of God to blaſpheme, &c. that the matter was come abroad; and withall, (which I would have well obſerved, becauſe it may lead us perchance to the right meaning, as much as any thing that hath been ſaid) how much God (if we may ſo ſpeak) did ſuffer in theſe foul acts of his ſervant David. Why might not then David, out of a zeal to God and his glory meerly, without any regard to himſelf, ſay, That nothing grieved him ſo much, neither matter of ſhame and reproach from men; nor matter of puniſhment upon himſelf from God; as that his ſin did ſo much redound upon God; or in Nathans (or Gods) own words, that he had given ſo great occaſion to the enemies of God to blaſpheme. This would do very well, I think, if it will as well agree with that which follows; whereof we ſhall conſider when we come to it. But in the mean time, taking it for granted, that Davids purpoſe was (which this very repetition of words, Againſt thee, thee onely, &c. doth argue) to aggravate his ſin: by which I do not underſtand hyperbolically to amplifie; but truly and feelingly to ſet out the hainouſneſs of it: this therefore grounding upon as granted, in further purſuance of the ſenſe, I would have the words of old Eli well-conſidered of, 1 Sam. 2. 24, 25. Nay my ſons, ſaid he, for it is no good report that I hear: ye make the Lords people to tranſgreſſe. If one man ſin againſt another, the Jugde ſhall judge him: but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? His meaning was not, that their ſin, abſolutely and preciſely, was to God onely; for it was publick, and could not but offend many in divers reſpects; but to God, or againſt God, more immediately. Now Davids ſin was againſt God more immediately; firſt, as he was a King: I will not diſpute about matter of right, how far above, or under the Law, as Kings, &c. which I know would be ſubject to much oppoſition: but de facto, as we ſay; that ſo, a King may do much, which others cannot, or dare not; I think will eaſily be granted. Proud Jezabel knew what ſhe ſaid, when ſhe upbraided her husband for his tenderneſſe about Naboths vineyard, Doſt thou now govern the kingdom of Iſrael? 1 King. 21. 7. Again, David hoped to carry the matter ſo cloſely, that it ſhould not have been known. It appears that he did endeavoor, what he could, to conceal it. Now in either of theſe two caſes, when the fear, or knowledge of man is removed, and that a man thinks himſelf ſecure, as to the world; for a man then freely to indulge himſelf a liberty of ſinning, is a high provocation, and to make a practice of it, would argue a deſperate caſe. Nothing can be more contrary to either true conſcience, or true generoſity. Laſtly, as it was a ſin againſt God more properly, whilſt it was concealed; ſo when it came to be publick, it proved a ſin againſt God too, as properly, though in another reſpect. For David, being ſuch a one as he was, ſo approved by God, and of ſuch exemplary piety abroad; piety and religion muſt needs ſuffer very much in this his ſo foul and ſo notorious a fact. Te make the Lords people to tranſgreſſe, was that Eli chiefly objected to his ſons: and that occaſion was given to the enemies of God to blaſpheme, was part of Nathans charge (as we ſaw before) unto David. In all theſe reſpects then, David might well ſay, Againſt thee, thee onely, &c.

that thou mighteſt be juſtified, &c. and be clear when thou judgeſt] There be, who making a parentheſis of the former verſe, (For I acknowledge, &c.) and the former part of this, (Againſt thee, thee onely——in thy ſight:) joyn theſe words, that thou mighteſt, &c. with the firſt and ſecond verſes; as though he intended to put God in minde of his goodneſſe, and of his gracious promiſes made to himſelf; that God would be as good as his word, &c. But beſides what may be objected from the words themſelves, the laſt of this verſe. (and be clear when thou judgeſt:) it is apparent by S. Pauls inference upon them, or citation of them, Rom. 3. 4. that that cannot be the meaning. Though it might be ſaid, that S. Paul cited them by way of alluſion onely, in which caſe he might take the more liberty; which is not without example, perchance. But in very deed, Davids meaning, was S. Pauls meaning; and it will fit the context here, as well as there. That which both intended, is, to give all the glory unto God; which is beſt done, by man, when man freely acknowledgeth his own wretchedneſſe and ſinfulneſſe; and pronounceth at the ſame time, perfect truth and goodneſſe to belong unto God onely. Hence it is, that ſinners are properly ſaid to glorifie God, when they freely and fully confeſſe their ſins; as is ſhewed before in the beginning of theſe Notes, upon that part of the Title; Of Pſalms. The very Heathens would ſay upon this occaſion of mans infirmity, that it was the priviledge or prerogative (Θεὸς ἂν μόνος τοῦτο ἔχοι τὸ γέρας, in Plato; Let God alone have that ho our;) of God, to be without faults. This I conceive more probable and proper to the place, then that David (as ſome would have it) by thoſe words ſhould intend to ſay, that what puniſhment ſoever God ſhall inflict upon him, or howſoever he ſhall deal with him (whether he ſink or ſwim) yet he would have God acquitted; ſo that neither his truth (in matter of promiſes) nor his juſtice (in his retributions) ſhould upon this occaſion be, by any to be queſtioned, I think this is more about. But if any like it better, I am not againſt it. There is a difference in the words too, that may make S. Pauls quotation to differ from the Pſalmiſt, obſerved by moſt upon this Pſalm. And be clear when thou judgeſt; ſaith the Pſalmiſt, and be clear, (or mighteſt overcome: that makes no great difference,) when thou art judged; S. Paul. David, actively: Paul, paſſively. The matter may eaſily be reconciled. For at the ſame time that God doth judge, (or execute judgement upon any) he may alſo be ſaid to be judged; whilſt men paſſe their cenſures either as applauding, or diſliking his judgements. And then may he be ſaid to overcome, when judged; when men acknowledge the juſtice of his judgements. Beſides, it is well obſerved by ſome here, and proved by divers examples, that S. Paul by a ſpecial idiotiſm, (though in this particular paſſage he follow the Septuagint,) uſeth in his citations to turn many active verbs, into paſſives. But after all this, it may be ſaid, that this difference of the verbs, is rather a miſapprehenſion of Interpreters, then any real difference. For the word S. Paul uſeth is κρίνεσθαι; (καὶ νικήσῃς ἐν τῷ κρίνεσθαί σε:) which word may be taken actively, as well as paſſively: and ſo indeed rendred here by Beza; & vincas, quando tu judicas.

V. 5. I was ſhapen in iniquity] He here brings all his actual tranſgreſſions to the fountain of them, original corruption, Rom. 7. 8, &c. By this phraſe, in ſin, expreſſing that ſins poſſeſſing the whole man, Joh. 9. 34. Act. 8. 23. Eph. 2. 1. are as waters wherein a man is overwhelmed.

conceive me] Heb. warm me.

V. 6. Thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom] Moſt Interpreters, with the vulgar Latine, expreſſe it by the preterit; thou haſt manifeſted, or made known unto me, as if this too, were ſpoken by way of aggravation againſt himſelf, who after ſuch meaſure of knowledge and wiſdom, vouchſafed unto him by God, ſhould nevertheleſſe pollute himſelf with ſuch groſſe ſins. A great and juſt aggravation indeed: according to that of our Saviours, Joh. 9. 41. If ye were blinde, ye ſhould have no ſin, &c. Nevertheleſs, the Future, (as it is in the Hebrew,) may do as well: and doth agree with the former part of the verſe, rather better. Then is there truth in the inward parts, when the holineſſe of our lives, doth anſwer to the light of our underſtanding: neither can that properly be called true knowledge, or ſound wiſdom, which hath not that operation. So 1 Joh. 2. 4. He that ſaith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a lyar, and the truth is not in him. Davids words therefore include an acknowledgement of his ſin, by which the light of his underſtanding was darkned; and may be reſolved (as they are by ſome) into a prayer, that God would reſtore unto him that wiſdom, which by the prevalency of vice he had in a great meaſure forfeited; or at leaſt, eclipſed.

V. 7. Purge me with hyſſope, and I ſhall be clean] Not that David had any opinion of any external thing, as much availble to the purging of his ſoul: he knew well enough, that neither the power of hyſſope, nor any water, could reach to thoſe inward hidden parts, (the ſeat of all true wiſdom and piety,) by him mentioned in the verſe before; but becauſe hyſſope and water were appointed by the Law of God in all, or moſt ſolemn purifications and expiations, as a ſign and ſeal of inward cleanſing, (of which ſee Exod. 12 Lev. 14. Num. 19.) by the power and mercy of God: the Pſalmiſt by theſe phraſes expreſſes his faith in God, that though he be through ſin become never ſo foul and filthy; yet God is able ſpeedily (if he pleaſe) to reſtore him to his former purity and innocency. See alſo upon Pſal. 16. 17. My reins alſo.

and I ſhall be clean] Or, that I may be clean.

and I ſhall be whiter] Or, that I may be whiter. As Mal. 1. 9. that he will be gracious unto him. Heb. and he will be gracious.

V. 8. Make me to hear joy and gladneſs] He meaneth Gods comfortable mercies towards repentant ſinners.

the bones which thou haſt broken] By the bones he underſtandeth all ſtrength of ſoul and body, which by care and mourning is conſumed

V. 10. Create in me a clean heart] He confeſſeth that when Gods ſpirit is cold in us, to have it again revived, is as a new creation.

a right ſpirit] Or, a conſtant ſpirit.

V. 12. Caſt me not away from thy preſence] This was an effect of Gods utmoſt anger, Gen. 4. 16. 2 Kings 24, 20. Jer. 7. 15. and 52. 3.

V. 11. Reſtore unto me the joy of thy ſalvation :] It is a good ſign, if we fall into any great ſin, that we are ſenſible of our condition. There is good hope of them that are, though their ſin be great. As their caſe on the other ſide, is deſperate, who dare ſin with ſecurity, and think it a teſtimony of their faith, that they miſtruſt not themſelves for it. But here is a queſtion raiſed ; handled at large by ſome upon this Pſalm : Nathan the Prophet, had been with David, before this, and declared unto him from God, that his ſin was pardoned : or, that God had put away his ſin, 2 Sam. 12. 13. Why then did he make any further queſtion ? This, as is conceived, might argue ſome kind of infidelity in him. It is anſwered, that it is poſſible Nathan came to him about it, more then once, and did not ſo fully abſolve him at his firſt, though the Scripture make mention but of one coming, and for brevity, comprehend and contract all in one. And beſides, that it is not againſt the nature of Faith, to be ſolicitous, even after abſolution : and that ſuch expreſſions of a deep ſenſe and remorſe, do well become a ſinner after reconciliation, as well as before ; it being the propriety of an ingenuous heart in this caſe, the more he finds and feels God gracious and merciful unto him ; the more to be affected with the remembrance of his ſins, and paſt provocations. But beſides all this, by Nathans words that are recorded, it doth not appear that Gods pardon, delivered at that time, did extend to another world. The Lord hath put away thy ſin, thou ſhalt not dy ; ſaid Nathan. That the pardon was a general pardon, extending to the ſoul, as well as to the body, I make no queſtion ; yet if the declaration of it were not more expreſs and particular, David might well pray for further aſſurance, before he could think himſelf ſecure.

uphold me with thy free ſpirit] The Hebrew may be tranſlated, either ſpiritu ſpontaneo ; with a free ſpirit : meaning, that God would give him grace freely and willingly in all things to ſubmit unto his will : as the word נדיבה is uſed, Exod. 35. 21, &c. Or as here, thy free ſpirit ; that is, the Spirit of adoption, Rom. 8 15, 16. and where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17. Some interpret it, ſpiritu liberali ; id eſt, liberaliter in me effuſo, with a free ſpirit, that is, ſay they, a Spirit (or gifts of the Spirit) freely powred upon me. This alſo, the words will bear : but I like either of the former better.

V. 13. thy waies] He promiſeth to endeavour, that others by his example may turn to God.

V. 14. Deliver me from blood guiltineſs] From the murder of Uriah, and others, that were ſlain with him, 1 Sam. 11. 17.

blood] Heb. bloods.

V. 15. open thou thy lips] by giving me occaſion to praiſe thee, when thou ſhalt forgive my ſins.

V. 16. For thou deſireſt not ſacrifice] See before upon Pſal. 40. 6. mine ears haſt thou opened, &c. But ſome learned men think that David hath another meaning in theſe words ; to wit, That if God had appointed any ſacrifice in his Law, as he had done for many other things, ſo for expiation of either murder, or adultery, he would have given it him ; but ſince he had ordained none, ſave only a broken ſpirit and a contrite heart, he hoped God would not deſpiſe it, but accept that alone for a ſacrifice in this caſe, without which, ſacrifice, in no caſe, is accepted. So a learned Author of our own, in a late Treatiſe inſcribed, The reverence of Gods Houſe : which whether he had out of Grotius, I know not : but I find that it is Grotius his opinion upon this place ; by whom alſo we are referred for further proof, to his Book, De ſatisfactione, capite de ſacrificiis expiatoriis.

elſe would I give it] Or, that I ſhould give it.

V. 17. The ſacrifices of God are a broken ſpirit] Eſay 57. 15. and 66. 2. Pſal. 34. 18. A heart wounded for ſin, and ſeeking to God for mercy in faith.

V. 18. Do good in thy good pleaſure unto Zion] He prayeth for the whole Church, becauſe through his ſin it was in danger of Gods Judgement.

in] Or, for.

build thou the walls of Jeruſalem.] That is, with beſt Expoſitors, taking the words proverbially, or metaphorically ; protect. defend, and maintain. So the Hebrews uſe the word building. Whether therefore the walls of Jeruſalem were up, or down, perfect, or imperfect, (which ſome would infer upon theſe words,) he might ſo ſpeak.

V. 19. with the ſacrifices of righteouſneſs] By ſacrifices of righteouſneſs, I underſtand here, with beſt interpreters, legal ſacrifices, he had before declared, what ſacrifices they were that God chiefly required and delighted in v. 15. Lord open thou, &c. He had ſpoken very peremptorily, For thou deſireſt not ſacrifice, &c. as elſewhere upon the ſame occaſion, whereof ſee upon Pſal. 40. 6. Mine ears, &c. Now he doth as it were recall, or rather expound himſelf : So wilt thou be pleaſed, &c. as if he ſaid ; care being firſt taken for thoſe things that are chief, and without which all oblations and ſacrifices are rather offenſive, then pleaſing ; to wit, hearts ſorrow for our ſins, and a ſerious purpoſe of amendment ; truſt in God, &c. (which things he had largely inſiſted upon in the former verſes ;) So may I, or any other in my caſe hope, that other ſacrifices, ſuch as God himſelf, for a time, had preſcribed and appointed, may be ſeaſonable and acceptable. Theſe ought ye to have done, &c. Matt. 23: 23. As for that phraſe, Sacrifices of righteouſneſs, ſee upon Pſal. 23. 3. He leadeth me. But Pſalm 4. 6. we had ſacrifices of righteouſneſs, in antoher ſenſe, as is there noted which is no wonder. It is a common obſervation among Interpreters. that the ſame words, and phraſes, are ſometimes taken in very different ſenſes : yea ſometimes in one and the ſame chapter ; as elſewhere hath been ſaid and ſhewed by ſome example. However, even there, this ſenſe is followed by ſome ; as if David directed his ſpeech to ſuch of the people, as yet ſtood in oppoſition to him : inviting them to ſubmit, that ſo they might, under him, and his government, have part in the Legal ſervice. But I ſtill like better of the other ſenſe, in that place. See then upon verſe 4. and 5.

Verſe 1. O Mighty man !] O Doeg, which makeſt uſe of that power thou haſt under Saul, not to do good, but to do miſchief ; contrary to God, whoſe conſtant goodneſs, even towards ſinners, (in many things) ſhould be our example ; and the neerer we come to him in power, ſo ſhould we in goodneſs alſo ; who daily maketh his Sun to ariſe upon the good, and the evil ; whoſe long forbearance inviteth all men, even greateſt offenders, unto repentance ; O thou mighty man ; how ill doth wickedneſſe and crueltie become ſo great a place ? And again, the goodneſs of God, &c. though thou doeſt encourage thy ſelf, that the Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard ; Pſal. 94. 7. becauſe God, for ſecret reaſons. hath ſuffered ſome of thy bloody deſigns to take effect ; yet for all this I ſhall not ceaſe to truſt in the Lord, and his goodneſs, God hath not forgotten to be gratious, &c. yea this very cruelty of thine, thou mighty man, ſhall commend the goodneſs of God unto me ; and make me the more earneſtly to caſt my himſelf upon him : Surely the wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, Pſal. 76, 10

For though it be not altogether the ſame word (גֶּבֶר here : גִּבּוֹר there) that we had before, verſe 1. yet both are from one root, which ſignifieth to be ſtrong and mighty : ſo that it is very probable that the ſame thing is intended in both places ; and it makes the ſpeech more emphatical : Lo this is the man (the mighty man) how great and mighty, in his own conceit, and in the eyes of the world ; but very lately ; how wretched and miſerable ? now ; how much lower ? that is the loweſt, now ; that was, a little before, ſo high, and ſo terrible ?

For it is more probable that David, ſeeing what had happened to ſo many others in his cauſe, and for his ſake, through Doegs malicious information, and Sauls cruelty: reflecteth here upon himſelf, and praiſeth God (though very ſenſible of what others had ſuffered) for his own deliverance, ſo much the more to be regarded, and eſteemed, becauſe ſo many had ſuffered for it.

Mahalath] Pſalm 88. tit. A winde inſtrument. See notes on Pſal. 5. tit.

Verſe 1. THe fool hath ſaid in his heart] Pſal. 10. 4. & 14. 1, &c. This Pſalm agreeth with Pſalm 14. as Pſalm 57. (part of it, from v. 7.) with Pſal. 108. to verſe 6. and Pſal. 60. from verſe 5. That thy beloved, to the end; with 108. from ver. 6. To the end, and Pſalm 70. with Pſal. 40. from verſe 13. Of ſome petty differences of ſome words and letters, how they might happen, ſee what is ſaid upon Pſal. 18. I will love thee, &c. compared with 2 Sam. 22. The greateſt difference here, is in v. 5. compared with 5. & 6. of Pſalm 14. It is likely that it paſſed twice through Davids hands, upon ſeveral occaſions; and that he fitted it to the occaſion, as he thought beſt himſelf.

There is no God] Whereas no regard is had of honeſty, or diſhoneſty, of virtue, nor of vice, there the Prophet pronounceth, that the people have no God.

there is none that doth good] Rom. 3. 10.

V. 2. That did underſtand, that did ſeek God] Whereby he ſheweth that all knowledge is unprofitable, that brings us not to ſeek God. See upon Pſal. 27. 8. Seek you my face, &c.

V. 3. no not one] See upon Pſal. 14. 2. if there were any. To which may be added, Eccleſ. 7. 20. For there is not a juſt man upon earth, that doth good and ſinneth not. That is, no man, no juſt man, in common reputation, ſo conſtant in goodneſs, but is ſometimes exorbitant: or no action of man, how juſt and good ſoever, ſo entirely good, but if ſtrictly examined, may be found defective, in ſome circumſtance: and therefore no man upon earth abſolutely juſt before God.

V. 4. Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge?] David pronounceth Gods vengeance againſt cruel Governours, who having charge to defend and preſerve Gods people, do moſt cruelly devour them.

V. 5. were they in great fear] Heb. they feared a fear.

where no fear was] God put a ſpirit of fear in them, when no man ſought to hurt them, Lev. 26. 17, 36. Deut. 28. 65. Job 15. 21. Prov. 28. 1. So Saul was afraid of David. But becauſe it is well obſerved by ſome learned Interpreters, that this doth not ſeem ſo well to agree with the ſcope of the Pſalmiſt; to wit, to denounce unto ſuch wicked offenders, meer panick fears, accompanied with no real hurt: I think therefore that Aben Ezra (a learned Rabbin) his interpretation deſerveth well to be taken into conſideration, who makes the meaning of the words (there being no more in the Hebrew then thus: They ſhall fear with a fear: or, greatly be afraid: (no fear is, or was.] to be this: they ſhall be taken with ſuch a fear, to which never was the like before, that is, as great as may be: by fear, underſtanding the objects themſelves; great evils, and unuſual plagues; ſuch a fear and fright, as is deſcribed Rev. 6 15, 16, 17. and elſewhere: The ſaid Aben ezra brings a place of Eſay for confirmation of this interpretation, where he conceives that ſuch a word, as ſimilis, or par, muſt alſo be ſupplyed. But that place is doubtful; and otherwiſe interpreted by others, However, it is ſure enough that the ſcriptures afford ſtore of examples, where ſometimes the adjective, ſometimes the ſubſtantive, and ſometimes the verb is to be ſupplyed, to make the ſenſe perfect This tranſlation and interpretation of the words is followed by ſome of the beſt of late interpreters. However, without any ſuch ſupplement, we need not fly to thoſe panick fears, to make ſenſe of the words: where no fear is: that is, where they can ſee no juſt ground of fear, but in their greateſt ſecurity: (as hath been ſaid upon Pſal. 14. 5 already:) which is no ſmall aggravation of their calamity, that it ſhall be ſudden, without any foregoing ſuſpition, or apprehenſion of it in them: which could they have foreſeen, they might perchance, if not have prevented, totally; by ſeaſonable repentance: yet have leſned in ſome meaſure, by ſome kind of preparation againſt it, and ſuch means, as worldly wiſdome doth prompt and afford in that caſe.

God hath ſcattered the bones] Be the enemies power never ſo great or the danger ſo fearful, yet God delivereth his in due time. when the Ziphims came and ſaid to Saul, Doth not David hide himſelf with us?] 1 Sam. 23. 19. & 26. 1.

Verſe 1. BY thy name] Pſal. 118. 10, 11, 12. All nations, &c. It is very frequent in the ſcriptures to put the name of God, for his power, and ſometimes for God himſelf.

For his power, becauſe when men (the faithful eſpecially) call upon him, by his Name; that is, as he ought to be called upon; then is the proper time: for God to ſhew his power. And that he doth ſo, commonly; the Pſalmiſt declareth at large, Pſalm 107. thoroughout the whole Pſalm: but eſpecially in theſe words, Then they cried unto the Lord, &c. verſe 6 13 19. 28, And ſometimes, I ſaid for God himſelf, or elſewhere is obſerved. See upon Pſal. 9. 10, that know thy Name. One reaſon, among others, may be, becauſe all the knowledge we have of God, may be called a knowledge of his Name, rather then of his Nature.

V. 3. ſtrangers are riſen up againſt me] He called the Ziphims, ſtrangers; an odious word among the Hebrews, as who ſhould ſay, heathens, infidels. Who yet were Jewes, of the tribe of Juda; ſoe called from the name of the Cisie, (ſome ſay there were two of that name) which they inhabited, as the city might have its name from ſome, either mountain, or deſert called Ziphi. But why called here Strangers by David? ſome think becauſe they had apoſtatized from the true faith, and were become Idolaters. Such indeed might very well be ſo called; and as certain it is that the Jewes or Iſraelites in general, did often deſerve that title by their frequent apoſtaſies into Idolatrous worſhip: which are recorded in the hiſtory of the Bible. But of thoſe Ziphims we find no ſuch thing particularly noted or recorded, which certainly would not have been omitted (at this time eſpecially of Davids flight, and converſation among them) had there been any ſuch thing. Their opinion therefore is moſt probable, who by ſtrangers, underſtand inhumane, cruel, perfidious, as bad as any profeſt heathens and idolaters, as the Apoſtle 1 Tim. 5. 8. worſe than an infidel. So, ſtrange children, Pſalm 144. 7. Neginoth] See notes on Pſalm 4. tit.

Verſe 1. HIde not thy ſelf from my ſupplication] There be that make a difference here between prayer, and ſupplication, as if David by prayer required juſtice againſt his enemies; and by ſupplication; favour at the hands of God. It is true that the Hebrew word תפלתי here tranſlated prayer, cometh from a radix, that ſignifieth both to judge. and to pray: the reaſon whereof may be (if reaſon muſt be given for words, which indeed if in any language, may beſt be done in the Hebrew tongue) becauſe in former times both among the Jewes, and Gentiles (all, or moſt) it belonged unto the ſame, both to judge, and to pray, the ſame, whether firſt born or others; being for the moſt part, Princes (or governours) whoe alſo were Prieſts. Another reaſon may be, becauſe as all other ſerious things, ſo judgement eſpecially, which properly belongs to God onely, ſhould begin by prayer; which I believe, we ſhal find, if we ſhould make a buſineſs of it, to have been obſerved even among heathens. This for the verb which as we ſaid, doth ſignifie both; but as for the ſubſtantive תפלה, I do not find, by any uſe of it (by which words ought to be examined) in the Scripture, that it hath any reference unto juſtice or judgement. By Pſalm 143, verſe 1. Hear my prayer, O Lord, &c. it ſhould rather be otherwiſe. For having ſaid, Hear my prayer, O Lord, give ear to my ſupplications; in thy faithfulneſs anſwer me, and in thy righteouſneſs; he preſently adds, And enter not into judgement with thy ſervant, for in thy ſight, &c. This very book of Pſalms, is inſcribed, and ſo was the Houſe of God, by the ſame word: the one, in the original, The book of prayers: the other, The houſe of prayer. Eſay 56. 7. Neither, as I conceive, with any reference to either juſtice, or enemies; but to Gods mercy; though it may ſo fall out, that Gods juſtice, and the injuſtice of enemies may be the ſubject of ſome prayers. But there is ſtore of other places, where the ſaid word is uſed, which might be produced againſt this obſervation, if need were, We therefore with all, or moſt interpreters, take prayer and ſupplication here for the ſame thing; variety of words being uſed, to make the ſpeech, (as uſually) more earneſt and emphatical. As for ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, 1 Tim. 2. 1. Whether, and how to be diſtinguiſhed, we meddle not with it here, becauſe we will not ſo far digreſs.

V. 2. I mourn in my complaint, and make a noiſe] The Heb. word ואהימה (from whence comes the Latine rudo:) here tranſlated I mourn, implies a very loud crying: by ſome expreſſed, ululo: which though according to the proper temper and breeding of ſome men, may ſeem not well to become ſuch a man, of that rank, and valour, as David was: in all things of this nature that belong to outward behaviour, we muſt diſtinguiſh of both times and nations; ſome things in that kind being very tolerable, nay commendable in ſome countries, in men, as well as women, (as of dauncing, particularly, is well obſerved by an antient Latin Hiſtorian) which in others would be judged either baſe, or uncivil. Achilles is deſcribed in Homer wallowing himſelf in aſhes, pulling his heires, and weeping bitterly for the death of his friend, which perchance ſome other man, not pretending in the leaſt degree, to Achilles his valour and courage in other things, would not think he could do without ſhaming himſelf for ever, and incurring the reproach of a very poor ſpirit. Yet ſure enough it is, that although conſtancy and reſolution well become any man; yet ſometimes great paſſions are incidental to men that are very magnanimous.

V. 3. Becauſe of the voice of the enemy] For the threatnings of my adverſaries.

they caſt iniquity upon me] They have defamed me as a wicked perſon: or, they have imagined my deſtruction.

and in wrath they hate me,] They furiouſly perſecute me, or proſecute their hatred againſt me. A man may hate, or be an adverſary, as the Hebrew word might alſo be tranſlated; (and is Pſal. 38. 20,) and yet not be furious.

V. 4. my heart is ſore pained within me] Like a woman in travail: for ſo the word ſignifies.

V. 5. horrour hath overwhelmed me] There was no part of him, that was not aſtoniſhed with extreme fear.

overwhelmed me] Heb, covered me.

V. 6. O that I had wings like a dove, &c.] Whether Doves, as Plinie doth avouch, of all birds be of quickeſt flight or no, I know not; neither do I think it ſo probable, that David had reſpect unto that: it is enough that they are; birds ordinarily known; and as commonly known to fly very ſwiftly. It is obſerved to be a melancholick bird too, and its ordinary tune, or tone, wherein it is heard, hath ſomewhat mournful in it: Eſay 38. 14. and 59. 11. I did mourn as a dove, &c. and this was enough to make David (in that caſe he was in) to think of a dove ſooner than of any other bird. But I find that others beſides David have uſed the ſimilitude of a dove, to expreſs a quick flight: φύγεν ἠΰτε πέλεια, &c. Hom. il. φ'.

V. 7. wilderneſs] Rev. 12. 14.

V. 8. from the windy ſtorm] From the fury and violence of my enemies.

divide their tongues] That is, (as words, are often taken for deeds) divide and confound their counſels; that ſo divided, and contrary the one to the other, they may not prevail in their wickedneſs; or wicked deſigns. Haply, this phraſe and manner of ſpeech might have its beginning from what hapned at the building of the Tower of Babel.

V. 10. miſchief alſo and ſorrow are in the midſt of it] all laws and good orders are broken, and onely vice and diſſolution reigneth.

V. 11. Wickedneſs is in the midſt thereof] Heb. wickedneſſes: that is, abundance of wickedneſs.

V. 18. for there were many with me] Or, for with many they were fighting with me; or againſt me, Pſal. 94. 16.

V. 19. Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God] Or, with whom alſo there be no changes, yet they fear not God. If changes be referred to their temporal eſtates and welfare; as Job 10. 17. (it is the ſame word there, as here חליפות) changes and war are againſt me: then, according to the firſt Tranſlation, becauſe, &c. a reaſon is given of their perſeverance in wickedneſs, and contempt of God, to wit, their conſtant and un-interrupted worldly proſperity. See Deut. 8. 12, 13, &c. Leſt when thou haſt eaten and art full, &c. Therefore David elſewhere praiſeth God, that he had known adverſity, It is good for me that I have been afflicted, &c. Pſalm 119. 71. and 67. Before I was afflicted, &c. and the Apoſtle Heb. 12. 8. inferreth, that they that are left without chaſtiſement, are baſtards, and not ſons. Or, according to the ſecond, with whom ——— yet, &c. it is a great aggravation of their impenitency, that notwithſtanding ſo much goodneſs vouchſafed unto them, they ſhould continue ſo unthankful, as to requite ſo ill; or ſo ſtupid and unſenſible, as not to acknowledge the author. But if changes be referred, as by many, to the ſoul; then the meaning is, that through long uſe and continuance of ſinning, they are through Gods juſt judgement, become altogether obdurate and inflexible: and therefore no wonder, if nothing work upon them to their converſion. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the Leopard his ſpots? then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed to do evil, Jer. 13. 23. But this changes, might alſo have another meaning. The Grecians uſe to ſay, στρεπταὶ φρένες ἐσθλῶν, that the minds, or hearts, of good men are changeable: their meaning is, that good men are merciful. Quò quiſque eſt major, magis eſt placabilis ira: Et faciles motus mens generoſa capit: as the Latine Poet expreſſes it. He may therefore ſay, that they ſhew by their cruel unmercifulneſs, that they have no fear, or ſenſe of God at all. Elſe they would fear him, whoſe mercy themſelves ſtood in ſo much need of; and conſider that they, whom they ſo fiercely perſecute, are his creatures, as well as they.

V. 20. He hath put forth his hands] I did not provoke him, but was at peace with him, yet he made war againſt me.

V. 23. bloody and deceitful men] Heb. men of bloods and deceit.

bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their days] They ſhall dye in the flower of their age, who by the courſe of nature might live twice ſo long, Job 15. 32, 33. Prov. 10. 27. Pſal. 37 38. As by wickedneſs, ſo by folly, and careleſneſs, a man may haſten his death; and dy before his time: in which caſe nevertheleſs, in juſtification of their own, or other mens willfull folly, or careleſneſs, many will be apt to ſay, that his or their time was come: which is fooliſh and impious.

bloody and deceitful men] We may take the words ſeverally for, neither bloody, nor deceitful men: untimely deaths being denounced unto both elſewhere, as to the bloody, notoriouſly, in divers places, ſo to the fraudulent and deceitful; Pſal. 34 12. 13. What man is he, &c. and elſewhere. Nevertheleſs, it is more likely that both words are here intended of one, who is both perfidious, (a great aggravation of cruelty) and cruel, as may be gathered from verſe 21. The words of his mouth, &c. See alſo Pſal. 140 11. an evil ſpeakers, &c.

Philiſtines took him in Gath] 1 Sam, 21. 11.

Verſe 1. MAn would ſwallow me up] The fierceneſs of our enemies is an inducement to God to haſten our deliverance, rance, and to appear for us; when we can plead nothing elſe for our ſelves. God is an enemy to all violence, and it is one of his titles, to be the defender of thoſe, that have no other defence. All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord who is like unto thee, who delivereſt the poor from him, &c. Pſal. 35. 10. Yea, though our cauſe be good, and God himſelf hath given us the beſt of our enemy, yet to take the utmoſt of what we might by way of juſt revenge or reſentment; is not good for us; as neither to triumph over much, Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, &c. Prov. 24. 17, 18. See there.

V. 2. O thou moſt High] Having mentioned oppreſſion in the verſe below, we may well conceive, that by this expreſſion here, O thou moſt high, he doth put God in mind of his juſtice: for which ſee upon Pſalm 7. 7. for their ſakes return thou on high. To which may be added, Pſalm 92. 8. But thou Lord art moſt high for evermore: ſpeaking there of the preſent proſperity of the wicked, and Gods future judgements, verſe 7. and 9. See Job 31. 23. For deſtruction from God was a terrour unto me, and by reaſon of his Highneſs I could not endure. Other places of Scripture might be added, which without this obſervation may be thought obſcure. The want of it here hath made ſome to deviſe another tranſlation: from on high, inſtead of, O thou moſt high, and they are put to it, to make ſenſe of it.

Mine enemies] Heb. mine obſervers.

V. 4. In God I will praiſe his word] Some conceive the order of the words to be ſomewhat inverted; as if he intended, I will praiſe God for his word: See upon pſal. 138. 2. for thou haſt magnified, &c. But I conceive them in that order we have them here, more pregnant and emphatical, repeated alſo in the ſame order, verſe 10. In God, &c. in God therefore, I take it here as intended in oppoſion to viſible hopes, or preſent appearance, as in Hab. 3. 17, 18, 19. Although the figtree ſhall not bloſſome, &c. yet in the Lord (which is the order of the Hebrew words, and would have done better in the Engliſh too, if I be not miſtaken) will I rejoice, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. The Lord, &c There is much affinity between theſe two places, if well conſidered and compared. In God, then I ſay, I will, &c. that is, although my caſe and preſent condition on every ſide ſeemeth moſt deſperate, nor any one thing doth appear whereon I can ground any hope of future amendment: yet in God I will praiſe, or glory: for the original word ſignifieth both; glory in his word, or praiſe his word: that is, praiſe him for his promiſes made unto me for my eſtabliſhment, protection, &c. whereof though there be little appearance at preſent; yet praiſe him nevertheleſs in full confidence, that what he hath promiſed, ſhal in due time (an argument of a great and vigorous faith, to God moſt acceptable) be accompliſhed. Beſides, in this very word, word, being ſpoken of God, therein an intimation of power; yea of omnipotency: very ſeaſonable to be remembred in time of ſuch extremity; where nothing but a miracle (as it were) can ſave us. By the word of the Lord, &c. For he ſpake, &c. Pſalm 33. 6. 9. And the Centurion in the Goſpel to Chriſt, ſpeak the word onely, and my ſervant ſhall be healed: Matth. 8. 8. And again pſalm 107, 20 He ſent his word, and healed them, and pſalm 147. 18. He ſendeth out his word, &c.

V. 6 They gather themſelves together) Many lay plots how to bring me to the grave.

mark my ſteps when they wait for my ſoul] Job 13. 27.

V. 7. ſhall] Or, ought.

ſhall they eſcape by iniquity?] It may be read thus. It is in vain to ſpare them. To wit, becauſe they are paſt mending, Iſa. 26. 10. Or thus, Their ſafety is iniquity: That is, they trouble others, that they may eſcape themſelves from the puniſhment of their ſins: Or, it is not fit they ſhould eſcape by their wicked courſes.

V. 8. put thou my tears into thy bottle] This expreſſion is uſed, the better to ſecure us; (which to a man in great miſery is a great comfort) that God doth take notice, very particular notice of all that we ſuffer: that every faithful ſigh and tear, (in a juſt cauſe, and in humble ſubmiſſion to him:) is regiſtred in his memory, to whom all things paſt and future, alwaies preſent: nay dear and precious unto him, every ſuch ſigh and tear, as thoſe things are unto men commonly, which are carefully kept and preſerved in bottles. But the Hebrew word נאד is properly uter (as moſt tranſlate) or a leather pot, or bottle, fit to receive liquid things. And ſome obſerve an alluſion in the words, נוד wandring, and נאד a bottle; which though they be different in writing, yet are the ſame (Nod) in pronounciation: the Scripture being full of ſuch alluſions, which (among other things) makes the original Context incomparably ſweeter to the reader, than any tranſlation can be. As for Davids wandrings here mentioned, we know by the Hiſtory that they were many, and troubleſome. Some have reckoned them (you may ſee them in Genebrard) unto twelve: to equall them with Hercules his labours, as I conceive. The Septuagint, not altogether improperly, have expreſſed my wanderings, by τὴν ζωήν μου, as if David had intended, that his life was but a perpetual wandring: or more generally, that every mans life, a godly mans eſpecially, is rather a pilgrimage, than a ſtation, or ſettled abode. And becauſe I have mentioned the Septuagint, and given occaſion perchance to my reader to turn to them; leſt he find himſef puzzled, (which he may very well except he be well verſed in them, and acquainted in their way:) I will help him out before I paſs to other matter. They tranſlate: Ὁ θεὸς τὴν ζωήν μου ἐξήγγειλά σοι: ἔθου, &c. Ὁ θεὸς, is taken from the end of the former verſe. For מפרתה they did read מפרתי or מפרתיו in the firſt perſon: and for נאד in the words immediately following, it is very likely that they read נגדך ἐνώπιόν σου, But enough of them. There is very good uſe to be made of them many times: but it requires more than ordinary labour and judgement to find out the ground of all their miſtakes, or differences.

V. 10. praiſe his word] ſee verſe 4.

V. 12. Thy vows are upon me] I ſhall be bound to pay my vows of thankſgiving, as I promiſed, when I ſhall receive what I prayed for, as the bond lies heavy upon an honeſt debtor, till he have paid it.

V. 13. wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling?] As thou haſt delivered me before; ſo I doubt not but thou wilt now, 2 Cor. 1. 10. See before upon pſalm 22. v. 21. For thou haſt heard me, &c.

Al-taſchith] Or, deſtroy not. It ſhews the ſubject of the pſalm, A deprecation of perdition. Others there be, who think theſe words have reference to thoſe, 1 Samuel 26 9. Deſtroy him not, being Davids words to Abiſhai, forbidding him to kill Saul. The ſame word is there, as is here. Others again, that this was a common title, belonging to certain prayers made to be uſed in danger of Death. But ſeeing there be divers other pſalms that have this title beſides this, (as pſalm 58. 59. 75.) and all other things well weighed; that which can be ſaid of it with moſt probability, that it was the beginning of ſome known ſong, at the tune of which this was to be ſung. If this be not, we muſt ſay, as we have already ſaid more then once concerning theſe Titles in general, that they are altogether unknown, which is the confeſſion of the moſt learned both Jews and others; ſo that it is but labour loſt, to recite variety of opinions upon every one. See upon pſalm 7. and others following.

when he fled from Saul in the cave] 1 Sam. 24. 1.

Verſe 1. U*Ntill theſe calamities be overpaſt*] He compareth the afflictions which God layeth upon his children to a ſtorm that cometh and goeth, Iſa. 26. 20. Tacitly encouraging himſelf thereby, as a traveller upon the way, that it is not a thing to be wondered at, (which therefore thoſe that are wiſe, uſe to provide againſt before they ſet out) nor like to laſt very long. There is ſome anomoly in the original words: præteriet ærumna, vel calamitates: a nown plural joined to a verb ſingular: the reaſon whereof may be perchance, to intimate, that though his calamities were many, and of different kinds; yet they came ſo thick one upon another, that they might ſeem but one, diffuſed into many branches. Deep calleth unto deep, &c. pſalm 42. 7 ſee there. and ſo it is with ſuddain ſhowres too, which oftentimes come one after another, divers in a little compaſs of time.

untill their calm] In the word refuge, there is an intimation of hiding, as appeareth more plainly by that paſſage of Eſay, but now quoted, ſuch a refuge David would need no longer than the ſtorm or calamitie did laſt But of Gods protection in generall we ſtand in need, as well in proſperity as adverſitie: and it is the part of a wiſe man, in proſperity, to think of adverſity. However. this untill, doth not alwaies ſo limit, but that the thing ſpoken of, may extend much longer, yea and perchance to eternity, as amounting to an alwaie., or never: as Matth. 1 25. And knew he not, till ſhe had, &c. there be many examples of it in the ſcripture.

V. 2, performeth all things for me] pſal. 138. 8. It is the ſame word there, as is here: which doth confirm this interpretation of it, doubtful of it ſelf otherwiſe, and by divers interpreters diverſly tranſlated. It is a glorious title, and fit for Almighty God, to be a performer: men, beſides that they are all mutable in their wills, and many, perfidious; they can (abſolutely) warrant nothing either to themſelves or others, becauſe of the uncertainty of their times. pſalm 146. 3, 4, 5. aud James 4. 13, 14. Goe to, &c.

performeth all things] There is no more in the original time, but onely performeth: If we ſupply, all things, it muſt be underſtood, either all things that he hath promiſed unto me, hitherto: not likely therefore now to fail me: Or, all things, as diſclayming all confidence in himſelf, and ſecondary means, (ſee upon pſalm 33. 16. There is no King ſaved, &c.) bu aſcribing all unto God, and his bleſſing. God alſo performeth all things for us, when he doth fit us for all things that happen unto us, and for all conditions, though never ſo different: Phil. 4. 12, 13. I know both how to be abaſed, &c. I can do all things through Chriſt, &c. Laſtly, all things, that is, all things that I have deſired,and have been an humble and earneſt ſutor for: of which ſee upon Pſa. 21. 2. his hearts deſire.

V. 3. He ſhall ſend from heaven] He would rather deliver me by miracle; than let me be overcome, Pſalm 18. 16. Judg. 5. 20

From the reproach of him that would ſwallow me up] Or, he reproacheth him that would ſwallow me up.

V. 4. whoſe teeth are ſpears] He meaneth their calumnies, and falſe reports, whereby they went about to take away his life, pſal. 35. 15, 16. & 55. 21. & 59. 7. and prov. 25. 18. A man that beareth.

V. 5. Be thou exalted] Deliver me, that it may be known how great thou art.

V. 6. They have prepared a net for my ſteps] Pſalm 7. 16. and 9. 15.

my ſoul is bowed down] Some by ſoul, here, underſtand bodie: which we know is ordinary enough. But I do not believe that David ſpeaks this in reference to his body, to be literally taken, as though very fear forced him to contract his bodie; or that he bowed himſelf, to avoid their ambuſhes:as ſome here, more than one. I underſtand him rather of his heart and ſpirits, much dejected with continual woes and perſecutions, as Pſalm 107. 12. He brought down their hearts with labour, &c. and what more grievous than a dejected heart, and drooping ſpirits? For, A mans ſpirit will bear his infirmity, but a wounded ſpirit, &c. Prov. 8. 14. according to the common interpretation. No wonder therefore, if none to help, &c. (but God Almighty) if once their ſpirits, or hearts be quite faln down,as in the words but a little before: So alſo,and in the ſame ſenſe, Pſalm 145. 14. The Lord upholdeth all that fall, and raiſeth up all thoſe that be bowed down, and Pſalm 146. verſe 8. The Lord openeth------ The Lord raiſeth, &c. See there.

V. 7. My heart is fixed] That is, wholly bent to give thee praiſe for my deliverance. Compare with Pſalm 108. 1, 2. &c. and ſee the like Pſalm 53. 1. &c. See there.

V. 8 Awake up my Glory] That is, my tongue. See notes on pſalm 16. 9.

V. 10. For thy mercy is great unto the Heavens] Pſalm 36. 5. and 108. 4. As it were impertinent to ſeek a difference (though different of themſelves) between the heavens, and the clouds; both being uſed here, to expreſſe infinit height; and that infinit height,to ſet out the greatneſs of Gods mercy and truth: So I think there is no need that we ſhould diſtinguiſh neither here, nor Pſalm 36. 5. where the ſame words are, between mercy, and truth, but take them both for one thing: I mean, the truth ſhould be taken for the ſame as mercy: as ἀλήθεια in Greek is ſometimes put for juſtice; and verus in Latine, for æquum, which comes ſomewhat neer to mercy. But Pſalm 85. 10. mercy and truth are met together: there muſt of neceſſity be ſome difference, to make ſenſe of the words. The difference which moſt Expoſitors pitch upon generally, is, that mercy immediately proceeds from Gods goodneſs and compaſſion: truth is the performance of a promiſed mercy: mercy, in its original; but juſtice, or faithfulneſs, in the performance. So here, in this verſe, and ſo elſewhere they are commonly diſtinguiſhed; and here indeed, as in diverſe other places, it may do very well: if we like beſt to diſtinguiſh them: which, as I ſaid before, is not abſolutely needful. But Pſalm 85. 10. before mentioned, where we muſt admit (to make ſenſe) of a difference, yet how the word truth ſhould there be taken, great queſtion is made by Expoſitors, and not eaſie by any man to be reſolved. See more there.

Al-taſchith] Or, deſtroy not, a golden Pſalm of David. See notes on pſalm 57. tit.

Verſe 1. O Congregation?] In the Hebrew, אלם about which word, in this place, there is great controverſie, and when all is done, little certainty. The proper and uſuall ſignification of the word, as it comes from a root that either ſignifies to binde ſheaves, or to be mute, (which is a kind of binding of the tongue) ſo it would imply ſome either collection, or ſilence. Both which ſenſes are followed by ſome Interpreters: ſome tranſlating, Are ye mute indeed? Do ye ſpeak Juſtice? Or, Of a truth, do ye ſpeak dumb Juſtice? That is, ſay they, Do ye boaſt of Juſtice, when in very deed, Juſtice is dumb, and openeth not her mouth: or, is tongue-tied Others, as it is here, Do yee indeed ——— O Congregation. The firſt ſenſe is not thought to fit here ſo well: and therefore the ſecond, O Congregation, is by moſt preferred. But a great exception may be, that the word is found no where elſe in this ſenſe: except we ſhould follow Aben Ezra, who finds it in the Title of the ſix and fiftieth Pſalm, interpreting thoſe words there על יונת אלם, which by others are generally tranſlated, De columba obmuteſcentiæ, That is, of the ſilent, or, dumb dove: De oppreſſione manipuli: Of the oppreſſion of the Congregation: that is, ſaith he, Whereby the juſt and upright is oppreſſed by the wicked Congregation. But he is followed by none, I know of. Neither of theſe interpretations therefore, of which the one is more proper to the word, the other thought more proper to the place, can go for better, than bare conjectures. And it makes the matter ſo much the more uncertain, that by the Septuagint, whom Saint Jerome, and ſome others follow, the word is taken for a meer adverb, or, expletiva particula, as ſome call it (ἆρα is their word) Εἰ ἀληθῶς ἄρα δικαιοσύνην λαλεῖτε Si verè utique juſtitiam loquimini: as the vulgar Latine expreſſes it, Do ye in very deed ſpeak righteouſneſs? Out of all this, what to conclude upon, that may be certain and ſatisfactory, is not eaſie, but what I conceive very probable, though not yet thought upon by any, that I know, is this: That the Scripture hath many ſecret alluſions of words, in ſeveral kinds, ſome, with ſome little alteration of the words, and ſome, mental onely, is a thing certain. See ſomewhat to this purpoſe, upon the titles of Pſalm 7. & 9. Many examples might be produced, ſome whereof have already been obſerved by others, and ſome not yet obſerved, were this a place fit for it. See upon pſal. 106. 15. but ſent leanneſs, &c. and verſe 28. the ſacrifice of the dead. Briefly thus, then: Great men and Judges of the earth, are often ſtiled in the Scripture אלים ſometimes tranſlated Gods, and ſometimes, mighty. אלהים (which comes very neer) pſalm 82. 1. where we have both; both אלים (but in the ſingular there, though tranſlated plural) and אלוהים: God ſtandeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods. Moſt probable therefore it is that the ſame word (אלים) was here intended alſo; but of purpoſe ſo varied, by leaving out the Jod onely, cloſely to intimate their incapacity, or ill carriage in their places (and therefore not worthy the name) in generall: but particularly, their ſilence, or tongue-tiedneſſe (if we may ſo ſpeak) through fear of Saul, (as is likely, and is often obſerved by Interpreters) in his cauſe, againſt their own conſciences. An alluſion not much unlike to this, we have Deuteronomy chap. 32. verſe 15. where Iſrael, by a feigned name alluded to that of Iſrael, is called Jeſhurun: from ישר rectitudo, (as moſt conceive) but certainly, not without a ſecret alluſion to שור, (an Oxe) to which, for their unrulineſſe and wantonneſſe they are there compared: But Jeſhurun waxed fat and kicked, as the Text hath it there. Neither is it material (which by ſome is objected) that the word is found in other places too where there is not the like ground for this alluſion: ſince here, where it is firſt found and uſed, there is, apparently: which is enough.

V. 2. You weigh the violence of your hands in the earth] Ye ſeem to proceed by Law, againſt men, weighing their Deeds and Rewards; but indeed ye weigh out wrong for right. Under colour of Law and Juſtice (the embleme whereof Weights are) you oppreſſe men publiquely: implyed in theſe words, in the earth, as they are expounded by ſome.

V. 3. The wicked are eſtranged from the womb] An hyperbolicall expreſſion of inveterate and incorrigible wickedneſſe; as if it were born with them: For Natura non mutatur; they ſay commonly; nature is not eaſily changed. So Joh. chapter 9. verſe 34. Thou waſt altogether born in ſinnes: where ſee learned Grotius; and before, upon Pſalm 22. verſe 9. that took me out of the womb. See alſo upon Pſalm 54. 3. Strangers, &c.

V. 5. To the voice of Charmers, charming never ſo wiſely] This muſt be taken but as proverbially ſpoken (as is moſt likely, that there was ſome common ſpeech among the Hebrewes, then in uſe to that purpoſe. See alſo, Eccleſiaſtes, the tenth chapter, and the eleventh verſe, Jeremy chap. 8. verſe 17.) by David, and not with any purpoſe to maintain, either the truth of the thing in matter of fact; or the lawfullneſſe of it, in relation to God and his Law. For firſt, as concerning the firſt, whether there be any ſuch charmes effectuall? Expoſitors indeed upon this place tell us of ſome, that have ſaid or written of ſuch deaf adders, which by a naturall inſtinct and providence, uſe to lay one ear cloſe to the ground, and ſtop the other with their tails, becauſe they ſhould not hear the voice of the charmer: they name Jerom, Auguſtus Caſſiodor: (I had rather they had named ſome Naturaliſts) but how many things in this kind are commonly ſaid, and by many believed, which upon further ſearch are, and have been found falſe is ſufficiently known. Plinie in his Natural Hiſtory (a man otherwiſe much cenſured for his too great credulity) ſaith of charms in general, maxima quæſtionis, & ſemper incertæ eſt, valeántne aliquid verba & incantamenta carminum. And elſewhere more particularly of theſe kind of charms; Varia circa hæc opinio, ex ingenio cujuſque, vel caſu, mulceri alloquiis feras, quippe ubi etiam ſerpentes extrahi cantu, cogique in pœnam, verum falſúmve ſit, vita non decreverit Plin. lib. 8. c. 16. By occaſion of which words it will not be amiſs to obſerve, that the Hebrews alſo conſtitute a double charming; the one of greater beaſts, which they call The great, another of creeping things, ſerpents, ſcorpions, &c. which they call The leſs charming; as is obſerved by Buxtorfe, out of the Talmudiſts. But however Pliny makes the matter very doubtful; they that have ſeen maſtive dogs, of the fierceſt of that kind, ſuch as Tanners keep, when ready to fly and faſten, ſuddenly with a little piping, in a very plain way, without any art, (that can be obſerved or diſcerned) firſt ſtiled and tamed; and then ſoon after laid aſleep: not to ſpeak of what hath been done by the ſame man upon fierce Bulls, in the view of many: they I ſay, that have ſeen this, as many in Suſſex have done, and can bear witneſs, if need be; will not make any great queſtion, but that ſuch an art there is, or at leſt ſuch a practiſe; and that the thing is feaſible: but by what art or power, either natural, or magical, is another queſtion, I am confident, by what ever I could hear or learn of him in Suſſex, but now ſpoken of. that he is not ſuſpected by any that know him, to uſe any unlawful means. Neither indeed is it probable, all things conſidered. But, ſuch charming they ſay, is forbidden in the law, and therefore magical. It is true indeed, the word is there in the Law, Deut. 18. 11. Or a Charmer, &c. it is the ſame word (חבר) as is here alſo; but what is meant by that word, is not there expreſt: nor whether the prohibition doth extend to all kind of words or actions in that kind that may be comprehended under that general word. For ſo we may ſay of the word לחש too, which is here alſo, tranſlated here charmer, but elſewhere, a whiſperer, Pſal 41. 7. (it is in the verb there) and, an eloquent Orator, or skilfull of ſpeech Eſay 3. 3. But it is not our aim to make a buſineſs of it here, neither is there any need: all we would infer, is but this, that Davids mentioning of them in this place, is no argument for the truth of the thing, in point of Hiſtory and reality of fact: ſince many things are ſpoken in the Scripture according to common opinion onely, or grounded upon ſome vulgar ſpeech; much leſs for the lawfulneſs of it. So in the Latine tongue, for example, no man makes any ſcruple to uſe Sirenum voces; and Cygnea cantio, and the like, Proverbially; though he believed not the reality of either ſuch Sirens in nature, or of ſuch ſinging of the Swans before their death.

V. 6. Break their teeth] Take away all occaſions and means, whereby they hurt, Pſal. 3. 7.

V. 7. Let them melt away as waters] The ſame ſimilitude or much to that purpoſe, taken from water, we had before, Pſa. 22. 14. I am powred out; to which we may adde 2 Sam. 14. 14. For we muſt needs dye, &c. Of imprecations in general, ſee upon Pſa. 35. 4. Let them be confounded.

bendeth his bow to ſhoot his arrows] Pſ. 64. 3. of the wicked there alſo; which we the rather take notice of, becauſe ſome (with the vulgar Latine: at leſt, as interpreted by moſt:) think it may as well be referred unto God; when he; to wit, God: mentioned in the former verſe: when he bendeth——let them be even cut off. The Hebrew will bear it, we confeſs: but comparing this with that other place, it is more probable that here alſo this bending ſhould be intended of the wicked. The former words alſo, which are continued; will bear another tranſlation: and paſs away: or come to nothing, to wit, the wicked: but this we have here; doth as well, or rather better, and the ſenſe, however comes to one.

V. 8. the untimely birth of a woman] In the Hebrew, אשת נפל which ſome of the learned Hebrews put together in one, נפלאשת, which they interpret talpam, a Mole. But if that be their chiefeſt reaſon, becauſe תנשמת, Levit. 10. 30. by ſome there tranſlated a mole, is by the Thargum rendred אשותות, there is little reaſon they ſhould be followed by others in it, ſince that (beſides other conſiderations) what the ſaid תנשמת is put there for, (Levit. 11. verſe 18. & 30. of a different ſignification in thoſe two verſes of that one Chapter, being the name of a bird, in the 18. and of a reptile, or creeping thing in the 30. as appears by the Context, and all interpreters agree) is not agreed upon. It is tranſlated by ſome talpa, by others glis, and by ſome, ſalamandra. This Rabbinical conceit I had not ſo much as mentioned, had not ſome of the moſt ſober and approved Expoſiters, thought it worthy to be taken into conſideration: Job 3. 16. Or as an hidden untimely birth, I had not been, as infants which never ſaw light: may ſerve, if need be, for a further confirmation of the tranſlation here followed. See alſo Eccleſ. 6. 3, 5.

V. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns] Of the drift and ſcope of the words in general, that the ſuddaineſs of wicked mens deſtruction, often inſiſted upon, not by David onely in other pſalms, but by Job, and others, upon this argument, is here ſet out by a ſimilitude; of this, there is no queſtion at all. So much the context of it ſelf will inforce, and all interpreters apprehend it ſo. But what is the ſimilitude, and of the meaning, and right ordering of particular words, there is not like conſent, as may appear by variety of tranſlations, ſome of them ſo unlike to one another, as a man would hardly take them for tranſlations of the ſame verſe. From the word סירות סיר in the Feminine plural, as it is here, is the chiefeſt difference: which as it ſignifies pots, (and ſo indeed moſt uſually in the Feminine) ſo thorns alſo; in which notion the Maſculine is more uſual. Which conſideration eſpecially, hath moved ſome of the moſt approved, to render the words as they are here expreſt, Before your pots can feel the thorns, or rather according to the propriety of the Hebrew word, (for thorns is a more general word) can feel the brambles; that is, the fire of brambles. In further confirmation, we are referred to Eccleſ. 7. 6. where ſuch a fire is alſo proverbially mentioned, For as the crackling (or, ſound) of thorns under a pot. I do not deny but this may be to the purpoſe: yet it is to be obſerved withal, that the word there for thorns, is not the ſame as is here, but סירים but the words are כי כקול הסירים תחת הסיר: Pſal 118 12. they are quenched as the fire of thorns: that is, a fire that burns with great noiſe, and is very fierce for the preſent, but is ſoon out. The word there for thorns, is קוץ. But to go on, and ſee what we can make of the reſt, according to this tranſlation of the firſt words, Before your pots can feel the brambles, (or fire of brambles, which uſeth to be quick, but of little continuance) he ſhall take them away as with a whirl-wind; ſo far Interpreters agree; (thoſe, I mean that agree in סירות here to be tranſlated ollæ, or pots) but not in that which follows, which indeed is obſcure: כמו־חי כמו חרון both living, and in his wrath: (or, as living, as wrath) is the Engliſh here, not much clearer than the Hebrew is. The word חי living, properly, is ſometimes uſed of raw fleſh: as 1 Sam. 2. 15. And becauſe raw fleſh and pots have ſome affinity, many interpreters follow that ſignification here, and make this ſenſe of the words, That as raw fleſh is ſnatcht out of the pot, or, fleſh ſnatcht out of the pot being yet raw, before the heat of that light bramble fire be come to it ſo God, &c. With this bare ſimilitude, the greater part content themſelves. But ſome go further, and would have the plots and machinations of wicked men againſt the righteous, underſtood by this fire of brambles, (the ſharpeſt of thorns) and by the raw fleſh, the righteous that are perſecuted by them, to be meant by the power and providence of God towards them, often reſcued out of the hands of their enemies, and the very jaws of hell, before any hurt came to them. And to help this, they think this חי (living) may be referred to the bramble; He ſhall take it away, as it were quick and living, to wit, the bramble, by which they underſtand the violent perſecutors of the Godly. Certainly, they are moſt put to it, that are moſt accurate upon this place, to make that ſence which they like beſt, to agree with the words. They come off cleareſt, in my judgement, as to the ſenſe, and keep to the words too, not worſe than thoſe we have heard hitherto, who taking this חי (living) of the perſecutors of Gods people, (a third interpretation) render the whole verſe thus, Priuſquam caldaria veſtra (vel lebetes) ſentiant rhamnum; ſic vos quaſi viventes abſorbebit ira, (Dei) quaſi turbine: that is, before your pots can feel the bramble, ſo ſhall the wrath (of God) ſwallow you up as quick; (or, yet living) as it were with a whirl-wind. Were there not a double כמו, or, particula ſimilitudinis in the Hebrew (כמו־חי כמו־חרון) I ſhould make little queſtion, but that we might reſt here, and ſpare our labour of ſeeking further. But the omiſſion of this repeated כמו, wherein ſome emphaſis ſeems to ly, which is loſt by the loſs of one of them, and by diſordering the words before which they are prefixed; makes me to ſuſpect all the reſt. To paſſe therefore from theſe to that other ranck of Interpreters; not much inferiour to theſe, either for their number, or authority; who tranſlate the controverted סירות thorns, to this effect; Before that young ſprings of thorns can grow to a perfect bramble; God, &c. changing but the terms of the ſimilitude thorns, or pots, &c. In all the reſt, their expoſitions agree with the former; ſome content themſelves with the bare ſimilitude, to expreſs the ſuddeneſs of Gods vengeance; and ſome by theſe young thorns, underſtand beſides, the troubles and ſufferings of the godly, by the perſecution of wicked men; this, and what elſe was ſaid before of the former, which we ſhall not need to repeat. In very deed, it hath proved a thorny place to Interpreters; and they that read them diligently, will find as much intricacy in their expoſitions, as they have found in the Text. As for the double כמו wherein, as I have ſaid, I am moſt unſatisfied, Junius, of all the reſt, gives me beſt content; he expreſſes them both, and keeps the emphaſis: but then he much differeth from all the reſt, in the reſt of the words. I will not undertake that he only is in the right: but I think I ſhould do him, and the Reader wrong, If I ſhould not take notice of his verſion too, which is this: Quum nondum ſentientur ſpinæ veſtræ, ſpina cynosbati: tam redivivam, quàm aduſtam procellet quamque. that is, Before your thorns can be felt; even your bramble thorns: (moſt ſharp and offenſive, ſaith he, in his Notes there: that is, before you can do much hurt) he will drive away, (or bruiſe in pieces) every one of them as with a ſtorm; both that which is quick, and that which is dry. For, ſaith he in his notes, vernante cynosbato, &c. when the bramble doth ſpring, ſome of the thorns are quick and alive; and ſome withered and dryed up. For concluſion, I would have the Reader to conſider, that it is but a proverbial ſpeech, (which kind, in all languages, is of moſt difficult inveſtigation) not any matter of doctrine, about which all this controverſie is; ſo that if he be not fully ſatisfied, it need not trouble him much, as it doth not me, who profeſſe I am not.

V. 10. The righteous ſhall rejoice] With a pure affection.

he ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the wicked] An hyperbolical, and emphaticall expreſſion of a great and glorious victory, as pſalm 68. 23. borrowed from the language (if not an uſage too) of triumphant Conquerours. In ordinary language we ſay, to trample over one, that is, to uſe with ſcorn and contempt. The ſtyle of the pſalmes being altogether poetical, ſuch expreſſions become it the better. Of deſire of revenge, and paſſionate imprecations, ſee before upon Pſalm 35 Let them be confounded, &c. and Pſalm 41. 10. that I may requite them.

V. 11. Verily there is a reward for the righteous) It is alwaies the part and property of one that is truly religious and godly, to referre all things to Gods glory, eſpecially: to make that upon all occaſions the chief object of his ſorrowing, or rejoicing. As therefore when wicked men proſper in their wicked deſigns againſt Gods people, and his truth; it is the courſe of the world to judge by the event, and either juſtifie the wicked, and his cauſe, as favoured and approved by God; or to queſtion the providence of God, and to doubt whether he take any notice; or regard what is done by men, whether good or bad: which greiveth and afflicteth pious ſouls, far more than their own perſonal ſufferings: So on the other ſide, when God doth execute juſt judgements, by which ordinary men, that have no other ground for their religion, but their ſenſes, and preſent ſight, are wont to judge of God, and his providence; (pſalm 9. 16. God is known, &c.) becauſe Gods truth, and his worſhip is then and thereby much advanced; the ſame truly pious, and devoted to God, receive greateſt comfort from ſuch alterations, ſuffers more as it hath reference to God, and his cauſe; than to their own particular intereſt, though much, otherwiſe concerned. when Saul ſent, and they watched the houſe to kill him] 1 Samuel 19. 11.

Verſe 1. D*Eliver me from mine enemies*] It is the common courſe of all men, that pretend to any piety, or knowledge of God, to pray unto God againſt their enemies, if they have any: but it muſt be the care of all truly and ſolidly religious, to conſider well firſt, what enemies they pray againſt: whether ſuch as Davids enemies; who violently perſecuted him. without any juſt provocation; yea though he ſought for peace; and did his utmoſt to win them by his gentleneſs, and the like; as himſelf witneſſeth in divers places: and here particularly, as verſes the ſecond, third, and fourth. So may we hope our prayers may be available; at leſt not unacceptable. But if we make men our foes, by any proud, inſolent, or unjuſt actions; or if upon apprehenſion of juſt provocation, we think to bear our ſelves upon Gods protection, or aſſiſtance, before our ſelves have uſed all fair and charitable means (which God himſelf requireth at our hands) of reconciliation; we may ſooner expect to make God our enemy by our prayers; than that he will grant us our requeſts upon ſo weak and ungodly grounds.

V. 9. Becauſe of his ſtrength will I wait upon thee] Becauſe Sauls power is great, therefore I will truſt in thee, that art ſtronger. This is the beſt ſenſe that can be made of thoſe words, though divers others have been deviſed by Expoſitors, all which to relate, having no better opinion of them than I have, I think would not be worth the labour. Thoſe that think the incorruption of the Bible, which we maintain againſt the Papiſts, (though there be among them not a few, that agree with us in this particular) to conſiſt in the maintaing of every title and letter that is found in the printed or written Copies of theſe dayes; they both involve themſelves needleſly into many difficulties, out of which to get out, they muſt truſt more to their wit, than to any ſolidity of reaſon; and expoſe the Scriptures to more oppoſition, that I ſay not danger, then they are aware of. There be good Proteſtants, we know, that have been of another mind; if ſo be that Beza was a good Proteſtant; who though he wrote in Geneva yet I do not hear that he was ever queſtioned by any authority, for his many conjectures and emendations of the text of the New Teſtament which by many have been obſerved, and by ſome collected. Neither was Calvin ſo ſcrupulous. See before upon Pſalm 42. 11. the help of my countenance, and my God And well we may refer unto that place, ſince that juſt ſuch a buſineſs we have here, as was there obſerved, for all the world. This verſe is repeated again in the laſt of this pſalm; where we have it עזי with a Jod; my ſtrength; not עזו with a Vau. Whereupon Mollerus; Mihi non dubium eſt quin incuria librariorum pro י ſubrepſerit ו et עזו ſcribi pro עזי quod σφάλμα, &c. He would have this place corrected by that: and for the ſame reaſon it is more than probable, that thoſe words, The God of my mercy, wherewith the following verſe (as here divided) doth begin, ſhould belong unto this. But this we need not preſſe, ſeeing that either way, whether the words be here at the end, or begin there will be good and perfect. Which cannot be ſaid of עזי and עזו, as appears by the divers fancies of Expoſitors. Neither is Mollerus alone of this opinion. For it comes all to one, whether we ſay עזו muſt be corrected עזי: or that עזו is put for עזי, and muſt be tranſlated, My ſtrength, or O my ſtrength, as in the laſt verſe, which divers do. and ſo both the Chaldee Paraphraſe, and the Septuagint have it too. But in the very next verſe, in thoſe words we have already ſpoken of, thus alſo it is written in the Text חסדו, his mercy, but in the margin, and pointed חסדי, and therefore tranſlated by all, my mercy. Now if any ſhall upon this ground further inſiſt, that whereas in this verſe it is אשמרה, tranſlated here, I will wait: it is in the laſt verſe אזמרה, I will ſing: (the difference being but of one letter there neither, in the original) and ſhould therefore be here likewiſe; I deny the conſequence. There is no ſuch reaſon there to induce us. The ſenſe is good and perfect, as it is: all antient tranſlations obſerve the difference: φυλάξω, here; ψαλῶ, there in the Septuagint, &c. and beſides there be divers examples of ſuch differences in other repeated verſes, where no colour is of ſuſpition, but that they were ſo made of purpoſe by the Author. So here, the ſenſe by this alteration, is not only good and warrantable; but very pregnant, and emphatical. For having firſt ſaid that he would wait; he doth now ſweetly alluding by this change of one letter to his own word, proceed and ſay that he will ſing: which is a further degree of confidence, as if he had already reapt the fruit of his waiting, and his buſineſs now, were to give thanks. Many ſuch alluſions there be in the ſcripture, in every part of it.

V. 12. the ſin of their mouth] Prov. 12. 13.

let them be taken even in their pride] That in their miſery and ſhame they may be as glaſſes and examples of Gods vengeance.

V. 13. Conſume them in wrath, conſume them, &c.] There is a double ſeeming repugnancy or inconſiſtency in the words; the one in reference to the former words; the other, to thoſe that follow. For ver. 11. he ſaid, Slay them not : and now he ſeems to pray the contrary, And then after he hath prayed, that God would conſume them that they may not be ; he preſently addeth, and let them know that God, &c. To this I firſt anſwer, that in things that are uttered with ſome paſſion (though not immoderate, but anſwered to the indignity of the thing: ſuch as we allow to holy men in Gods cauſe: whereof ſee more upon Pſalm. 35. 4. Let them be confounded: in the end there) and vehemency of indignation, it is againſt reaſon to require that exactneſs of order and coherence, that is proper and neceſſary to other ſpeech. Where the thoughts are diſcompoſed, (as in all paſſions; more or leſs) the ſpeech may be. But ſecondly, the ſpeech, in ſuch caſes, uſeth to be ſhort and abrupt. Many things muſt be ſupplied; which done, they may appear good coherence in the thoughts, though not ſeen in the expreſſions. So here, firſt he prayes that God would not ſuddenly ſlay or deſtroy them, but bring them down; that is, that they may have no more power to do miſchief, than may ſerve to keep the people of God in a conſtant watchfulneſs, leſt too much ſecurity do them more hurt, than the perſecution of enemies. But again, if they be ſuch (as by their preſent rage and cruelty a man might ſuſpect) as cannot bow ; nor be kept within certain bounds: then rather than the people of God ſhould be at this paſſe, that God will quite break and conſume them. Which nevertheleſs is not to be ſuppoſed to be done ſo ſuddenly , or ſo generally , that either they that periſh, ſhould not have ſo much time before they dye , as to know what they have done: or that none at all ſhould be left of that number, who by ſeeing what fearful ends ſuch and ſuch, and ſo many of their party have made, might know, and be forced to acknowledge, &c. So that all things well conſidered, there will not appear ſo much repugnancy, as ſome fancie. Yet beſides this, it is certain that the them in theſe words, let them know , may as well be underſtood of other men, as of thoſe before ſpoken of: it being very ordinary to the Hebrew tongue, and to the Scripture thus abruptly to paſs from perſons to perſons, as by many i obſerved. So, let them know, will be, let men know, as Pſalm 83. 16. that they may ſeek thy Name. Laſtly, ſome conceive, that theſe words here of conſuming, and not being; have reference onely to their power and greatneſs; and not to their lives. This alſo may be: but I ſhould rather ſay, as before.

to teach] To have it learnt by the Levites, as ſome have expounded it. But becauſe as much might be ſaid of every pſalm, which have not this inſcribed; ſome therefore, followed herein by the moſt, and beſt of Interpreters, expound it, as if it related to the doctrine, or pointed to the uſe of this pſalm, the end whereof might be; by the commemoration of ſo many victories, and this in particular granted unto David by God, to teach, and convince the moſt obſtinate and refractory, that Gods purpoſe was to eſtabliſh him in the realm, and that he had not in vain, or falſly boaſted of Gods promiſes, I wonder ſo wide a conjecture ſhould pleaſe any beſides the firſt author. And why might it not be the end of divers other pſalms beſides this, that have no ſuch inſcription, if that be a ſufficient argument; as is objected againſt the firſt Expoſition? For my part, I will not undertake that the ſame may not be ſaid of ſome other pſalms, as well as this, though not inſcribed as this: neither do I conceive that, from the omiſſion in other pſalms, to be a ſufficient argument, as might be proved by divers inſtances: but that the purpoſe of this, to teach, here, is to tell us that the pſalm was intended not for the Church, or Temple only but for more publick uſe, & for continuation; and to that end, to be learnt by certain companies and orders, beſides the ordinary Levites end Quiremen; this I think by comparing with other like places, where the ſame words are found, may be made apparent enough. So 2 Sam. 1. 17. And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his ſon. 18. Alſo he bad them teach the children of Judah, &c. which words ſhould not, as in the Engliſh copies we find them, be included in a parentheſis, as though they had no relation to the former; which would be a great inconſequence of ſenſe, and ſtory; and very improper in this place: the meaning being this that David out of his zeal to Jonathan, to the end, that both his memory, that had been ſo dear unto him, and the teſtimonies of his good reſpect & affection to him might continue the longer, he took order that this lamentation of his death, ſo poetically by him deplored, might be taught to children and others that were taught the uſe of the bow; and might among other ceremonies be uſed in all publick and ſolemn occaſions of military exerciſes. There be the ſame words in the original, as are here : ויאמר ללמד &c. So Deut. 31. 19. Now therefore write ye this ſong for you, and teach it the children of Iſrael &c. there again the ſame ללמד as here; ſee olſo 2 Chr. 35. 25. And Jeremiah lamented for Joſiah, &c.

twelve thouſand] 2 Sam. 8. 13. 1 Chr. 18. 12. But thoſe places tell us of 18000. for which we have 12000. Moreover, what is here aſſcribed unto Joab, 1 Chr. 18. 12. ſeems to be aſcribed unto Abiſhai; and thoſe that are there, as here called Edomites, 2 Sam. 8. 13. are called Syrians. Such ſeeming contradictons are frequent enough to be found in the moſt accurate records of antient times, whether Greek or Latine: and are often, though at firſt ſight diametrically contrary, happily compoſed to the good ſatisfaction of all rational and judicious, by the due obſerving and weighing of ſeveral circumſtances. Of ſeveral circumſtances, I ſay, to matters of this nature, incidental in ſuch number and variety, as it is no wonder, if they that are not very circumſpect and exact, do often vary in their relations; and ſometime ſay but the ſame thing when they ſeem moſt to differ. Now becauſe we have not the Hiſtories of theſe wars of David at large, ſo that all circumſtances almoſt are to us unknown, it is not eaſie, neither ſhould it ſeem matter of wonder to any, if theſe ſeeming contrarieties in ſacred Hiſtories cannot ſo eaſily be compoſed or reconciled. However, that which upon theſe is ſaid by moſt interpreters, may be probable enough, Firſt, for the number, that ſo many as 12000. might be ſlain in pitcht battel; the reſt (that is, *6*000 more) afterwards in the purſuit. Or that the *6*000 were ſlain before by Joab alone in another place; and the 12000 when Joab and Abiſhai had joined; or by Abiſhai alone, but ſubordinate to Joab his brother as Vice-general in a pitcht battel. Some have made this difference greater by 4000. Quod autem in ſacra Hiſtoria viginti duo millia numerantur; ſaith one in his commentary upon the pſalms: a man ſo well verſed in the text, and ſo diligent, as it is a wonder how he ſhould ſo miſtake. Perhaps he had written duo de viginti. Which ſome ignorantly took for viginti duo : and ſo cauſed it to be printed, becauſe they thought it would be plainer. I had rather it were anothers miſtake, then his, if his own words; circiter dimidium numerum, a little after, be not againſt it. But if his, it is but a miſtake of memory, which may eaſily be pardoned; becauſe of the authority of the man, I take notice of it. It may puzzle ſome body perchance, as though he had found it ſo in the Scripture indeed. And then that the ſame victory ſhould be aſcribed unto Abiſhai, as the immediate inſtrument; and to Joab, as chief miniſter under David (unto whom for the ſame reaſon it is alſo aſcribed, 2 Sam. 1. 13.) is no wonder. Laſtly, that the Edomites and Syrians ſhould be confounded in this Hiſtory, is no ſtrange thing, ſince that they were joined together againſt David, as may be gathered from the very words of this inſctiption, where he is ſaid to have fought with Aram Naharaim, and with Aram Zoba, that is, with the Aramites, or Syrians: thoſe being parts of Syria, as Syria is taken in the largeſt notion. See alſo 2 Sam. 8. 3. 1 Chron. 18. 3.

Verſe 1. T*Hou haſt caſt us off*] Pſal. 44. 9.

thou haſt ſcattered us] When they were not able to reſiſt their enemies, the people fled hither and thither, for they could not be ſafe in their own houſes.

ſcattered] Heb. broken.

V. 2. earth] or, land.

thou haſt broken it] as if it were cleft with an Earthquake.

V. 3. Thou haſt ſhewed thy people hard things] That is, Thou haſt made us to feel: as pſal. 4. 6. Who will ſhew us any good? So 2 Tim. 4. 14. πολλὰ μοι κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο : oſtendit, properly; there tranſlated, did me much evil. See alſo Pſalm 71. 20. Thou which haſt ſhewed.

to drink the wine of aſtoniſhment] Or, trembling ; called the cup of trembling; Eſay 51. 17, &c. It is the ſame word, as is here. A continual trembling, not in the act onely, but habitual; is the effect oftentimes of long practiſed drunkenneſs. Inde pallor , ſaith Seneca; & membrorum vino madentium tremor, &c. and afterwards wards of habitual, Inde incerti labantium pedes, & ſemper qualis in ipſa ebrietate titubatio. He means therefore, that their evils had continued long.

V. 14. A banner to them that fear thee] But in affording ſuccour, and giving me victory over the enemies, thou haſt dealt favourably with us, Pſal.20.5. & 74.4. Eſay 49.22.

becauſe of the truth] Not for our merits, but to ſhew the truth of thy promiſe.

V. 5. That thy beloved may be delivered] Compare with Pſal. 108.6, &c. and of differences, if any, ſee upon Pſal. 53.1. The fool, &c.

V. 6. God hath ſpoken in his holineſſe] Or, Sanctuary; by which Heaven alſo, ſometimes ſo called, may be underſtood. Now David here makes open profeſſion of his confidence in Gods Word and Promiſe, that he ſhould be King over all Iſrael; and to that end, he mentioneth ſome places which as yet ſtood out, or had longeſt ſtood out againſt him; either as a greater argument of his faith and confidence, if as yet in oppoſition to him; or as a more particular acknowledgement of Gods performance, if already come in and ſubjected. This underſtood before, makes that which follows, which otherwiſe hath a ſhew of obſcurity, plain enough, but that ſome proper expreſsions are uſed, which to them that are ſtrangers to them, may well ſeem ſtrange.

I will divide Schechem, and mete out] That is, ſhall ſurely and intirely poſſeſs. Diviſion and diſtribution unto others, either by way of gift and reward, as unto ſouldiers; or by way of elocation, as to Tenants, preſuppoſeth entire poſſeſsion. Schechem was a city belonging to the tribe of Ephraim; as Succoth to the Tribe of Gad.

V. 7. Ephraim alſo is the ſtrength of mine head, Judah is my Lawgiver] In both theſe, he alludes to former propheſies concerning theſe two Tribes. It is ordinary in the Scripture, and ſo often in this book of Pſalms, by horns or horn, to underſtand ſtrength. Now of Ephraim and Manaſſes together, under the name of Joſeph, becauſe they came from him; Moſes had propheſied, Deut. 33.17. His glory is like the firſtling of a bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he ſhall puſh the people together, to the ends of the earth. and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, &c. And of Judah, Jacob, Gen.49.10. The ſcepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet, &c.

V. 8. Moab is my waſh-pot] Under the metaphor of this veſſel of diſhonour, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, is intimated the ſervile and abject condition of the conquered Moabites under David. If we take it of an earthen veſſel, the meaning may be, that he will break and bruiſe them in pieces (as indeed he did, notably) like a potters veſſel, Pſal.2.9. And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt expreſſes it, Pſal.18.9. But in this place, he turns it quite to another purpoſe, as though David intended it of a veſſel filled with the blood of the ſlain, wherein he would waſh his feet. See before upon Pſal.58. 10. he ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the wicked. I like it not, I confeſs; nor their conceit, (which comes almoſt to the ſame effect, though they name not their author) that the whole countrey through the number of the ſlain ſhould be as a great pan, or boul full of blood; that this ſhould be the waſh-pot here intended. If the Reader like it better, he may.

over Edom will I caſt my ſhoe] That is, I will trample Edom under my feet, as ſome expound it. Or, I will beat with my ſhoe, and throw it at her. The expreſſion may ſeem courſe and homely, where uſe hath not made it familiar. But ſuch there be in all languages, which no man wonders at, when they are uſed to them. The Latines alſo did uſe to ſay, ſculponeis os batuere, which among them was thought very contumelious and ſervile: Soleâ objurgabere rubrâ, in one of the Satyrick Poets. The Romans had their vis feſtucaria, in tryals for poſſeſſions; and exfeſtucare, is a great word, and of great inportance, (which would ſeem to be but a ſtraw buſineſs, by the propriety of the word) in the Gothiſh Laws, or German Code. Some, very learned, keep the vulgar Latine here, In Idumæam extendam calceamentum meum: and expound it, Idumæo extendam calceum meum, &c. I will reach my ſhoe to Edom, that he may pull it off, which is commonly done by the baſeſt of ſervants, and belongs to their charge. So in the New Teſtament, to bear his ſhoes after him, and, to unlooſe his ſhoe latchet, &c. Matth,3.11, &c. where ſee Grotius his Annotations.

Philiſtia, triumph thou becauſe of him] Spoken either ironically: Thou that haſt taken a pride to inſult and triumph againſt me; now being conquered and ſubdued, triumph as much as thou wilt, &c. Or ſeriouſly and ſoberly; Yield me due obedience, and acknowledge me thy King by ſuch acclamations of joy and fidelity, as are ordinary among faithful ſubjects. In the 108.9. it is, Over Philiſtia will I triumph: which come all to one; and of ſuch differences in repeated, either Pſalms, or verſes, we have ſpoken before, more then once.

V. 9. into the ſtrong city] He was aſſured that God would give him the ſtrong Cities of his enemies, wherein they thought themſelves ſure.

ſtrong city] Heb. city of ſtrength

V. 10. hadſt caſt us off?] Pſal.44.9. & 108.11.

Verſ.2. FRom the end of the earth] Or, land, as the word is ſometimes tranſlated. From the place of my baniſhment, being remote.

that is higher then I] Judea being a very mountainous and rocky countrey, it was ordinary for the people, in times of great and publick diſtreſs, to betake themſelves to Rocks, for ſhelter and privacy. So 1 Sam.13.6. When the men of Iſrael ſaw, &c. God alſo for that and ſome other reaſons, is called a Rock, in the Scripture: as Pſal.18.2.31,46. Deut.32.4,15,18,31. and many other places. David therefore by theſe words doth implicitly diſclaim confidence in ſuch Rocks, as ordinary men, in ſuch extremity of diſtreſs, would gladly repair unto me. Though his caſe did need a Rock, as much as any mans; yet he would not have it ſuch a Rock, which he might climb or reach: (for if he might, why not another man; his enemy: and how then he unacceſſible, or ſafe?) but ſuch a one, as neither he, nor any mortal man, could reach; and where he might reckon himſelf out of all danger. Such a Rock he would have, and in this his extremity, ſo eagerly purſued, ſo deſtitute of help, he wanted.

So 1 Sam.18.30. ſo that his name was much ſet by; or, precious. To which the vulgar Latine here might have ſome reference; Verumtamen precium meum cogitaverunt repellere: though the Latine there, be, & celebre factum eſt nomen ejus nimis: and not precioſum.

V. 9. They are altogether lighter than vanity] If all men were weighed together in one ballance, they would be lighter than vanity, Eſay 40.15,17.

altogether] Or, alike.

V. 10. become not vain in robbery] Some would have David to ſpeak here to his ſouldiers, to the ſame purpoſe as S. John Baptiſt, to ſouldiers, Luke 3.14. Indeed, as the words run in this tranſlation, and if we look no further, it is very probable. But if we obſerve the context, the drift of the Pſalmiſt being to ſet out the vanity of man, even when in greateſt luſtre and glory, and the power of God; or rather by making a right eſtimation of man, even of the greateſt, to adſcribe all power unto God onely; v. 9. and 11. why he ſhould in the verſe between, direct, or rather divert his ſpeech to his ſouldiers, I can ſee no probable reaſon; and as little, why to ſuch in general as make a profeſſion, (be they ſouldiers or others) of oppreſsion and robbery. Except a man can think, that by men of high degree, v.9. to whom he oppoſeth (v. 11.) the power of Almighty God; we can think, I ſay, that he ſhould intend eſpecially (for ſo the context will require; if we allow of any coherence) ſuch as truſt in oppreſsion and robbery; the baſeſt of men, and moſt contemptible, if we take the word robbery, literally, of common thieves and robbers. But the words will admit of different interpretation, that is ſure enough. Some tranſlate: Ne fidatis calumniæ & rapinæ; & ne evaneſcatis. So Vatullus. Some: Ne confidatis in oppreſsione, & prædâ: ne evaneſcatis: So Calvin. Others again, Ne confidatis in rapinis, & in prædâ ne evaneſcatis. I omit others. This laſt I like beſt: that is, Truſt not in rapines (or oppreſsion:) become not vain in matter of booty, or prey. My opinion is, that David by theſe words intended, not ordinary ſouldiers, either of his, or of Sauls army, ſuch as S. Stephen ſpake to, as before was alledged; much leſs common thieves and robbers: but greateſt warriours and conquerors, to whom, as moſt properly (among men) honour and glory (the conſequents of power) doe belong; ſo do we finde, that their glory (nay all glory, the greateſt that can be among men) is ſometimes ſet out by theſe or the like terms, of ſpoils, and booty, and prey. Thou art more glorious and excellent, than the mountains of prey: Pſal.76.4. See the Notes there. And ſo we believe, that the word robbery ſhould be taken, Philip.2.6. being ſpoken of Chriſt, that being in the form of God, he thought it not robbery to be equal with God: that is, he made it not a matter of brag and triumph: but, &c. for ſo the coherence will be much better: as hath been ſhewed more at large in another work.

ſet not your heart upon them] Pſal.24.4. Jer.9.23. Ezek.28 5. By joying over-much, or truſting in them.

V. 11. God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard this, &c.] Heb. God hath ſpoken one, two have I heard this: that is, one time; two times. Or, which comes all to one, one thing, two things: but rather as before: and ſo elſwhere, one, for, once, &c. The ſenſe is, That both by the word and expreſs teſtimony of God himſelf, and the acknowledgement of men, (it being a common ſpeech in all wiſe mens mouthes) it is moſt ſure and certain; and undenyable, unqueſtionable truth, That all power, and ſtrength, (let men take never ſo much upon themſelves, and domineer for a while, who in very truth are no better than vanity, &c. ver.9) and dominion, doth properly belong unto God alone. Such confeſſions and acknowledgements of Gods power, that God is all in all, &c. the writings of ancient wiſe Heathens of all kinde, afford plentifully, if a man would collect them. And as for the Word or Law of God, beſides the generality of it, which tends to that end, to teach man to put his confidence in God, and to depend of him in all things; there be divers particular places, more expreſs to that purpoſe, to which theſe words of the Pſalmiſt might have reference. The Vulgar Latine hath it; Semel locutus eſt Deus: duo hæc audivi; that is, God hath once ſpoken; theſe two things have I heard: which ſome late interpreters of high merit and credit, both wittily (if they be the firſt authors of it) and probably expound (taking both the verſes; this, and the 12. following, together; Alſo unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy, &c. to this purpoſe: God hath once ſpoken in Sinai, or from Mount Sinai, (when he delivered the Ten Commandments) and from what he then ſpake, I have learned theſe two things; 1. That God is moſt powerful, to avenge himſelf of his enemies: and 2. moſt merciful, to requite them that ſerve him, and put their truſt in him. For I the Lord am a jealous God, &c. And ſhewing mercy, &c. Exod 20.5,6. This is plauſible; yet if any man like better to underſtand it of Gods Word in general, confirmed unto David by many Prophets and propheſies, I am not againſt it. As for the words and manner of expreſsion here uſed, that in Job comes neareſt; Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further, Job 40.5. This power of God the Pſalmiſt doth here the more emphatically ſet out, becauſe it was the onely comfort and ſupport he had in all his adverſities and greateſt extremities, that though for a while it might ſeem otherwiſe, whileſt the wicked and ungodly had the better of it, &c. Yet he knew there was a juſt and righteous God in Heaven, who in due time would reward all men according to their deeds. See before upon Pſal. 9.6, O thou enemy, &c.

V. 9. ſhall go into the lower parts of the earth] They ſhall be ſlain, and made fit for burial, though they ſhall not have the honour to be buried, but be left on the earth for foxes to devour, ver. 10. In the Hebrew, the words (here tranſlated, the lower parts of the earth) are, תחתיות הארץ, by which ſome underſtand hell, or eternal death. But it appeareth by comparing with the like, Ezek 31. 14. & 18. (ארץ תחתית there; in both places: tranſlated, the nether parts of the earth: all the difference being that the word is ſingular here in Ezekiel: and plural, in David) that the grave onely (not a formal grave, but any place or part of the earth, that receiveth the carkaſſes of the dead, and ſlain) is meant; that is, with relation to the body, and not to the ſoul. For they are delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, &c. And ſo Pſalm 86.13. משאול תחתיה, there tranſlated, the loweſt hell, or, grave; is meant, preſent, certain death: and by death, any great extremity of affliction metaphorically intimated. However, theſe words, תחתיות הארץ are uſed in another ſenſe, Pſa. 139.15. the Womb there by the loweſt parts of the earth being intended. Which ſenſe nevertheleſs, hath relation unto this former, and is grounded upon it, becauſe the womb is to the body therein incloſed, as it were a grave: as by many it hath been ſtyled. And to this ſignification, or notice of the words the Apoſtle is thought by ſome to allude, Epheſ 4.9. ſpeaking there of Chriſt his Incarnation; though the more received Interpretation is, that by the earth, the world in general (as it is ſometimes) to be underſtood: and ſo Chriſt ſaid to have deſcended into the lower parts of the earth, when he came into the world, as Man.

V. 10. They ſhall fall by the ſword] Heb. they ſhall make him run out like water by the hands of the ſword.

ſhall glory] Hebrew יתהלל that is, ſhall have occaſion to glory, and for the occaſion of their glorying, to praiſe and glorifie God. He means, all things ſhall go well with them, according to their hearts deſire.

the mouth of them that ſpeak lies] As ſwearing, ſuch as is here underſtood, deliberate and conſcientious ſwearing, upon weighty occaſions, to bear witneſs to the truth, &c. is taken for the whole worſhip of God, becauſe it preſuppoſeth a belief, firſt, of a God; and ſecondly, of a God that is privy to all the actions and intentions of men; which two things are the very foundation of all Religion: ſo, to ſpeak lies, here oppoſed to ſwearing, may as properly imply abſolute ungodlineſſe and infidelity, becauſe it is to be oppoſed, that he that makes a practice of lying, which is a ſin more immediately againſt God, becauſe in his ſight onely; hath ſaid in his heart, that there is no God: and upon this ground, as he makes no conſcience to tell an untruth with all ſecurity; ſo he may as freely indulge himſelf a liberty of ſinning in any other kinde, when he ſees his opportunity.

the mouth of them that ſpeak lies, ſhall be ſtopped] That is, They who did lately boaſt of their hearts deſire, ſhall now be ſilent, being full of ſhame and confuſion, now that all things are fallen to them to the contrary. In brief, his meaning is, that there ſhall be an alteration, and that the proſperity of the wicked ſhall not continue for ever.

PSAL. LXIV.

Verſ. 1. HEar my voice] Prayer may be either mental, as that of Moſes, Exod. 14.15. Wherefore cryeſt thou? according to the Expoſition of all, or moſt ancient Fathers: or vocal, ſuch as this of Davids, probably; if we take the word voice, properly. But that need not. For the voice of prayer, may be taken for prayer, barely: as the voice of words, for words; as Deut.1.34. And the Lord heard the voice of their words, &c. Yet it is poſsible there may be ſomewhat more than ordinary in that word both here in Davids words, and in that place out of Deuteronomy: intimating that in both, there was ſomewhat very penetrative, and likely to move Gods, whether anger, (as in Deuteronomy) or compaſsion, as in Davids words. So the blood of Abel is ſaid to have a voice, Geneſ.4.10. the voice of thy brothers blood. Which I note the rather, becauſe the Hebrew word, here tranſlated prayer, hath alſo the ſignification of meditation: ſo that the words may as truly be tranſlated, in my meditation: and voice ſo taken, as we have ſhewed, may as properly belong to meditation, as to loud prayer. He might alſo ſay, the voice of my meditation, to intimate, that thoughts and meditations of the heart are as eaſily heard by God, as words are by men that are uttered with a loud voice.

See upon Prov. 24.17. Rejoyce not, &c. If there be danger in too much rejoycing at the fall of a wicked enemy; what may they expect at the hands of God one day, who the more they proſper in their unjuſt oppreſsion; the more doth their rage and malice againſt the oppreſſed, increaſe?

V. 6. They ſearch out iniquities] This is ambiguouſly tranſlated. For God is ſaid properly to ſearch out iniquities, when he ſeverely puniſhes, and calls a man to an account for old unrepented ſins and iniquities; as Job 10.6. Thou inquireſt after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt after my ſin. The meaning here is, They deviſe, by long ſearch and ſtudy, miſchievous things: they plot miſchief. It might have been therefore more clearly tranſlated, They ſearch out evils: or, They ſearch for iniquities.

they accompliſh a diligent ſearch] Or, we are conſumed by that which they have thorowly ſearched. The word here tranſlated in the text, They accompliſh, is תמנו which being found in three or four places beſides this, (as Numb.17.13. Lam.3.22. and elſewhere) is always tranſlated in the firſt perſon plural, we conſume, or, are conſumed. The word indeed is of an irregular form; which made ſome Rabbines to take the liberty to make a third perſon plural of it in this place. But ſince we finde it no where elſe ſo, it is ſafeſt to keep to that which we finde. Neither will the ſenſe be worſe ſo; as it is expreſſed in the margine. But Learned Grotius, very acutely, thus orders and ſupplies the whole verſe, with that which immediately follows; Inveſtigârunt illi iniquitates, &c. That is, They have ſought out iniquities; (that is, ſaith he, ways how to annoy us) We had been conſumed. But the moſt perfect ſearch of all, (is Gods; as he would have it ſupplyed, in reference to the next verſe) which (reacheth, to wit) to the inmoſt part of man, and to the very bottom of the heart. Therefore God hath ſhooted at them with an arrow; ſuddenly were they wounded.

both the inward thoughts of every one of them, and the heart is deep) There is no way ſo ſecret and ſo ſubtile to do hurt, which they invented not for his deſtruction.

V. 7. ſhall they be wounded] Heb. their wound ſhall be.

V. 8. So ſhall they make their own tongue to fall upon themſelves] That is, Thoſe miſchiefs which their hearts had deviſed, and their tongues with great inſolency and confidence had uttered and threatned againſt others. Or, as Pſal.52.2. Their tongue deviſeth miſchiefs: like a ſharp raſor, working deceitfully. And Prov.12.13. The wicked is ſnared by the tranſgreſsion of his lips, &c. It is ordinary with the Scripture, to aſcribe unto the lips, mouth, or tongue; thoſe things that belong unto the heart properly, becauſe of their near dependency.

all that ſee them ſhall flee away] יתנודדו which implies, that in their flight they ſhall wander through their aſtoniſhment and grief of minde. It muſt therefore be underſtood of the wicked, their favourers and abetters. So that here is a double aggravation of their miſery, from the aſtoniſhment of their friends, and their own forlorn condition at that time, when thoſe, who before did encourage and countenance, ſhall not be in caſe to relieve them, nor ſo much as abide with them, to comfort and to condole.

V. 9. and ſhall declare the work of God] See before upon Pſal. 28.4. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c.

for they ſhall wiſely conſider] See before upon Pſal.41.1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor. To which adde Mal.3.18. Then ſhall ye return and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not.

V. 10. The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord] Pſal.32.11. To ſee Gods heavy judgements againſt them, and how he hath caught them in their own ſnares.

A Pſalm and Song] See the Notes on the title of Pſal.30.

Verſ. 1. PRaiſe waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion] Hebr. לך דומיה, is ſilent unto thee: or more properly, ſilentium tibi: is ſilence unto thee. For it is properly a Noun ſubſtantive; and according to the propriety of the word, ſome expound it, The ſilence of others, (in other parts of the world, where thou art not known) is in Sion thy praiſe; that is, Thou art daily praiſed and glorified in thy Church by the godly, for thy manifold mercies, both ſpiritual and temporal, which others take no notice of, and bury in an unthankful ſilence, or oblivion. Others, Tibi ſilentium laus eſt; that is, ſay they, Thy praiſes are ſo many, ſo incomprehenſible, ſo inexpreſsible, that ſilence (or ſilent admiration) doth become us, and them, better than words. Or, as ſome others, ἀναντίῤῥητος, ἀναντιφώνητος, that is, which no man can ſpeak againſt thee, or deny; not to be contradicted by any, and conſequently by all men acknowledged. See upon, God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard this, &c. Pſal.62.11. Laſtly, Tibi ſilentium, laus: id eſt, ſileant alia omnia, ubi de te laudando agitur: Favete linguis. So the learned Grotius; That is, ſaith he, Let all other things be ſilent, when thou art to be praiſed. Let all men hold their peace, and be attentive. The words of the Prophet Habakkuk come very near; The Lord is in his holy Temple: let all the earth keep ſilence before him, Hab.2.20. Theſe indeed keep beſt to the propriety of the word; but they go ſomewhat far for the ſenſe. Others therefore taking דומיה for דומה; that is, for a preſent particle, tranſlate πρέπει, convenit; belongs unto thee: or as it is here, quieſcit, exſpectat, manet; waiteth. And ſo we had before already, Pſal.62,1. Truly my ſoul waiteth upon God: it is the ſame word as is here. Now for the argument of the Pſalm, it is conceived by many, that it was intended for a form of publick thankſgiving, for a gracious welcom plenty, after a long dearth and famine; ſuch as we reade of 2 Sam.21.1. & 14.

V. 2. unto thee ſhall all fleſh come] This is not literally meant of that coming, or gathering of the Gentiles unto God, by the preaching of the Goſpel: (though myſtically applyable to that too) but of the prayers and addreſſes to God, of all men of all Nations, in their extraordinary needs and neceſſities; it being the propriety of preſſing dangers and extremities, (as by many hath been obſerved) to bring them to a thought of God, who otherwiſe are moſt godleſs and profane. See Pſal 107. where this is ſet out at large, and proved, or illuſtrated by many inſtances. Neither muſt the words be preciſely taken of that right, either Legal, by certain rites, oblations and ſacrifices; (as then:) or Evangelical, in Chriſt onely, (Eph 3.12. & Joh.14.6. No man cometh unto the Father, but by me) but of a more general coming to God, when men in their diſtreſſes, having an apprehenſion of a Deity, both merciful and powerful, apply themſelves to it, ſuch a way as they think beſt and moſt acceptable, for help and relief. So Saint Paul, who elſewhere ſets out all the Gentiles as godleſs, becauſe they had not the knowledge of the true God; in a more general ſenſe, witneſſeth of the Athenians, (the greateſt idolaters of the world) that they did, though ignorantly, (alluding to their Inſcription, To the unknown God) worſhip that God when he preached unto them, Acts 17.23.

V. 3. Iniquities] Heb. words, or, matters of iniquities.

Iniquities prevail againſt me, &c.] Rather, if the argument of the Pſalm be not miſtaken (of which ſee before) in the preterit, Iniquities had prevailed, &c. and, thou doſt purge, or, haſt purged, as Junius and ſome others. Except we ſhould make the argument to be more general, that the Pſalmiſt purpoſing to ſet out the goodneſs of God towards mankinde in general, in affording them the fruits of the earth ſo plentifully, he doth firſt begin with his more ſpecial love and favour to his Church, where having made himſelf known more particularly by his word, he hath ordained the means of eternal ſalvation, by forgiveneſs of ſins, &c. the choiceſt and chiefeſt of Gods bleſſings. See before upon Pſal.24. 1. The earth is the Lords, &c.

V. 4. thou chaſtiſeſt] Pſal.36.8.

ſatisfied with the goodneſſe of thy houſe] Pſal.160.5.

V. 5. By terrible things in righteouſneſſe wilt thou anſwer us] By terrible things here, (נוראות in the Original) moſt Interpreters underſtand great and gracious deliverances of the Church, wherein the power and goodneſs of God, in its extreme perils and dangers, is moſt conſpicuous. But how this agreeth with that which follows, who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, &c. doth not appear. Except we ſhould ſay with ſome, that therefore, the ends of the earth, &c. that is, of all men in general, becauſe ſuch great and miraculous deliverances which God affords unto his Church at ſuch times, and upon ſuch occaſions, are a means to bring others to the knowledge of God, and of the increaſe of the Church all the world over. But this (though elſewhere, Pſal.67.2. That thy way may be known, &c.) we have ſomewhat to this purpoſe) is here rather witty, than probable: eſpecially, when there is no need at all of going ſo far. By terrible things then in righteouſneſſe, (taking righteouſneſſe here for mercy and goodneſſe, as often already hath been obſerved, and is here again noted by Interpreters) we underſtand that goodneſſe of God, in general, and thoſe wonderful works of his, extending to all, as is there ſhewed; and for which the Pſalmiſt doth ſo earneſtly exhort all men of the world to praiſe and glorifie God, Pſal.107. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and for his wonderful works to the children of men, ver.8,15,21,31. נוראות and נפלאות are words of great affinity, and ſometimes put together; as Pſal. 106.22. Wondrous works in the land of Ham; and terrible things by the Red-ſea. This will be the beſt and moſt natural coherence certainly. And ſalvation, of temporal deliverances, is ordinary enough. But if it be ſaid, as it is by others, that at theſe words, O God of our ſalvation: the Pſalmiſt ends what he intended to ſay of Gods goodneſſe to his Church in particular; and ſo paſſeth to the conſideration, or commemoration of his general goodneſſe towards all; I think this alſo may be ſaid with probability enough; and therefore I leave it to the choice of the Reader. But if ſo, if not a new verſe, yet a full point might have done well; Thou art the confidence, &c.

and of them that are afar off upon the Sea] Some ſupply the words, & inſularum maris diſtantium; that is, and of the Iſlands of the Sea, that are afar off. Junius without any ſupplement, fiducia omnium extremitatum terræ & maris longinquarum; that is, Thou art the hope of all the ends, both of the Land and Sea, afar off. According to this tranſlation, and of them, &c. the words might be interpreted by Pſal.107.23,24, &c. They that go down to the Sea in ſhips, &c. Theſe ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. But it may do well, if both be underſtood; both they that are upon the ſeas; which may fit the literal meaning better perchance; and the Iſles of the ſea, or Inhabitants of far Iſlands, which is more ſuitable to the myſtical ſenſe, of the converſion of Iſles to the Chriſtian faith: according to that of Eſay; He ſhall not fail nor be diſcouraged; till he have ſet judgement in the earth; and the Iſles ſhall wait for his Law, Eſay 42.4.

V. 6. girded with power] Pſal.93.1.

V. 7. Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Seas] Pſal.107 29. He maketh the ſtorms, &c. and of Chriſt, Matth.8.26. Of the conſideration of Nature, and of Gods Power and Providence over all created things; to what end often inſiſted upon by David, ſee upon Pſal 33.6. By the word of the Lord, &c.

the tumult of the people] Eſay 17.12,13. Wo to the multitude of many people, &c.

V.8. thou makeſt the out-goings of the morning and evening to rejoyce] This expreſſion, according to the ſubject, being altogether Poetical, the ſenſe is the more obſcure; and of divers different Expoſitions, it is hard to reſolve which is the trueſt, becauſe all, within compaſs of the liberty of a Poetical expreſſion; and of many, not any, that we can deem proper, or literal. Some would have him to ſay by theſe words, that God by his univerſal goodneſs gives the wholeworld occaſion of rejoycing, even from Eaſt to Weſt; that is, from one end of the world to the other: to which purpoſe he ſaith elſewhere, that the whole earth is full of his goodneſs. Others, by the out-goings of the morning, underſtand men going with the morning light to labour, according to their ſeveral imployments: and by the out-goings of the evening, wilde beaſts, that wait for the darkneſs, and then come abroad for prey: Which they, very probably, ground upon the words of the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 104 20,21,&c. Thou makeſt darkneſs, and it was night; wherein all the beaſt of the earth do creep forth: The young Lyons, &c. The Sun ariſeth, &c. Man goeth forth unto his work, and to his labour until the evening. Here plainly we have the out-goings, both of morning, and evening. Theſe I take to be the chiefeſt Expoſitions. If neither of theſe ſatisfie, I doubt Junius his interpretation will leſs; yet for the authority of the man, I will not omit it. He tranſlates the whole verſe thus; Qui facis ut canant exortus matutinos & veſpertinos incolæ extremitatum reverentes à ſignis tuis. It were not eaſie to ſay what he meant by this tranſlation, did not he explain it in his Notes: and yet not eaſie neither, to apply the Note to the tranſlation; Qui totos dies à principio ad finem conſumis in docendis hominibus laudem tuam; So he explains it: let the Reader judge. After all theſe, there is yet another interpretation, not leſs probable than any; which expounds theſe out-goings, of the viciſſitude of day and night, and that admirable equipage of Sun and Moon with other Stars, that belongs unto them: wherein Gods great power and providence to men is ſeen as much as in any thing: as if he would ſay, Thou giveſt men occaſion to praiſe and glorifie thee, when they ſee theſe admirable works of thine, and finde the benefit and comfort of both; both of day and night. Which is made the more probable, by comparing with Jeremy 31.35. Thus ſaith the Lord, which giveth the Sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the Moon and of the Stars for a light by night: which divideth the Sea, when the waves thereof roar, (qui diſrumpit mare, & fremunt fluctus ejus, Junius) the Lord of hoſts is his Name. Here we ſee the Sea alſo is mentioned, as in the former verſe: which, as we ſaid, makes the matter ſo much the more probable. But why might not, which would make the expreſſion more poetical, and yet the ſenſe more literal, the Morning, and the Evening themſelves, be ſaid to rejoyce? Of the morning, or morning Sun, either of his out-going, or rejoycing, there would be little queſtion, ſeeing we have both Pſal.19.5. which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber; and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a race. His going forth, &c. But then of the Evening, how ſhall that be ſaid to go out? Yes, very well, according to Poets, who uſe to deſcribe the coming of the Evening, as a thing that had no dependance from the going down of the Sun: but had its proper out-going, as well as the Morning. Cùm veſper fuſco roſcidus exit equo, Ovid for one, as I take it. But laſtly, what hinders but that the words might be tranſlated, Thou makeſt the out-goings of the Morning, and the Evening (veſperam, not veſpera) to rejoyce. After all this, we may not omit a paſſage of the Prophet Micah, where this expreſſion is uſed concerning Chriſt; ſomewhat may be made of it in confirmation of ſome of the interpretations that have been inſiſted upon. His words are: But thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the many thouſands of Judah, yet out of thee ſhall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth (it is the ſame word in the Original, as is here,) have been from of old, from everlaſtings, (or, the dayes of evermore.)

to rejoyce] Or, to ſing.

V. 9. Thou viſiteſt the earth] To wit, with rain.

watereſt it] Or, after thou hadſt made it to deſire rain.

with the river of God which is full of water] Moſt Interpreters would have theſe words to be intended of the Holy Land particularly, and think that alluſion is made to Deut.11. 10,11. where the promiſed Land is ſaid to be watered, not as Egypt, with multiplicity of rivers, whether natural, or artificial; which in Hebrew are properly called פלגים, which is the word here alſo uſed; but with the rain of heaven; that here therefore the rain of heaven is called a river, becauſe it ſupplies the uſe of a river; but, the river of God, as immediately coming from Heaven, and of a different origine from ordinary rivers. Some again apply the words, to the river Jordan, or Siloe. But I ſee no neceſſity of reſtraining the words to the Holy Land. The rain may be called the river of God, with alluſion to ordinary rivers, without any particular reference to thoſe of Egypt, or to that place that ſpeaks of them. The coherence as I conceive, will be much better ſo. The Pſalmiſt therefore doth here ſet out the benefit of the rain, which is as it were the great river of God, full of water, and ſufficient to water all the earth.

thou prepareſt them corn, when thou haſt ſo provided for it] The meaning is, that when God by rain and otherwiſe, hath fitted, or prepared (which is the word of the Original) the earth, then is the earth in caſe to bring forth corn for the uſe of men. That this is the meaning, is not doubted by any: and the Apoſtle ſaith in effect as much, 1 Cor 3.6. I have planted, Apollo watered, but God gave the increaſe: and Chap.15.of thd ſame Epiſtle, verſes 36,36. And that which thou ſoweſt, &c. but if the words were tranſlated, as they may as well, It (that is, the earth,) prepareth them corn, when (or, becauſe) thou haſt ſo prepared it: they would run with more acuteneſs and concinnity, and leſs ſavour of tautologie. The third perſon Future Feminine, and the ſecond Maſculine in the Hebrew, are all one. So תשלג is doubtfully tranſlated, by ſome in the third, by others in the ſecond Perſon, Pſal.68.14. See there, upon, it was white as ſnow in Salmon.

V. 10. Thou watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly] By this deſcription he ſheweth, that all the order of nature is a teſtimony of Gods love towards us, who cauſeth all creatures to ſerve our neceſſity.

thou ſettleſt the furrows thereof] Or, thou cauſeſt rain to deſcend into the furrows thereof.

" thou makeſt it ſoft] Heb. thou diſſolveſt it.

V. 11. the year with thy goodneſs] Heb. the year of thy goodneſs.

Verſ. 1. ALl ye lands] Heb. all the earth. He propheſieth that all nations ſhall come to the knowledge of God, who then was onely known in Judea.

V. 3. ſubmit] Or, yield feigned obedience, Pſal.18.44. Heb. lye. The ſtrangers ſhall ſubmit. See there. To which may be added, Zeph.3.13. The remnant of Iſrael ſhall not do iniquity, nor ſpeak lyes: Neither ſhall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouthes: for they ſhall feed, and lie down, and none ſhall make them afraid. Here plainly, ſpeaking of lyes, and a deceitful (or flattering: See Pſal. 12.2 where they are joyned: as elſewhere) tongue; oppoſed to perfect, or ſecure liberty. The ground of which oppoſition, ſome of the beſt Expoſitors not underſtanding, would have this for lie,&c. either to ſtand for nothing; or give ſuch reaſons of the coherence, as have not much probability. See alſo Eſay 57.11. And of whom haſt thou been afraid, or feared, that thou haſt lyed, &c. To lye therefore, I ſay, in ſuch places, doth import ſuch low ſubmiſſion properly, as doth often, through fear, put men upon a neceſſity (to ſave themſelves) to tell a lye: or not to dare to ſpeak the truth freely: ſo, properly; but ſometimes, ſubmiſſion in general, whether through fear, or otherwiſe. Such Metonomies are very frequent in all Languages; and the not underſtanding of them breeds great obſcurity ſometimes, where the matter otherwiſe of it ſelf is plain enough. So to kiſſe, Pſalm 2.12. for to ſubmit: as is there noted. And a deceitful tongue, or hand, in the Proverbs, often; for an idle tongue, or hand: as all Interpreters agree: and ſo tranſlated too, commonly; not, deceitful, (as the word original, properly) but idle, Proverbs 10.4. and 12.27. and again, 19.15. upon this ground, becauſe idleneſſe is oftentimes the occaſion of guile and deceitfulneſſe: from whence nevertheleſſe we may not abſolutely conclude, that every one that is deceitful, is idle; or every one that is idle, deceitful: it is not without example, I hope, that a man ſhould be idle, and ſlothful in his buſineſſe; and yet upright and honeſt in his dealing,: no more than before (for it is the ſame reaſon:) that every one that is ſaid in this kinde to lye, that is, to ſubmit; ſhould be underſtood fainedly to ſubmit, through fear.

V. 5, Come and ſee the works of God] Pſal.46.8. Come behold, &c. Men are apt enough to talk, and enquire by way of curioſity, of all ſtrange chances and alterations that happen among them: but to conſider of them wiſely, as the operations of Gods hand, that God may be glorified, and themſelves upon a ſtrict and unpartiall ſearch of what is amiſſe in themſelves amended: (the beſt and ſafeſt uſe that we can make of Gods judgements upon others: Luke 13. 3. but except ye repent, &c.) is not the care of many: but though not of many, muſt be of all, that are truly godly. See upon Pſalm 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not, &c. towards the end.

he is terrible] All fear of God, is grounded chiefly upon this his mercy, or his terror. There is great need of both, according to the ſeveral tempers and diſpoſitions of men, to maintain Religion among men: David therefore doth often inculcate both: Atheiſts, as carefully and peremptorily deny both. Of both theſe, and upon what grounds denyed by Atheiſts and Epicures, ſee upon Pſalm 90. 11. even according to thy fear, &c. and Pſalm 130. 4. For there is forgiveneſſe (in ſome Trnaſlations, mercies:) with thee, that thou mayeſt bee feared.

V. 11. Thou broughteſt us into the net] Gods people may be brought into troubles, made ſubject unto tyrants, (whether one, or many at once:) and enter into manifold dangers, as beaſts are taken, loaden, rid on.

V. 12. Thou haſt cauſed men to ride over our heads] That is, Thou haſt ſet men over our heads, or over us, who by their cruel and inſolent government, did as it were ride our bodies. See Eſay 51.23. which have ſaid to thy ſoul, Bow down, &c.

V. 13. I will go into thy houſe] Though trueſt thankfulneſs; nay, that onely truly, which is from the heart, and brings forth fruits of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe in our lives and converſations: Yet formal ſolemne thanks, as going to Gods Houſe, and the like, muſt not be omitted. We muſt approve our thankfulneſſe not unto God onely, (though unto him eſpecially) but unto men alſo, that God may be glorified, and others edified by our example. This hath been the practiſe of all the godly in all ages, as well Chriſtians, as Jews. See alſo upon Pſal.100.4. Enter into his gates.

V. 14. uttered] Heb. opened.

V. 15. fatlings] Heb. marrow.

V. 16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God] It is not enough to have received Gods benefits, and to be mindeful thereof, but alſo we are bound to make others profit thereby and praiſe God, Pſal. 40. 9,10.

V. 17. and he was extolled with my tongue] Heb. under my tongue: by which ſome underſtand the heart, as if he meant, that being confident God would hear his cry, he began to meditate and frame within himſelf the praiſes of God, by way of thankſgiving. Others ſupplying ſermonibus, tranſlate it, & fui elatus pro ſermonibus linguæ meæ; that is, and I was exalted (that is, delivered;) according to the words of my tongue. This I ſhould like better, if the word in the Original רומם, (properly, exaltatus eſt, in the third perſon: except we make a Participle of it,) will bear it. But extolled with my tongue, is more generally received; and in my judgement; to be preferred. There is no ſuch incongruity in the matter, if words be ſaid to proceed from under the tongue, that are framed with the manifold reflexions and complications of the tongue. And ſo poiſon, elſewhere, is ſaid to be under the tongue, which is thought to proceed from the tongue it ſelf. Now God is very truly and really exalted by us, when we call upon him in time of diſtreſſe. This is the greateſt honour (if we may ſo ſpeak) that we can do unto him: (Pſal. 50. 15. And call upon me in the day of trouble, &c.) which they that bereave him of, calling upon Saints or Angels in ſuch caſes, have much to anſwer for.

V. 18. If I regard iniquity in mine heart] If I delight in wickedneſſe, God will not hear me, Joh,9.31. Now we know, &c. and Pſal.50. laſt words.

Verſ. 1. CAuſe his face to ſhine upon us] Pſal. 4. 6. the light of thy countenance. See more there. All theſe forms and expreſſions (which may be added) being taken from that forme of ſolemne bleſſing preſcribed by God himſelfe, Numbers 6. 24, 25, 26. The Lord bleſſe thee, and keep thee, &c. That forme being of Gods own deviſing, (as we may ſay) holy men did not think they could pleaſe God better, than in uſing his own words, borrowed from that forme, ſo farre as was agreeable to their occaſions; it being intended onely for a form of bleſſing: as of all prayers, we have great reaſon to think the Lords Prayer, as we commonly call it, to be the moſt acceptable Prayer unto God, that we can uſe: and though we may uſe others to that; as our ſeverall occaſions may require; yet to think better of any other of our own deviſing, than of that: or ſo to be in love of our own formes, whether ſet, or ſudden, as to omit that in our devotions, whether publick, or private; cannot be leſſe than blaſphemy, and ſacriledge, in a high degree. And then to ſay, that it was not intended by Chriſt for a forme of Prayer, to be uſed verbatim, as it is ſet down; but I know not for what; is ſo ridiculous, and contradictory to the Text it ſelf, and to the practiſe of all Chriſtians of ancienteſt times; that we may as well allow of Papiſts to ſay, That when Chriſt injoyned, Drink ye all of this: he meant the Prieſts onely, and take it for a ſufficient excuſe of their abominable ſacriledge, in bereaving the people of the Cup, in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament. But to return to that form preſcribed Numb. 6. 24, &c. moſt of the phraſes there, tend to this, (well worthy our obſervation) to teach us, that the happineſſe of man doth conſiſt in being admitted to the Preſence of God, and his Beatifical Viſion; the fruits whereof reaping even in this life, (where we ſee but as through a glaſſe) Temporall bleſſings, and Spirituall; what may wee expect, when wee ſhall bee admitted to behold Him face to face?

V. 6. Then ſhall the earth yield her increaſe] This Pſalm, as is generally granted, containing a prophecy concerning Chriſt, and his Kingdom, and the happineſs of men under it; there is no queſtion but the bleſſings here ſpoken of, though ſet out under the type of things Temporal, according to the manner of the Prophets, and the condition of thoſe times, are to be underſtood ſpiritually, chiefly. For we would not altogether exclude the literal ſenſe, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that Godlineſs hath the promiſes, &c. but ſpiritually, chiefly. The increaſe of the earth is alſo mentioned by Ezek. (34.27.) and Zachar. (8 12.) upon this occaſion. Now by the earth, ſome underſtand ſpiritually, the hearts and mindes of men, cultivated by the knowledge of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, and by the ſpirit of regeneration, to bring forth fruits plentifully, Luke 8. 8, 15. 2 Cor.9.8. Hebr.6 7,8. Their interpretation therefore is not altogether improbable, who underſtand thoſe words, Pſal.85.11. Truth ſhall ſpring out of the earth. To the ſame effect as theſe here of the increaſe of the earth: as if he had ſaid, The earth ſhall be fruitful in yielding true increaſe. Truth indeed, taken in the ordinary ſenſe, and other graces with it, to be intended, ſpiritually, there too: but the type, to be the ſame.

V. 7. all the ends of the earth ſhall fear him] When they feel his great benefits, both ſpiritual and corporal toward them, then they ſhall ſerve God aright.

A Pſalm or Song] See Notes on the title of Pſal.30.

Verſ. 1. LEt God ariſe, let his enemies be ſcattered: let them alſo, &c.] Num.10.35. See before upon Pſalm 47.5. God is gone up with a ſhout. Moſt Interpreters agree, that the occaſion of this Pſalm, was that ſolemn fetching of the Ark to Jeruſalem, and placing of it in the Tabernacle David had prepared for it: whereof we reade, 2 Sam.6.12, &c. Some, becauſe many things here have reference, or at leaſt, are applyable to the coming out of Egypt, and what then happened, they make that to be the argument. But I do not conceive that, to be a ſufficient reaſon. For the coming out of Egypt, was a ſubject to the Jews of a very large capacity in that kinde, and which upon all occaſions, of publick praiſes and thankſgivings eſpecially, might come in very well. Beſides, the Ark, we know, was not onely a conſequent of their egreſs, in regard of the time: but in all their progreſs, their conſtant palladium and ſecurity; ſo that in that reſpect, their coming out of Egypt was no heterogeneous or impertinent, but very fit and proper ſubject, upon ſuch an occaſion. As for them that would have no other literal meaning throughout the whole Pſalm, than Chriſt, becauſe applyable to him; or, as they urge, applyed to him by the Apoſtle; though that be true of a good part of it, yet we deny the neceſsity of the conſequence. See before upon Pſal.40.6. Mine ears haſt thou opened; and Pſal.45. upon the title of it.

before him] Heb. from his face.

V. 3. But let the righteous be glad] All thoſe particulars concerning the wicked and ungodly from the beginning of the Pſalm, (as theſe alſo, that concern the righteous in this verſe) might have been tranſlated in the form of prophetical denunciations as well, as in the form of imprecations: which though frequent in the Pſalms, (of which ſee upon Pſal.34.4. Let them be confounded, &c.) yet the more frequent, the leſſe need there is of multiplying them without cauſe. It is true, that Numb. 10. 35, 36. from whence part of the words are taken, the precatory, or imprecatory form is moſt proper. However, it doth not follow, but that here, the original words being indifferent to either, it may be otherwiſe. So Vatablus, Junius, Calvin: diſpergentur: fugient; peribunt: lætabuntur: or to that purpoſe: not, diſpergantur, fugiant, &c. However, I except not againſt this Tranſlation, as faulty; but onely ſhew the difference. I rather follow this ſenſe, becauſe it will fit the day of Judgement better, if the words be read by way of abſolute affirmation, (they ſhall be ſcattered, &c.) than by way of bare imprecation. Truly that is the time, the onely time, of which we can poſitively ſay, That Surgente Domino: when God ſhall ariſe (to judgement:) that then at his preſence all the wicked and ungodly ſhall be confounded, and periſh: and the righteous on the other ſide, ſhall rejoyce; yea, exceedingly rejoyce. Gods judgements, in this world, we ſee not oftentimes: and thoſe that we ſee, ſo doubtful and obſcure ſometimes, becauſe we ſee not the hearts of men, as God doth; and cannot ſo peremptorily determine, who are wicked, or godly, before God, and who not; that it is not alwayes very ſafe for us to judge. Were it otherwiſe, that God did alwayes judge and reward in this world, there would be no need of faith, or hope: or at leaſt, faith and hope would be of another value, than we are made to believe: not of things future, and inviſible; but of things preſent and ſeen. So that the very foundation of our Religion, would be altered: there would be more Religion, and fear of God in the world, queſtionleſſe, (had God appointed it ſo from the beginning) than there is; but it would have been guilty of another nature, and upon other grounds. See alſo upon Pſal.11.6. Fire and brimſtone. And upon Proverbs 1. 32. For the turning away of the ſimple.

let the righteous be glad] Pſal.32.11.

be glad] Eſay 65.14.

exceedingly rejoyce] Heb. rejoyce with gladneſſe.

V. 4. extoll him] So divers others too, as Vatablus, Junius, Bucer, and Calvin: but not ſo well, as I conceive, as they, not fewer in number, nor of leſſe Authority, that tranſlate, ὁδοποιήσατε, with the Septuagint; that is, prepare the way, or make ready: or, raiſe the way, or, make an high way: which agrees better with the propriety of the word סלו in the Original; and makes the words the more applyable to Chriſt, according to that of Eſay 40. 3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderneſſe, Prepare ye the way of the Lord: make ſtraight in the deſert a high way for our God: and Malach.3.1. Behold I will ſend my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me: applyed to John the Baptiſt, Chriſt his fore-runner and harbinger, by Zacharias his Father, Luke 1.76. yea, by Chriſt himſelf, Luke 7.27.

that rideth upon the heavens] So Vatablus, and Calvin, in nubibus; vel in cœlis: and Aben Ezra confirms it from verſe 33. To him that rideth upon the heavens of heavens; the Chald. qui ſedet ſuper ſolium gloriæ, as Genebrard expreſſes it: Junius, qui inſidet amœnitatibus. Others, in deſertis, in the deſerts: which ſignification is as proper to the word as any other, and though it be not Eſayes word, (במדבר is his word) yet may the ſenſe very probably, (as upon the former word hath already been obſerved) be thought the ſame in both places, Eſay 40.3. The voice of him that cryeth in the wilderneſſe, &c. The Septuagint alſo render it, ἐπὶ δυσμῶν: which although by the old Latine it be tranſlated ſuper occaſum; according to the more proper and uſual notion of the Greek word δυσμὸς: yet by comparing with divers other places, of their Tranſlation, it may appear that by δυσμὸς, they intend ſometimes the deſert: as by ſome here is well obſerved. And if there be any weight in Aben Ezra's obſervation from the 33 verſe; for the former opinion and interpretation, as much may be ſaid for this from thoſe words of the ſeventh verſe, when thou didſt march through the wilderneſſe. According to this interpretation, that rideth, (the Ark being meant, as generally throughout the Pſalm: which was alſo called God: whereof ſee more upon Pſal.27.8. Seek ye my face, &c.) is as much as, that is carried: and by deſerts, we muſt literally underſtand, either ſome deſerts, or deſert places, properly ſo called, through which the Ark had formerly, or was now to paſs: or more generally, any rough unequal wayes, for the honour and reverence of him that was to paſſe through, (as for a great Prince, upon ſome ſolemn occaſion, either of triumph, or the like, uſeth ſometimes) now to be levelled and made plain. And to that purpoſe are theſe words of Eſay alſo, which ſome bring to explain theſe: Every valley ſhall be exalted, and every mountain and hill ſhall be made low: and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight, and the rough places plain, Eſay 40.4. Now for the myſtical and ſpiritual meaning, as the words are applyed to Chriſt, coming in the fleſh, and to the operation of his Word and Spirit upon the ſouls of men, &c. though by ſome inſiſted upon here alſo; as among the reſt, by Diodat, (whoſe Notes having relation to his Tranſlation, different from ours here, ſhould not have been exhibited without it, neither here, nor any where elſe, where different; as too often it is in the late Engliſh Tranſlations; to the great puzzling of any diligent rational Reader) yet I do not conceive it ſo proper and neceſſary, in theſe Annotations. Indeed, where the ſpiritual meaning proves to be (as ſometimes; of which upon Pſalm 22. and elſewhere) the moſt proper and immediate; that is, literal; the caſe is otherwiſe: but that is not our caſe here.

by his Name JAH] Though to ſpeak properly, there is but one God, that is the true God; yet becauſe there be many that are called and accounted Gods, beſides the true; as the Apoſtle tells us in a place: The Pſalmiſt here would not have us to praiſe God in general onely, but more particularly, the true God; the God of Iſrael: (That all people of the earth may know thy Name, and fear thee as doth thy people Iſrael, 2 Chron. 6. 33,) known and diſtinct from other imaginary gods, by his Name JAH. Wherein I do not conceive that the Pſalmiſt had a reſpect ſo much to the derivation of the word, wherein is an intimation of true Being, or Exiſtence, proper unto God onely, in oppoſition to whatſoever elſe is ſaid to have a being, whether men or Angels; whoſe being is but an imperfect and improper being, if compared to Gods: and again, proper unto the true God, in oppoſition to idols, and imaginary gods: all which, though moſt true, yet is not ſo obvious to ordinary capacities: not ſo much to the derivation, I ſay, as to the common uſe and notion of the word JAH, as it was uſed both by Jews and Gentiles. For even among the Gentiles, the God of Iſrael was known anciently by that Name: but that they pronounced it JAO, in ſtead of JAH. So Diod. Siculus, an ancient Greek Hiſtorian, (one of the beſt and moſt accurate, but that we have but little of him remaining) doth clearly teſtifie, and he calls him Moſes his God; or, the God of Moſes. And beſides him, Macrobius, an ancient Latine Author, though ſome ages after Chriſt, yet a man wholly addicted to the old Gentiliſm, and very well verſed in ancient Mythology, or Theology; he records an ancient Oracle, conſiſting of five Greek verſes, concerning the Name JAO, or as there written in Greek, ΙΑΩ. And moreover he bears witneſs, that one Cornelius Labeo, an ancient Roman, did write a Book concerning that Oracle, inſcribed, De Oraculo Apollinis Clarii. Now this Name JAH being but an abreviation of JEHOVAH, and the ſame in effect; that there is in it ſomewhat extraordinary, may appear by Gods own words, Exod. 16.2,3. by the Name of El Shaddai (or, God Almighty) was I known unto them; but by my Name JEHOVAH was I not known unto them: and by Eſay 42.8. I am JEHOVAH; that is my Name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praiſe to graven images. But what that is, and what is the genuine meaning of thoſe places, would be a long queſtion: for which I muſt refer the Reader to the learned Expoſitors there. But another queſtion will be, not impertinent to this place, whether the ancient Romans, when they transferred this Name JAH, or JEHOVAH, to their Jovis, or Jove, may be ſaid to have communicated it to their Idols. Not to make a long buſineſſe of it which would not be very pertinent here: I ſay briefly, that for the manner of the worſhip, they may be ſaid to have made an Idol of their Jupiter indeed; but for their opinions, that which they ſay of him, the more ſober of them, eſpecially in their prayers and ſupplications, is, for the moſt part, very agreeable to what the Scripture ſaith. Whence it is, that the Apoſtle, Act. 17.23. makes no ſcruple to apply a paſſage of an ancient Heathen Poet, concerning Jove, (Διὸς was the word in the Poet) as they did call him, to the true God, JEHOVAH.

V. 5. A father of the fatherleſs] Pſal. 10.14,18.

in his habitation] Some underſtand the Sanctuary, as Pſal. 26.8. Lord I have loved the habitation of thy houſe, &c. but in relation to former times, it may, as probably, be taken of Heaven.

V. 6. God ſetteth the ſolitary in families] He giveth children to them that be childleſſe, and encreaſeth their families, 1 Sam 22.5.

in familes] Heb. in a houſe.

in a dry land] Which is barren of Gods bleſſings, which before they had abuſed, Pſal. 107.41.

V. 7. O God, when thou wenteſt forth before thy people] This and the next verſe are taken out of Deborahs ſong, Judg 5.4,5. but fitted by David, with ſome little alteration, for his purpoſe. All tends, in a Poetical ſtrain and ſtyle, to ſet out the glory and Majeſty of God, which although in himſelf, at all times equally great and glorious, yet to man he doth appear then moſt, when he doth ſome great work among them; as was the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt. Now becauſe no man can comprehend the greatneſſe of God, eſſentially, and naturally; (this very word of nature, being but improperly ſpoken of God:) and that even what the wiſer ſort of men can apprehend of God, is above the reach of the vulgar; he is therefore, more ſutably to vulgar capacities, metaphorically, and allegorically ſet out, under types of things incurrent to the ſenſes, and which are moſt apt to move the phanſie.

V. 9. Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain] Becauſe we do not finde that theſe words have reference to any particular time, their tranſlation therefore is to be preferred, (for to either the words in the Original are indifferent) who render it by the preſent, Thou, O God, doſt ſend, &c. whereby thou doſt confirm, &c. when it is weary: which may be underſtood of every years rain. And in very deed, this of the rain was a thing ſo conſiderable to that Countrey, that as it was promiſed as a ſpecial bleſſing, Deut. 11,13,14,15. And it ſhall come to paſſe, &c. ſo it is remembred by ſome of the Prophets, as a ſpecial motive to thankſulneſs; and an aggravation of their unthankfulneſs, that did not make that uſe of it; as Jer. 5.24. Neither ſay they in their heart, Let us now ſeek the Lord, &c.

inheritance] Deut. 11.11,12.

V. 10. Thy Congregation hath dwelt therein] The Hebrew word חיה ſignifies alſo beaſts, whether wilde or tame. Some therefore here tranſlate it, Pecus tuum; by which neverthelеſſe, they underſtand men, the Iſraelites: which is in effect the ſame as here, Thy Congregation. But others render it, Oves, or Armenta; and expound it of cattel, both ſheep and other; it being one of the chief commendations of the land of Canaan, that it abounded with cattel. But the following verb, importing dwelling, is more proper of a Congregation of men, as the word is often uſed; than of ſheep, or any other cattel. Somewhat to this purpoſe, but more general, we have Pſal. 107,36,37. He turneth the wilderneſſe into a ſtanding water; and dry grounds into water-ſprings: And there he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation.

of thy goodneſſe] God bleſſed the land of Canaan, becauſe he had choſen that place for his Church: or, in reference to the foregoing paſſages, it may be underſtood of Gods goodneſs in providing for them, and refreſhing them in the wilderneſs.

V. 11. The Lord gave the word, great was the company of thoſe that publiſhed it] The ſenſe of theſe words, though not ſo obvious at firſt ſight, at leaſt as here tranſlated; yet is certain enough, and which is not ordinary in obſcure places, among Expoſitors, generally agreed upon. It muſt be firſt conceived, that bleſſings and mercies of ſeveral kindes, ſome paſt, and ſome preſent, are here remembred. Having therefore ſpoken of Gods bleſſings upon the land it ſelf, he paſſeth to the remembrance and commemoration of ſome notable victories and deliverances. Some think that David in theſe words had a reſpect to his own times, and thoſe many victories he had obtained upon his enemies by Gods ſpecial favour: which is like enough. But however, the words are ſo general, that they may relate to former times alſo: neither is any order of time obſerved in this ſong, but ſeveral things promiſcuouſly ſet down, as fit matter for ſuch a ſolemn and general thankſgiving, being digeſted and put together, with more regard to the Verſe and Poeme, than Hiſtory. Matters of great importance, that are atchieved abroad, are often ſet out and perſonated in the Scripture, under the Proſopopœia of poſts and meſſengers; which is very poetical, and of great force to affect the ſenſe with a conceit, partly of the ſuddenneſs of the thing; and partly of the ſuſpenſe expectation of men. Whether it be upon a diſmal or joyful occaſion, we haue examples of it in both kindes. One poſt ſhal run to meet another, and one meſſenger to meet another, to tell the king of Babylon, that his city is taken at one end, Jer. 51.31. This was a ſad occaſion: but of a joyful, Eſay 52.7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace, &c. Our Pſalmiſt ſaith, The Lord gave the word; that is, he gave the occaſion; it was his doing: good reaſon therefore he ſhould have the praiſe of it. As if he would have ſaid, which is to the ſame purpoſe, but more fully expreſſed. This is the Lords doing, it is marvellous in our eyes. This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoyce and be glad in it.

great was the company of thoſe that publiſhed it] All Interpreters I have ſeen, but one excepted, take this company, of maids and women entertaining theſe good news with ſongs and melody; as the faſhion was in thoſe dayes rather to make uſe of women to that purpoſe, than of men. For which we are referred to Exod. 15.20. Judg. 11.34. 1 Sam. 18.6. To which ſome add, Jud. 5.11. To this alſo might thoſe words in Eſayes meſſage have reference. The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, &c. Eſa. 37.21. That which hath moved them to think of women here (for as the words run in Engliſh, men might be underſtood as well; neither can it be well otherwiſe, except the word women or maids, had been added to the Text) is becauſe the word in the Original Heb. מבשרות is a Feminine. But on the other ſide it is objected, that the Scripture no where calleth ſuch, מבשרות, Publiſhers of good tidings. For ſo indeed the word might have been expreſt, as the Greek renders it, ταῖς εὐαγγελιζομέναις: (in the Dative there, becauſe of Δώσει, to which it is joined) that is, publiſhers or meſſengers of good tidings, and ſo the word is tranſlated in that forequoted paſſage of Eſay, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him מבשר that bringeth good tidings: and מבשר טוב that bringeth good tidings of good: in the ſame place, and if ſo here too, I think it had not been amiſs. The ſenſe had been the plainer. Neither is it without example, that a word Feminine ſhould be put for a Maſculine. So קהלת commonly tranſlated Eccleſiaſtes, or, The preacher, is a Feminine too; though it be intended of a man, as appears, Eccl. 1.1. The words of the Preacher, the ſon of David, King of Jeruſalem, and divers other places, where it is joined with a maſculine. Beſides, the Septuagint took it for a Maſculine, τοῖς εὐαγγελιζομένοις: as before: and ſo the Chaldee Parphraſe, (though quite to another purpoſe) in Genebrard, Deus dedit verba Legis populo ſuo, miniſterio Moſis & Aaronis, qui primi nuntiaverunt verbum Dei exercitui magno Iſraelis; that is, (for that expoſition, though much different from the common, is not altogether impertinent) God gave the words of his Law to the people, by the miniſtery of Moſes and Aaron, who firſt publiſhed the word of God to the great Congregation of Iſrael. This I confeſs, though I find but one to join with me, I think moſt likely, that the words ſhould be intended of men rather publiſhers, poſts and meſſengers, or the like, as upon the former words hath been ſhewed; than of the women-ſingers. Yet I am not againſt the common interpretation; neither is the difference of moment, as to the ſenſe and ſcope of the words: and in the myſtical ſenſe, which ſome make their chief buſineſs here, I would rather ſay with ſome, that therefore women are here mentioned, becauſe in very deed the beſt news that ever were brought and publiſhed unto the world (to wit, the news of Chriſt his reſurrection, of which ours depends) were firſt brought by women; which was not without a myſtery, as learned Expoſitors tell you: then as others, that therfore the feminine gender is uſed, not that women ſhould preach, ſay they, (a good and neceſſary caveat) but to ſhew the weakneſs of the means (fiſhermen, and the like) that God for the greater manifeſtation of his power in thoſe dayes of Miracles, was pleaſed to uſe in this great work.

V. 12. did flee apace] Heb. did flee, did flee.

ſhe that tarried at home] The prey was ſo great, that not onely the ſouldiers, but women alſo had part thereof.

V. 13. among the pots] Though God ſuffer his Church for a time to lie in darkneſs, like a black ſcullion among the pots, yet he will reſtore it, and make it moſt ſhining and bright.

V. 14. in it,] Or, for her, ſhe was.

in it] In the land of Canaan, where his Church was called his inheritance, ver.9. or in the wilderneſs, Num.21.24,35. Pſal. 135,10,11.

it was white as ſnow in Salmon] Heb. תשלג בצלמון which becauſe of the ambiguity of the verb תשלג either a ſecond Maſculine, or a third perſon Future Feminine, may differently be tranſlated. Some therefore render it, dealbabas eam; thou didſt make her white: Others, as it is here. But it comes all to one. Mount Salmon, they ſay, is alwayes covered with ſnow, which is the caſe of many high hills. Alwayes white then. Now whiteneſs, among all men, for divers reſpects, is an embleme of proſperity, and purity. The meaning then will be, That although the land, inheritance, or people, before ſpoken of, had been clouded and darkned with perſecution, and other ſundry calamities; yet now it was again recovered through thoſe manifold and miraculous defeats of their enemies to an eſtate of joyful peace and tranquility. And becauſe צלמון Salmon, in the Hebrew, doth alſo ſignifie darkneſs, which indeed is the proper ſignification, if it be not taken for a proper Name; Some, with more acuteneſs of ſenſe, and no leſs probability, tranſlate, albeſces in caligine; that is, In darkneſs, thou ſhalt be white, or ſhine. Salmon taken for a proper Name, was the Name of a hill, near Sichem, in the heart of the Country. Whence there be, who would not have any ſimilitude here in the words, but Salmon, by a Synecdoche of part for the whole, to be mentioned here, for the whole land: as if he intended onely, That there ſhall be great joy throughout the whole land. Theſe different Interpretations, and Expoſitions, I mention the rather, becauſe there is no great certainty of Mount Salmons conſtant whiteneſs through ſnow, upon which the firſt is grounded. I finde no mention of any ſuch elſwhere. The Mount it ſelf is mentioned, Judg.9.47,48. but of the height of it, or of ſnow that uſeth to lie upon it, nothing there, V. 15. The hill of God is as the hill of Baſhan] How Zion, a little ſterile, could abſolutely be compared to Baſhan, a great high mountain, and yet not ſo great or high, as fertile, as all that countrey thereabouts, famous unto a proverb, for fertility (whereof ſee upon Pſal.22.12. bulls of Baſhan,&c.) I do not ſee. I rather follow them therefore, that make Zion here to be oppoſed to Baſhan; the ſmalneſs and ſterility of the one, to the greatneſs and ſterility of the other: but yet Mount Zion in another reſpect, compared and equalled; to wit, for its ſpiritual uſe and prerogative; becauſe of Gods preſence there in his Sanctuary: that is, in effect, ſpiritual bleſſings and benefits, ſet out by temporal. See upon Pſal. 4.7. Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, &c.

V. 16. Why leap ye, ye high hills?] Why boaſt you of your ſtrength and beauty, againſt this mountain of God?

hill which God deſireth to dwell in] Pſal.87.1,2. & 132.23.

yea the Lord will dwell in it for ever] For ever, is ordinarily taken in the Scripture, for a long time. God dwelled in Zion; there ſtood his Temple (the onely true Temple of God in all the world) a long time. But that Temple was a type of the Church; of which, and to which Chriſt hath ſaid, Lo I am with you alwayes, even unto the end of the world, Matth.28. laſt verſe, which muſt be underſtood of the Catholick or Univerſal Church, againſt which, the gates of hell (as is promiſed, Matth.16.17.) ſhall not prevail. For of particular Churches, what they are ſubject to, former ages have ſeen in Aſia and Africa; and we ſee at this day to our grief.

V. 17. twenty thouſand] Dan.7.10.

even thouſands] Or, even many thouſands.

V. 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high] Some take theſe words as an acclamation of the people to David, paſsing by in triumph upon a lofty Chariot, as the manner was of triumphant Conquerors, among the Romans. And they think the Romans might have it from the Hebrews. But there is not much probability that it ſhould be ſo. And David, or who ever elſe is meant, might poetically be repreſented as triumphing, in alluſion to the cuſtoms of other Nations, although there was never any ſuch triumph really, or any ſuch cuſtom among the Jews. But the greater number make them to be Davids own words to God, piouſly and thankfully aſcribing his victories, and the victory of former ages, unto him. And then indeed according to the Scripture phraſe, may God be ſaid to be exalted, or to aſcend on high, when he doth execute judgement upon his enemies, and bleſſeth his people with temporal ſucceſſes. See before upon Pſal.7.7. for their ſakes therefore return thou on high. Some would have this aſcending of God, to be meant of his paſsing from Egypt, a low Countrey, to Mount Sinai, and thence to Sion, I do not conceive this ſo likely.

thou haſt led captivity captive] Heb. thou haſt captived a captivity: Which is an ordinary Hebraiſm, uſed in divers places; for thou haſt taken many captives.

thou haſt received gifts for men] That is, Thou haſt enriched thy people with the ſpoils of their enemies, and haſt made them tributary unto them. That is the literal meaning. Of the myſtical, as the words are applyed to Chriſt by the Apoſtle,Eph.4.8. See the Commentators.

haſt received] Or, having received, gaveſt.

yea for the rebellions alſo] Literally, referred to Davids victories, or any other victories of the Jews in former ages, the meaning muſt be, that not ordinary enemies onely, which ſoon yielded themſelves; but even the moſt averſe and rebellious, have been ſubdued, and led in triumph, and made part (many of them) of Gods people. But the myſtical meaning, of Chriſt, his Conqueſt, and the Gentiles coming in, by the preaching of his Miniſters, Apoſtles, and others, is more proper, and in a manner, more literal here; and in all this verſe: as it is applyed by the Apoſtle, Eph. 4.8. wherefore that is here received, we finde given; and gave gifts unto men: which may ſeem different. But certain it is, as may be proved by many examples, that the word לקח ſignifies often to give,as well as to receive; that is,when a thing is received, or taken (which is the proper ſignification of the word) to be given. And ſo in Engliſh, amongſt many, take me, for give me. Which confirms their interpretation, who make God himſelf to be ſpoken to, not David, or any other; of which ſee upon the former words, Thou haſt aſcended on high. For though the word לקח may bear both interpretations, both of giving, and receiving: yet that of giving would not fit here, if the words were intended of any other, than God himſelf.

V. 25. among them were the damoſels] Heb. בתוך, properly, in medio, that is, in the midſt; which is ambiguous, whether he mean that the ſingers, &c. were in the midſt, or among the damoſels; as Junius underſtands it, who expreſſes it, inter puellas,&c. or that the damoſels (ſupplying the word were, as here) were in the midſt, or, among the ſingers, &c. However, becauſe where we reade of damoſels, maids and women upon ſuch ſolemn occaſions playing with timbrels, &c. (as for example, 1 Sam. 18.6,7. Judg.11.34. no mention is there made of any other ſingers and Muſicians;) we either conceive, that there was ſomewhat extraordinary in this ſolemnity here deſcribed, the bringing of the Ark to Jeruſalem, of which we have ſpoken upon the firſt verſe; or that the women were the moſt conſiderable part, and therefore, though ſome ſingers and others might be mixed among them, onely mentioned in thoſe places.

V. 26. from the fountain of Iſrael] Or, ye that are of the fountain of Iſrael. Ye numerous iſſue coming from Jacob, as waters out of a fountain, Gen.35.11. Eſay 48.1. Heb.11.12. See before upon Pſal.24.6. thy face, O Jacob.

the Princes of Judah and their counſel] The word in the Original רגמתם, here tranſlated their counſel, and in the margine, their company, becauſe no where elſe to be found in the Scripture, is ſomewhat obſcure, and by divers differently tranſlated. The greater part take it to ſignifie a company, becauſe it comes of a root that ſignifies lapidibus obruere, that is, to ſtone to death; which is done commonly by caſting multitude of ſtones. And becauſe אבן properly ſignifying a ſtone, ſeems to be taken for a Ruler in thoſe words, the ſhepherd, the ſtone of Iſrael, Gen 49.24. ſome conceive that רגמה, may bear that ſignification too. So ſome phanſie, However, that is not it, that made Septuagint, and after them, the vulgar Latine, to render it duces eorum, that is, their captains, or leaders: for that was upon another conſideration: either becauſe they took רגם for רקם, as it ſeems S. Jerome did; who tranſlates it, in purpura ſua; in their purple: or, which is more likely; to be the very ſame, as ארגמן, which in very deed ſignifies purple: and ſo Genebrard renders it, Principes Juda, purpurati eorum, &c. But it would trouble a man more to give a ſatiſfactory reaſon, why theſe 4. Tribes, and no others are mentioned; whereas no man makes any queſtion, but that all the Tribes performed their part, and had an equal intereſt in this ſolemnity. I think they ſpeak beſt to the purpoſe, that bid us not to be over curious. It is not poſſible, where the ſtory is ſo compendious, to give an account of all circumſtances; without the perfect knowledge whereof, many places muſt of neceſſi y, in ſuch alluſions upon the by, be obſcure, and unknown. It may be the heads of thoſe Tribes were imployed in the managing of that buſineſs, more than others. Some muſt; all could not. But this is but a gueſſe, and many other things may be gueſſed with as much eaſe, and probability. What is ſaid that may ſeem to have ſome ground is; That thoſe tribes, ſome of them, ſtood out againſt David longeſt, and therefore of purpoſe mentioned, that we might know he was now in full and quiet poſſeſſion. And moreover, that two of theſe Tribes, Benjamin and Juda, were neereſt of all to Jeruſalem; Zabulum and Naphtali the furtheſt off: that therefore by naming theſe; all the reſt are comprehended. Now for the myſtical ſenſe, how the words are applyable to the Apoſtles; the antients, who moſt inſiſt upon it, if any thing can be ſaid to that purpoſe, very ſatisfactory, will beſt ſatisfie. For of late Interpreters, ſome I ſee, that follow moſt the myſtical ſenſe, are glad here to ſtick to the literal, and paſſe the other over in ſilence.

V. 28. Thy God hath commanded thy ſtrength] So Deut. 28. 8. and elſewhere, God is ſaid to command the bleſſing: Pſalm 42. 8. command his loving kindneſs; Pſalm 42. 4. to command deliverances, Pſal 71.3. to give commandment to ſave, and the like. The expreſſion is very proper, becauſe Gods Word, is his deed. He need but to ſpeak, and the matter, whatever it be, is done. So Pſal. 33. 9. For he ſpake, and it was done: he commanded, and it ſtood faſt. Longinus, a heathen, but one of the moſt judicious maſters of Rhetorick that ever was, admired the ſublimity of this expreſſion in Moſes: and had Epicurus, that arch Atheiſt, well underſtood this, he would have forborn his ridiculous objections, (one of his chiefeſt grounds for denying of a Providence) concerning Gods perpetual toyl and inquietude in the Creation, and adminiſtration of the world. But the Centurion in the Goſpel, he underſtood it, (for which he was commended and admired by Chriſt) when he ſaid to Chriſt, Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof, but ſpeak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. For I am a man under authority, &c. Matth. 8. 8, 9.

V. 29. Becauſe of thy Temple at Jeruſalem] This is differently tranſlated. Moſt Interpreters join theſe words, in their explications, though parted in the Text, as here, with the former words and verſe; Strengthen, O Lord, &c. Out of thy Temple (è templo tuo, or as others, à templo tuo) at Jeruſalem: which the Original will bear very well. מהיכל may be tranſlated è, or; propter, out of, or, becauſe of. So Pſalm 20. 2. Send thee help from the Sanctuary, and ſtrengthen thee out of Sion. As God was ſaid to dwell there (whereof hath been ſpoken before) ſo alſo hear prayers and to ſend help from thence. And ſo God himſelf ſpeaks ſometimes. And ſome that tranſlate propter, or becauſe of, as it is here; yet join the words with the former neverthelesſe, as if he prayed, That God would be gracions and merciful unto them, for his Churches ſake. But on the other ſide, becauſe it was an ordinary cuſtome among all Nations, where any Temple, for the holineſſe of it, and for the credit of the Deity to which it was conſecrated, was of renown, thither to bring aud ſend many preſents; which was done by great men and Princes eſpecially: and of gifts and preſents ſent from forrein Princes to the Temple at Jeruſalem, we read in the ſecond of Maccabees, Chap. 3. 2. particularly, and elſewhere: beſides what we find in Eſay 18. 7. In that time ſhall the preſent be brought unto the Lord, &c. according to ſome: for theſe reaſons, it may do as well, that the words be referred to that which follows; Becauſe of thy Temple at Jeruſalem ſhall Kings, &c. Either ſenſe is warrantable enough: The Reader may take his Choice,

V. 30. Rebuke the company of ſpear-men, the multitude of the bulls, &c.] The continuation of ſo many metaphors, (eſpecially if the firſt words be tranſlated word for word, the beaſt of the reeds, as in the margine) hath made the verſe to ſound rather like an Enigma, than ordinary language: the laſt words excepted, which contain as it were the ſolution, or explication of the riddle. So that all the obſcurity is rather in the dreſſe, than in the matter and ſubſtance it ſelf: neither is there any diſagreement among Interpreters about the meaning, but what the ambiguity of one word, as we ſhall ſee when we come to it, hath made. But that which I moſt wonder at, is, that none of the Interpreters, as many as I have ſeen, take any notice at all of the coherence with the former words and verſe: which I conceive very conſiderable. Thus therefore it is, as I take it; David, as himſelf declareth, 1 Chron. 22. 7, &c. had purpoſe to have built a Houſe unto God. God would not have it ſo; But the word of the Lord (ſo David himſelf as his own words are recorded in that place) came to me, ſaying, Thou haſt ſhed blood abundantly, and haſt made great wars: thou ſhalt not build an Houſe unto my Name, becauſe thou haſt ſhed much blood upon the earth in my ſight: behold, a ſon ſhall be born unto thee, who ſhall be a man of reſt, and I will give him reſt from all his enemies round about, &c. David therefore having in the verſe before mentioned the Temple, (whether by it he underſtand, by a prolepſis or anticipation, that very Temple that was to be built after him, as ſome; or that Tabernacle, which himſelf had built for the Ark; will not be much material: though it be more likely, becauſe he propheſies of things future in the verſe following, which hath reference to this, that in this alſo he intended the future Temple;) having therefore, as I ſaid, in the verſe before, mentioned the Temple, and his thoughts being ſet upon it, with that earneſtneſs that became his zeal, (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 27. 8. Seek ye my face, &c.) and knowing that the houſe he intended unto God, muſt be the fruits of a quiet Eſtate and ſettled peace he turns his ſpeech, as was moſt proper and likely, in a ſerious deteſtation of war; which certainly though he were a great Warrior, and a valiant man, yet as a good and religious man, he never did affect: but in his zeal to Gods Houſe, knovving what he did, he muſt of neceſſity ſo much the more deteſt and abhor. Now we come to particular words; By the beaſt of the reeds, moſt underſtand men armed with ſpears or arrowes: either of whith, either ſpears or arrowes, the reeds of thoſe Countreys will make. In Latine we know, that arundo, (a reed) is commonly taken for an arrow. Yet there be, who think by the beaſt of the reeds, voluptuous, proud, inſolent men, may be underſtood; ſuch as live in fertile ſoils, and in great plenty of all things. That reeds grow, and are an argument of fertile ſoyls, they refer us to Eſay 35 7. in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, ſhall be graſs with reeds and ruſhes. But the more commonly received interpretation agrees beſt with that which followes. By bulls, (which followes) are underſtood the leaders and chief Commanders; by calves, the ordinary Souldiers and followers. In the next words there is more difficulty, which therefore we will take by themſelves.

till every one ſubmit himſelf with pieces of ſilver.] Hebrew מתרפס ברצי כסף, by ſome tranſlated, calcantem in fruſtis argenti; that is, treading (or, walking) in peices of ſilver: as belonging to company, before. And by this, they underſtand men proudly arrayed, with ſilver in their ſhoes, or other cloths: which, then, or in thoſe daies, though afterwards, as many other things of that nature common and ordinary, might be an argument of great pride and exceſs. Or, as ſome others, which lye in plates of ſilver; which they underſtand of beds and ſeelings; for which they refer us to Eſth. 1. 6. and Job 22 24. But this doth not ſo well here, and the expreſſion is without example. Yet againſt them that make this מתרפס an accuſative, and tranſlate it, ſubmittentem te, or fingentem fabricare, as ſome do, Calvins objection is pertinent, that he need not pray againſt them, if they had already ſubmitted: or mention them as already ſubjected, and yet pray againſt them. But as moſt Rabbins ſupply the words, dum ſupplicet quiſque; that is, as we have it here, until every one ſubmit himſelf, ſo, that objection is prevented, and the ſenſe that is made of it is very proper and pertinent: To ſubmit them ſelves with pieces of ſilver, that is, to pay tribute, or to ſeek peace by preſents. See Pſalm 72. 15. to him ſhall be given of the gold of Sheba, &c.

Ethiopia ſhall ſoon ſtretch out her hands unto God] It may be underſtood; as Pſal 44. 20. (or ſtretched out our hands to a ſtrange god) of the ſpreading of hands in prayer, as the cuſtome was then, not among the Jews only, but in all, or moſt places of the world. And by the tranſlation a man might think it were the ſame word in the Original, here, and Pſalm 44. 20. but it is not ſo. For there the word is פרש, more commonly tranſlated, to ſpread forth; as 1 Kin. 80. 22, 38. and Eſay 1. 15. when ye ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes: when ye make many prayers, &c. and here it is, if we tranſlate word for word, Ethiopia ſhall make her hands to run to God. However, though the expreſſion be not, the meaning may be the ſame, Or, to ſtretch out, by offering of gifts and preſents; by way of ſubjection and ſubmiſſion; as moſt expound it. But it comes all to one. This of Ethiopia was alſo propheſied by Eſay, Eſay 18. 7. In that time ſhall the preſent be brought, &c. See the Italian notes there. But others, whom the Engliſh tranſlation ſeems to follow, by tranſlating of a people; not by a people, which alter the caſe; underſtand there preſents of the ſpoils of the Ethiopians; as Junius, and others. However certain it is, that Ethiopia, according to this unqueſtionable propheſie, was one of the firſt Kingdomes that was converted to the Chriſtian Faith; the occaſion and means whereof, vve read of Act. 8. 27, 28, &c.

which I took not away] Though I would not find fault without cauſe, much leſs condemn, yet I wiſh (which is as little as I can ſay) that our Engliſh tranſlators here had kept more ſtrictly to the propriety of the Hebrew word, which ſignifieth to robb, properly: or to take away by force and violence, as prey and booty, and ſo I find it, not in the antient Greek only, ἃ οὐχ ἥρπαζον, but in moſt Latine tranſlations, whether Old, or late: quod (or, quæ) non rapui: ſee Vetullius, Junius, Calvin, Bucerus: and others I believe. Not that I would make a myſtery of it, as ſome do, who apply this very word to Chriſt, who though he thought it no robbery, to be equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. yet was by the Iewes hated, perſecuted, and delivered into the hands of infidels, for this crime eſpecially, and chiefly, becauſe he made himſelf equall with God, Iohn 5. 18. Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him &c. and 19. 7. We have a Law, &c. Not but that even this may very well, as the words of St. Paul are commonly expounded, be allowed of too, ſince that all Expoſitors apply the words to Chriſt in general, who though he had committed no ſin, &c. but becauſe I am of another opinion my ſelf concerning the meaning of theſe words whereof ſomewhat occaſionally hath been ſaid upon Pſalm ver. 62. 10. become not vain in robbery: not for that reaſon. Therefore, I ſay, or at leſt, not for that onely: but alſo becauſe in my judgement, it doth obſcure the coherence, with the former words; and obſcure too the literal immediate ſenſe of theſe very words; upon which, as I conceivethe coherence doth depend. The words before, in the Original Hebrew, and in moſt other tranſlations, I have ſeen, run thus: they that would deſtroy me are mighty: (in the Hebrew words there is an alluſion, and that is one reaſon too, why they ſhould not have been parted) being mine enemies without cauſe, or wrongfully: that which I had not robbed: (or taken and carryed away by force) then did I reſtore. Now I conceive it very probable, that the Pſalmiſt having ſaid that they were his enemies without cauſe, he intended what followeth as a reaſon or further explication of what he had ſaid; to this purpoſe: that although they had uſed him as a robber indeed, forcing him to reſtore, that is, ſeiſing upon all that he had violently, pretending, &c. Yet certain he was that he had done no ſuch thing, as ſhould deſerve ſuch uſage. In antient times when men lived in greateſt ſimplicity, in tents more, than in Towns; and their wealth conſiſted in cattel eſpecially: all differences almoſt, and controverſies that did ariſe between men, and produced ſtrifes, and force of arms, were about beaſts, pretended to have been unjuſtly ſeized, and driven away. From thoſe times ſundry expreſſions were derived, frequently uſed in after ages, when the world was much altered. As for example, the Grecians in Homers time, and long after him, to ſay, that they had done a man no wrong, nor given him juſt provocation, uſed to ſay, that they had never driven away either ox, or aſs of his. So we find it 1 Sam. 12. 3. too, Whoſe oxe have I taken, &c. but that divers others expreſſions, ſavouring of later times, that thoſe formerly ſpoken of, are there added but the Greek expreſſion, literally firſt, and then afterwards proverbially, uſed in later times, goes no further than Oxen and Aſſes. To reſtore therefore what he had not robbed, is uſed by David here, as a common ſpeech of theſe times, both to expreſs his own innocency in general; in further confirmation of what he ſaid, that they were his enemies wrongfully, or without cauſe:) and what violence and injuſtice he ſuffered from others, whether in his perſon, goods, or otherwiſe.

V. 5. O God, that knoweſt my fooliſhneſs, and my ſins, &c.] Some Antients have been much tronbled at theſe words, and deviſed ways of Interpretations, how to make them applyable to Chriſt: grounding upon this. That becauſe they knew certainly by the application Chriſt his Diſciples and Apoſtles made of them, ſome words of the Pſalm belonged unto Chriſt: therefore all muſt likewiſe. The neceſſity of which conſequence, as we have already ſaid upon the like occaſion, (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 40. 6. mine ears haſt thou opened; in the end there) I do not underſtand. If that were ſo, than it muſt be conſidered, whether it be not the ſame reaſon for chapters in the Prophets, as is here for particular pſalms; if Chriſt be ſpoken of in a part, that he muſt be the ſubject of the vvhole: and then it vvould much concern us to knovv both of Chapters and Pſalms, vvhether they be alvvaies rightly divided; the diviſion of the one, as novv divided, being in compariſon, but of late invention; and that of the others, not alwaies very certain; of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid upon the Title of the firſt pſalm, upon thoſe words, Pſalm firſt. But however as for theſe words we are now upon, they might have ſpared their trouble, and we our care, for a further anſwer, if the words be but rightly underſtood. For certainly, his purpoſe here was not to accuſe, but to juſtifie himſelf, as he doth often (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 18. 20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs, &c) againſt his enemies; to which end, to make his proteſtation the more ſolemn and ſerious, he doth appeal to God, the ſearcher of hearts, for his witneſs So beſt Interpreters here, Calvin; Mollerus, Junius, and others. And the very coherence beſides might induce us to believe it ſo. For though David had his ſins, there is no queſtion, and he freely acknowledge it himſelf elſewhere, more than once; yet this was no very proper place for this acknowledgement, ſo abrupt and ſo ſhort, without any apparant coherence or dependence on that which either goes before or followeth. So then, Thou knoweſt my fooliſhneſs, &c. that is, Thou knoweſt whether I be guilty of any ſuch thing, or no, &c. V. 21. They gave me alſo gall for my meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink] That is, my affliction through their perſecution, was ſo great, that I had no comfort of my life; no part of it free from bitterneſs: my meat taſted as gall to me, and my drink was as vinegar. That it was a common proverb among the Hebrews (as indeed in other languages there be that come neer to it) to feed one with gall, &c. appears by the Prophet Jeremy, who uſeth it with little alteration (for gall and wormwood have great affinity, and ſometimes joined together in the Scripture; vinegar and water of gall, though in themſelves much different, yet in the proverb they have the ſame uſe;) more than once. Therefore, thus ſaith the Lord, &c. Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink, Jer. 9. 15 & 23. 15. Now this which the Pſalmiſt, proverbially, and metaphorically, ſpeaks of himſelf; in Chriſt it was verified literally, Matt. 27. 34. the like whereof ſee pſal. 22, 18. They part my garments among them, &c.

V. 22. which ſhould have been for their welfare, but it became a trap] Although the Apoſtles in quoting the Scriptures of the old Teſtament did not alwaies think themſelves bound to the preciſe letter of the original Hebrew, and therefore make uſe often of that vulgar Greek tranſlation, called the Septuagint, then in uſe; and ſometimes go from that too, and yet vary from the Hebrew; ſo that their quotations are no rule, or law, to tranſlators, abſolutely; yet where their tranſlation doth agree well enough, or as well as any other, with the Hebrew, I think it ſhould then be preferred before any other. Which is our caſe here, as I take it, concerning the tranſlation of theſe words. The word שלומים, we grant, may ſignifie welfare; (or, as it is rendred by others, pacifica) and, according to that ſignification, the whole paſſage probably be ſupplyed, as it is here, and that which ſhould have been, &c. But ſince it is certain that the Apoſtle, Rom. 11. 9. citing theſe words, though he cite them not word for word, but with ſome addition, and inverſion of the order, no waies material to the ſenſe: but certain that he expreſſes this שלומים, by the Greek word ἀνταπόδομα, which ſignifieth (as there tranſlated) recompence; and as certain, that that ſenſe is as proper to the word, and will fit this place as well as any other, I think it ſhould have been preferred. But now if we follow that notion or ſenſe of the word, there may be a further queſtion concerning the ſupplement, or explication of the whole paſſage. Some would have them thus ſupplyed: and for a full recompence of that which they have done to me, (expreſſed in the foregoing verſe, They gave me alſo gall, &c.) let their table be a trap unto them. To this purpoſe I find them ſupplyed by more than one; and it may do well ſo; I am not againſt it. Yet ſeeing that the Hebrew שלם, as the Greek ἀνταποδοῦναι, are taken tam in bonam, quàm malam partem, that is, to recompence either good, or evil; and ſo ἀνταπόδομα accordingly: there may be another ſenſe too; as proper and probable, if not more, Luke 14. 12. When thou makeſt a dinner or ſupper, ſaith our Saviour, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbours, leſt they alſo bid thee again, καὶ γένηταί σοι ἀνταπόδομα, and a recompence be made to thee. In the 14 ver. the word is repeated again twice, (ἀνταποδοῦναι ἀνταποδοθήσεται) to the ſame purpoſe. Why then ſhould we not keep that ſignification here alſo, ſince it will fit the place ſo well? Let their table become a ſnare before them; and for a recompence (of their invitation and entertainment) let them find (or, have) a trap.

Verſe 1. Make haſte] This pſalm agreeth with pſalm 40. from verſe 13. to the end of it. Of ſuch other Pſalms, twice to be found in this book, and of ſmall differences to be found upon comparing; ſee upon Pſalm 53. ver. 1. The fool hath ſaid. As for this Pſalm, the moſt conſiderable difference is in the laſt verſe, But I am poor, &c. of which ſee there. In all the reſt, there is no difference to be obſerved, but that ſome words (none very material) of pſalm 40. are here left out. As for example, in this firſt verſe, the very firſt word, רצה be pleaſed, Pſa. 40. 13. Be pleaſed, O Lord, to deliver me: for which we find here in our Engliſh make haſte, ſupplyed from the words next following. But it being apparent that this Pſalm is the ſame with Pſalm 40. from verſe 13. if any thing at all be to be ſupplyed, to make the ſenſe perfect: (which it may be, needs not: the order of the word in the Original Hebr. is: O God, to deliver me; to help me, O Lord, make haſt: which moſt interpreters, without any further ſupplement, content themſelves with:) but however I ſay, If any thing be ſupplyed, I ſhould think nothing more proper, or warrantable, than what we find Pſalm 40. 13. which verſe there doth anſwer to this. However this here, more warrantable, than either Greek, or Vulgar latin, where ſomewhat elſe is ſupplyed, taken from neither place: but not ſo, as to make any conſiderable diverſitie of ſenſe: much leſs than what is here ſupplyed. Which nevertheleſs was to be noted, becauſe in matter of text, there is no diverſity ſo inconſiderable in in it ſelf, but may be conſiderable to ſome reſpects and purpoſes.

make haſte to help] A godly man in extremity of diſtreſſe may call upon God earneſtly to make haſte to his deliverance; there is no hurt in that: nay God is well pleaſed with our earneſtneſſe, and ſometimes we reap the fruits of it (for abſolutely and generally it is never without fruit) preſent help and deliverance, according to our own deſire, and the intention of our prayers. But provided ſtill, that in our earneſtneſs, there be a reſolution of patience, and ſubmiſſion to God; with a certain belief and aſſurance, that Gods time, be it ſooner, or later, is, and will be our beſt time, though preſent ſenſe, (becauſe no affliction, or, chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, Heb. 12. 11.) and weak fleſh ſuggeſt the contrary. So may we reconcile this of David here, with that of the Prophet Eſay, He that believeth, ſhall not make haſte, 28. 16. which though ſome by a kind of metalepſis, or metonymie, tranſlate otherwiſe, ſhall not be forlorn, or ſhall not go aſtray: yet I am (with beſt Interpreters) For the literal both tranſlation and interpretation of the words: ſhall not make haſte, that is, ſhall notwithſtanding any earneſtneſſe of prayers, with patience wait Gods time and leiſure: as David himſelf elſewhere profeſſeth of himſelf, (that we may reconcile David with himſelf alſo) that he waited patiently: Pſalm 40. 1. As for the Apoſtles (whether St. Paul, Rom 9. 32. or St Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 6.) quotation of theſe words, He (or, whoſoever) believeth in him, ſhall not be confounded or aſhamed: in caſe the difference were greater than it is; yet the ſenſe fitting his preſent purpoſe, and being warranted by divers other places of Scripture, it is not to be wondered at, if he followed the Greek tranſlation of the Septuagint, being moſt currant among the laws of thoſe daies: and indeed the only Scripture divers of them, which underſtand not the Hebrew tongue, living in forain Countreys, read and underſtood. But I do not conceive the difference to be ſo great as to conclude with ſome very learned men, that the ſaid Seventy read יביש for יחיש (who alſo would have that to be the true reading) there being ſo much affinitie in the nature of the things, between making haſte, and being aſhamed, or confounded, as that the putting of the one for the other, doth not, of neceſſity, import a difference of ſenſe: eſpecially as the words may be uſed in ſome language though they be not ſo in all, ἀσχημοσύνη (to which εὐσχημοσύνη is oppoſed) is uſed by the Grecians for impatience, frequently (ἀσχημονεῖν, εὐσχημονεῖν, &c. likewiſe) though the word properly import no more than undecent behaviour. See alſo upon Pſalm 34. laſt ver. that truſt in him: &c. But to return to the ſenſe of the words of the Prophet, which we ſaid we intended to reconcile with thoſe of Davids, that we are now upon: which may be thought needleſſe, and impertinent, if the words (as ſome would have it) were intended by the Prophet in another ſenſe; I will produce a very warrantable (both for his antiquity, and learning) Interpreter of the Prophets words, to wit, the Author of the book commonly called Eccleſiaſticus; My ſon, ſaith he, if thou come to ſerve the Lord, &c. Set thy heart aright, and conſtantly endure, and make not haſte (καὶ μὴ σπεύσῃς ἐν καιρῷ ἐπαγωγῆς) in time of trouble. Either he had, as probably, the Prophet in his thoughts; or it was (from the Prophet, originally, perchance) become a common ſpeech among the faithful; Not to make haſte in time of trouble: Which alſo doth well vindicate the true reading of the Hebrew Text we have, from that ſuſpition, we have ſpoken of.

O God, to deliver me] Pſalm 40, 13, &c.

V. 2. Let them be aſhamed, &c.] Pſal.35. 4 & 71. 13. He wiſheth that his enemies, who laid plots to take away his life, might be diſappointed and ſhamed.

V. 3. For a reward of their ſhame] He calls their ſhame, that which they had brought upon himſelf: theirs, becauſe they had been the cauſe of it to him. Hereby we are taught not to mock at others in their miſery, leſt the ſame fall on our own necks, Prov. 24. 17, 18.

V. 4. Let all thoſe that ſeek thee, rejoice] Let thoſe that worſhip thee aright, ſee my deliverance, and be glad of it, and praiſe thee for it.

V. 5. make haſte unto me, O God] Pſalm 40. 17. (which otherwiſe from verſe 13. agreeth with this, as is noted upon the firſt verſe) we had it, But I am poor and needie: yet the Lord thinketh upon me: thou art my help, and my deliverance, &c. by comparing of which places may further appear, (beſides what hath already been ſaid to that purpoſe upon verſe firſt, make haſte to help) that David when he ſo earneſtly deſired God to make haſte, was confident neverthelesſe, that even then, whileſt God did put him off, and deferred the accompliſhment of what he ſo earneſtly prayed for; God, I ſay, did think of him; and took good notice both of his prayers, and what he did ſuffer; upon which confidence he might well ground, that God would put off his deliverance no longer, than might be for his own good: which perſwaſion cannot but breed great inward comfort in the midſt of greateſt extremities, and diſpoſe a man to wait patiently: Pſal. 40. 1. and to argue againſt himſelf, and preſent ſenſe, that though the time ſeem long, yet it will not be long, Hab. 2. 3. though it tary, &c. So let a man be never ſo earneſt in his prayers, yet it may truly be ſaid, to be ſtill, Pſal. 4. 4. and to poſſeſs his ſoul in patience, Luke 21. verſe 19. See alſo upon Pſalm 31. ver. 7. thou haſt known my ſoul.

be put to confuſion] See upon Pſalm 34. laſt verſe. That truſt in him.

V. 2. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſs] Keeping thy promiſe to me, and therein approving thy ſelf juſt and righteous. So ſome here, and elſewhere very often, as often almoſt, as David doth appeal by way of humble ſupplication to Gods righteouſneſs; or doth applaud himſelf, and praiſe him, for his experiential knowledge of it upon particular occaſions. Now, though Gods Truth be one of his moſt glorious and eſſential attributes, wherein keeping of promiſe is included, and ſometimes particularly ſpecified: and again though it be granted, that we may ſometimes, David might at leaſt, put God in mind of his promiſe, and call upon him, with humility for performance: yet that David would tell God of his righteouſneſs ſo often in this ſenſe, that is, of his ingagement and obligation, with a tacit intimation, or inference, that had not God, or ſhould not God deal thus and thus with him, he were not righteous; ſo often to tell him of it, as common interpreters make him; I do not know whether it did ſtand with Davids modeſty and civility ſo well: and much leſſe, with his diſcretion and ſafety. For though we may be ſure that God will keep his promiſe to us: yet all Gods promiſes (as his threats) being conditional, as we are taught very particularly, Ezek. 33. 13. When I ſhall ſay to the righteous, that he ſhall ſurely live, &c. who can ſo far preſume upon his own performances, as to dare (except it be done ſparingly, and with much humility) to challenge God, as bound in juſtice? But I will leave men to their liberties, where the coherence will bear it. I am ſure it will not in all places. As for example, beſides the very place the ſubject of this obſervation; and ver. 15, 16, 19, 24. following; pſalm 51. 14. and my tongue ſhall ſing aloud of thy righteouſneſs: (it was beſides Davids purpoſe there, to put God in mind of his promiſes) and Pſalm 143. 1, 2. and in thy righteouſneſs. But enter not into judgement, &c. We conclude therefore, that ſince righteouſneſs, or rather the Hebrew word, tranſlated righteouſneſs, doth often ſignifie goodneſs, equity, yea mercy, pure mercy: I know no reaſon why David, when he doth aſcribe righteouſneſs unto God ſo often, ſhould not rather be underſtood in this general ſenſe, more applyable to all men, and by conſequence more comfortable; than with reference to particular promiſes. That the Hebrew word, which properly ſignifieth juſtice, or righteouſneſs, is taken not for goodneſs and equity only, as in ſome other languages, words anſwerable to that; but for mercy alſo, in the preciſeſt ſenſe; ſee upon Pſalm 22. 31. and ſhall declare his right. For further proof whereof may be added, that Matth. 6. 1. Take heed that you do not your almes. where ſome, or moſt later copies have it ἐλεημοσύνην: antient both copies and tranſlations had δικαιοσύνην; which by Beza, and other chief Commentators is approved, as the genuine reading.

Be thou my ſtrong habitation] So Vatablus too; and others, in robuſtum habitaculum: which might be doubtful, whether he read it מעון or מעוז: habitationis, or, fortitudinis: becauſe the bare word rock, or rupes, may imply ſtrength, without any further expreſſion. But when he gives us his tranſlation ad verbum rupem fortitudinis; and not rupem habitationis; he makes it clear, that he read מעון and not מעוז: which nevertheleſs (this latter I mean) is the reading in this place of all the printed Hebrew Bibles I have ſeen. And ſo Calvin too, in the very Text, rupim fortitudinis, and not according to the original habitationis: by Junius, and ſome others, of our ſide, well expreſſed: and by Genebrard the Papiſt aſſerted: not without ſome reprehenſion of thoſe he calls recentiores, for preferring that other reading. A man might ſuſpect that their eyes, the difference being ſo ſmall, might deceive them; and the rather, becauſe they give us no reaſon. But the matter is this. Pſalm 31. at the beginning, we have three verſes, that agree with the three firſt of this Pſalm, almoſt word for word. Now there it is מעוז fortitudinis, in all copies; and not מעון, and becauſe it is there ſo, and that the verſes ſeem to be the ſame, and that all the difference in the original words is but the drawing out of one letter a little more, or leſs: (an eaſie miſtake, if men be not very wary) it is therefore conceived, that, here alſo the ſame word ſhould be. For my part, although I make no great matter, which of the two we read where the difference is ſo little, either in the writing, or ſenſe it ſelf (in this place, at leaſt:) yet I ſhall neither join with them, that keep to the proper; or at leaſt, more generally received reading. Neither is that a warrantable ground, that becauſe thoſe three verſes are almoſt the ſame, therfore they muſt agree in every word; for that we know they do not; there be, even here other differences beſides this, which no man doth queſtion. But of this argument in general, See more upon Pſalm 59. 9. Becauſe of his ſtrength: towards the end of the Note, Now if any ſhall upon this ground, &c. and Pſalm 34. laſt v. that truſt in him. As for the Engliſh here, though the words be doubtful in the Text, yet in the margin they agree plainly vvith the original. Be thou to me for a rock of habitation.

whereunto I may continually reſort] Yet Pſal.61.2. his words vvere lead me to the rock that is higher than I; vvhich may ſeem contrary to vvhat is here deſired. But hovvever the vvords may ſeem to differ, yet vvell underſtood, they vvill come to one ſenſe. A rock there, higher than mans reach, vvas a good Periphraſis of God, in oppoſition to ordinary rocks, and ſenſes: ſo here, a rock unto which I may continually reſort. not for the eaſineſs of acceſs ſo much; (though that be ſomevvhat) as for the ſafety and ſecurity of it; as if he had ſaid: ſuch a rock, ſo invincible, ſo inacceſſible, as that I may need no other, at any time (as many times they that are eagerly purſued, are fain to fly from one fort, to another:) but at all times, and againſt all kinds of dangers, and enemies, find it a ſecure ſafeguard and protection, and vvhat rock can that be, but God himſelf? See there upon that Pſalm, Pſalm 91. 2. more of rock in generall.

thou haſt given commandment to ſave me] Pſal. 6. 28. Thy God hath commanded, &c. See there. But it is the opinion, I ſee of many Expoſitors, that by this and the like expreſſions, Angels are intended. That God indeed doth very commonly uſe the Miniſtery of Angels to accompliſh his purpoſes towards men, whether to puniſh, or to ſave, or whatſoever elſe it be, that he will have done; beſides frequent examples throughout the whole Scriptures: we have the cleer aſſertion of the Apoſtle, or rather of the Pſalmiſt; avouched and confirmed by the Apoſtle, Heb. 1. v, 7, and 14. Neverthe-leſſe, In ſuch expreſſions as theſe, where Angels are not expreſſed I think with beſt (if not moſt) Expoſitors, that it is more proper, and warrantable to underſtand the words, as is there (upon Pſalm 68 28) ſhewed, and explained. Of Angels in generall and their miniſtery, ſee more upon Pſalm 33. 13. The Lord looketh from Heaven. Pſal. 6. 28. V. 5. thou art my truſt from my youth] He ſtrengtheneth his faith by the experience of Gods benefits, who did not onely preſerve him in his mothers belly, but took him thence, and ever ſince hath preſerved him.

V. 6. from the womb] Pſal. 22. 9, 10. Eſay 46. 3. David doth often inſiſt upon this particular of Gods tender care and providence over infants, wherein not his goodneſs, onely; but his Divine Power, to the great admiration of moſt underſtanding Naturaliſts, doth abundantly manifeſt it ſelf. And though it be a general Providence, wherein all Mankinde (yea and brute beaſts, in ſome degree, for mans ſake:) have an equal intereſt; yet the commonneſſe of it doth not take away our obligation of particular thanks and acknowledgements: and Davids thankfull remembrance in this kinde, doth condemne their unthankfulneſſe, that never praiſe God for general benefits, for which God doth expect to be glorified as much as for particular, if not more. However, theſe words may have another interpretation too. See upon Pſal. 22. 9. that took me out of the womb.

for I know not the numbers thereof] Becauſe thy benefits toward me are innumerable, I cannot but continually meditate and rehearſe them. Pſalm 40 5. Many, O Lord, my God, &c. But the original Hebrew word, here tranſlated numbers, doth alſo ſignifie learning, as for example, Iſa 29. 12. And the book is declared to him that is not learned: Heb. to him that knowes not a book, or letters, or numbers: And though it be a ſingular here, and a Plural in David: nay a Plural of another form; yet there being many examples of like irregularities, they may be accounted one and the ſame word nevertheleſs. It is generally conceived, that both the antient Greek and Latine aimed at this ſenſe in their tranſlation of theſe words; the one, οὐκ ἔγνων γραμματείας: the other expreſſing them, Non novi literaturam: as underſtanding David to this purpoſe: That he was not a Schollar, nor yet ambitious of much learning: his only buſineſſe, which he propoſed to himſelf, in ſtead of all learning, being this, to praiſe God, and to ſet forth, or magnifie his power, his righteouſneſs, &c. Calvin is very angry with this tranſlation, and tells us that Anabaptiſts, and Enthuſiaſts (he calls them fancies, men of diſtempered brains) have made advantage of it, to cry down all good learning, and to inveigh againſt the uſe of liberal ſciences. And well may he call this uſe, or ſenſe of the words Anabaptiſtical, or more truly, Diabolicall, from that ſpirit that works in men of that profeſſion, to the undermining, of all true religion; and promoting of atheiſm (if once they become abſolute maſters, as at Munſter in Germany, and other places) or at the beſt of Turkiſm, which barely ſtands upon theſe two pillars, force of arms and baniſhment of human literature. But I do not conceive the tranſlation it ſelf deſerves ſo rigid a cenſure, or can juſtly be charged to have been the ground, upon a rational account of ſuch phrenſies. For what if David had ſaid that he had no other learning; or deſired no other, or greater than to be able to praiſe God? Muſt we make that conſtruction of it, that therefore he deſpiſed learning: or rather this, that the only end he propoſed unto himſelf of all learning, and of all ſciences, to what degree of perfection ſoever he ſhould attain in them, whether greater, or leſs, whether himſelf, or any body elſe that depended of him; was, and ever ſhould be, to glorifie God; That as he accounted it perfection of learning to do this as it ſhould be done (towards which as there is no kind of good learning, but may help: ſo none ſo great, but may be thought, inſufficient: 2 Cor. 2. 16.) ſo all learning without this uſe, though never ſo great, or ſo compleat otherwiſe, but ignorance. Sure I am, that ſome heathens (as we commonly call them) very learned themſelves, and great favorers of learning in others, have ſaid little leſs. Not to inſiſt upon inferior authors, as Seneca, and others, that lived ſince Chriſt began to be preached and known in the world: Divine Plato (not unworthily ſo ſtiled by all ages) in divers places reduces all human wiſdom, and knowledge to the knowledge of God, and godlineſs. Among others, in his Theætetus he (peremptorily) maintaineth that whatſoever can be commendable in man be it wiſdom, knowledge, prudency, eloquence, yea courage, fortitude, and the like is comprehended in the true knowledge of a juſt God: and that without this knowledge, no vertue is vertue; no commendation, ſolid and true. Περὶ τούτου γάρ ἡ ὡς ἀληθῶς δεινότης ἀνδρὸς, καὶ οὐδένεια τε καὶ ἀνανδρία, ἡ μὲν γὰρ τούτου γνῶσις (where ſome Latine Interpreters do Plato wrong, tranſlating horum, for hujus: as clearly appeareth by the context) σοφία, &c. It is the opinion of moſt antient Fathers and other Chriſtian writers, that Plato was acquainted with the writings of Moſes, and the Prophets. Whether it be ſo or no, I ſhall not here diſpute. But it cannot be denyed, but that in that paſſage, and others like unto it, he may ſeem to have imitated the prophet Jer. Thus ſaith the Lord let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom &c. Jer. 9. 23, 24. I ſaid I would, not mention later heathen authors, yet upon this ſubject I cannot altogether omit to make mention of one, both for his high degree having been a great Emperor in his time; and for the many paſſages he hath to this, purpoſe, (in learning alſo not inferiour to any of the wiſeſt of philoſophers that had been before him:) very conſiderable. But I ſhall content my ſelf here with one of his ſhorteſt paſſages of this ſubject. Τί ἀρκεῖ, ſaith he in a place: What will, or may ſatisfie? what but to worſhip and praiſe the Gods: (that was the phraſe in thoſe daies, though he often uſeth the ſingular alſo:) and to do good unto men? Anton. Beop v. 27. Now if heathens though learned, and favorers of learning, could ſpeak ſo, without offence: why ſhould not we conſtrue David as favourably? Neither did St. Paul certainly, where he profeſſed of himſelf, that he would from henceforth know nothing, but Chriſt and him crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 2. intend by this (or ſo underſtood by any ſober man) a renunciation to learning either humane (whereof he had made ſo good uſe for the propagation of the Goſpel, as appeareth by his Epiſtle, and what is recorded of him in Scripture Hiſtory:) or other: but this, that what learning he had, power, facility, or ability in a kind, ſhould all be imployed and improved to that end and uſe, to advance the knowledge of Chriſt crucified. I think ſuch an argument ſhould not be paſſed over ſlightly; and Calvins earneſtneſſe hath made me the more earneſt. But now I muſt acquaint the reader with my ſuſpition, being grounded, as I conceive, upon no little probability. I doubt very much, whether the Greek Interpreters, or Latin either, intended any ſuch ſenſe, as is commonly apprehended. For I would know firſt what kind of word γραμματείας is, or by whom ever uſed, (if at all uſed) for learning, or literature? That which may be ſaid for it, as I conceive, how it ſhould come to ſignifie learning, is this. סופר a Scribe, is in Scripture Greek γραμματεὺς. Now becauſe theſe Scribes are generally conceived, to have been very exact (by their profeſſion at leſt) in the knowledge of the Law; it may be, that this word γραμματεία was formed with reference to γραμματεὺς, to expreſſe ſuch learning properly, as might belong to a Scribe, or learned interpreter of the Law. However, Suidas, a man well acquainted with old Greek words, whether ſacred, or profane, underſtood it far otherwiſe, interpreting it, ἐξαριθμήσει; and gives a ſenſe of the words, quite different. It may be read in him, if any be ſo curious: for it is very remote from that which is commonly received for true. But beſides this; that reading γραμματείας is uncertain in ſome copies, it is πραγματείας, and accordingly in ſome Latine Copies, Negotiationes Somewhat more might be ſaid of that too: but I have ſaid enough, for this place.

V. 24. My tongue alſo ſhall talk of thy righteouſneſſe] The Pſalmiſt doth inſiſt upon the ſame thing, with variety of words, which ſheweth the fullneſſe of his heart: Matth. 12. 34. and though God do not regard the prayſe of the lips or tongue, or rather hate it, where there is not a concurrence of the heart; or ſoul: yet naturally there is ſuch dependance between theſe, that where the tongue is ſilent; it is to be feared, that the heart is ſteril. They therefore (great talkers eſpecially) that ſeldom ſpeak of God, or of things tending to godlineſſe, in their ordinary talk have great reaſon to ſuſpect themſelves, that the fear of God, and the ſpirit of godlineſſe, doth not abide in them: though they may flatter and deceive themſelves by goodly pretences; as that God knows their hearts; and that they hate hypocrites, which make a fair ſhew outwardly, becauſe they would be thought religious, and the like.

PSAL. LXXII.

Title.

A Pſalm for Solomon] Of, for, or, concerning Solomon: all theſe waies the Hebrew לשלמה may be expreſſed; and accordingly opinions do vary; concerning both the author and the argument of the Pſalm. Firſt for the author; there be that aſcribe it to Solomon, grounding eſpecially upon the inſcription, becauſe as in the inſcription of many other Pſalms, לדוד is interpreted Davidis; (of David) ſo they think it ſhould be here. But that rather ſhews, that notwithſtanding the inſcription be לשלמה which by the article ſhould rather be a Dative, than a Genitive; it may be Solomons neverthe leſſe, if there be other good grounds for it; then that it muſt be his, or probably is his, if nothing elſe induce to that belief. That Solomon himſelf would ſo ſpeak of himſelf, as this Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of him; or that God would make him the inſtrument of his own praiſes, in ſuch an hyperbolicall ſtile, is not very likely. So that the ſubject and tenor of the Pſalm, is rather an argument againſt that opinion, than for it. There is one Pſalm more, and but one, as I remember, ſo inſcribed; and that is the 127. Pſalm. That Pſalm for the ſubject of it, as it might be Solomons, ſo any bodies elſe: Davids, as probably, as any other, that hath not his name prefixt. And it may be it was compoſed by him, upon occaſion of Solomons birth, as a thankfull acknowledgement of Gods bleſſing. By the ſubject of it, it ſhould be ſome Genethliacum, or congratulatory pſalm for a new born child, whoever were the author. Neither then from that inſcription there, can any argument be drawn, to prove Solomon the author of this. Why David rather, ſomewhat may be gathered perchance from the inſctiption, in the beſt copies of the Greek tranſlation, which we finde to be this; Εἰς Σαλομων ψαλμὸς τῶ Δαυίδ: that is, A pſalm of David concerning Solomon: but more from that which is at the end of this Pſalm, v. 20. The prayers of David the ſon of Jeſſe are ended. So much for the author, or inſtrument rather, and penman: for of the principal author, the ſpirit of God, there is no queſtion; and ſo long, we need take the leſs care. But the ſecond quære, concerning the ſubject, is a matter of more, if not difficulty, yet conſequence to the right expoſition of the whole Pſalm. That Chriſt is the main, is a thing generally agreed upon among all Chriſtians: but whether the onely, is the queſtion. There be that make it a matter of great impiety, to think that any part of it belongs unto Solomon. Genebrard is of that opinion; but not he only. Even among them that we account beſt. Interpreters, ſome by their way of interpretation; may ſeem to have thought little leſſe. Although therefore ſomewhat hath been ſaid already to this pnrpoſe upon the 45. Pſal. partly upon the Title, and partly upon ſeveral verſes of that Pſalm, which both for the ſubject, and for the ſublimitie of the ſtile, anſwerable to the matter, hath great affinity with this: Yet becauſe I find ſo much oppoſition here, ſomewhat here alſo ſhall be added. The main objection is, that moſt things in this Pſalm are too high, to belong to Solomon, or any mortall man. They put together whatſoever is of that nature, which indeed makes the greateſt part of the Pſalm; and then ask, whether this were literally true of Solomon. But they are much miſtaken in their ground, as I conceive. For firſt, not to ſpeak of the like figurative ſpeeches in other parts of Scripture, as the Prophets, and others, which are many, againſt which the ſame may be objected, we ſay here, that the ſtyle being poetical, and the ſubject extraordinary, the inaugation, or welcoming of a King to his throne by auſpicious acclamations, ample hyperboles might the better become it. How ordinary it is for Poets, even the moſt ſober, and Orators, upon ſuch an occaſion to be hyperbolical, who knows not? Or ſhould we ſay, that Virgil, that ſo much admired Poet by all antients, the greateſt wit of his age, (the beſt age for wits as ever the world knew) that he did not intend his Ecloge, Sicelides Muſa. &c. truly and really to be a Genethliacum carmen, upon the birth of a Noble Roman, much inferiour to a King, becauſe moſt of it fits the Son of God much better, and in divers of his expreſſions, agrees with the predictions of the Prophets, concerning the future happy ſtate of the world under the Meſſias? That his pen in very deed, was, by a ſecret providence; ſo directed to ſuch expreſſions, (whether he had them out of the Sibyle verſes, or no) that ſhould fit Chriſt ſo well, and none properly and literally, but him, that ſo Chriſt his birth-day (for he wrote much about that time) might by the greateſt of wits among them, who gloried in nothing ſo much as wit, be celebrated; hath been I know the opinion of very learned and judicious men, to whom I eaſily ſubſcribe. Neither was this providence without a good effect; thoſe very verſes, as in all probability, and therefore much preſſed by ſome antients, having much contributed to the converſion of many, to Chriſt. It is no good argument therefore againſt the literal ſenſe of this Pſalm, that becauſe the Holy Ghoſt had the mannaging of the whole buſineſſe, therefore all muſt literally be true of Solomon; ſince that the Holy Ghoſt had a double intention in it, and as it was intended for a carmen Genethliacum, it was ſufficient that it fitted then when it was written, according to the nature of the thing, and the preſent occaſion; and was not to be fitted to the event of things in future ages; which would have altered the nature of the thing, and of a Genethliacum, have made it a bare propheſie. But beſides, was there not ground for theſe hyberbolicall expreſſions from Gods own words and expreſſions concerning Solomon? I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon, &c. And thine houſe and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever 2 Sam.7.14. &c. To ſay, that here alſo Chriſt was immediately and only intended, were very ſtrange. I know the Apoſtle doth apply ſome of theſe words, as well he might, ſince Solomon was his type, to Chriſt, Heb. 1. 5. But that is no argument to me, that therefore Solomon was not immediately intended. And certainly thoſe words there, If he commit iniquity, &c. cannot well be applyed to Chriſt. But that in very deed, both here and there, Solomon was the immediate object of the words, may be here made good, by good and irrefragable authority; by the application that is made of all there, and of many, yea, moſt things here, to David and his poſterity, Pſa.89. by the Holy Ghoſt, the right author, as here, ſo there. For there of neceſſity David, and his poſterity, muſt literally be intended; or elſe there were no ground for the enſuing expoſtulation, But thou haſt caſt off, &c. Except there alſo men will take the liberty to turn all into allegories, to the deſtruction of the letter, and make the ſufferings of Chriſt his Church, to be the immediate object of thoſe complaints. But that no ſober rational man will do, or be perſwaded unto by others, in theſe daies. If ſome of the antients have done it, it may the better born with in them. It was the way then in requeſt, when the literal ſenſe, for want of that knowledge of tongues, which hath been ſince in the world, was more myſtical and hidden, than that we properly call myſtical, to expound all things allegorically. In the laſt place, for another reſpect too, I ſay it is no good conſequence to argue from the event, againſt the literial ſenſe. God had once paſſed his promiſe to Elys forefathers, that the Prieſthood ſhould continue in their family for ever; that is, as long as the Temple it ſelf; and for ſo long as that Hierarchy was to continue. It fell out otherwiſe. How hapned that? God himſelf will tell us; I ſaid indeed that thy houſe, and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever. But now the Lord ſaith; Be it far from me. For they that honour me, I will honour, &c. 1 Sam. 2. 30. See alſo Ezek. 33. 13. When I ſhall ſay to the righteous, that he ſhall ſurely live, &c. And was not this Solomons caſe? What could be done more by any man, to fruſtrate the promiſes of God, than was done by Solomon? That he repented, and found mercy in his own perſon, I will eaſily believe, though not obliged by any direct Scriptures that I know of: but if he did repent, it was after he had done enough and more than enough, to bring the curſe of God upon all his poſterity. David himſelf, notwithſtanding Gods promiſes ſo often reiterated, and ſo abſolutely paſſed unto him, propoſed them in his laſt words to his ſon Solomon conditionally; And keep the charge of the Lord thy God to walk in his waies, —— that thou maieſt proſper in all thou doſt, —— That the Lord may continue his word which he ſpake concerning me, ſaying, If thy children take heed to their waies, to walk before me in truth, &c. 1 Kin.4.3,4 And ſo Pſal 132.12. If thy children, &c. All theſe things well conſidered, the literal ſenſe I hope will not be denyed us; which needs not much other illuſtration, than the juſtifying of the hyberboles of it: which hath been our chiefeſt aim and buſineſſe hitherto. And as for the myſtical ſenſe, as the words are applyable to Chriſt, there is nothing of which any man can make any queſtion: what of Solomon immediately and literally, but hyperbolically, was intended; it is exactly applyable to Chriſt, without any hyperbole; and in that reſpect more literally and truly, than to Solomon; but in a ſpiritual ſenſe though, moſt of it; though that too, not without ſome literal and hiſtorical accompliſhment, as may appear by particulars.

Verſe 1. Give the King thy judgements] Endue the King with the ſpirit of wiſdom and juſtice, that he reign not, as do worldly Tyrants.

unto the kings ſon] To wit, to his poſterity.

V. 3. the mountains ſhall bring peace to the people] Even the places moſt barren ſhall be enriched with thy bleſſings v.16. compriſed under the name of peace: or, the mountains, that is, great men, as Zach. 4.7. ſhall procure proſperity to the ſtate by righteous judgment. Of Solomons daies, the Scripture noteth expreſly, that all his time, Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely, (or confidently) every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan to Barſheba: that is, all his kindom over, 1 King,4.25. Of Chriſt, firſt ſpiritually, the peace of conſcience, the moſt valuable peace, muſt be underſtood: the proper fruit of his Goſpel: For the kingdom of God, is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs and peace, and joy of the Holy Ghoſt, Ro.14.17. Secondly, literally; when Chriſt was born, there was peace, an extraordinary peace, all the world over almoſt, under Auguſtus, a peaceable juſt Prince. The Romans then Governors and Maſters of greateſt part of the world, took ſuch notice of it, that they ſhut the doors of their Temple Janus: a ceremony that was not uſed, but when they had a general peace: and hapned not in all their time, above twice or thrice at moſt: Sic ubique cuncta atque continua totius generi aut pax fuit, aut pactio: auſuſque tandem Cæſar Auguſtus—Janum Geninum cludare, &c. ſaith the abridger of the Roman Hiſtory, L. Florus, *l.*4. *c.*12. They that note an alluſion in the word שלום (Shalom) Peace, to the name of Solomon: ſhould if right in this, have taken notice of another in the word יושיע (verſe following) Joſhiah (he ſhall ſave) to the name Jeſus. I think there is as much ground for the one, as for the other: the one belonging to the literal, and the other to the myſtical ſenſe: though as Chriſt is our Peace-maker, and the true Melchiſedeck, King of Salem, ſo the firſt alluſion might belong to him alſo.

by righteouſneſs] Or, in a juſt and full meaſure. So the word righteouſneſs is uſed ſometimes: as for example, Joel 2 23. for he hath given you the former rain moderately: in the Hebrew, as there in the margin is noted, according to righteouſneſſes.

V. 4. He ſhall judge the poor of the people] He ſheweth wherefore the Sword is committed to Kings: to wit, to defend the innocent, and ſuppreſs the wicked.

He ſhal judge the poor of the people, &c. and break in pieces the oppreſſor] this is again repeated, and more largely proſecuted, v. 12, 13, 14. which indeed is the higheſt commendation, and trueſt character of a noble mind, of neereſt relation and reſemblance to God himſelf, to whom the ſame propriety is often both in the Scriptures, and in the writings of profane Authors (as we call them) aſcribed. Whence it is, that Virgil, that Maſter-Poet, when he extols his Romans (by that general name aiming at his Prince Auguſtus particularly) to the height of humane perfection and magnanimity, after particular enumeration, by way of preamble (to make his ſpeech the more ſolemn and conſiderable) of divers trades and profeſſions, and faculties, wherein he willingly grants the Romans to be inferiour to ſome other nations; he concludes his ſpeech with theſe excellent verſes, Tu regere imperio populos Romane memento: He tibi erunt artes; pacique imponere morem, PARCERE ſubjectis (which many Princes have made their motto; and happy it were, that all would make it their practice) & debellare ſuperbos.

the] Or for the, Pſal. 26.1. & 82. 3.

V. 5. They ſhall fear thee as long as the ſun and moon endure] Whether thee, O God, named in the firſt v. or thee, O King, by an apoſtrophe, ſo called in Rhetorick, is ambiguous: but either way it will do well. They ſhall fear thee, O God: true Religion will be the fruit of a ſettled peace, and juſt government: firſt the fruit, then the ſecurity; for theſe two have great dependance one upon another. The fear of God is taken for the whole worſhip; that is ordinary. Again, they ſhall fear thee, O King; that is, they ſhall worſhip and reverence: Thy Name ſhall endure for ever, as long as the ſun, &c. as it is in the 17. verſe.

V. 6. He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowen graſs] As this is true in all godly Kings, ſo it is chiefly verified in Chriſt, who with his heavenly dew maketh his Church ever to flouriſh.

like rain upon the mowen graſs] This ſimilitude, with little alteration, is often uſed in the Scripture, upon ſeverall occaſions, as Deu. 32. 2. My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain; &c. & Job 29. 22, 23. and my ſpeech dropped upon them, and they waited for me, as for the rain, &c. The Kings wrath is as the roaring of a lion; but his favour is as dew upon the graſs, Pro. 19. 12. and elſewhere: but upon this very occaſion of Gods bleſſing upon David and his poſterity, 2 Sam. 23. 4. And he ſhal be as the light of the morning when the ſun riſeth, even a morning without clouds: as the tender graſs ſpringing, out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain. The word in the Original גז here tranſlated mowen graſs, doth alſo ſignifie a fleece of wool (properly, a ſhorn fleece) which ſome take to be the proper ſignification here, in alluſion (as they conceive) to Gideons fleece, Jud. 6. 37, &c. So the Septuagint, καταβήσεται ὡς ὑετὸς ἐπὶ πόκον: in vellus, in the vulgar Latin. This interpretation is embraced by moſt of the antients, and finely proſecuted by Chryſoſtom in relation to Gideons fleece, upon this place. Since the word will bear it, as well as that other ſenſe, good reaſon we ſhould take notice of it too. But yet I conceive the other to be the more proper ſignification here; as more agreeable to that which follows, as ſhowrs that water the earth. Genebr. alſo, though otherwiſe prone enough to juſtifie the vulgar Latin, be the miſtakes of it never ſo groſs and palpable; yet here he makes no ſcruple to tell us, what he thinks beſt.

V. 7. ſo long as the moon endureth] Heb. till there be no moon. He mentions here the moon only; as v. 17. the Sun only: having joined both in v. 5. As his fancie led him, and would fit the v. beſt: and it were but a fancy to make a further myſtery of it. Till there be no moon; that is, to the worlds end; or for ever, as elſewhere

V. 8. He ſhall have dominion alſo from Sea to Sea; and from the river, &c.] Moſt Interpreters by theſe words, would have the bounds of Judea, and the Iſraëlites Kingdome according to Exod. 23. 31. Numbers 34. 3. &c. expreſſed: that is, from the Sea of Sodome, or the Red Sea, to the Mediterranean Sea (by ſome called mare Syriacum) Eaſt and Weſt; and from the River, (that is, the River Euphrates, for the greatneſſe and famouſneſſe, abſolutely called, the River) to the great Deſert, North and South. And this they conceive was accompliſhed in Solomon, of whom the ſtory teſtiſtifieth in theſe words: And Solomon reighed over all Kingdomes from the river, unto the land of the Philiſtines; and unto the border of Egypt, they brought preſents and ſerved Solomon all the daies of his life, 1 Kin 4, 24. and again, v. 24. of the ſame chapter, For he had dominion over all the region of this ſide, &c. For my part, as I believe, that the words had immediate relation to Solomons perſon; ſo to thoſe quoted places too of the Law concerning the bounds of the Jewiſh Kingdom, that they have ſome reference, I will eaſily grant: eſpecially to Exod. 23. 31. which words come neereſt to theſe. Yet when I conſider that the words muſt have reference to Chriſt too, as all the Pſalm hath; nay that they are directly ſo applyed, and repeated of Chriſt, without any alteration at all: (And I will cut off the chariot, &c. and he ſhall ſpeak peace unto the heathen, and his dominion ſhall be from Sea even to ſea; and from the river, even to the ends of the earth, Zach 9. 10.) whoſe dominion (ſpiritual) to confine within theſe narrow bounds, would not be ſo proper, nor ſo agreeable, either to the predictions of other prophets, or to the event it ſelf: And again, that the words, Exo. 23. 31. are not ſo like, but that ſome conſiderable difference may be obſerved: it being there, from the red ſea, even unto the ſea of the Philiſtines, and from the deſert unto the river; and here more abſolutely, from ſea to Sea, &c. upon theſe grounds I conceive it more probable, that an univerſal dominion over all the world is here comprehended and promiſed. And it may be, from ſea to ſea, is meant, from South to North (for ים is ſometimes taken from the South; as Pſalm 107. 3.) and from the River (Euphrates, which was Eaſt of Judea; though according to the opinion of ſome, we expounded it before, from the River to the deſert, to be, North and South) to the ends of the earth (or as the Septuagint, ἕως περάτων τῆς οἰκουμένης: in the vulgar Latin, uſque ad terminos orbis terarum) is meant, Eaſt and Weſt. Now if it be oppoſed, that this was never true of Solomon; we anſwer as before, upon the title; firſt, that the expreſſion, as is uſuall in theſe caſes, is hyperbolical: ſecondly, that the queſtion is not properly, what Solomon did actually enjoy, but what either by God might be promiſed conditionally; (neither did the Iſraelitiſh Kingdome ever extend ſo far, as thoſe bounds aſſigned to it by God, in the Law, propter deſidiam ac peccata; as St. Jerom in a place) or by the Poet, or poeticall author (the immediate we mean) might be wiſhed unto him without treſpaſſing againſt the Laws of that decorum, or beſeemingneſſe, (alwaies grounding upon ſome apparent poſſibility, if not probability) to which all Poets and Orators are equally bound.

V. 9. his enemies ſhall lick the duſt] Bow to the ground in ſign of reverence, Iſa. 49. 23.

V. 10. The Kings of Tarſhiſh] Of Cilicia, and of all other countries beyond the Sea, which he meaneth by the Iſles, Pſal. 48.

ſhall bring preſents] Pſal. 68. 29, &c.

the Kings of Sheba and Seba] Seba and Sheba, the one, the ſon; the other, the nephew of Cuſh, the ſon of Cham, Gen. 10. 6, 7. From theſe, ond their poſterity, theſe places had their denomination; but what places are intended by theſe two names, is not agreed upon among Expoſitors. Some refer both to ſome regions of Arabia. Others underſtand Arabia and Ethiopia, which I think more likely: ſome parts, at leaſt. Now concerning Solomon, of the Queen of Shebe, what ſhe did in reverence and admiration of his wiſdom and high renown, we read particularly, 1 King. 10. chap. There alſo, v. 15. of the Kings of Arabia it is recorded, in theſe words, Beſides that he had of the merchant men—and of all the Kings of Arabia &c.

V. 11. Yea all Kings ſhall fall down before him; all nations ſhall ſerve him.] An hyperbolicall and poeticall amplification: of which kind hath been ſpoken already ſufficiently. Neither need the words be preſſed too rigidly. By all Kings, may be underſtood many, which were either abſolute ſubjects, or tributary. To which purpoſe we read, 1 Kin. 4, 21. And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms, &c. they brought preſents and ſerved Solomon all the daies of his life. Beſides, this falling down, may be underſtood more generally too, of extraordinary reſpects done unto him by ſundry Kings and Princes, voluntarily; by their Legates and Ambaſſadors: as one ſpeaks of the Romans under Auguſtus; Illi quoque reliqui, qui immunes imperii erant, ſentiebant tamen magnitudinem, & reverebantur. All nations ſhall ſerve him: many did, over whom he had either abſolute power and dominion; or conditional: by tributes, &c. of others, he did ſerve himſelf, by trade and commerce, tranſporting their wares and commodities by ſhips and otherwiſe, into his own Kingdom for his uſe: a great argument of a happy reign, and flouriſhing Kingdome. Now of Chriſt (of whom, as before we ſaid, chiefly intended) all this hath been verified without an hyperbole: yet not of him neither, ſo abſolutely and preciſely, without ſome figure; but ſuch as is ſo ordinary, as that it may ſeem rather proper language, than figurative. All Kings, that is, ſome Kings of all Nations: and all nations ſhall ſerve him; which hath already been fulfilled, of moſt; and we expect ſhall be verified of all in Gods appointed time, before the end of the world. By what we have already ſeen, we may eaſily believe that which is to be.

V. 12. For he ſhall deliver the needy when he cryeth] Job 29. 12.

For he ſhall deliver the needy &c.] See before upon v. 4. He ſhall judge the poor of the people. Now this might ſeem (as in very deed it is objected by ſome) not to agree ſo well with that complaint of the people, concerning Solomon, 1 Kings 12.4. Thy father hath made our yoke grievous : but that is there accorded, not as a complaint of the people only: which whether it proceeded from too much happineſs under Solomon (for that will do it. as well as the other; ſuch is the nature of man) or from any real ſuffering. is left doubtful. In the Hiſtory I am ſure we find ample teſtimony concerning their great happineſs under him: and among other things, this particularly, which comprehends a great deal; That of the children of Iſrael Solomon did make no bondmen, 1 Kin. 9. 22. But of their ſufferings by him, nothing do I find. It may be that in this alſo Solomon was a type of Chriſt, who though he ſay of himſelf, that his yoke is eaſie and his burden light, Matthew chap. 11. verſe 30. yet there be many that think far otherwiſe of it: elſe wickedneſſe would not abound ſo much among Chriſtians.

V. 14. He ſhall redeem their ſoul from deceit and violence] Fraud and violence, the two noted Engines of all miſchief, the effects whereof none commonly feel more, than they that are beſt able to bear it, the poor and needy. It is the caſe of many great and flouriſhing kingdoms: where the better ſort are moſt at eaſe, the poorer people are moſt oppreſſed. Go to now ye rich men, &c. Behold the hire of the labourers, &c. Ye have condemned and killed the juſt, &c. Lam. 5. 1. 4, 6. As it is therefore the commendation of a good King, not to oppreſſe, himſelf: ſo of a King both good and wiſe, to prevent the oppreſſion of others. The Hebrew word תוך, is by the Septuagint, becauſe of the affinity of the ſound. (as in many other words) tranſlated τόκος; which ſignifies uſe; and the Old Latine out of the Greek, expreſſes it, Ex uſuris & iniquitate redimet animas eorum: that is, he ſhall redeem their ſouls from uſury and oppreſſion: for ſo is iniquitas, here to be taken. It is likely they thought the word τόκος, had its beginning from the Hebrew תוך: which is not impoſſible, though from τίκτω be the more obvious derivation. And certainly there is a great deal of reaſon to think that איש תככים, Prov. 27. 13. doth ſignifie an uſurer: of which ſee more there. Howver ſince fraud, and cruelty, and oppreſſion are ſo incidental, and almoſt inſeparable from that kind of life, the expreſſion cannot be much amiſs: and what a work the antient Romans had in their time, to deliver their poor from the cruelty and tyranny of the fœneratores, their Hiſtories will ſhew.

precious ſhall their blood be in his ſight] He will ſee that none of his ſubjects, not the meaneſt of them, ſhall loſe his life by any wrong judgement at home: nor will he be prodigall of their blood, (as Kings and States many times are: a thing much to be lamented) in ſervices abroad, not for the good, or ſafety (though commonly pretended) of the Commonwealth, but only to ſerve his own ambitious and covetous ends, or to revenge private quarrels. See alſo upon Pſalm 116. 15. precious in the ſight.

V. 18. who onely doth wondrous things] Pſal. 136. 4. He confeſſeth That except God miraculouſly preſerve his people, neither the king, nor the kingdome can continue.

V. 20. The prayers of David the ſonne of Jeſſe are ended] This was his laſt prayer that he made for Solomon, a little before his death: or, the laſt of thoſe Pſalmes that David ſet in order before his death, for the uſe of the Church. The reſt were gathered together by others, as ſome of Solomons Proverbs were Proverbs 25. 1. ſo 2 Samuel 23. 1. Now theſe be the laſt words of David: not the laſt words that ever he ſpake, (for he both ſpake and did many things after that,) but the laſt that he ſpake as a Prophet, to his ſon Solomon, as learned men expound it there: and ſome make thoſe words there, an appendix as it were of this Pſalm here. From theſe words moſt collect that David was the author of the Pſalm: as it is very probable, if we take this note as referring, not to the foregoing Pſalmes in generall; whereof this is the 72. in number, and (according to that ſubdiviſion we have ſpoken of upon the firſt Pſalm, in the beginning: and upon the 41. in the end) ends the ſecond book of Pſalms: but to this particular Pſalm, and therefore taken into the body of it, as part of it. Yet there be, who think David might utter the matter of it upon his death bed, by way of ſolemn benediction, in imitation of Jacob, Gen 49. and Moſes, Deut. 32. 33 David, in proſe, and Solomon afterwards put it into verſe: and therefore both their names put to it, the one at the end, the other at the beginning. But if as others, the note refer to the whole collection of the foregoing pſalmes, (he called prayers, by a ſynechdoche partis pro toto, as they call it) the argument will not be of ſo much force. Some Rabbins have made this ſenſe of the words, Conſummata ſunt preces David, that is, ſay they: This is the ſum of Davids wiſhes, in the accompliſhment whereof he ſhall have his hearts deſire. I mention it, not for the probability, but becauſe ſome of the antient Expoſitors have ſomewhat to that purpoſe too.

A Pſalm of Aſaph] Or A Pſalm for Aſaph. of Aſaph] See notes on Pſalm 50. tit.

Verſe 1. TRuly God is good to Iſrael; even to ſuch as are of a clean heart.] This abrupt beginning by an אך, which is adverſativa particula, as they call them, and properly ſignifies veruntamen, or but; by ſome tranſlated here, atqui: and this ſudden determination of the buſineſſe, before any further arguing, may well ſeem ſomewhat ſtrange: and puts Interpreters upon this conceit, that the Pſalmiſt had been in a long conflict within himſelf, arguing the caſe to and fro, faith on the one ſide, and the Devil on the other, doing their parts by turns; and at laſt, faith by the help of God having prevailed, he breaks out of very joy, into this exclamative, or acclamative aſſeveration, Truly God, &c. As for the conflict, that is true enough: the author profeſſes it afterwards, but that he was newly out of it, when he wrote this, and therefore thus abruptly begins, &c. it is but a ſuppoſition, which may paſſe for probable, until ſomewhat more certain be found out: Whether this will be thought ſo, that I am now to ſay, I know not: but it hath more ground, I am ſure, than a bare ſuppoſition. The antients, thoſe that were very religious, were wont to ſpeak of God, and thoſe things that belong unto God, not with reverence only, but with ſome fear and terror alſo, leſt through ignorance and incapability they ſhould utter any thing, that might offend God either in the expreſſion, or matter. This Plato often profeſſeth of himſelf; as in his Dialogue called Cratylus, in that one Dialogue more than once. But to leave them: The Prophet Jeremy upon this very ſubject, out of a holy zeal to Gods glory moved with indignation to ſee the proſperity of the wicked, and purpoſing to expoſtulate the matter with God himſelf, he makes his way by a previous acknowledgement of Gods righteouſneſſe, Righteous art thou, O God, when I plead with thee, yet let me talk with thee of thy judgements, Jer. 12. 1, &c. So the Prophet Habbakuk too, Art thou not from everlaſting, O Lord, my God, mine Holy One? &c. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquities: having ſaid ſo much by way of neceſſary premunition, he goes on boldly; wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? and maketh men, &c. See alſo on Pſalm 89. 5. the heavens, &c. I conceive that here likewiſe the Pſalmiſt being to treat of the ſame ſubject, and having propoſed unto himſelf this method, firſt to make his objections, before he came to his concluſion and anſwers; yet before he begin that bold and expoſtulative diſcourſe he thought it neceſſary to premit this pacificatory and mitigative proteſtion, אך Atqui: However, Truly, &c. as if he had ſaid, Whatever I ſhall ſay by way of argument that may ſeem contrary, I firſt profeſſe and proteſt, this to be my faith and firm belief, that God is juſt and good, and will deal accordingly with them that fear and ſerve him with purity of heart &c. I have ſaid, what I ground upon: but it may ſerve for further illuſtration to adde, that an antient Heathen Author, who, though he lived ſince Chriſt, had not the happineſſe to know Chriſt: but one of the moſt rational Heathens otherwiſe that ever was, and highly commended and admired even by Chriſtians for his good life: (he was one of the Roman Emperours) having in few words, and with a great deal of modeſty argued the caſe, why the Gods, (ſo he ſpeaks, according to the wonted ſtyle of heathens though it appears by other places of his Book what he thought of the thing) had not made good and godly men immortal, he concludes, but now becauſe it is not ſo (if ſo be that it be not ſo indeed) be therefore confident, that it was not fit it ſhould be ſo. For thou ſeeſt thy ſelf, that now ſeeking after this matter, how freely thou doſt argue and conteſt with God. But were not the Gods, both juſt and good in the higheſt degree, thou durſt not thus reaſon with them. So he. As for the proſperity of the wicked, and the ſufferings of the godly in this world, and all that belongs to that queſtion, as it is here reſolved by David, and the like; ſee upon Pſal. 37. which is not the ſame argument as this; Fret not thy ſelf, &c.

of a clean heart] Heb. clean of heart.

V. 2. My feet were almoſt gone] By murmuring againſt God, or, doubting of his providence, and liking too well the ſtate of the wicked, ver.13,&c.

V. 3. For I was envious at the fooliſh: when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked] Job 21.7. Pſal.37.1. Jer.12.1.

V. 4. There are no bands in their death] The wicked in this life live in pleaſure, and are not drawn to untimely death, by violent diſeaſes, or other chances, like priſoners,but live out their time,and dye their natural deaths.

in] Or, to.

their ſtrength] Heb. אולם, for אילם, (a Vau for a Jod) as ſome chief Rabbines, followed by our Engliſh here, and moſt Interpreters. Others, according to the proper ſignification of the word, if the Mem be radical, (aula, atrium, veſtibulum,) tranſlate palatium; and ſupplying a כ ſimilitudinis, often omitted, make the ſenſe to be; They are as firm, and healthy, as a ſtrong Palace. But others without any ſuch ſupplement, their palaces are firm and ſtrong; that is, ſay they, they dwell in ſtately houſes and palaces. And why might not אולם be taken for the body it ſelf, which by S. Paul, (and ſo by divers others) is called σκῆνος, a tabernacle, 2 Cor 5.1, &c. which though in oppoſition to the ſoul, to them that know the worth of it, it be more like a cottage, or priſon, as the Pythagoreans and Platonicks were wont to call it) than a palace: yet of ſuch as are here deſcribed, whoſe happineſs conſiſte in the welfare of their bodies; their body may well be ſtyled their palace: and the Epithet בריא, which properly (as in the margine here) ſignifies fat, will better agree with this ſubſtantive, than any other; and ſo the meaning will be, that their bodies are fat and luſty. The body is reſembled unto a houſe in Eccleſiaſtes alſo, Chapter 12. ver.3. I think there is as much probability in this both ſenſe and verſion, as in any of the former: but the conſequence of the difference is not great: let the Reader pleaſe himſelf.

V. 5. in trouble as other men] Heb. in the trouble of other men.

like] Heb. with.

V. 6. Therefore] They glory in their pride, as ſome do in their chains, and in cruelty, as ſome do in rich apparel.

V. 7. they have more than heart could wiſh] Heb. they paſſe the thoughts of the heart.

V. 8. they ſpeak loftily] Heb. ממרום by ſome tranſlated (as well it may) de Excelſo; that is, concerning the High God: meaning, againſt him: for the ſpeech of ſuch concerning God, muſt be againſt: either profane, or blaſphemous. But I rather approve of the former verſion, here expreſſed in our Engliſh; which is followed by moſt, and ſeems more proper to the words. It is ordinary to ſet out of the pride of men by their great words, and high looks. Or, they ſpeak loftily, as if they thought themſelves above all other men, and would be ſo accounted of by others.

V. 9. They ſet their mouth againſt the heavens] They blaſpheme God, not fearing his power; and rail upon men, as inferiours.

V. 10. Therefore his people] Not onely wicked men do evil, but alſo the people of God oftentimes fall back, ſeeing the proſperous eſtate of the wicked, and are overwhelmed with ſorrows, thinking that God conſidereth not aright the ſtate of the godly.

return hither] To ſay, as followeth, ver.11, &c.

waters of a full cup are wrung out to them] Or, when waters of a full cup are wrung out to them; that is, when they ſee wicked men proſper by oppreſſing others.

V. 11. And they ſay] Thus the fleſh moveth even the godly to diſpute with God touching their poor eſtate, and the proſperity of the wicked.

V. 13. waſhed my hands in innocency] Pſal.26.6.

V. 14. chaſtened] Heb. my chaſtiſement was.

V. 15. If I ſay, I will ſpeak thus] If I give place to this wicked thought, I ſhall wrong godly men, and condemn them for hypocrites becauſe they are under affliction. Some like better of this verſion, which indeed is moſt literal: Ecce generatio filiorum tuorum: tranſgreſſus ſum: that is, Behold, the generation of thy children; I have tranſgreſſed. As if he ſaid; Should I ſay ſo, Behold, thou haſt a Church nevertheleſs: a number of children in the world, who notwithſtanding theſe temporal croſſes and afflictions, and the proſperity of the wicked continue in thy ſervice faithfully: the conſideration of theſe doth condemn me: בגדתי I have ſinned: I acknowledge and confeſs the iniquity and impiety of ſuch thoughts. I do not ſee but this may do as well; and I am ſure it likes ſome of the beſt; though oppoſed by ſome others. See Pſalm 47.17,18. All this is come upon us, &c. And Heb. Chap. 11. the whole Chapter: Chap.12.1. the inference there upon the former Chapter, Wherefore ſeeing we alſo are compaſſed about, &c. It will much confirm this interpretation. Beſides theſe, there be other interpretations of theſe words too, divers; but not any ſo probable as either of theſe; which therefore we paſs by.

V. 16. it was too painful for me] Heb. it was labour in mine eyes.

V. 17. until I went into the Sanctuary of God] Until I entred into thy School, and learned by thy Word and holy Spirit, that thou intereſt things wiſely and juſtly, reſerving judgement for them.

V. 18. thou calledſt them down into deſtructions] Heb. deſtructions. That is, a very great deſtruction.

V. 19. they are utterly conſumed with terrors] By thy fearful judgement.

V. 20. As a dream when one awaketh] Of all theſe words, expreſsing the ſuddenneſſe of the deſtruction of the wicked, and the ſhortneſſe of their proſperity; and of the ſufficiency, or inſufficiency of this anſwer, ſee, as before, upon Pſalm 37. ver. 1. & 2.

when thou awakeſt, thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image] Heb. בעיר in ſuſcitando: that is, in waking; without expreſsion of the perſon: which hath bred variety of interpretations; three, at the leaſt; of which, which is to be preferred, becauſe all warrantable by the Original words, affording a good ſenſe, and avouched by good Authors, is not eaſie to determine. Firſt, in awaking; that is, (as here in the Engliſh) when thou awakeſt: When thou ſheweſt thy power, hidden for a time, as a man awaking doth; Pſal.78. 65. Then the Lord awaked, as one out of ſleep: and Pſal.7.6. awake for me to judgement: and 35.20. awake to my judgement. Again, in waking, that is, when thou awakeſt them, ſay ſome, that they may ſee that they have been all this while but in a dream: that all their greatneſſe, and ſuppoſed felicity was but imaginary. It is no ſmall aggravation of their miſery, that themſelves, before they dye, ſhall know that they have been deluded all this while, when they thought themſelves moſt happy; which muſt needs end in great pangs and agonies of ſoul. Or laſtly, in waking, that is, when thou awakeſt us, and ſhalt remove the cloud from before our eyes, that we may clearly ſee and diſcern the vanity of all worldly things: How quickly this life paſſeth away, and every thing with it; how inconſiderable at the beſt; and by conſequence, how ſottiſh we are; or, as himſelf ſpeaketh afterwards, how fooliſh and ignorant, yea, brutiſh, that make ſuch a matter of wicked mens worldly proſperity. This knowledge, though of it ſelf incurrent enough into the eyes of men that have their eyes open: yet how apt we are, either to be lulled aſleep by our own, or to be dazled by the temporal welfare and proſperity of others, ſo that we need Gods continual help and aſſiſtance to keep us awake, that is, in a right judgement; appears by the Pſalmiſt, who elſewhere expreſly call upon God for it. So Pſal.39.4. Lord make me to know mine end, and the meaſure of my dayes, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Though he make particular application of it to himſelf, yet he means it not of himſelf particularly, as though he deſired to know how long he ſhould live; but of all men in general, as appears by the 6. verſe, Surely every man walketh in a vain ſhew; or, according to the propriety of the words, here retained by moſt Interpreters, Every man paſſeth away in a figure; or, image: צלם is the word there; and it is the word here too: thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image: צלמם תבזה. So again Pſalm 90.12. So teach us to number our dayes, &c. Of all theſe, being all warrantable, as I have ſaid, the Reader may chooſe which interpretation he beſt likes. The firſt is moſt followed, and as I conceive, if there be any difference, moſt probable. There be both among the Rabbines, and Chriſtians, that have expounded this awaking, of the reſurrection of the dead, and day of judgement. And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe, In die judicii magni evigilabunt è domo ſepulchri, in irâ imaginem eorum deſpicies. Somewhat we have to that purpoſe, Pſal.49.14. The upright ſhall have dominion over them in the morning, and their beauty, &c. by ſome there expreſſed, & figura eorum: that is, their form, or figure. But the word is not the ſame in the Original: and being it is not the proper ſenſe here, as the moſt and chiefeſt agree, we ſhall not need to take further notice of it.

thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image] In awakning, thou, by theſe judgements, ſhalt ſpoil and deſtroy all their pomp, and goodly ſhew. Or, if in awaking, be referred to men; thou ſhalt deſpiſe; that is, thou ſhalt then ſhew them, and make them underſtand, by opening the eyes of the one, and awaking the conſciences of the other, how vain and deſpicable a thing in very truth, all that pageant of worldly pomp and pride, and life it ſelf, is. An Image is a thing to look upon; good for little elſe; and valuable for the outward appearance onely: though it be done to the life, and may deceive the eye perchance, yet it can have no reality of life. So is all worldly greatneſs and magnificence; which makes a ſhew, and paſſeth away: well therefore, not here onely, but by ancient Grecians expreſſed by the word εἴδωλον, an idol, or image.

V. 22. I was as a beaſt before thee] A proper expreſsion. For man, though he conſiſt of a ſoul which is of an immortal nature, as the wiſeſt Heathens have alwayes taught and acknowledged: yet whileſt he looks no further than this life, and confines his thoughts to that which is preſent and viſible, he makes himſelf a very beaſt; the chiefeſt and almoſt onely conſiderable difference between man and beaſt, being this, that the one when it dieth, periſheth altogether; the other, not; but ſurvives in his better part. And this may be the meaning of Eccleſiaſtes alſo, in thoſe words of his, which ſeem to ſay the contrary, as many underſtand them; I ſaid in my heart concerning the ſtate of the ſons of men, men, that God might manifeſt them, and that they might ſee that they themſelves are beaſts; for that which befalleth the ſons of men, befalleth beaſts. &c. Eccl. 3.18,19. that is, as I underſtand him, that God would awaken them, (as we have it here) and make it appear unto them, that whileſt they place all their happineſs in this world, and think that when they die, all dies or expires with them; that is in effect, as he doth further aggravate, (and that, uſing their own known words perchance, that lived in that belief, as moſt in thoſe dayes: whereof ſee before upon Pſal. 37.1,2. and elſewhere) that that which befalleth the ſons of men, (in point of death, that is,) befalleth beaſts; even one thing, &c. that whileſt they ſo believe and live accordingly, themſelves become beaſts indeed. For why ſhould he deſire God to manifeſt that unto man, if that were it he intended, that their ſouls were mortal: which the generality of men have alwayes been apt enough to believe, of themſelves; and can ſo hardly be perſwaded to the contrary, even ſince the contrary hath ſo clearly been revealed, and manifeſted; as it hath been ſince Chriſt his appearance in the world? He himſelf, (Eccleſiaſtes I mean) explains himſelf afterwards, ver. 21. when he ſaith, Who knoweth the ſpirit of man that goeth upward; and the ſpirit of beaſt that goeth downward to the earth: by which words he puts a clear difference between the ſpirit of man, and that of beaſts; but that this difference, as he profeſſeth, doth not by any clear evidence, and demonſtration, appear unto men: and therefore wiſhes that God would manifeſt it. For which cauſe alſo Chriſt is ſaid, as upon the ſaid 37. Pſalm is obſerved, to have brought life and immortality to light, 2 Tim. 1,10. I am glad I am not the firſt, or onely, that have thought of this interpretation of this paſſage of Eccleſiaſtes: for it is a very conſiderable paſſage; and theſe words of the Pſalmiſt (which I do not finde obſerved by any) give great light unto it. More ſhall be ſaid of it upon the place. And to this purpoſe may thoſe words alſo of the Pſalmiſt, 49.21. Man that is in honour, and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh; be underſtood. See more there.

thee] In thy account, O God.

V. 23. I am continually with thee] By faith I was aſſured, that thy providence did watch alwayes over me, to preſerve me, Pſal. 63.8. Or, in my greateſt troubles and aſſlictions, Thou wert preſent with me, by the inward comforts of thy Holy Spirit: far more valuable, than any worldly joyes, as the beſt evidence and ſecurity of thy fatherly love to me, and an aſſurance of my future happineſs with thee, in a better world. So Luke 15.31. when the good ſon, by reaſon of that extraordinary acception there expreſſed, the fatted calf, &c. thought himſelf leſs reſpected by his father, than his riotous brother; and bitterly teſtified his indignation for it, to his father: Lo theſe many years do I ſerve thee, &c. (which is juſt our caſe here, when we grieve & fret at the proſperity of the wicked, and think our ſelves neglected) the good fathers anſwer was; Son, thou art ever (here, continually) with me: upon which follows a conſequence: all that I have is thine. As if he had ſaid: By this thy being ſtill with me, though thou finde it not for the preſent, and my diſcipline hitherto relliſh more of ſeverity, than fond indulgence; yet thou mayſt be ſure, and reſt upon it with all ſecurity, that I intend better things unto thee, than a fatted calf, or any thing elſe, that hath been done to thy brother, or upon his occaſion, in his way of a temporary merriment and rejoycing.

V. 24. and afterward receive me to glory] See upon Pſal. 49 15. for he ſhall receive me: by comparing of which paſſage with this the expreſſion, both, and coherence of matter (in oppoſition to worldly proſperity) being the ſame in both; it may appear, that this glory was chiefly intended of eternal glory; which is more than will be granted by them that make a Præterit of this Future, and turn it, cum gloria accepiſti me; or with the vulgar Latine, cum gloria ſuſcepiſti me: which ſome interpret as if David, or Aſaph for him, had ſpoken of Gods exalting him to the throne of Iſrael. But keeping the Future tenſe, which we finde in the Original (though often, we confeſs, where the ſenſe requireth it, uſed for the Præſent) in its proper ſignification, according to moſt Interpreters; yet whether we muſt take in temporal honour and glory, as part of the meaning, is a further queſtion. I would not deny it, becauſe I ſee moſt Interpreters would have it ſo: yet I cannot ſee ſufficient reaſon to induce me to believe it. The whole context and tenor of the words in this and the following verſes, ſeems to me to look another way: to wit, to oppoſe preſent ſpiritual joys & comforts and certain hope of eternal life, to temporal tranſitory goods and bleſſings: the proper goods and bleſſings of the wicked, as the matter ſeems here to be determined; not becauſe they onely have them (God forbid we ſhould think ſo) but becauſe they have theſe onely to truſt to, and look for no other. The Chaldee Paraphraſt follows this ſenſe: In conſilio tuo deduce me, in mundo iſto, &c. that is, Thou ſhalt guide me with thy counſel in this life; and this life ended, wilt receive me to that glory, which thou haſt promiſed me.

V. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee?] He ſought neither help nor comfort of any, ſave of God onely.

V. 26. ſtrength] Heb. rock.

my portion for ever] He teacheth us to deny our ſelves, & to have God our whole ſufficiency, & only contentment, Pſ. 16.5 & 119.57.

V. 27. For lo, they that are far from thee, ſhall periſh] No man, be he never ſo godleſs, is abſolutely Ἔρημος τοῦ Θεοῦ; or, void of God: as ancient Philoſophers ſpeak: For, in him we live, move, and have our being, Act. 17.28. It is ſpoken of all men in general. Yet Plato the Philoſopher, of an inſolent proud man, ſaith expreſly, that he is Ἔρημος τοῦ Θεοῦ, void of God; that is, that God is far from his thoughts, and he as far from Gods favour. They that are thus far from God, though they have part of the goods of this world, ſhall never be admitted to that preſence of God, wherein is fulneſs of joy, Pſal. 16.11. from which to be excluded, is to periſh everlaſtingly: Depart from me, ye curſed, &c. Mat. 25.21.

thou haſt deſtroyed all them] הצמתה a Præterit, which according to the Hebrew idiotiſm may be tranſlated, either by a Preſent ſuccides, thou doſt cut off, or, deſtroy, (as by ſome [illegible]) or by a Future, thou ſhalt deſtroy: which I think would be more proper here.

that go a whoring from thee] That is, forſake thee, [illegible] a diſloyal wife doth her husband.

V. 28. But it is good for me to draw neer to God] Though all the world ſhrink from God, yet he promiſeth to truſt in him, and to magnifie his work, Joſh 24.15.

Maſchil of Aſaph] Or, A Pſalm for Aſaph to give inſtruction, Pſal. 32. Tit.

of Aſaph] There is no certainty, neither concerning the author of this Pſalm, nor concerning the time, when it was compoſed. Firſt for the author; it is not improbable that Aſaph, who lived in Davids time, a Prophet, and the author of ſome ſacred hymns, as is recorded, 2 Chron. 29.30. was the author of ſome of thoſe Pſalms in this Book of Pſalms, that have this name prefixed: but the occaſion of this, having been, as appears by it, ſome notable profanation and devaſtation of the Temple, ſuch as hapned many ages after in the time of the Babyloniſh Captivity; and ſince that, once or twice; this Aſaph, that lived in Davids time, could not be the author of it. That he ſhould write prophetically ſo long before, is the opinion of ſome, I know; but grounded upon very little probability, as I conceive. They that ſhall reade it, and well conſider of all particulars, will hardly believe that it is a prophetical ſtyle. Others therefore, and thoſe of eminent learning, have rather choſen to refer it to what we read 1 Sam. 4. of the taking of the Ark by the Philiſtines. It is likely that ſo judicious a man could have ſaid more to make this opinion more plauſible, than it doth appear to me: but it is little, that he hath ſaid; of which ſee more upon ver. 6. and hammers) and leſs do I finde in the Hiſtory, to which he doth refer us, to perſwade me. I ſhould ſooner believe what ſome others have conceited, that either it was another of that Name, who lived in thoſe dayes, when theſe things hapned; or that the author, however called, delivered it to ſome of Aſaphs poſterity, to be tuned and publiſhed; and ſo came to have that name prefixed. But all this is very uncertain: neither doth it very much concern. It will not conduce to the right underſtanding of the Pſalm, to know the time, and particular occaſion; but, that too, hath its difficulties. For if we refer it to Antiochus as Junius, and Bucer are of opinion; he indeed did much profane the Temple, by idolatrous ſacrifices, and by erecting his idols in the Sanctuary; but that he made ſuch havock of theſe magnificent ſtructures, according to the expreſſions of the Pſalmiſt, importing little leſs than an abſolute deſtruction, we reade not; and certainly, he did not. It is anſwered by ſome, firſt that theſe expreſſions may be intended not of the Temple, but of divers religious houſes, called Synagogues, erected in divers places of the land, for religious meetings: of which frequent mention is made in the New Teſtament. I will eaſily grant, that Synagogues by ſome of thoſe expreſſions might be meant particularly, or comprehended in the generality of the word מועד: which though it be uſed of the Tabernacle particularly that ſtood in Moſes his time, and of Solomons Temple afterwards: yet becauſe it properly ſignifies a meeting; and then, as ἐκκλησία in Greek, a place of meeting; it may fitly be uſed of a Synagogue alſo, which is a Greek word almoſt of the ſame ſignification, as if we ſaid, a gathering together; that being the proper uſe of Synagogues, where people did meet, to pray, and to reade, and to expound, and exhort; but not to ſacrifice, or to perform any other religious ſervices appointed by the Law, proper to the people onely. So מועד may probably be rendred ver. 8. They have burnt all the Synagogues of God in the land; as it is there in the Engliſh: though ſome, even there, chooſe rather to tranſlate Tabernacle; by which they underſtand no other than the Temple, expreſſed ſo plurally, (as elſwhere it is, and hath been noted before) becauſe of the ſeveral rooms and diviſions of it. But to leave that as a thing either way not improbable; yet that by קדש in the third verſe, where perpetual deſolations are mentioned: or by מקדש, or משכן in the ſeventh, they have caſt fire into thy Sanctuary, they have defiled (by caſting it down) the dwelling place of thy Name to the ground; Synagogues ſhould be intended, is altogether unlikely. Neither do thoſe expreſſions, verſe 5. and 6. ſo well agree to Synagogues (of the magnificence, or coſtly building of which we reade not elſwhere) as to the Temple. Secondly therefore it is anſwered, that the Author, or Pſalmiſt, though the particular occaſion were Antiochus his preſent perſecution and profanation; yet upon that occaſion might deſcribe former ſufferings of the Temple by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar; which, if a man conſider not onely how much time had paſſed between; but alſo that they were different Temples, that which was deſtroyed by the Chaldeans, and that which was profaned afterwards by Antiochus; and apply to this the tenor of the words all along, he will think no wayes credible. Theſe things conſidered, there is more probability that that abſolute demolition and deſtruction of Solomons magnificent Temple by the Chaldeans ſhould be deplored: neither is there any conſiderable objection againſt it, but this, that whereas Ezekiel, Jeremy, Daniel, (all noted Prophets) lived and propheſied in thoſe times; it is ſaid in the 9. verſe, We ſee not our ſignes, there is no more any Prophet, &c. But if it be conſidered how long thoſe deſolations laſted before the return of the Iſraelites out of Babylon; and the rebuilding of the Temple; it will eaſily be granted that thoſe few named Prophets, did not ſo conſtantly propheſie, but that there might be a long time of intermiſſion: neither could their propheſying, when they did propheſie, ſupply the defect of thoſe conſtant and ordinary Prophets (the word Prophet being of a very large notion and uſe) and ſacred Miniſters, which ſhould have adminiſtred comfort to the people, and taught them out of the Law, in their ſeveral habitations: which they ſtood ſo much in need of in this their general calamity. This we take to be the moſt probable opinion: but we will not impoſe it upon any others, wherein we acknowledge our ſelves not yet fully ſatisfied.

Verſ. 1. W*Hy haſt thou caſt us off for ever?*] The Church of God being oppreſſed, prayeth to God, by whoſe hand this yoke was laid upon them for their ſins in the Babylonian captivity, when the Temple was burnt, ver.7.

V. 2. the rod of thine inheritance] Which inheritance, thou haſt meaſured out for thy ſelf, as with a line or rod.

rod] Or, tribe.

V. 3. Lift up thy feet to perpetual deſolations] The words in the Original, according to the beſt Interpreters (ſome embracing the one; others, the other) will afford a double ſenſe; either, Lift up thy feet, (ſtrokes, or hammers; any of theſe the Hebrew פעמים will yield,) to perpetual deſolations; that is, ſay ſome, to requite thine enemies and ours, with eternal or final deſtruction. Or, according to others, Lift up thy feet; (that is, make haſte, to come and ſee,) to perpetual deſolations; that is, thoſe final and irreparable (by humane power) deſtructions and deſolations of theſe ſacred Habitations, which the fury of our mercileſs enemies hath wrought. This I take to be the more probable of the two. We often, according to the Scripture phraſe, deſire God to Look upon, when we deſire him to be merciful, to our aſſiſtance: and king Ezekia, though he knew God was not ignorant what Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, had written to him; yet he went up to the Houſe of the Lord, ſaith the Text, and ſpread it before the Lord, 2 King.19. 14. The Letter was not more in the ſight of God by it, than it was before; but Exekias made his faith and confidence in God by that act, the more to appear to the world, which prevailed much with God.

V. 4. Thine enemies roar in the midſt of thy Congregation] Cry out, as conquerors.

for ſignes] In ſign of victory over us and our Religion.

V. 5. A man was famous, according as he had lifted up] The words here may ſeem to imitate the nature of the thing that is ſpoken of. סבך here tranſlated thick; properly ſignifieth perplexity: as it is here word for word expreſſed by ſome. Intricacy is intended, that is certain, whether in wood, or work: and there is much intricacy in the words, which makes Interpreters much to differ in their Expoſitions. Some ſubtile Grammarian would have made much of it, had he found the like in Homer, or Virgil. But we will not be ſo curious. If we can but make plain ſenſe of this perplexity, it will ſerve our turn. Not therefore to take notice of every leſs difference, which would perplex the Reader perchance, more than ſatisfie; the main is, whether the founders, or confounders, the builders or deſtroyers of the Temple, are intended by theſe words. The but, which the next verſe begins with, being properly adverſativa particula, hath moved many to conceive an antithesis between the two verſes: which to make good, there being no doubt at all of the meaning of the next verſe, they have pitched, in this, where the obſcurity hath left a liberty for variety of conjectures, upon this ſenſe: He that (heretofore) in the perplexity of wood, or, in the thick wood (did cut down trees) with his ax, (for, or towards the building of the Temple; muſt be underſtood) was known (as famous; or, in as much reputation) as if he had offered unto the High (God) or, as if he had offered ſacrifices: or; offered (to God) on high; that is, in heaven.) This is the ſenſe followed and proſecuted by the chiefeſt Rabbines: by whom we are among other things, referred to Zach.4.7. where indeed we finde ſomewhat that may ſeem not altogether impertinent: and he ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof with ſhoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it. Others thinking this to be too far fetcht, make this to be the ſenſe; A man (among thoſe mercileſs enemies) was famous, according as he did lift up his ax, (or, for lifting up of his ax) as if he had lifted it upon the thick trees; that is, He that carried himſelf in this buſineſs with moſt barbarouſneſs and cruelty, that had no more regard either to the holineſs of the place, or the curioſity of the work, than if he had been at work in the wood, felling down trees, or any thing elſe promiſcuouſly: he had moſt credit, and was moſt applauded among them. Or, as ſome others, according as he did lift up his ax upon the wrought and carved work (or, infolded graven work) of the Temple. This I ſhould eaſily grant to be the moſt likely ſenſe that can be made of the words, if we could tell what to do with that But, of the next verſe. In the Hebrew it is ועתה, which properly ſignifies And now: which is by ſome thus made to cohere with the former words: This cruel barbarous enemy, after this utter deſtruction (what by fire, what with axes and hammers,) of the Temple, hath not yet done: his fury is not yet aſſwaged: but even now, he rakes into the ruines and rubbiſh of thoſe glorious ſtructures; and whatever he can finde, that is not yet wholly aboliſhed, or defaced, he doth exerciſe his rage upon it: He is careful, that nothing ſhould be preſerved as a monument of that quondam ſo glorious, and ſo magnificent fabrick; the very ruines whereof, but for this their inſatiable rage and malice, could not but have been precious. So Junius, and ſome others.

V. 6. But now they break down the carved work] Hebrew ואת פתוחיה. This is the reading in the Text: in the margine ועתה, long ago by S. Jerome tranſlated, Et nunc, And now. Which I note the rather, becauſe, ſince that, ſome have made bold to tamper with the Hebrew, to bring it to the Vulgar Latine: herein much different from the Hebrew. So alſo פתוחיה, by the ſame Jerome tranſlated cœlaturas ejus, according to the proper ſignification of it; ſome would have to ſignifie here, januas ejus; (the gates or doors,) but why I know not; except it be becauſe of its affinity with פתח, which comes from the ſame radix, and ſignifies janua, a door. This difference is the more conſiderable, becauſe ſhould we grant janua to be the right meaning of the word, there would be ground for an argument, that the ſufferings of the Temple, by Antiochus, ſhould be the ſubject (of which, ſee more upon the title) of the Pſalm, foraſmuch as the gates of the Temple, though not any other part of it, at that time, were burnt by the ſaid Antiochus: as we reade in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, 1 Mac.4 38.

and hammers] Heb. וכילפות Vox Philiſtina, (ſaith a learned man here) ad notandum tempus. His meaning is, that this word being as he deems it, of the Philiſtine tongue, by others called, lingua Palaſtina, was here uſed of purpoſe, for an indication of the time; that is, that by that word it might be known in after ages when thoſe things were done, and by whom, which are ſpoken of in this Pſalm, Now his opinion is, of which hath been ſpoken already upon the title of the Pſalm, that that taking of the Ark by the Philiſtines, related 1 Sam.4. and what happened upon it, was it that gave occaſion to all theſe complaints. The title, I believe, and name of Aſaph there prefixt, was his chiefeſt ground: of which ſee more there. As for this word, I know no ground at al he had, to ſay it was a Philiſtine word. except he firſt take it for granted, (which is the main controverſie, and will not, I think, be eaſily granted by any, except his bare Authority perſwade them) that the Philiſtines, not Chaldeans, or Grecians, or Romans, are they that are here ſpoken of. Rabbi Solomon makes the word to be an Arabick word, wherein he is followed by many. Junius makes it a Syriack word, both this and the former כשיל, and hath the ſame obſervation upon them, in confirmation of his own opinion, that therefore Syriack words, and not Hebrew, are uſed, ad evidentiorem temporis quo hæc geſta ſunt deſignationem. It ſeems neither of them are elſewhere to be found in the Scripture: which makes them to be ſuſpected for ſtrange words. But that, as I conceive, is but a weak argument. For there be many other of that kinde, not occurrent above once in the whole Bible, which nevertheleſs are acknowledged to be Hebrew. And how can it be otherwiſe, but that as in all other writings, of no greater bulk eſpecially, ſome words are found, but once uſed, by ſome one Author; which nevertheleſs in ſome other, are more frequent: ſo it ſhould be in the Bible too; which, were there any other ancient Authors written in the Hebrew tongue now extant beſides the Bible, we might haply finde to be the caſe of theſe two words. Neither is it any argument that they are not Hebrew words, becauſe now found in the Arabick, or Syriack: which two Languages, as all men know, are but Dialects of the Hebrew, and have preſerved to us many Hebrew words, as by all learned in thoſe tongues is acknowledged, which otherwiſe might altogether have periſhed. There is not any thing in the ſound or pronunciation of either of theſe, as in divers other ſtrange words that are found in the Scripture, which ſhould give us occaſion to ſuſpect them: and it is ſome argument that they ſhould be Hebrew rather, becauſe from them, as ſome learned Etymologiſts have judged, ſome Greek words, (as many others, yea moſt, that are old Greek words, out of the Hebrew, in general,) have been formed: as out of the laſt and moſt ſuſpected, particularly, κολάπτω; and ſome others. This may be anſwered concerning the Syriack or Arabick. But for the Philiſtine, of which nothing now remains, why either of theſe words ſhould be attributed to that Language, I know no ground at all. It is but a bare conceit, and needs no further anſwer, than a bare denyal. Some learned men are of opinion,that it was a mixt language out of the Hebrew and Egyptian: which they would ground upon S. Jeromes words, concerning the Canaanitiſh Tongue. It is called in the Scripture, the ſpeech of Aſhdod, Nehem. 13,24. but that doth not concern us here.

Thou haſt prepared the light and the ſun] It is likely that the Pſalmiſt doth here allude to the ſtory of the Creation, where we firſt reade of the light by it ſelf, Gen. ver.3. and afterwards of the ſun, v.14,&c. where though light was made eſſential to the ſun; and the chiefeſt light (material light) of the world, reduced into that body: yet ſtill light, in general, (which is in divers natural things, beſides the ſun) is a different thing from the ſun it ſelf, and the ſun, not from light onely conſiderable, but for other properties different from light, though (as in the ſun) inſeparable from it. The vulgar Latine expreſſes it, auroram: which certainly came from the Hebrew word here in the Text: but it is more probable, that it was intended to expreſs the Greek φαῦσιν, which ſignifieth the ſame: and for the ſenſe, it might be underſtood of that light ſeen both mornings and evenings, when the ſun it ſelf (from which it proceeds) is not ſeen. The Rabbins, with the Chaldee Paraphraſt, by light here underſtand the Moon; and they give this reaſon, becauſe, ſay they, it is the idiotiſm of the Holy Tongue, to call the worſt, or more ignoble of the ſame kinde, by the word of the genus: whereof they give an example, ver.2. of this Pſalm, thy hand, and thy right hand; that is, as they interpret it, both hands. But if they have no better ground for their obſervation, I ſhould not much regard it. For in thoſe words, thy hand, and (or, even; as the ve may import as well) thy right hand; it is much more probable that one and the ſame hand ſhould be intended; and ſo the ſpeech is more emphatical: thy hand, even thy right hand: a hand of power and terror, ſuch as our preſent condition doth require. The right hand of God, ſo uſed proverbially, ſee upon Pſal.80.17. Let thy hand,&c. Neither is it to be wondred, if the Moon be not here expreſly or particularly mentioned: of which ſee upon Pſal.72. ver.7. So long as the moon and. If that which was ſet down at the firſt, doth not ſatisfie; I think we may probably conclude, that by the light and the ſun, may be meant no more, than barely, the light of the ſun, by a figure uſed in all languages, called by Grammarians, ἓν διὰ δυοῖν: that is, when one thing is expreſſed by two, ſeverally, as Gen.3.15,16. I will greatly multiply thy ſorrow and thy conception; that is, the labour, or ſorrow of thy conception: and of the hope and reſurrection of the dead: (that is, of the hope of the return of the dead) Acts 3.6. Paterâ libamus & auro: a noted example; and a thouſand ſuch in Greek and Latine Authors.

Or that with David, 2 Sam.7.16. And thine houſe, and thy Kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee, &c. and 23.5. He hath made with me an everlaſting Covenant, &c. See alſo Pſal.89.34. My Covenant will I not break, &c. Some refer us to Zach.9.11. where the Covenant in Chriſts blood, common to all Nations, is mentioned: which cannot be proper here. Others, with more likelyhood, to the Covenant with Noah, Gen.6.13,&c. as if he would ſay, that the earth was in danger of another flood, if God did not prevent it, becauſe of this wonderful prevailing of wickedneſſe and cruelty in all parts of it.

for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty] That is, all places where thy Word ſhineth not, are full of tyranny and ambition. Or, more literally and probably, that the land, through theſe deſolations and devaſtations that the enemy had made, now altogether dark, (that is, wilde and deſert-like) was become an habitation of thieves and murtherers: full of robberies, and all other violence.
